Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Progress in highway projects include a giant causeway across Rainy Lake—I believe it is going to be named Causeway Bill; the Lake Superior north shore link of the trans-Canada highway; the International bridge connecting Rainy River and Baudette, Minnesota; road links to Nakina, Armstrong, Savant Lake, Seagram, Caramat, Anaconda Mine Road, Canfor Road—every place now has a road. I made a promise when I was elected in 1951 that I would see that everybody in my area got out to a highway. That promise has been kept, Mr. Speaker, that promise was kept two years ago.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Far-flung and vigorous search for new mineral bodies is being completed; major sections of their line have been completed by natural gas distributing companies; and production of nationally circulated financial and business publications is certainly impressive.

“Road blocks” are in our path I know, as they are in any region’s. We do not deny that. Until their removal, they will serve as a break in our continuing growth, and reduce our chances of attracting new industries to our midst.

One of these are high freight rates in relation to other competitive sections of Canada. Hearings are to be heard at the Lakehead very soon by the freight rates commission and, Mr. Speaker, the man responsible for arranging that is again the hon. leader of this party.

Mr. Reaume: He did not do anything about it.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Lack of reciprocal arrangements with other provinces and states, for the growing truck transport industry, is now under study by the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan, Alberta and ourselves. Results will soon be announced by the hon. Minister of Transport who was up there a short time ago. He did a wonderful job of convincing them that they should have reciprocal licences. However, I must get on. The trans-Canada highway from Manitoba to the Lakehead, to national standards, will be completed as quickly as possible; as will construction of a general cargo docks up there.

Now then, peering into the crystal ball is hardly my specialty, Mr. Speaker, but one cannot escape the conclusion that our region is generating a great deal of built-in momentum that is keeping us in the vanguard of growth areas in Canada. This is evidenced in the $30 million construction total rolled up in the northwestern communities this past year.

These include new additional hospital accommodation, new schools, new government buildings, mercantile establishments, industries and municipal improvement projects, a new teachers' college in Port Arthur, a new medical and surgical building at the Ontario Hospital, and The Department of Lands and Forests building at Geraldton. There are many other things I could mention, that are going on up there, that are put there by our government.

If I went on to other areas—Fort William, Kenora, Fort Frances—I could name many more building projects.

Granted favourable cost conditions, our northwestern region can look forward to still greater expansion and diversification of the forest products industry in the next few years. Yes, a future verging on the spectacular looms in the iron ore industry.

I am not going to go on with this any more, Mr. Speaker, because the time is getting late. But there is one very important thing that I would like to bring to your attention, and that is the great Lake Superior north shore highway. I am going to read to hon. members an article from the Duluth Herald News Tribune:

Special project 561 will achieve its objective in 1960. It involves closing the final gap in the Ontario section of the trans-Canada highway around the north shore of Lake Superior. Its consummation will mean the encirclement by highway of the continent's greatest freshwater sea. Closing of the gap will cost an estimated $31 million in road and bridge construction through the 164-mile north shore area, previously inaccessible by motor traffic.

That will be completed, Mr. Speaker, within a very short time. I understand that our hon. Prime Minister is going to be at the opening, which we hope to see in September of this year. That is a great project, and is one reason why the people of this province think that this government is the best one that they ever had.

This government has been keeping the business atmosphere acceptable to securing new industry by supplying responsible government with no useless exorbitant taxes.

In other words, industry and foreign investment are attracted to Canada for that reason, and it is one reason why Ontario gets such a great proportion of new population and new industries.

We are having a big iron ore conference which this government arranged at our Lakehead in April; a freight hearing in April; and there will be reciprocal truck licencing in the Lake Superior north shore area.

That is the record of this government in northwestern Ontario, Mr. Speaker. Does the Opposition believe that our people are not aware of our great future, and the constant effort this government is making, in conjunction with our people, to achieve the great growth that is continuing in northwestern Ontario?

Mr. Speaker, last June 11 the people went to the polls, they heard the evidence, they weighed the scales of justice and they went to the polls to vote. What happened?

Mr. Reaume: They just sneaked through.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Another resounding victory—

Mr. Reaume: They just sneaked through.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: —for the greatest hon. Prime Minister this province has ever had, and one of the best governments it has ever had.

In saying that, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to bring to your attention, and the attention of the House, that famous phrase that same hon. Prime Minister used the other day, "That is why you are there and we are here."

Mr. Reaume: They will not be there long.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

It being 6 of the clock, the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 18, 1960

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. H. White (London South): Mr. Speaker, permit me to say by way of preface what a thrilling experience it is for me to rise in this august Legislature as the representative from London South. It is an occasion I shall never forget. My indebtedness to the people of my riding knows no bounds. I will do my best to serve them and this great province in the years to come.

Mr. Speaker, permit me to join also with the previous speakers in congratulating you and in wishing you every continued success in your present important position. You have been faced with difficult decisions in recent days and have, to my way of thinking, acquitted yourself in a very commendable fashion.

I should like to pay tribute also to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost). He is revered in my part of the country. As a matter of fact, the leading political observer in the London area—a man whose political sagacity is acknowledged by all parties—has said that hon. Leslie Frost is the greatest Prime Minister that Ontario has ever had.

I should like to congratulate the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). His course of action, in my opinion, shows him to be intelligent, responsible and constructive. He is a great leader of his party, a great leader of the Opposition. This is a position he will fill, I am sure, for many years, if not decades, to come.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): He is walking into that one.

Mr. White: My congratulations go also to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis). His speech in moving the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne was a wonderful piece of work for a new hon. member of this House. I say this in confidence, having spoken to a number of hon. members who have been here for years, and who have told me that it is one of the finest speeches they have heard.

My congratulations go to the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) who seconded the motion of thanks, and whose political courage and sagacity are known to all.

Finally permit me, Mr. Speaker, to extend my congratulations through you to all those hon. members of this House, from whatever party or riding they may be, who have been elected or re-elected by the people of their own communities. Surely no finer compliment could be paid to any man.

Everyone in this House has been of great help to me. Their kindness has surprised and pleased me more than I can say. I can only hope to repay them in helping other new hon. members in this House should the opportunity present itself. Several of these hon. members obviously have been of greater help than others, primarily because they come from my part of the country. And I would like to acknowledge at this time the help that I have had from the hon. member for Middlesex North (Mr. Stewart) whose assistance and advice has been available to me whenever warranted. Similarly, the hon. member for Middlesex South (Mr. Allen) has been of great help to me; his sagacity and political experience have been very helpful.

I should like to thank and to congratulate the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) on his recent important appointment to the Ontario water resources board, and to thank him also, not only for the help that he has given me, but for seconding my bill earlier today.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): He is all right.

Mr. White: I should like also to thank the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) whose speech last Tuesday night was so long that I did not have to give my speech at that time. I thought that I would be speaking after him, and the only thing I could think of during the hour and a half or so that he spoke was that old vaudevillian admonition, "never follow a dog act if you can help it."

Now, I am not implying, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member for Bruce is a dog, he is not. He is a very fine man, whom I have come to like very much recently. But I think that most people would concede the hour-and-a-half speech contained a great deal of barking without anything that one could get his teeth into.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): There will be more of them, too.

Mr. White: The hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts), who represents the riding of London North so ably, has likely been of greater help to me than any other hon. member. And I would like to spend just a minute or two in acknowledging the help that he has given me by telling this House what a fine representative he is from our city. He encouraged my political interests years ago, he assisted me greatly before, during and after the election. He is a worthy representative of the great riding of London North.

Everyone in London, as hon. members will appreciate, was thrilled at his elevation to the cabinet. We expect great things from him in days to come, and I would say to the hon. members, through you, Mr. Speaker, that we have only begun to know the accomplishments of the wonderful hon. Minister from London North.

Now the riding I represent is the heartland of western Ontario. It combines industry, commerce, and residential areas in such a way as to be a perfect blend and balance of all those attributes we boast of in this great province of ours.

As a matter of fact, hon. members will recall, London was intended to be the capital city of Ontario. Colonel Talbot, I think it was, had chosen London for the capital of Ontario. I do not know why that plan went amiss, but I think that the other hon. members from the Middlesex area would join me in pointing out that the invitation is still open, and that many advantages would accrue if we were to move down to that wonderful site.

It was said the other day that the hon. members of the Opposition looked bright and cheerful while entering their caucus, and looked very sad and bedraggled and downhearted afterwards.

Mr. Whicher: It was wrong. It was wrong.

Mr. White: Now, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that had we located the capital in London, these fine men would look happy both before and after their caucuses. As a matter of fact, I computed just recently and was interested to find that, since Confederation, the Conservative party has represented London more than 85 per cent. of the time—

Mr. Reaume: That is too bad.

Mr. White: —and this is proof positive that this is the finest city in Ontario.

Mr. Reaume: Well, why then is London not the capital?

Mr. White: The names of great men—I am thinking of men from both parties—come down to us through the ages: Carling, Meredith, Beck, whose name we hear so often even in these days, Moore, Wilson, Johnston, Webster, Calder, Robarts, of course, and Jackson.

Mr. Reaume: George Wenige.

Mr. White: He did not get this far. Let me say just a word about G. E. Jackson, who was my predecessor and whose political career was cut short through the pressure of other personal obligations. He sat in this House as the member for London South for four years. During that time, I have been assured, he gained the confidence, the respect and affection of all of the hon. members of this House and enjoys the same support in his own city.

His accomplishments during his 10 years of office here were several. The most notable, I suggest, was the fulfilment of the Beck sanatorium and acquisition which Mr. Jackson spoke about in this House several years ago, and which he did a great deal to bring about.

Mr. Speaker, socialized medicine is inevitable. Whether it is desirable or not will depend on the form it takes. If we rush into being a plan that makes bureaucrats of the doctors and imprisons the patients, then I suggest such a plan would do a great deal more harm than good. If we rush into being a plan that indebts our province or indebts our people, then I suggest such a plan would do more harm than good.

My suggestion to this House through you, Mr. Speaker, is that a committee should be established in the very near future, including both hon. members of this Legislature and members of the medical profession, to study existing plans. There are dozens of them in being around the world now. They should study existing plans with a view to formulating a plan that will serve our needs, leave our doctors free, and leave our patients free from crushing bureaucratic control.

I suggest that such a plan here in Ontario might have several important requisites.

Firstly, that it be on a fee-for-service basis; secondly, that the patient pay the doctor; thirdly, that the patient retain the right to choose his doctor and that the doctor retain the right to treat his patient.

The British system, as hon. members will recall, was rushed into being by a man and a government that were not particularly friendly to the free enterprise system. The British system had many faults. But, notwithstanding that fact, the British system has proved to be a great advantage to Britain.

Now I would tell a personal story in support of this contention. Some months ago it was my privilege to attend a small, personal luncheon given by a London civic leader for a British diplomat. This man held a Conservative appointment. He made it very clear that he was a great supporter of Macmillan, and of course the Tories at the time had been opposed to the plan that Bevan put in.

Nevertheless, very casually and matter of factly, during his talk to us, this man said that the British national health plan had resulted in an increased standard of health and had contributed greatly to the increased standard of living that is so apparent in Britain today.

As I say, he was not speaking about health or anything of the sort. He was not talking of socialism or free enterprise. He was talking about the buoyant economic situation in Britain today, and he gave the national health plan as one of the reasons.

This seems to me as very revealing, that a Conservative appointee would give a lot of the credit for the buoyant standard of living in Britain to the national health plan.

I am going to deal in a minute with costs of this plan. But let me just mention, at this stage, that there are definite economic advantages to having a universal health plan in a jurisdiction. People who might otherwise not be able to afford a doctor are able to get the finest in health treatment, they are away from work less, they contribute to the national production, and they stimulate the national economy.

There is another indirect advantage, the small group sitting immediately to my right geographically, and far to my left politically, show evidence of schizophrenic tendencies that a national health plan might seek to cure. To explain that just for a moment, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDonald: He thinks it needs explaining.

Mr. White: —they obviously have a split personality, half of it born in Regina at the time of the Regina manifesto, the other half born more recently in Winnipeg, half-free and half-socialist—

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): That is why the government got their hospital plan—

Mr. White: —some subscribing to one and some subscribing to the other. They have two names or 120 names. I guess 120 names is the latest tabulation, and now it would seem, Mr. Speaker, they have two leaders. I noted with interest—as I am sure the rest of the House did—that the entry from Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) was first out at the starting gate and we will watch his progress to the finish line with the greatest of interest.

Mr. Thomas: We have not been here too long.

Mr. MacDonald: He is dreaming.

Mr. White: Now to carry on this for just a moment, the somewhat larger group down the House, numbering 22, might find this universal health plan of some advantage in the complaint which they would seem to have, namely, amnesia. I think their policy in this matter of national health has changed 4 times in a year.

They remind me of the man who walked into the doctor's office complaining of amnesia. He said: "Doctor, I have the worst case of forgetfulness that a man ever had."

Mr. Whicher: He is telling it now.

Mr. White: And the doctor asked: "How long have you had it?" The man asked: "Had what?"

That, I suggest, is the position in which these hon. members find themselves. A year ago, to my knowledge, they had no plan concerning a universal health measure. Immediately before the election, I read in the London papers that they had come out wholeheartedly in favour of such a measure.

I think it was in September when they had a caucus. The press reported that they did not favour a universal health plan, and now we have certain hon. members of their caucus supporting it once again.

So the House may be a little puzzled about their policy in this matter. I am very sure that the people of Ontario are more than puzzled, they are completely buffaloed.

Medicine is not a business, I say to hon. members, but it should not be a branch of government. I think everybody, with the possible exception of this small group, would agree with that.

If we are to bind our doctors, if we are to make some civil servants or bureaucrats, it seems to me that the energy and research and loving care that they give to the population in this province is going to suffer. I think we would see a similar exodus to that which was shown in Britain where good doctors believing in freedom left the British health plan because they were being hamstrung by form after form and regulation after regulation.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member was in favour of it a moment ago.

Mr. White: I am in favour of a plan but not a bureaucratic plan.

Mr. Thomas: There are a lot of good doctors left over there in Great Britain, a lot of good ones.

Mr. White: That is why, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to this House that a committee be set up, in the very near future, composed of hon. members from this Legislature and members from the medical profession to devise a system that may be entirely new, something never done anywhere before. This committee could give us a plan that will give the people the protection they obviously need and want, and leave the medical profession free to cure the sick.

If the medical profession fails to co-operate in this social plan, if the medical profession fails to co-operate in this regard, I would forecast that a government in the years to come, many years, not as friendly to free enterprise and freedom of the individual as we are, will inaugurate a plan that will be socialistic in the extreme.

For this reason, I am most hopeful that the medical profession will join with the Legislature in devising a new plan, a great new plan.

It is a matter that requires a great deal of study. Present statistics are far from conclusive. We do not know exactly how much it costs us for drug bills, for medicine and so on. The evidence available indicates that about half of the total health costs in this province are presently being met through the Ontario hospital plan.

Let me congratulate the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), and all those concerned, on this magnificent forward step in the social legislation of this province.

I do not think there has been a greater piece of legislation put forward in this province for many decades. The people, Mr.

Speaker, are absolutely thrilled at the workings and the regulations that go with this Ontario hospital plan.

Mr. MacDonald: It is a government plan. He has changed his mind again.

Mr. White: In keeping with my suggestion that this Legislature inaugurate a committee to study this matter, I would like to read a press report, dated February 11, datelined Quebec, which says:

The Quebec assembly began discussion of a government bill to create a health insurance inquiry commission to look into the possibility of establishing a system of health insurance in the province.

This, Mr. Speaker, is exactly what I am hopeful we will do in Ontario. As further evidence of the great importance of looking into this matter with care, and not being swept into some health plan through political payola or something of this sort, we should not be stampeded into a plan, we should start investigating one with care right now.

The latest figures that I was able to obtain are dated 1957, and they indicate that the per capita costs for hospital care were $26, for physicians' services $16, for prescribed drugs $6, for dental care $5, and for other care which would include a lot of medicines bought over the counter without prescription $6, for a total of about $60. Now hon. members will note that the hospital care amounted to 43 per cent., and perhaps this is somewhat larger. I would think it would be about half. That leaves the other half in physicians' services, prescribed drugs, dental care, and so forth, to be investigated by the committee that I am suggesting.

In 1957, the health costs in this province amounted to approximately 5 per cent. of personal consumer expenditure, which is further evidence of the enormous step that this will be when taken, and of the great necessity of planning carefully in advance. About half of the present doctors' bills are now paid direct, and about half are paid by private insurance schemes.

From the same figures mentioned a moment ago, direct patient payments were 56 per cent. in 1957. I rather think, Mr. Speaker, that this had decreased somewhat through continued increase in health insurance to about 50 per cent.

Patients are estimated to have paid approximately 70 per cent. of the total consumer payments to physicians in 1954, 63 per cent., in 1957, and voluntary insurance plans the remaining 30 per cent. and 37 per cent.

respectively. All public payments to physicians were excluded.

I am suggesting, Mr. Speaker, that we tackle this problem of health by stages, and in this respect I am in good company. I am quoting now from a memorandum on hospital insurance and related matters prepared for hon. members of the legislative assembly of Ontario, March 6, 1956. The statement presented by the hon. Prime Minister included the remark:

We are anxious to evolve for Ontario a national plan that can be implemented in stages.

Stage one has been fulfilled in the hospital insurance. Stage two, I suggest, is a committee to investigate the health insurance matter. Stage three, Mr. Speaker, may be catastrophic coverage, by which I mean payments of medical expenses over, let us say, $100 in any given calendar year.

Mr. Whicher: Oh no, that is out.

Mr. White: This would eliminate those hardship cases which all of us hear of from time to time which drive families into bankruptcy, which put pressing, almost unbearable financial obligations on their children and nephews and sometimes grandchildren.

I say that the second stage in our development should be a committee to investigate the problem, that the third stage may very easily be catastrophic coverage, and the fourth stage may, or may not, be full health coverage.

May I just summarize that one point, Mr. Speaker. I hope I have set forth for the hon. members of this Legislature the enormity of the undertaking, the need for an investigating committee now, the likely desirability of catastrophic coverage in the near future and the need for careful preparation, should a full health plan be instituted in the years to come.

Another matter which concerns me, Mr. Speaker, is the matter of maximum ages in the civil service. I do not know if there is a government policy on this or not.

Mr. Whicher: There it is, the first—

Mr. White: Very likely there is. If there is, then it is not known to me and presumably not known to other people in the province. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, very respectfully that the policy should be clearly stated—the only maximum age for employment is the compulsory retirement age which I would hope to see set not lower than 70, and that this policy should be rigidly enforced.

I have personal knowledge of older men who were not employed by the Ontario government, the reason being given that they were too old. The pension plan is given as a reason and the fact that the civil service association has instituted this pension plan and apparently has some control over it. If the pension plan is the reason, then the reason should be eliminated.

The government is encouraging industry to employ older workers. It is beholden on the government, it is an absolute necessity that the government employ these older people, thus showing the way to industries throughout the province.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko) for his intense personal interest in the matter of highway safety, and I am glad to note that the hon. Minister is coming in now. I think, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister of Transport is doing a remarkably fine job in acquainting the people of this province with the need for safety. I think that he is keenly, even emotionally, interested in the subject of highway safety and I commend him for it.

I am, however, going to suggest one or two changes. I would like to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the present penalty for 12 points should not be lowered. I have an editorial from the London Free Press on the subject here, but I will not read it, I will just read a couple of pertinent sentences:

The plan will be useless unless the penalty is adequate, one that will stop the driver and make him wonder why he is careless or reckless, why he accumulates demerit marks. Easing the rules to let the careless driver be sure he has done a job does not seem an ample reason. Much thought should be given to such a change.

Further than that, Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the offences which now carry 5 points—that is careless driving, racing, exceeding the speed limit by 30 miles per hour—should be increased to 6 points for this reason:

Under the present set-up a person has to be caught 3 times for one of these several very important offences. To be caught 3 times would mean, I suggest, on the average, that the person had broken the laws 30 or 40 times.

Certainly all of us know, from our personal experience, that one does not get caught every time one goes through a stop street.

As it stands now, of course, a man has to be caught 3 times for careless driving before there is any licence suspension. By increasing the 5 points to 6 points would mean that his licence suspension took place after two convictions and I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is very modest indeed.

Secondly, I would like to suggest that, on the first conviction incurring 3 points—or for a total of 3 points—that the person concerned be required to go to a driving school or safety school or something of the sort for several hours.

I am reading now a Canadian Press report dated February 11, datelined Adelaide, Australia, which starts out:

In this south Australian capital city, if you are caught speeding down the main street you may not land in court but in school. Instead of giving you a ticket, the police department will mail a polite letter summoning you to a courtesy lecture on safe driving at the police training college.

That strikes me as a very intelligent approach to the problem of highway safety.

I would suggest further, Mr. Speaker, that at 6 points there be a one-week loss of licence which will drive home to the person breaking the laws the great privilege it is indeed to have a driver's permit. Finally, I suggest that there be a two-week loss of licence at the 9-point level.

There is a very decided problem in the city of London right now, and that concerns young people with driving skill, with great energy, with boundless enthusiasm, racing down the main street of the city. They race away from stop lights, imperilling in the process the pedestrians and other drivers. The chief of police in London has informed me that he thinks the laws on the subject are not tight enough.

I have spoken to one or two people here in Toronto, and they say the law is all right but that it is not being properly enforced. Whichever may be at fault, Mr. Speaker, I would like to suggest a thorough study of this by the hon. Minister of Transport and the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts).

I would like to tell hon. members another personal experience relating to safety.

For some years I was employed by a large steel company in Canada. Amongst other things they make nuts and bolts and fasteners of all kinds. They spent tens of thousands of dollars propagandizing safety.

As a matter of fact, the slogan "Safety First" was initiated in the steel industry. They spent immense amounts of money trying to encourage, persuade and cajole their employees to use safe practices, to wear safety glasses, safety shoes, and so forth, with very, very poor results. They then made it a company rule that if a man did not have the safety glasses on he was out of work.

They did not give two or three chances, but one. If a worker left his safety glasses off in one of these heading departments, he was out of work. And they have not had any trouble since. Countless men in that plant have their eyes because of that rigidly enforced rule.

In the matter of safety, Mr. Speaker, advertising is not the answer. The answer is intelligent laws strictly enforced.

I am most hopeful that the several suggestions that I have made to the hon. Minister of Transport, through you, Mr. Speaker, will be studied and perhaps found acceptable.

The matter of government facilities—or facilities for hon. members—was brought up the other day. Now, I do not intend to make a long harangue on this subject. But it seems like an appropriate time to say, Mr. Speaker, that it was a great surprise to me, very disappointing for several reasons indeed, to find that the hon. members of this House did not have proper office facilities.

In the absence of a proper office, hon. members cannot interview constituents and delegations in privacy and dignity. In the absence of a proper office they cannot store their books, records and like material in order and safety. In the absence of a proper office, they cannot sit down and prepare a speech—this is my excuse—one cannot sit down and prepare a speech. One cannot meditate, if hon. members will excuse the word, on the very important legislation that comes before this House.

The other side of this point is the dining room which I think is a shameful disgrace. Mr. Speaker, I would not take a friend of mine into that dining room—I would not take a political supporter of mine into that dining room—I would not take a delegation from London into that dining room. This is not because I am so concerned about their creature comforts or the creature comforts of the other hon. members here—that part does not concern me a great deal. But I am concerned because, Mr. Speaker, those facilities are not worthy of this important Legislature.

I will conclude this initial talk by saying that imagination is required of all of us. What was good enough in 1959 is not good enough in 1960. These suggestions, which are modest in nature, are given with great respect to all hon. members of the Legislature.

The most important suggestion in my mind is the necessity of establishing a committee in the near future to study this matter of health insurance.

Mr. Speaker, by applying a balanced combination of intelligence, integrity and imagination, we can put into being the great programme, "Progress Ontario!" Future generations will recall the achievements of this Legislature with praise and thanks. Yes I say, Mr. Speaker, they will greet our memory with hallelujahs.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, I do not know if I could classify this as my maiden speech in this august assembly, but perhaps I could describe it as my official maiden speech. Therefore, I would like to take advantage of the occasion to join with others in extending to you my sincere congratulations on your elevation to the high office which you now hold.

I sense, Mr. Speaker, that you have a particularly soft spot in your heart for those of us who are new in this assembly. I feel that you have a kindly and indulgent attitude towards us. I hasten to assure you that it would be entirely contrary to my nature to try to take advantage of your indulgence, but I would like you know that I appreciate it nevertheless.

Since this is my first speech in a Throne speech debate in any assembly anywhere, I would like to say one or two words by way of introducing myself. For that purpose, I would like to refer to a speech which the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) made in Galt during the last election campaign. In that speech, according to reports which appeared in the press, he referred to one of the CCF television programmes in the campaign, and made reference to my hon. leader (Mr. MacDonald) and—and I am now quoting—"one of his helpers."

Mr. Speaker, I would like it to be known that I am that helper. I would like it to be known further that I am proud to be a helper of the hon. leader of the CCF in Ontario, and I trust that I will be of some assistance to him.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): He is hoping that, too.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): I am not hoping, I know.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): He certainly needs the help, I will tell him that.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, earlier in this Throne speech debate we heard from the hon. Prime Minister about the results of the recent elections—in considerable detail and, if I may say so, with all the modesty of a rooster crowing on the top of a straw stack.

I may quibble to some degree, or may feel inclined to quibble to some degree, with the rather strained type of statistics the hon. Prime Minister presented to us. But on his basic proposition, that the government won the election, I regret to say that I cannot challenge him.

In view of that fact, Mr. Speaker, it had been my expectation when I entered this assembly that we would see in the hon. Prime Minister a profound sense of security and serenity.

It is, therefore, with no little surprise that I have discovered quite unmistakable manifestations of insecurity and uncertainty on his part. How else, Mr. Speaker, can one explain the amount of time he has devoted to berating a government which went out of office in this province almost two decades ago? He has been at great pains to demonstrate to us that his government today is not as bad as that government was then.

Actually, I would be prepared to accept his proposition without his detailed documentation, but I must say, Mr. Speaker, that it was a matter of some surprise to me to discover how deeply he has had to delve into the barrel to find a standard with which he feels he can safely compare the record of his administration.

The hon. Prime Minister dealt with the election results at great length. I am not perhaps as proud of them as he is, so I will not deal with them at as great a length as he did, but there are—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: I quite agree with the hon. member. But there are one or two points relating to those election results that I would like to mention.

The hon. member: Not again.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, again. I would like to mention first of all—and this is something which I do not think has been mentioned by the hon. members opposite—that 46.1 per cent. of the people who voted in the last election voted confidence in the present government, while 53.9 per cent. voted non-confidence in the government.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bryden: Oh, sure.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: What percentage did the CCF group get of that?

Mr. Bryden: We got less than Conservatives got, if that is any consolation to the hon. Minister.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I think that the facts which I have cited should be an occasion for perhaps humility rather than breast beating and braggadocio.

I would like to carry the matter a little further, Mr. Speaker. If one takes all of the people who were eligible to vote in the last election, one finds that 27.6 per cent. of them voted for the government. If this election had been held under The Labour Relations Act, the government's pretensions would have been laughed out of court. In fact—

Mr. Whicher: Or under The Farm Products Marketing Act.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, or the farm marketing legislation. In fact, if the election had been held under either of those Acts, not one of us would be sitting in this House. The House would be as empty as the words which the government saw fit to put into the mouth of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay).

Mr. Speaker, when I was anticipating that I would participate in this debate, there were a number of subjects that I thought I would like to talk about. One of the great problems in a debate of this kind is not to try to decide on all of the things one wants to talk about, but to try to select the ones in which one is most interested, and I had selected 3 or 4.

I am not sure now whether I will get around to dealing with them all, or even any of them. I say this because, during the course of the debate, a new element came up with an extremely lengthy speech a week ago by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay).

Although it had not been my intention to deal with the matter that was the subject of his address, and although I have not, until now, expressed myself publicly on that issue at any time, I feel that it is necessary to make some comment, and perhaps a fairly extended comment, about this very important and controversial matter of the Samia land deal, which I think is probably the popular description of it now.

The hon. Minister spoke for 3 hours or more on this subject. He overwhelmed us with exhibits and details of all kinds. He gave what appeared to be a most exhaustive analysis of the whole subject.

But unfortunately, Mr. Speaker, the really important questions, the really vital questions, were not even raised by the hon. Minister, much less answered by him. So, in spite of all his very carefully and very ably presented brief, we still have the important questions to deal with, and I would like to take advantage of the present opportunity to deal with them as best I can.

To begin with, Mr. Speaker, I am going to state 3 propositions which I will then proceed to document. I realize that I run a certain amount of risk in presenting my propositions before the documentation. I have no doubt that there may be some suggestion that I lack documentation, but I would ask that the hon. members of the House bear with me as best they can, because I will get around to documenting these propositions quite fully.

My 3 propositions are as follows: First, Hydro made no serious effort to acquire the land or any part of it directly from the Indian band. Second, if it had made such an effort, there is very strong reason to believe that it could have acquired the land—or at least some of it—for substantially less than the price it ultimately paid to Dimensional Investments, and perhaps for as little as half as much. Third, in spite of the fact that Hydro was ostensibly in competition with Dimensional Investments for acquisition of the land from the Indian band, Hydro in effect guaranteed Dimensional's downpayment, and thereby facilitated its acquisition of the land.

Those are my propositions, Mr. Speaker, and I will now proceed to demonstrate them. The hon. Minister, in his presentation a week ago, emphasized—time after time—that there was an urgent need for, and there is no doubt there was urgent need for, greatly expanded Hydro facilities in the Sarnia industrial area. He indicated that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario felt itself under heavy pressure to take action, and that this made it necessary for it to acquire land on the Indian reserve.

The hon. Minister stated to us, and I accept his statement, that there was a great need for expansion and there was a need to acquire the land in question.

However, in spite of this urgent need that the hon. Minister referred to, a careful examination of the record reveals that Hydro bumbled through the whole of 1958 without really ever getting to grips with the problem of acquiring the land from the Indian band. It was not until the end of the year, not until after Dimensional, through Crown Trust, had got its offer accepted by the Indian band that Hydro really got down to serious business.

This matter was first broached by Hydro early in January of 1958. My evidence for that statement is a letter which the hon. Minister did not file, but which I will now read into this record. It is dated February 6, 1958, it was signed by Mr. Ward L. Leroy, superintendent of the Sarnia Indian agency, and was addressed to the London office of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario. It says:

Early in January your Mr. Robertson interviewed the writer and advised that your commission anticipated construction of a new steel power line from London to Sarnia, and that a portion of it would extend through our Sarnia Indian reserve. Also, he advised that it might be necessary to construct a new sub-station on the north-easterly portion of the reserve.

This, says Mr. Leroy, was early in January—when a Mr. Robertson of the Hydro approached him.

At a meeting of the Sarnia band council Tuesday evening, we discussed the matter with members of the council, and they did not appear to be unfavourable to granting additional right of way to your existing line.

However, before granting by resolution permission for your company representative to deal with the locatees of the property over which the line might pass or traverse, they wish to have definite information as to the proposed route of your line and the location of your transformer station.

If you would be good enough to let us have this information, the matter will be again discussed with them at their monthly council meeting on March 4.

This is dated February 6, and it refers to the fact that a Mr. Robertson of Hydro had called on Mr. Leroy early in January.

An examination of the records reveal that the officials, both local and in Ottawa, of the Indian affairs branch of The Department of Citizenship and Immigration, were quite willing and ready to facilitate action on Hydro's problem.

Mr. Leroy suggested, in his letter of February 6, that Hydro should submit its requirements in some detail. Hydro did this in a letter of February 11 which the hon. Minister tabled, which actually was addressed to the department at Ottawa.

The department at Ottawa acknowledged the letter on February 13—that was a letter from Mr. Bethune—and again as evidence of their willingness to co-operate Mr. Bethune said:

It is noted that you wish to make a thorough investigation of the site to see if it is suitable, and if you prefer to do this before you approach the band council, we believe that this can be arranged through our Indian superintendent, Mr. Leroy.

Earlier in the letter he said:

The Sarnia band council is holding its regular monthly meeting on Tuesday, March 4, 1958, at 8 in the evening in the council hall on the reserve, and this might be the proper time to have a representative discuss the matter with the band council.

In other words, on February 13 the department was saying, in effect: "We will be happy to try to arrange for you to make such investigations as you require. We suggest that you come to a band council meeting on March 4."

As I indicated, the hon. Minister put those two letters on the record, and then, as I recall his statement, he said that, apart from a few telephone calls, nothing much more happened on this matter until on in May.

Well, Mr. Speaker, that is not entirely true. There were actually further letters received in February by Hydro from the Indian affairs branch. There was one, for example of February 17, 1958, signed by Mr. Ward Leroy, the local superintendent, addressed to Mr. Huddleston, the deputy director of property in Toronto, and it said:

Permission has been granted by the Sarnia Indian council to members of your staff to inspect the site of your proposed transmission line and transformer station site on the reserve. As you have already been advised by our department at Ottawa, members of your commission may attend the March 4 council meeting in Sarnia to request permission of the council to negotiate with the individual locatees and the eventual purchase and right-of-way and site you may require.

This was a letter of February 17, reminding Hydro again that there was a meeting of the band council on March 4 and stating specifically: "There is now permission for your staff to go in and inspect this site if you wish to."

Then there was another letter from Mr. Leroy on February 27, addressed to Mr. Stiles in Toronto:

Permission has been obtained from the chief and council of the Sarnia band for you and representatives of your company to enter the Sarnia Indian reserve in order that you may examine a portion of the reserve where your commission anticipates placing a power line right-of-way and transformer site.

On February 27, Mr. Leroy says again: "You have permission to go in there and examine the ground."

Twice it was suggested to Hydro that they should come to a meeting scheduled for March 4. But, for some reason or other which is not entirely clear to me, and which has not been explained, Hydro did not seem to accept the invitation to go to the meeting of March 4 or the invitation to go in and examine the site. I say this because we come away along to May 12, and now, 3 months later, we have another letter from Mr. Leroy to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario addressed to the Toronto office to the attention to Mr. Tidy:

We are in receipt of a letter from our department with regard to an interview of yourself and Mr. Huddleston with our reserves and trusts division and having regard to your proposed purchase of rights-of-way and a sub-station site on our Sarnia Indian reserve. At our regular monthly council meeting of May 6 we discussed this matter and permission has been granted your staff to enter the reserve—

This is about the third time, —at your convenience and carry out such tests as you may require. I would suggest that you contact the writer prior to entry—and so on.

So, they had permission away back in February. They were invited to an Indian council meeting to be held in March, and when we get into May we find they are still getting permission to do what they had already got permission to do away back in February.

This is the beginning of my case on my first proposition, Mr. Speaker, and I would remind hon. members that my first proposition was that Hydro made no serious effort to acquire the land directly from the Indians. They certainly were not working very hard at it at this stage.

Well, the story carries on: Hydro undoubtedly went in and made its tests, and I have no doubt that it took some substantial time to complete the tests. So I am not raising any complaint about the fact that the next development comes on June 17—that is, a month or so later, probably 5 weeks later. It would not surprise me that it took that long to make necessary tests.

Well, anyway, on June 17, Mr. Tidy of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario wrote to the chief and councillors of the Sarnia Indian reserve, and asked if Hydro could present, or explain, its requirements to the Indian band or their council. This was arranged, and Hydro was invited to attend a meeting of the Indian band council on July 22.

Mr. Tidy of Hydro, as I understand it, attended that meeting, outlined requirements and, as the hon. Minister said, there was no mention of price at that particular meeting. The band council decided that this matter was of sufficient import that it should be explained to the whole band.

So they held a band meeting a month later, on August 21, and Mr. Tidy, I believe, attended again.

If I can recapitulate at this point, Mr. Speaker, the situation is that, early in January of 1958, Hydro approached the Indian affairs branch on what the hon. Minister has described as a highly urgent matter, and now we have come to August 21 and finally they are getting around to putting forth some propositions, or at any rate discussing their case. They really did not get around to putting forth any propositions, but they did explain their requirements to the band.

At the meeting of August 21, they got authority to negotiate with the locatees.

I suppose it is unnecessary to explain this again, but the locatees are the people, the Indians, who have rights to live on, or to occupy specific pieces of land within the reserve, which is owned by the band as a whole.

So, it appears that, after almost 7 months, finally Hydro is starting to get somewhere. They were supposed to be breaking their necks, and in 7 months they are starting to get somewhere. They have the right to deal now with the locatees.

But just at this point, Mr. Speaker, a villain appears on the scene in the person of Crown Trust, acting for Dimensional Investments. I am not quite sure when Dimensional Investments came into being, but it certainly was just about at this time—it was some time in August, and August is what we are talking about.

Apparently Crown Trust, acting for Dimensional, went to the Indian band and had a meeting with them on August 28.

I have seen the minutes of some of these meetings, some that I asked to see. Chief Adams and his solicitor were good enough to let me look at them and copy extracts from them.

I will read out the appropriate minute as I copied it from their minute book, from the meeting of August 28. This is the one that apparently caused such concern to Hydro. There is an earlier paragraph that I did not jot down in which they gave Crown Trust authority to negotiate with the locatees, and then the minute goes on to say, and I am quoting it:

This is being granted with the full knowledge that previous authority was granted the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario to take options and deal with the locatees for other portions of our reserve. However, council takes the following action because they feel that the offer from the Crown Trust Company of Canada will be of greater benefit to the whole band and by this resolution revoke the authority granted to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario.

This doleful decision was communicated to Hydro in a letter apparently written the same night, August 28. Apparently it put the Hydro people in such a dither that they did everything under the sun except the one thing that might have produced some constructive results for them.

The hon. Minister stated, not once but many times during his submission, that at this point Hydro had 4 possible courses open to it: (1) it could do nothing; (2) it could choose an alternative route outside the reserve; (3) it could go to Ottawa to ask for permission to expropriate; (4)—how this comes into it, I do not know—but (4) it could negotiate with Crown Trust. The hon. Minister told us many, many times those were the 4 possible courses of action, the only possible courses of action.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that the logical and obvious course of action for Hydro was to go back to the Indian band and present a proposition which might be attractive enough to them so that they would change the decision they made on August 28. After all, on August 21, they had given Hydro the right to negotiate with the locatees. They changed their minds on the 28th because what Crown Trust was saying to them seemed more attractive than Hydro's proposition.

Now, if they could change their minds once they could change them again. As a matter of fact, the hon. Minister mentioned that these gentlemen on the Indian band council were very shrewd businessmen. I have not talked to all of them, but I have talked to the chief, and I was most impressed with his shrewdness, and I have no doubt that, if Hydro had come back with something that looked attractive, they could have been readily induced to change their minds.

The hon. Minister, of course, made a very strong point in his presentation, and I believe this is really the key to his whole argument. He said Hydro could not go back to the Indian band because, by their decision of August 28 that I just read out, they removed Hydro's authority to go to the band.

To be honest about it, Mr. Speaker, being a very trusting soul always, I really accepted this proposition at first, and was willing to believe it until I started to take another look at the situation, until I looked at the minutes and the letter from Mr. Leroy that communicated the substance of the minutes.

Neither the minutes nor Mr. Leroy's letter said anything about not going back to the Indians. All it said was: "We have withdrawn authority to negotiate with the locatees." It did not say: "You cannot come back to our band council." It did not say: "You cannot come to see our lawyer in Sarnia." It did not say: "You cannot come and meet with the whole band at a band meeting." It did not say any of those things, and I would like to dwell on this a little further, Mr. Speaker.

The hon. Minister talked at great length about the number of times, I have forgotten how many times, Hydro officials took trips to Ottawa to talk to Lieutenant-Colonel Jones, who is in charge of the Indian affairs branch. They certainly took two or three trips there and there has apparently been some dispute as to just what happened in the meetings with Lieutenant-Colonel Jones.

There are slight discrepancies in the accounts of those meetings, but I do not think they are of any great consequence. They represent the different recollections of people of the same event, that is about all one could say.

But on one point there is no discrepancy at all. To bring this point out, I would like, first of all, to refer to the letter which Lieutenant-Colonel Jones wrote to Hydro on July 22, 1959, reviewing the whole affair after it was all over. This letter was read into the record by the hon. Minister and I will quote just the first paragraph, the paragraph the hon. Minister thought was favourable to his case. I am not going to be so unfair as to quote the subsequent paragraphs that were quite unfavourable to his case.

The first paragraph in Lieutenant-Colonel Jones' letter reads as follows:

The consistent policy of this department in dealing with applications from authorities with power to expropriate for rights of way, etc., across Indian land has been to advise them to work out an agreement with the Indian band concerned and you were advised to this effect.

Then, I will quote from a newspaper story which the hon. Minister also read into the record and which appeared in the Toronto Telegram on June 6, 1959. Lieutenant-Colonel Jones is quoted as saying that, he had urged Hydro to continue negotiations with the Indians for a direct purchase.

Now, I mentioned that, on this point, there is no discrepancy in the record. If one takes a look at the statutory declarations of the various Hydro officials who talked to Lieutenant-Colonel Jones, they will find this in the declaration of Mr. Tidy, referring to a meeting held on September 24, paragraph 9, the last sentence:

Lieutenant-Colonel Jones stated that he would not make such a recommendation to his Minister—that is, a recommendation for expropriation, —and suggested that we continue our negotiations for a mutually satisfactory settlement.

Mr. Hustler, in his statutory declaration says, with regard to two meetings:

The said Lieutenant-Colonel Jones stated at those times that he would not make such a recommendation to his Minister and suggested that representatives of the Ontario Hydro continue their negotiations for a mutually satisfactory settlement.

If we take another declaration of Mr. Tidy referring to another meeting, we find this:

The said Lieutenant-Colonel Jones suggested that representatives of the Ontario Hydro continue their negotiations for a mutually satisfactory settlement.

Now, Mr. Speaker, did this distinguished gentleman in Ottawa have to write it out on a blackboard for them? Surely, what he was trying to tell them, and what would surely come through to most people, is this: "You are talking to me about expropriation and I am quite unsympathetic to it. I would not recommend it to the government. What you should do is go back to the Indians and negotiate with them because that has always been our policy. If you want land from the Indians you must get it on terms that are satisfactory to them."

He obviously told them that every time they were in his office, but Hydro apparently was not impressed with his advice. They did not go back to the Indians. They did not go near them. Where did they go? They went to Crown-Trust.

As I understand the whole submission of the hon. Minister, I could be wrong but certainly my understanding was that Crown Trust was a competitor of Hydro's in this matter. Crown Trust wanted land and Hydro wanted some of the same land.

If I wanted to buy any commodity whatsoever for some other person, I would be inclined to go to the person who had it for sale, not to some other person who was in competition with me to get that particular item. But Hydro did not go to the people who had the land for sale. They went to the company that was trying to work out a deal with the Indians, in competition with Hydro.

Naturally, Crown Trust said to them, as the hon. Minister emphasized over and over again: "You stay away from the Indians, do not go anywhere near them."

Who would not do this? If I were dealing with anybody, and I knew somebody else might be coming in with an offer that might be better than mine, I would say to them: "You stay away, do not go near those fellows. I would rather deal with them all by myself without any distractions, such as a competing offer."

Why, in heaven's name, Hydro so tamely accepted the advice and recommendation of their competitor is beyond my comprehension, but there it is.

On August 28, Hydro's right to negotiate with the locatees was cut off—not their right to negotiate with the Indian band but just their right to talk to the locatees. It was cut off, and for 3 months in the critical period of negotiations Hydro had no contact whatsoever with the Indian band—at any rate none that I have been able to discover and the hon. Minister did not indicate any.

I was talking to the solicitor for the Indian band who is a member of a law firm in Sarnia, and I asked him about this. He said Hydro did not come near him and, as far as he knew, they did not come to any of the members of the band council, but representatives of Crown Trust were in his office almost daily, talking to him, and they were in contact with members of the Indian band council regularly, consistently, all the time.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): What was his name?

Mr. Bryden: Pardon?

Mr. Sopha: The solicitor, what was his name?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I think the hon. member knows him fairly well. As a matter of fact, he was once a Liberal candidate. I am surprised the hon. member was not down to see him. I went down and had quite an interesting chat with him.

Mr. Sopha: A very fine fellow.

Mr. Bryden: A very fine gentleman, but at any rate—

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I think my hon. friend is obliged to tell the name of the person instead of giving hearsay evidence. There is no reason to hide it.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, I am not—as a matter of fact, the name has slipped my mind—just a second while I look it up here. I am certainly quite happy to give hon. members the name. It is Mr. MacEachran. I jotted down the name of the law firm, but I have so many notes here that—oh yes, it is Mr. John S. MacEachran of McComb, MacEachran and George, a firm in Sarnia.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Is the hon. member satisfied now?

Mr. Sopha: I do not know.

Mr. Thomas: He does not know, well that is fine. It was not much use for him to inquire, was it?

Mr. Bryden: At any rate, Mr. Speaker, Mr. MacEachran acted and still acts for this band, and he advises me that, although in this critical period Crown Trust was constantly in contact with him and with other spokesmen for the Indian band, Hydro was never near them for all the period from the end of August to the beginning of December.

Then, at the end of November or beginning of December, the situation changed a little. Crown Trust had made its second offer. They made one offer, I believe, and that was not accepted. Then they made a somewhat better offer, the one that was ultimately accepted, and it was put to a vote of the Indian band, as is required.

The hon. Minister of Citizenship and Immigration (Mrs. Fairclough), exercising her responsibilities and authority under the law, ruled that the vote was not valid. So, suddenly, we have a situation where perhaps Crown Trust, acting for Dimensional, is not going to get the land after all.

At this point, after 3 months of being completely out of the picture, suddenly Hydro rushes back in, and on December 3 Mr. Tidy of Hydro appeared before the band council. This meeting was arranged a few days earlier, by correspondence that the hon. Minister tabled.

At this time, when it appeared that perhaps Dimensional would not get the land after all, Mr. Tidy came back again to the band council. He again discussed the matter with them. But this time, for some reason I am not quite sure of, he discussed only the 32 acres which was to form the site of the sub-station. He did not discuss the additional acreage involved in the power lines. However, he did on December 3 discuss with the council the 32 acres required for the site of the sub-station, and the following item appears in the minutes of the band council meeting of that day:

The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario representative agreed to pay the locatees the average price per acre of the property in this location that the Crown Trust has outlined, which is approximately $2,200 per acre (band and locatee rights).

The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario representative agreed to pay the average price per acre outlined in the Crown Trust offer, which is approximately $2,200 per acre, that is for the 32 acres only, and that was for the band and locatee rights together. The minutes go on to say:

This is if the Crown Trust Company's offer is rejected.

The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario will not act on this offer until the Crown Trust Company is in agreement with this proposal.

Now, Mr. Speaker, this was on December 3. Mr. Tidy was before the Indian band council. The minutes say that he, speaking for Hydro, agreed to pay the average price that Crown Trust offered. He was going to pay for 32 acres the average price that Crown Trust had offered for over 3,000 acres.

I believe there may be some discrepancy between this minute and Mr. Tidy's statutory declaration. I am not quite sure if there is a discrepancy or not, and if there is, I have no doubt that Mr. Tidy's statutory declaration is honest, to the best of his recollection.

But I do submit, Mr. Speaker, that a record made at the time is better evidence than a statement made more than a year after the event. And, certainly, according to the minutes of the band council meeting of December 3, Mr. Tidy—I will not say he made an offer, although that word is used here, because I doubt if it was a firm offer—but he suggested a price of $2,200 per acre.

Now, would anyone in his right mind expect that this band would accept, for a very small portion of their reserve, the same price per acre as they already had been offered under a firm offer by Crown Trust for the entire reserve? It seems to me that anybody who would put a figure like $2,200 before them in that situation was just not seriously trying to get them to consider his proposition.

Even so, the Indian council did not cut Hydro off altogether. They suggested: Well, we have an alternative site over on the edge of the reserve of about 30 acres; maybe that would suit your requirements. As far as I could see, they were bending over backwards to be helpful.

Well, as the hon. Minister I think demonstrated, the alternative site was not suitable for Hydro's purposes, and Hydro so advised the Indian band.

Then the matter came back to a meeting of the band council on December 15. I am not quite sure, Mr. Speaker, whether Mr. Tidy or other representatives of Hydro were at the meeting of December 15, the matter came back to the council. The hon. Minister read into the record a letter that Hydro received from Chief Adams relating to that meeting, but for some reason which I will not attempt to explain he did not read into the record a letter on the same matter that Hydro received from Ward L. Leroy, the superintendent of the Sarnia Indian agency.

Now, I am not attaching any stupendous significance to this letter. But I do think, to complete the record, it should be there, so I will read it. This was a letter dated December 16 from Mr. Leroy to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario property division in Toronto.

Following your meeting with the Sarnia chief and band council last evening, you are advised that a resolution was passed at this meeting which was as follows:

"Moved by Aylmer Plain, and seconded by Telford Adams, that we grant the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario permission to locate on Scott and Churchill Road, as originally planned—"

That is the site that Hydro wanted,

"—and passed by the band at the August 21, 1958 meeting."

An amendment was also made as follows:

"Moved by Calvin Adams and seconded by Lawrence Williams that the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario locate their sub-station on the Indian Road."

That is the quotation from the minute. Mr. Leroy goes on to say:

Unfortunately the amendment—which had the effect of asking Hydro either to go over to the site they did not want or nowhere—

—carried by a majority of one, and council have therefore not approved of your sub-station site being located at the corner of Scott and Churchill. Should there be any further developments in this matter we will be very pleased to advise you.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): To whom was the letter addressed?

Mr. Bryden: This letter was addressed to Hydro, attention Mr. C. F. S. Tidy, assistant director of property.

As I said, I am not attaching tremendous significance to that letter, except to demonstrate that it appears that, even at this late date, when the band had a firm offer from Crown Trust for their whole reserve, they were still quite willing to consider what Hydro had to offer to them—if indeed they had anything to offer at all.

In fact, it would appear that Hydro's request for the 32-acre site inside the reserve, even in these circumstances, was turned down by only one vote. It seems possible that, if Hydro had come along with any sort of a proposition, the Indian band—even at that late date and it was indeed very late—might have been prepared to consider it.

However, time marched on, and a few days later Crown Trust's offer of $6.5 million for the entire reserve was submitted to a new vote of the entire band. This time the offer was approved, and the federal government was authorized by the Indian band to negotiate with Crown Trust on the basis of the offer of $6.5 million. So, at this juncture Hydro was out of the picture, as far as the Indians were concerned.

So, Mr. Speaker, this matter which has been described, I think quite correctly, as one of the greatest urgency, was initiated by Hydro at the beginning of January, and finally, at the end of December—just before Christmas in the same year, 1958—they are dealt out of the deal.

In the entire period, from the beginning of January until the end of December—almost a year—Hydro representatives had 3 or at the most 4—I am not quite sure if they had a fourth meeting, but they had not more than 4 meetings—with either the Indian band or the Indian band council. At most, in the course of a whole year, they had 4 meetings.

Moreover, in the critical period when Crown Trust was in daily contact with the Indians and their representatives, in the critical 3-month period between the end of August and the beginning of December, Hydro did not have one meeting with the band or band council.

If that sort of activity is indicative of a profound sense of urgency, Mr. Speaker, I would hate to see Hydro when they feel they do not have to hurry.

Mr. MacDonald: No wonder the hon. Minister of Energy Resources went out tonight.

Mr. Bryden: I submitted in my first proposition, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): What does all this prove, anyway?

Mr. Bryden: Now, Mr. Speaker, there is no doubt in my mind—I will certainly be prepared to grant this, and I talked to Chief Adams about the matter and in talking to him I am quite satisfied that the Indian band had a preference for selling the entire tract in one parcel if they could. However, all these things are relative.

All of us have preferences for this, that or the other thing, but if somebody can make it attractive enough for us, we can sometimes be induced to change our preferences. Hydro did not make the slightest effort to make it worthwhile for the Indians to give favourable consideration to its requirements. After its authority to negotiate with the locatees was withdrawn, it did not even go near the Indians for months. When it finally got around to putting forward some sort of a proposition, the proposition was one which was bound to fail.

How could one expect that they would accept an average of $2,200 an acre for 32 acres when they could get that average, in fact, the hon. Minister says a larger average, for the whole tract? The hon. Minister says that Hydro did not at any time discuss money with the Indians, though the minutes of the band council meeting of December 3 do not bear that out.

But let us accept the hon. Minister's proposition that they did not, that the minutes are wrong, that Hydro did not at any time discuss money. Well, I submit that that makes the case even stronger, Mr. Speaker. If Hydro was not even willing to put forward any idea of what it had in mind, how in heaven's name did it expect to compete with Crown Trust in the negotiations for this very important land?

My first proposition was that Hydro made no serious effort to get this land from the Indians, and I submit that my proposition has been demonstrated. There is the evidence. The factual record, most of which was presented by the hon. Minister himself, indicates no real effort to get that land from the Indians.

My second proposition, Mr. Speaker, was that Hydro could very likely have got this land directly from the Indians for substantially less than the amount they ultimately had to pay to Dimensional. I suggested it is possible that they might even have been able to get it for half as much. I am not absolutely confident of that, but I feel quite certain that they could have got it for less.

I realize that at this point the proposition is hypothetical to some degree. How do we know, if Hydro had said: "We will give you $4,000 an acre," or something like that, that the Indians would have accepted it? We cannot know at this stage, because unfortunately Hydro never did put a sensible proposition before them. We do not know for sure that they would have accepted it or rejected it, if one had been put before them.

Nevertheless, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister stated categorically, and I am now quoting:

Ontario Hydro for several years has been of the opinion that it would likely have to pay in excess of $5,000 an acre for the land which it subsequently had to pay $7,000 an acre for, if it wanted the land in the reserve, because it cuts the land up into 6 separate parcels.

So all along, according to what the hon. Minister said, Hydro was convinced that they were going to have to pay at least $5,000 an acre for this land.

I can tell hon. members, from having had quite a lengthy discussion with Chief Adams and his solicitor, that there is doubt in my mind that if Hydro had given the slightest indication that they had anything approaching $5,000 an acre in mind, the red carpet would have been rolled out for them in double-quick time. Hydro had it in the back of their mind all the time that they were going to have to pay this, but the only time they discussed money they said $2,200.

Chief Adams insists—this is just his word, but he is certainly quite insistent about it—that, at the meeting of December 3, during the general conversation, he said to Mr. Tidy that, in view of the fact that Hydro only wanted a little piece of the reserve, it ought to be prepared to pay more than $2,200—the average that Crown Trust has offered. He also insists that when Mr. Tidy asked him how much, he said $3,500 an acre.

Now, that is not recorded in the minutes but, of course, it was just a matter of conversation, so that it would not necessarily go into the minutes. The chief himself is quite insistent that that is what he suggested. He said in effect: “Well, if you only want a small portion of the reserve, why not give us $3,500 an acre?” This would be considerably more than Dimensional was offering on the average for the entire tract.

Now, I do not know if this was just a sentence thrown out into the conversation. It certainly does not mean that if Hydro had said they were willing, after having talked to the locatees and got into a position to work out a firm offer, to consider something like $3,500 the Indians would have accepted it. But the problem was that Hydro did not even try such a proposition. It seems to me that if Hydro had in mind a figure of $5,000, or even more, surely any bargainer would try out $3,500 for size and see how it fitted, or $4,000 or $4,500. That would still leave scope for being bargained up. Why did Hydro not try any of these proposals?

Mr. J. R. Simonett (Frontenac-Addington): How does the hon. member know they did not?

Mr. Bryden: Well, there is not one indication anywhere in the record that they did, and the hon. Minister says that they never discussed money with the Indians. The Indian band, at least their chief and their lawyer, said that they certainly had no notion that Hydro had anything in mind except paying the average price Crown had offered in a firm offer for the entire tract.

The only offer Hydro apparently made, I submit, was totally ridiculous, and nobody could expect it would be accepted. That is all I know about it. If Hydro had offered $3,500 or even suggested it—and I would concede they were not, at that point, in a position to make a firm offer—but if they had even suggested $3,500, $4,000 or $4,500, then I submit that the onus is on them to produce the evidence of it, because there is no evidence of it anywhere in the record or anywhere in what the hon. Minister himself said. So that is my second proposition, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Grossman: Pretty good hindsight.

Mr. Bryden: Look—they were, they said, in an urgent situation. All right, they were in an urgent situation, and they needed this land badly, so they stayed out of the picture for 3 months.

Mr. Grossman: I suppose they were trying to get it as cheaply as possible. What is wrong with that?

Mr. Bryden: Well, then they rushed in and paid $7,000.

Mr. Sopha: The hon. Minister is not here—that is the parliamentary secretary.

Mr. Bryden: I see. Well, that is fine, he is a very estimable parliamentary secretary, and the hon. Minister is very fortunate to have him.

Now we will learn just how hard Hydro was trying to get this land cheaply.

This brings me to my third proposition, which is that Hydro, in effect, guaranteed Dimensional's downpayment, and thereby facilitated its acquisition; by that I mean Dimensional's acquisition, of the land.

Hydro was going at this in a most leisurely fashion all through 1958 until finally, at the end of 1958, the Indians voted to accept Dimensional's offer. Then, by George, we really see fast action. Of course, the holiday season intervened and I am not quite sure when Hydro started dealing with Dimensional, but I understand from the hon. Minister's statement it was early in January. It could not have been earlier than the end of December anyway.

Early in January, let us say, Hydro started dealing with Dimensional, and in two months they had a deal. On March 11 they entered into a firm contract with Dimensional, whereby they agreed to pay $1.25 million to the Imperial Bank of Canada in—

Mr. Sopha: Escrow.

Mr. Bryden: Escrow, thank you. As the hon. member knows, my legal training has been rather sadly neglected.

The money was to be released—my expressions may not be technically correct but I think hon. members will understand me—the money was to be released to Dimensional as that company satisfied its obligations under the agreement. A sum of $150,000 was deposited in escrow in the Imperial Bank of Canada, and a firm contract signed on March 11.

That worked out to an average price, the hon. Minister said, of just under $7,000 per acre. That is quite a bit more than the $5,000 Hydro had in mind, and a great deal more than the $3,500 Chief Adams suggested. I admit the chief's proposal was just an off-the-cuff suggestion, but $7,000 is really getting up quite high. Hydro was working hard to get this land cheaply, we are told, but all through 1958 they did nothing about it, and in 1959 they got it for the "bargain" price of $7,000 per acre.

The interesting thing is that, when Hydro entered into this agreement with Dimensional, Dimensional did not actually have the land at all.

Mr. MacDonald: Let the hon. member for St. Andrew listen to this.

Mr. Bryden: It is true that late in December the Indian band had voted to accept Dimensional's offer, but all that meant was that the band authorized the federal department to negotiate with Crown Trust on their behalf on the basis of the offer.

There was no agreement for the purchase of the land, and the negotiations with the federal department extended over a period of time, mainly because, as I understand it, the federal department was getting appraisals of the land.

On March 11 there was no agreement between the federal government and Dimensional Investments for the sale to Dimensional of this land. There were just negotiations based on the vote of the Indians.

The agreement between Dimensional and the federal government was entered into on March 14, 1959, 3 days after Hydro's agreement with Dimensional.

Mr. MacDonald: Shame.

Mr. Bryden: This agreement of March 14 provided, among other things, that Dimensional would have to make a downpayment in two parts—$750,000 to go to the Crown as the downpayment for the band, and $332,763.63 to be paid to the individual locatees. That made a total of just a little under $1.1 million which was to be paid upon the execution of the agreement on March 14. Now, already there was $1.25 million in escrow in the Imperial Bank of Canada.

Mr. MacDonald: People's money. Hydro's money.

Mr. Bryden: Hydro's money. Dimensional, under its agreement, had to pay immediately just under $1.1 million, so what happened? Hydro, in effect, put up the whole of Dimensional's downpayment and left them with a bit more than $150,000.

Mr. MacDonald: Three days in advance.

Mr. Bryden: They had it 3 days in advance. Now, in view of the leisurely pace all through 1958, I cannot for the life of me understand why there was such an all-fired hurry to get that agreement with Dimensional signed by March 11. No doubt Hydro was anxious about the land and wanted to negotiate, but surely they could have waited a week or two. After all, they had been waiting since the beginning of January of the previous year. Surely they could have waited a week or two, if for no other reason than to see if Dimensional could put up the downpayment, because if Dimensional could not do that, the deal was off and the field would have been wide open again for Hydro to go right back to the Indians and deal with them directly.

Mr. MacDonald: Now where is the hon. Minister of Energy Resources?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: We take all this with a grain of salt, anyway.

Mr. Bryden: Does the hon. Minister deny the dates of these agreements?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I am not denying anything. Who is the hon. member accusing?

Mr. Bryden: I am not accusing anybody of anything, and really it is ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, when one tries to deal with the fact of the situation how every time one's words are twisted to mean that one is trying to accuse somebody of something. I am calling attention to facts, and I say these facts require explanation.

Mr. MacDonald: Their guilty conscience is speaking.

Mr. Bryden: And I am not accusing anybody of anything.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Just a moment, a point of order, a point of privilege.

I do not know, Mr. Speaker, whether you heard the remark thrown out by the hon. member for York South, referring to a guilty conscience, suggesting in some way that I, or hon. members of this government, are tied into this whole deal.

Mr. MacDonald: I did not suggest that at all.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Why would anyone have a guilty conscience?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would judge from the hon. Minister's remarks that he would feel that no one would be very proud to be tied in with the deal, and I must say that I would agree with him.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: They are just a bunch of smearers.

Mr. MacDonald: Here we go again.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I have presented what I submit is a factual presentation. I have brought out a lot of important facts on this deal. I am not saying that I understand it all or can explain it all. There are many facts that I have had no access to. I do not know if we ever will get at them, but I submit that these facts require explanation.

The hon. Minister gave us a very lengthy presentation, but I indicated at the beginning that the really significant questions were not even raised by him, much less answered.

I would like to enumerate some questions that I think require answers. I cannot answer them myself because I do not have access to the necessary records.

The first question is: Why was it that Hydro, first of all, took so long to even get to the Indians—6 or 7 months?

Why was it that during the critical period in negotiations they did not go near them at all?

The explanation the hon. Minister gave is not worth a hoot. He said that they were cut off. They were cut off only from talking to the locatees; they were not cut off from talking to anybody else. Why was it they did not go back when Crown Trust was in daily contact with representatives of the Indian band?

Why was it that, when finally they did apparently get down to talking some sort of figure, they talked a figure that quite obviously was ridiculous and could not possibly be accepted?

Why was it, Mr. Speaker, that they found it necessary to enter into this firm contract with Dimensional Investments and to deposit money in the Imperial Bank of Canada 3 days before Dimensional had its contract with the federal government?

I submit that those are all questions, vital questions, that ought to be answered, and they certainly have not been answered yet. In all his talk, the hon. Minister was just beating around the bush and evading all the issues that really matter.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What conclusions has the hon. member come to?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, let the hon. Minister just give us—

Mr. Bryden: I have told hon. members that the facts clearly demonstrate the need to answer those questions. I have also told them I cannot answer them myself because I have not access to the proper records. But, on the basis of the records now available, clearly the questions require an answer.

Mr. Crossman: Somebody would probably say they were too slow.

Mr. Bryden: Well, we have to admit they were slow, but this was a matter of great—

Mr. Crossman: That is what is going to happen. I suppose somebody in the department said: "I guess we did not work fast enough."

Mr. Bryden: Well, that may be their explanation. I think that if that is the explanation, it is a most regrettable thing that, in a matter of this importance, there was such inefficiency, if that is all it was.

That still does not answer the question of why Hydro had to enter into the agreement with Dimensional on March 11, 3 days before Dimensional had to put up its downpayment and, in effect, give them the finest security one could ever get for getting a loan for its downpayment.

Did Hydro inquire to find out if Dimensional was, in fact, in a position to put up its downpayment? I will admit I do not know, but I think that is another question that can be added to the list. Was Dimensional in a position to put up its downpayment of nearly $1.1 million on March 14, apart from the payment by Hydro to the Imperial Bank and the firm agreement that was associated with it?

There are a few things that perhaps could be mentioned in relation to this deal. There is the question as to just what Hydro has got in this deal, in view of the fact that on two of the legs of land, one of which is for a proposed power line and one for an existing power line, Chief Adams still has title to two pieces of land that cross Hydro's land.

I do not know whether Hydro bought a pig in a poke or not, but the matter requires some investigation. However, I will not go into it in detail.

Before I complete this subject, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make some reference to the hon. Minister's submission—at least I understood it to be his submission—that the price of $7,000 Hydro paid to Dimensional was not really out of line, or not seriously so. I would refer to chart No. 7 which the hon. Minister of Energy Resources presented, showing 17 different sales of land in and about the Sarnia Indian reserve. I have looked at these sales, and there were 4 of them for prices per acre that were as high, or higher, than the price Hydro paid. Of these 4, one was for .58 acres, half an acre; another was for .08 acres, a very small tract, indeed. The biggest was for 7.26 acres, and one was for 2.385 acres.

Those are the only sales where the price, per acre was higher or as high as that paid by Hydro to Dimensional. You will note, Mr. Speaker, that every one was for a very small parcel of land.

I do not pretend to be an appraiser, but from what I have seen of appraisers' reports, these are the kind of transactions which the appraiser usually rules out as not typical, and which, therefore, he will not take into account in his calculations. But the hon. Minister had to include them because that is the only way he could get a price that was even close the price Hydro paid.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it is important to dwell on two transactions which are listed in the hon. Minister's chart, and which, in my opinion, are quite significant.

The first is No. 16 on the hon. Minister's list, and this was a deal put through late in 1959. I believe it was registered in the land registry office in Lambton county on December 23, 1959. It was a sale by Dimensional to Dow Chemical of somewhat more than 66 acres of prime land for $4,200 per acre.

Now, I have taken a look at this land. It is right across the highway from Dow's main gate. So, from their point of view, it is extremely valuable land. Indeed, from anybody's point of view it is valuable, but it is particularly useful to them.

This was 9 months after Hydro's deal with Dimensional. Nine months after that, Dow Chemical got 66 acres, right across the highway from their main gate, for $4,200 an acre, and then—

Mr. MacDonald: Shame, the people's money.

Mr. Bryden: —and then, shortly afterwards, St. Clair Chemical—this is transaction No. 17 on the hon. Minister's chart—St. Clair Chemical bought 10 acres. The chart says 25 acres. I do not understand that figure because the parcel of land, as shown in the registry office in Lambton county, was 10 acres—Instrument No. 146435, if anybody doubts what I say. It was a parcel of 10 acres which was right beside the site of Hydro's sub-station and right beside the Canadian National Railways track.

If hon. members are looking at this map, they will see it there—No. 17, on the bend of the Canadian National Railways track. The site of Hydro's sub-station is just to the right. This small parcel of 10 acres was bought for $5,600 an acre, and it is right beside Hydro's sub-station and right beside the Canadian National Railways right-of-way, so there would be no problem about railway sidings and that sort of thing.

As a matter of fact, I understand—I cannot say for certain because I have not talked to all of the real estate men in Sarnia by a long shot—but I understand that the general opinion in the trade in Sarnia is that St. Clair Investments got taken on this deal, that they paid far more than they needed to.

Yet, even at that, they paid only $5,600 an acre for a 10-acre parcel of land. Indeed, one would expect that, in view of the small size of the parcel, they would pay a little more than would normally be paid.

At any rate, Mr. Speaker, I certainly do not think the hon. Minister has demonstrated that the price Hydro paid was not unreasonable, the price of $7,000 an acre.

I submit that I have demonstrated that Hydro did not even make any real effort to get the land from the Indians, and that if they had tried to do so, there is an overwhelming presumption that they would have got it for substantially less than $7,000 an acre.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that if the Indians had heard that Hydro was ready to go to $7,000 and had therefore held out for that price, I would have been of the opinion that Hydro paid too much for the land. But I would not have complained very much, because if Hydro was going to be overcharged I would at least like to have seen the money go to the Indian band and not to this company that did not even exist prior to August, 1958.

However, I do not think there is any reasonable doubt at all that the Indian band, with any sort of reasonable offer from Hydro, would have been prepared to sell for substantially less than $7,000 an acre.

Mr. Speaker, I have taken quite a while on the Sarnia land deal, but I felt impelled to say something about it, even though I have never spoken publicly on it before.

Mr. MacDonald: He spoke one-third as long as the hon. Minister of Energy Resources and demolished his case.

Mr. Bryden: I would now crave your indulgence, sir, to say something about one or two of the things that I had originally planned to speak about in this debate. I will try to be as brief as I can, Mr. Speaker, but perhaps I will do a favour to the hon. member who follows, whoever he is, if I take up the balance of time tonight so he can get a fresh start tomorrow. That is not my objective, however.

I would like to take a little of the time of the House, Mr. Speaker, to deal with the question of the property tax which, in my opinion—and this is certainly not merely in my opinion, I think perhaps to some degree all hon. members will agree with me—is becoming a more and more serious matter in the province. The property is a regressive tax, and therefore it is unjust to the extent that it is used to raise revenues for services that are not of value to property.

I am not complaining about the property tax to finance watermains or local roads or sewers or that sort of thing, because obviously these services give value to the house, and it is quite reasonable that the person who owns the property and gets the value should pay for it.

However, when the property tax is used for such things as welfare, it is in my opinion unjust, because welfare services are of no particular value to property. I do not like to see revenues for general purposes being raised by regressive taxes, but the property tax is certainly a regressive tax. It is a form of capital levy that applies to one type of capital only, namely, real property.

Now, real property is the asset in which the small man is most likely to have his savings invested. In other words, if a man, especially one with a family, has very small savings set aside, he is most likely to have them in a house. A man who has very great wealth will probably have more in real property than the small man because he has more all told, but the great bulk of his assets will not be in real property at all. It will be in stocks and bonds and all sorts of intangibles. Thus, the property tax bears most heavily on the little fellow.

I am now talking directly about my own riding, and about specific cases in it, and I have no doubt I am talking about other hon. members' ridings, too. I am talking about the old-age pensioner who has skimmed and saved all his life, and I can take hon. members to such old-age pensioners in my riding, and the one thing they have got which they worked all their lives to get is their little house. They have to pay property tax on this house which represents all their capital. In many cases, all they have to live on is the old-age pension, yet this regressive tax is levied on them to assist in defraying the cost of social services, services to persons of one kind and another.

Or, in the alternative, we have the wage-earner—and I have a great many hard working people in my constituency—living on relatively small incomes, who are either purchasing homes or else trying to get enough money together so that they can make a good downpayment on a home. All their assets are in their home, and again this property tax bears heavily on them. It bears particularly heavily on the man with the big family—the bigger a man's family, the bigger his house has to be if he is to try to bring them up in a decent way; therefore the man with the big family "gets it in the neck" harder than anyone else.

As for the man of wealth, the real property tax weighs on him very lightly, because only a small proportion of his wealth is in property.

It has been suggested from time to time, Mr. Speaker, that this is something of a new problem. I suppose it is a new problem in its intensity, and it is getting more acute all the time. But actually it is not really a very new problem at all. I have here an old standard text book by E. R. A. Seligman, Essays In Taxation, which was published in 1895. Mr. Seligman says the class of property that escapes taxation most is the class of property that pays the largest dividend. Then he calls attention to the fact that the farmer is hardest hit by the property tax and he says:

The weight of taxation really rests on the farmer because in rural districts—and so on.

So, even in 1895 the regressive nature of the real property tax was considered quite a problem. To show that it was not new even in 1895, Seligman quotes from Walpole—

Mr. MacDonald: It shows how far behind this government is.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, they have not caught up to Walpole yet. Walpole said:

Landed gentlemen are like the flocks upon their plains who suffer themselves to be shorn without resistance, whereas the trading part of the nation resembles the boar, who will not suffer a bristle to be plucked from his back without making the whole parish to echo with his complaints.

Mr. Grossman: Come on, the hon. member is just killing us. We agree that people have always hated taxes.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I am submitting to hon. members that this is a most unfair tax except when used for services to property.

I have not said, and I do not intend to say, that there is any easy solution to the problem. But I do submit that it is one that should be seriously considered, because it is bearing very heavily on people who are least able to carry the burden. If it were levied purely for purposes necessary for property, then I would have no objections to it. It is when it is levied for services of benefit to the community as a whole that it becomes unjust.

The only way I can see that this problem can be remedied, Mr. Speaker, is by a redistribution of responsibilities as between the municipalities and the senior levels of government.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): That is right. Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: Since the property tax is the only significant source of municipal revenue, then only those services which are of benefit to property should be left with the municipalities.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the government has toyed with this problem for too long. I certainly do not claim to be the first to have called attention to the problem. I am one of a long, long, line, but very little attention has been paid to it.

The government has admittedly increased grants and subsidies to municipalities. As a matter of fact, it has made good and sure that one never forgets it.

Here is my tax bill. I am not complaining about this tax bill, I pay it quite happily, but I think there is unfairness for some others. On the back the bill states in bold face letters:

The province of Ontario—in the goodness of their hearts; the bill does not say that, but it says that the province of Ontario, —reduces the 1959 levy against the rate payers by contributing the following amounts, and then it lists education grants, highway grants, welfare grants, administration of justice, and so on.

An hon. member: What is wrong with that?

Mr. Bryden: Somebody asked me what is wrong with that.

Well, I will tell hon. members what is wrong, Mr. Speaker. Except for some of the costs of education, not one of the services listed should be charged against the municipalities at all.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): That is why we are paying them.

Mr. Thomas: A point of order, Mr. Speaker. The hon. Prime Minister is not in his seat.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I would like to refer the hon. Prime Minister to a document which he may have seen—a very interesting document written by well qualified people. It is the report of the finance policy committee of the union of British Columbia municipalities on provincial-municipal financial relations.

The situation on grants in that province, I take it, is very similar to the situation in this province. The report makes a very interesting point with regard to all these items that we are told this province is so generous about. For example, take welfare. In British Columbia, as in our province, the provincial government contributes 80 per cent. of the cost of welfare.

Now, as this report points out, what is actually happening is not that the province is contributing to the municipalities 80 per cent. of the cost of welfare, what is happening is that the province is requiring the municipalities to contribute 20 per cent. of the cost to it, because this is clearly a provincial responsibility.

This service should not be in the hands of the municipalities at all. So, instead of this expression of great generosity, what should be on this tax bill is that the provincial government is compelling the municipality to contribute the following amounts for services which are its responsibility. That would be a reasonable and fair statement of what is happening.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Bryden: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I assume that the hon. member is referring to the fact that, on real property, when occupied as a residence, the tax should be related to the services supplied. That is water, sewage, fire protection, garbage collection. Do I assume that the hon. member subscribes to the fact that the taxes on a $50,000 home, which receive exactly the same services as a $5,000 home, should be the same?

Mr. Bryden: No; I do not even agree with the hon. Minister's assumption, but I will not bother going into it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: The same garbage pail. One garbage pail, we will assume, per home.

Mr. Bryden: Well, maybe they have two, I do not know. Show me the $50,000 home.

Mr. MacDonald: Maybe they have one for the maid's quarters, too.

Mr. Bryden: The question really is quite frivolous.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: That is what the hon. member is subscribing to. That is just what he is subscribing to.

Mr. Bryden: I am not subscribing to any such thing. I am talking about the old-age pensioner, the wage-earner in my riding who, through this regressive tax, is required to pay for services that should be paid for by progressive taxation, raised according to capacity to pay. This tax is not raised according to capacity to pay.

I will concede this much, that it is not easy to decide exactly what are services to property, and therefore, what responsibilities should be assigned to the municipalities. That is not easy to determine. But I would suggest there is a pretty good start on page 2 of the brief the association of Ontario mayors and reeves submitted to the government a month or two ago. I do not agree entirely with their proposed division of responsibilities.

For example, on the matter of education, I do not believe myself that the entire cost of education should be taken over by the province, though I believe that a much larger percentage of it than is now assumed should be taken over.

On a good many of these other services, I certainly agree with the association and with municipal associations everywhere in Canada—services like indigent relief, public welfare and social services, subsidization of housing, administration of justice and that sort of thing—are services to persons, not property. Therefore, the senior levels of government, which have the power to impose progressive taxes in contrast with the regressive property tax, should assume responsibility for them.

I hope that this is one of the big items to be discussed at the forthcoming federal-provincial conference. It certainly is an urgent problem. I agree it is not one that can be easily solved. But, when one sees the sort of nonsense that the municipalities are forced to put on the tax bills they send out to the ratepayers, I do believe that it is time we had a little indication of action and less talk on the matter.

Now, before I leave the matter of property taxes, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make—

Mr. Grossman: He does not give us any solutions. He does not tell us what to do about it.

Mr. Thomas: He said it is not an easy matter.

Mr. Bryden: Do the hon. members want me to go on longer on this subject? I thought they would want me to—

Some hon. members: No, no, no.

Mr. Bryden: Well, all right.

This, I would submit, should be a major submission of the provincial government at Ottawa this summer. I submit further that it is a serious enough matter that, some time during this session, the government should give us a clear indication of what its position is on this matter, and exactly what it thinks about the submission made by the mayors and reeves.

I think that, in a matter of this kind, the government has a real responsibility to take the Legislature into its confidence and let the Legislature discuss its proposals.

I would now like to leave the general matter of property taxes, Mr. Speaker, and for a moment make a specific reference to a matter which is of considerable concern in my own constituency, and I would be very surprised if it is not a matter of concern in the constituencies of other hon. members from the city of Toronto. That is this question of graded exemptions.

I realize there is a bill, I believe it is already before the House, from the city of Toronto dealing with graded exemptions, and I do not want to deal with matters here that I can deal with when the bill is under discussion.

However, there is a general point, not relating to the actual terms of the bill, that I believe I can raise only here. The proposition of the city is that they should be given authority to remove the graded exemptions over a period of time. Actually, under the bill before the Legislature, it would take a minimum of 5 years to get rid of them completely.

Now, I do not like the idea of removing these exemptions. I agree the city has a problem. The city's problem is that people who own many houses, many of them slum dwellings, enjoy the graded exemption since it applies not to an individual but to a piece of property. A man may own 15 houses and get the graded exemption on every one of them. He certainly is not entitled to have it, and the city should be able to prevent him from having it.

But, on the other hand, according to the figures the city gave us, the total number of residential properties in the city is 107,465, and 77,984 of these now enjoy the graded exemption. Some of these 77,984 homes are not owner-occupied.

I asked the city for the number that were owner-occupied, and they were not in a position to give me that figure. But I would say it is reasonable to assume, in view of the figures I have just cited, that at least half of the owner-occupied homes in Toronto, and probably more, are enjoying the graded exemption.

What the graded exemption does, Mr. Speaker, is to introduce a mildly progressive element into the tax structure in the city of Toronto. It takes the burden off the little fellow whose assessment for his building is $4,000 or less. It takes some of the burden from him and shifts it to the fellow who can afford to pay.

It is an important relief to some people and, as I say, it apparently covers more than half of the home owners in Toronto.

I do not think this progressive element should be removed from the property tax structure, especially while we are still in the situation where property taxes are being used to raise money for welfare, administration of justice, social service, and so on.

When I, and some of the other hon. members from this area, were talking the matter over with the board of control and city officials a week or two ago, I—and I believe some of the others—put up this proposition:

“Why do you propose to remove the graded exemption from everybody? Why do you not just remove it from the people who clearly do not merit it, and continue it for the small home owner who is living in his own home and trying to bring up his family and pay off his mortgage? Why not let those people continue to enjoy that benefit?”

Well, the city officials said to us—and there were other hon. members present who can confirm or deny whether I am reporting them fairly—that two or three years ago they came here asking, in effect, for authority—and they need specific authority to do anything about this—from the provincial government to make the exemption selective, to make it apply only to owner-occupied homes.

The provincial government said: “Nothing doing; we will not change it. You have the choice of taking the exemption off altogether or keeping it as it is, but we will not allow you to make it selective.”

I assume that what the city officials have told us is true, and if it is true, Mr. Speaker, I would like to make a strong plea to the government that the city should not be put into that straitjacket. It should not be put in the position where either it has to retain the exemption for everybody or take it away from everybody.

It should be given authority by statute to make the exemption apply only to the people who merit such consideration.

I think that is a fair and reasonable proposition to put to the government. I would ask them to consider it, and I can tell them that there are a very large number of people in this city—people with quite modest incomes and quite modest homes—for whom this is a very serious matter and who are entitled to get some sort of consideration.

The final matter I want to deal with in this debate has been discussed several times in the Legislature. It may be somewhat controversial, but at this time of night probably I can say few words about it without provoking much controversy. It is the general question of standards of public conduct, and the conduct of public affairs in this province.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that there has been a steady erosion in Ontario of traditional principles governing the conduct of public affairs, and that is a matter which should be of concern to anyone who believes in the democratic system of government. In my opinion, it is the duty of every hon. member of the Legislature, and indeed of every citizen, to make public any information regarding the violation of these principles which come to his attention.

Often in the past, the hon. leader of the CCF in Ontario has had occasion to perform his duty in this connection, and in my opinion he is to be commended for doing so. Unfortunately the reaction of the government, as far as I can make out, has never been to remedy the practice complained of, except grudgingly and only when the facts were no longer escapable.

If we want an example, I would refer to two cabinet Ministers in the previous ministry who ought to have resigned months before they did but did not resign until such action became inescapable. Almost invariably, the reaction of this government, when any question of principle is raised, is to heap vilification and abuse on the person raising the matter. Then, to add insult to injury, he is accused of indulging in personalities.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that that sort of approach is never going to re-establish high standards of public conduct in this province. There are many principles which, in my opinion, have been undermined in the past few years, but I will mention only two which apparently need reiteration at this session.

One is that a Minister of the Crown should scrupulously avoid even the appearance that his private affairs have become entangled with his public duties.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that, when somebody calls attention to an apparent deviation from this principle, there should not be a great long attack on the person who called attention to it. I think it would be better if there were an affirmation of the principle involved.

Another principle which appears to me to need reiteration is that a member of any agency of the government should not have any significant connection with any firm doing business with the agency concerned.

I submit that is a fundamental principle of conduct in the administration of public affairs, and when attention is called to the fact that, in one or two instances, an individual appears to have violated it—I am not going to get into individual cases now but certainly there have been cases brought to our attention where that principle appears to have been violated—it is not good enough to say that the gentleman concerned is a very fine man. I believe that he undoubtedly is.

But we are not talking about whether he is a fine man. We are talking about a basic principle. That principle should be upheld and there should not be constant diversion of attention from the real issue by side issues.

It is sad to relate that, whenever anyone dares to call attention to abuse of these principles, he is immediately accused of indulging in personalities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if this specious argument is accepted, then it will follow that no one can ever call attention to abuse of public responsibility, because if public responsibility is abused it is abused by somebody. It does not happen in the abstract. When one calls attention to the act, he is not attacking the person; he is merely calling attention to the act.

Everyone has not only a right, but a duty, to do so if he has information that appears, or would appear prima facie, to indicate that some abuse has taken place. The case should then be discussed on its merits—not with all these diversions about attempts to discredit some estimable person or other. That is not involved at all. That is just a diversion from the issue.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, I come to my last point. The evil that I am complaining about is compounded by the government toleration of widespread political patronage in appointments to public service in this province, particularly in the innumerable categories of so-called casual employment.

The hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence), speaking earlier in this debate, suggested to you, sir, that you should rule out of order the amendment to the amendment to the address in reply to the speech to the Throne, because he said it contained—I do not have his exact words before me, but he said, in effect, that the amendment contained unsubstantiated charges and innuendoes because of a phrase in it stating that, “the government has countenanced widespread political patronage.” He said that is an unsubstantiated charge.

Mr. Speaker, I submit it is a matter of public knowledge, and I am surprised that the hon. member for St. George, who is a man interested in public affairs, does not seem to know what is going on in the province and what has been reported at great length in the press.

I would like to refresh his memory by referring to a news report which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star of November 13, 1959, under the by-line of Mr. Ray Timpson who I believe is now in the parliamentary press gallery at Ottawa. Mr. Timpson reports as follows:

Ontario's 28,000-member civil service association today demanded an investigation into political patronage reported rife in 3 government departments.

A resolution requesting the civil service commission to investigate and "take necessary action" to rectify the situation was carried unanimously at the association's annual convention.

This is the civil service association of Ontario—certainly not a body given to irresponsible or ill-considered action—which carried unanimously a resolution asking the civil service commission to investigate and take necessary action to rectify the situation.

Mr. MacDonald: Who knows better, too?

Mr. Bryden: "Later," and I am continuing to read from the report:

Later, after the home edition of the Star hit the streets with a headline story on the patronage issue, it was read in full to the convention by William Harper, association president, and the 180 delegates broke into thunderous applause.

"It's about time," a delegate yelled. "Is the ink dry yet?"

An association director, who said his name could not be used or he would be fired, said patronage applies not only to the Highways Department but to the Department of Lands and Forests and Public Works as well.

"Orillia particularly stinks of it," he said.

Delegates acted after civil servants from all parts of the province complained that political patronage is so rife in the Highways Department that a man can't be hired or fired without the consent of the member of the Legislature for the district.

Thank goodness I do not live in a district where there are any highway contracts.

Mr. G. W. Parry (Kent West): I am living in the county of Kent, and I think it is absurd to make a statement like that. I think it is absurd because it has not taken place in the county of Kent. I can tell the hon. member for Woodbine that. I never asked anybody what their politics were.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member never asked them what their politics were? This does not say anything about asking them what their politics were. It merely says a man cannot be hired or fired without the consent of the member of the Legislature for the district. Now this is what the report says.

Mr. Parry: Well, his report. I do not know where he got the report—

Mr. Bryden: Well, I gave the hon. member the source. He is perfectly welcome to go to sleep, it is his privilege, but I gave the source of my report.

An hon. member: That is both crude and rude.

Mr. Bryden: No, I am not submitting it was from scripture. The hon. member said he did not know where the report came from. I told him where it came from. He can judge it on whatever basis he wishes.

Then the item I am quoting from the newspaper goes on to say:

Highways employees attending the convention met quietly in the King Edward Hotel's 17th floor reception room yesterday and cited example after example of patronage.

This is quite a long report and I would like to skip to the end of it, Mr. Speaker.

The resolution [that is the one referred to earlier that was passed unanimously] was put before the convention by A. V. E. (Ted) Godden, a Highways Department clerk, who is president of the association's branch 60 at Downsview, the second largest branch in the province with 903 members.

Now I do not know if the president of this large branch in The Department of Highways knows what he is talking about, but he put the resolution before the convention.

He rose shortly after the convention met at 9 a.m. and said "certain far-reaching and serious matters" had been raised at the departmental meeting of Highways employees Thursday afternoon.

Mr. Grossman: How did he get his job?

Mr. Bryden: I did not ask him. I do not know the gentleman at all, I am just quoting what he is reported to have said.

Now, I have read a news report which appeared in the Toronto Daily Star, and in case anybody questions my source, I think it is pretty well a factual report, reporting what happened at a meeting of the civil service association. So the source is not important, but in case—

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. member a question? On this very matter the hon. member himself, I would suggest, has not lived up to the question I have asked.

Now, my question is this to the hon. member. If he feels that there is patronage in the government, if he feels that what has been said in these matters has been true, is it not his duty, instead of hiding behind some other quoted statement in the press, by a newspaper reporter who cannot be here, but is it not his duty, or does he not feel it would be his duty to come out with specific instances of this patronage instead of this blanket innuendo which I would insist is a smear on this government?

Mr. MacDonald: The whole lot of the hon. members will just try smearing.

Mr. Bryden: This specious argument that one must come out with some charge is merely a device, I submit, to prevent hon. members from raising any important matters in the House. I do not have access to the necessary information.

The hon. member says I have to make a specific charge on a specific case. I obviously do not have the information on which to do that, but I cannot get the information until I have made the charge. That is the trap they are always trying to suck us into.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Lawrence: If some hon. member on this side of the House—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member's questions are purely—

Mr. Lawrence: If some hon. member on this side of the House came out with a blanket statement that the province of Saskatchewan is the most corrupt and rotten government in existence, would the hon. member not think that that would be an unfair statement?

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. member not co-operate with the civil service—

Mr. Bryden: I would submit that this is not a blanket innuendo. This is a quotation from a resolution passed by the civil service association of Ontario. If that is a blanket innuendo, it was made by the civil service association of Ontario. I believe that association is a responsible organization which would not make statements of this kind without having considerable facts to back them up.

Also, I submit, they have knowledge of the situation, and just in case—

Mr. Lawrence: This is not the hon. member's charge. He is hiding behind somebody else's charge.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, sit down. We are pleading with the hon. member to do something about it and he will not. He is the government.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. member for Woodbine, and also the hon. member for York South, if either of them have ever asked any of these departments of government to give employment to individuals?

Mr. Bryden: I have never—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member for Woodbine did not, but the hon. member for York South did, and what is he "bellyaching" about, because he did?

Mr. MacDonald: Name one instance.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I can give him the instances and he cannot deny it. He cannot deny it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, will the hon. Prime Minister give me the instance?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member cannot deny it; he cannot deny it.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, this is a blanket statement.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member came to certain departments of the government and asked them to give—

Mr. MacDonald: Cite the instance. Cite the instance, instead of making a blanket statement.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member cannot deny it; he cannot deny it.

Mr. MacDonald: This is a blanket statement containing innuendoes.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member knows perfectly well.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I am rising on a point of privilege. The hon. Prime Minister rose here and made a blanket statement, now will he cite the specific case?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. member a specific question, I asked him if he ever approached any of the departments of government asking them to give individuals a job. I asked him to say whether he did or did not.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister will cite the case, I will give the details. I want the specific case. I rose on a question of privilege and I want the hon. Prime Minister to cite the specific case, because once again he is raising a smoke-screen behind which he wants to hide the continuation of patronage.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member knows perfectly well he did, and he cannot deny it, and I would say something else. I would address this same question to the hon. member for Woodbine. Did he approach any of the departments of government and ask that any individual should be given a job?

Mr. Bryden: I did not, I—

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right. Well, he is more frank than his hon. leader is.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, now I do rise on a question of privilege and I defy the hon. Prime Minister of this province to cite any case—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am not citing anything. I am asking the hon. member a question.

Mr. MacDonald: —to cite any case where I did anything other than this: That when a man came to me and said, "I cannot get a job unless I have a letter from my MPP," which in itself is a heritage of the patronage system the hon. Prime Minister perpetuates, I have given him that. Apparently this is necessary for a man to get a job. If the hon. Prime Minister will cite any other case than that, then he has something to argue about, but he cannot, and I defy him to do it.

Mr. Bryden: That brings up a point that I thought perhaps I would not raise—I submit that the hon. Prime Minister can have a debate with the hon. leader of the CCF party any time he likes.

Mr. MacDonald: Obviously that is a sore spot now. There is widespread patronage—

Mr. Bryden: This gives rise to a point that I was not going to raise, in view of the lateness of the hour. But now that the hon. Prime Minister has been making his blanket charges, I will raise it, and I will go into some detail on how I have been involved in this sort of thing.

I have been a member since last June and, on 4 different occasions I have had people come to me who live in my constituency and who, to the best of my knowledge, had no contact with each other and do not even know each other. I can only say that to the best of my knowledge, but they live in quite different parts of the constituency.

Four different people have come to me on different occasions and have asked me if I would write a letter for them.

When I inquired as to the purpose, they said that they had applied for employment in the public service. In each case a different branch of the public service was involved, and all these people were advised—now I am merely reporting what they told me—that they could not get employment unless they had a letter from their MPP.

Well, I do not know if this is true or not. All I am saying is that is what these people told me.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did the hon. member for Woodbine write a letter for them?

Mr. Bryden: I gave great consideration to the matter. I will tell the hon. Prime Minister what I did. I was very disturbed, because frankly I could not for the life of me see why a letter was required from the MPP. One of these people I knew slightly, the others I did not know at all. My recommendation would not be nearly as valuable as a recommendation from, for example, their clergyman or their doctor or someone else who knew them well.

Mr. Sopha: Except with the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass).

Mr. Bryden: I explained my dilemma to these people. I told them I do not believe in this practice. I do not believe in writing letters to the government asking for employment for any of my constituents. I believe that my constituents should get or not get jobs on the basis of their merits.

However, now I would like to carry this a step further.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did he write the letter?

Mr. Bryden: I will answer everything the hon. Prime Minister wants to ask, but first, let me deal with the embarrassment he inflicts upon us by his present policy.

I do not want to put my constituents in the position where they are ineligible for positions in the public service; yet, from what they told me—I rely only on what they told me—if I refused to write letters for them, they would be ineligible for employment. Now that is the sort of spot an hon. member is put in.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did the hon. member write the letter?

Mr. Bryden: I will tell the hon. Prime Minister what I wrote for them. I will put the hon. Prime Minister's mind at peace. I did not write any letter to any government department. I told these people that on my conscience I could not write such a letter. I believe it is wrong to do so. But, I told them: What I will do for you, in an effort to get out of this dilemma—I hope it will be of some value—I will write a letter to whom it may concern—

Mr. Grossman: Is that not self-righteous?

Mr. Bryden: This is a principle, and the hon. member for St. Andrew knows nothing about principle. That is his trouble.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Will my hon. friend permit a question? May I ask him this? No, I want to ask him a question, a fair question.

Now, assuming that one of those individuals, for whom he wrote a letter, got a job, he understands—would that be, in his estimation, political patronage?

Mr. Bryden: No, in my estimation—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right.

Mr. Bryden: Let us get to the crux of the matter, Mr. Speaker. In my estimation those people should never have been put in the position where they had to come to me asking me to write a letter, and I submit—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Those hon. members are in it right up to their necks.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: May I ask a question? May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Bryden: Well, if it is a question and not a rhetorical statement.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: No, no. This will be a question.

Mr. Bryden: Well, there have been very few.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: On the basis of the proposition which the hon. member has been expounding, would he have us believe, for example, that everybody who was taken into the civil service in the last 10 years was taken in not because of merit, but because of a letter written?

Mr. Bryden: What sort of a question is that? There is nothing in anything I said, Mr. Speaker, that could conceivably be interpreted, by any intelligent man, as meaning that.

That, unfortunately, is the sort of red herring we always get—a diversion from the issue. All I have done, and I am quite prepared to let it be checked in the record whenever it becomes available, is to read from a statement in the Toronto Daily Star, and to state that, in my own specific case, people have approached me on the basis I outlined and that I wrote to whom it may concern letters for them—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: And I have not written to any government department, nor will I write to a government department—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say to my hon. friend, that I think he has been—

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Prime Minister asking a question?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, this is a question.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the question?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I say to my hon. friend that I think he is quite honest and sincere.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the question?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to my hon. friend this.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister is violating the rules of the House.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I ask a question?

Mr. MacDonald: All right, let us have the question.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The question, Mr. Speaker, is this. Did the hon. member for Woodbine ever discuss the matter of patronage with the party that sits on his right, because it is the oldest—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister is in power and can do something about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They are the greatest patronage hounds in history—right over there. They know all about it.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Now, I might point out to the members that there may be some misunderstanding about what exactly—

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no, there is no understanding.

Mr. Speaker: But there should be no misunderstanding that, when the Speaker rises to his feet, everybody sits down and everybody remains perfectly quiet. I think on that basis we will have a better understanding of everything. The member for Woodbine should proceed now with his speech.

Mr. Bryden: Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Crossman: The hon. member for Woodbine muffed that one. What does he have to say now?

Mr. Bryden: If the hon. members would keep quiet, I would be through in a few minutes.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I submit that the demonstration we have had tonight, when I was trying to state some simple facts, is another indication of what we are up against—always an attempt to divert the issue away from the real issue.

So, if I did write a letter—which I did not—does that justify the thing? The system is rotten, and hon. members should not be put in the position where either they must write letters or in the alternative the people in their constituency are not eligible for employment.

If there is any hon. member who, in those circumstances, has written a letter, I do not blame him. But I have not written a letter to any government department and I do not propose to do so.

In the to whom it may concern letters I have written, Mr. Speaker, I have written exactly what I knew about the people concerned. In 3 cases it was practically nothing—just a statement that the people concerned were residents of my constituency and to the best of my knowledge they were reliable people. I knew one of them a little better, so I put a little more in his letter. That was all I could honestly say, and that is all I did say.

Now then, in bringing my remarks to a conclusion, I want to get back to this widespread patronage which is apparently a very, very sore spot with the government and I can understand why. I would now like to quote from another journal, which the hon. member for St. George may think is given to making wild charges, but it is The Trillium, the official publication of the civil service association of Ontario. This is in the December 1959 issue, and on page 3 there is an article entitled "Those Patronage Charges." It starts as follows:

The hon. Leslie Frost said November 6, 1957—this should get me some applause, I think, —I have felt we should all do everything possible to remove the civil service from politics as such.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: I said I would get some applause.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what we have done. That is why we accept letters from the CCF hon. members. That is what we have done.

Mr. Bryden: Look, that is not getting rid of any patronage. Trying to involve us in such practices is not cleaning up the situation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: This is a quote appearing in the civil service association publication, and I may say that there are several others along the same line. If it would contribute to the hon. Prime Minister's ego, I would be glad to quote them in full, but otherwise I will pass them over by saying that they are in the same vein. We now come to the comments of the civil service association:

These statements are not just for convention purposes. Mr. Frost has made many similar ones. There is no doubt that he is sincere—

After all, it is the boss they are talking about,

There is no doubt he is sincere and desirous of removing politics from the service. Thus it seems surprising to the uninitiated that the annual meeting of 1959 should bring such widespread publicity on the subject of patronage. This publicity apparently arose from statements made during committee sessions, sparked by questions from delegates who quite obviously had encountered patronage of one form or another in their work areas.

Mr. Crossman: How did they get the jobs?

Mr. Bryden: I do not know. That is totally irrelevant, just a side issue. They have quite obviously encountered patronage. Maybe one of the instances where they encountered it was when they benefited from it, I do not know. I quote:

How can the Prime Minister's statement made in sincerity be reconciled with the fact that patronage is known to exist and is considered by many to be on the increase? How can the situation itself be reconciled with statements in the Toronto Telegram editorial that the civil service commission maintains proper supervision?

Again this might be surprising to the uninitiated. Though the association itself has officially protested over the years of patronage, it takes place at a level over which the civil service commission has absolutely no control, although there have been instances reported of what is obviously patronage at levels where the commission does have control.

Those who know the Ontario service and the recruiting conditions know that there is every opportunity for patronage, both political and personal. What happens is that recruitment very often takes place in what is known as the casual level, and since we have great numbers of so-called casuals, the opportunities for placement of politically sponsored employees are numerous.

What is required is effective control of the entire public service by the civil service commission with statutory authority for qualification on entry at any level.

What happens at present is that people are insinuated into the service at the casual level and, of course, over a number of years do become qualified to the point where the commission would, in fact, certify their appointment on recommendation from the department itself.

The great evil here is that efficient employees with long service often find themselves held in their position, and green, untried and unqualified individuals are placed in supervisory capacity over them. This is patronage at its worst.

Part of the defence of those concerned in recently publicized instances has been that no political patronage is intended—

Does that not sound like some of the things hon. members hear in here?

—no political patronage is intended and local information is being sought as to the character and ability of individuals before employment.

I would like to say before I read this next paragraph that I personally subscribe to it entirely.

No member of Parliament is qualified to say which of his constituents are of exemplary character or are in possession of the qualifications needed for a particular job at a particular time.

Mr. Grossman: Would he give a charwoman an examination?

Mr. Bryden: It does not say anything about examinations. We have different types of qualifications.

Mr. Grossman: What qualifications would be required to be a charwoman?

Mr. Bryden: I continue with the quotation:

No hon. member of Parliament is in a position to pass—

An hon. member: I am just as qualified for that as anybody else.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): He is not.

Mr. MacDonald: Now the hon. Minister is being personal again.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Well, he is right. He said no hon. member of Parliament.

Mr. Bryden: And no hon. member of Parliament is, because he has an interest in such matters and therefore he should not be involved.

I am now coming to something that is surely a basic principle. The government will not listen to it, but it is stated by our own association in this province, a very fine association. It is a reiteration of principles that have been stated over and over again in many places:

Selection should be by paid officials of the public service who are qualified to appraise and select. It is a serious reflection on our personal function if members of Parliament have to be relied upon to say whether or not a prospective employee is a good man for the job.

Surely that is a fundamental principle of sound administration, and the very fact that the hon. members opposite cannot even understand it is sufficient indication to me that there is undoubtedly patronage operating in this government. They cannot even understand the principles involved—

Mr. Grossman: The hon. member just does not want to be bothered with the little people.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member for St. Andrew is talking through his hat. That is another red herring. He came up with a very nice red herring the other day. It is a complete evasion of the issue. In every administration of the world, except here and in a few other backward areas, the principle is laid down that politicians should have nothing to do with appointments. They should be dealt with by professional, impartial people, with no favours to dispense, who will to the best of their ability select the best qualified people. Surely that is fundamental.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let him talk to the hon. members on his right, they will tell him—

Mr. Bryden: If the hon. Prime Minister has no better defence than to refer back to the Hepburn administration, he has not much defence.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say this. I would say that I think the hon. member for Sudbury's brother is employed by the liquor licence board and is employed by this government. Would he call that patronage?

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege that is perfectly true. But let me add, sir, that, in the great riding of Temiskaming, they have no more loyal Tory worker than my brother. And, Mr. Speaker, at the last contest on June 11 my sister was campaign manager for the hon. member from Temiskaming (Mr. Herbert).

Mr. Speaker: I believe the members of the Legislature tonight would like to see the member finish his speech. However—

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members are working hard to keep me on my feet, but if they will just give me about 3 minutes I will disappoint them and sit down.

I would like to point out that my original contention, that there is a steady erosion of the basic principles of sound public administration in this province, has been proved by the demonstration we had tonight. Those hon. members across do not even understand what is involved in a sound democratic system of public service. They think that recommendations from MPP's—

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): Mr. Speaker—on a matter of personal privilege—it is very short—I deny the statement that the hon. member for Woodbine has made, and I am speaking for myself personally.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do, too. I deny that.

Mr. Bryden: If you want me to sit down, Mr. Speaker, I will let each of these hon. gentlemen say that they deny their lack of understanding, but their lack of understanding is obvious to everybody. So, whether it is denied or not, it does not matter. They have no comprehension—

Mr. Grossman: Furthermore, if I had my feet in the barrel—

Mr. Bryden: —of a sound merit system of public service.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for St. George accused me of hiding behind somebody or other, I do not know who. He is pretty free with his accusations, but if he is accusing me of hiding behind the civil service association of Ontario, of accepting their opinions on matters on which I believe they have better information than I have, then the accusation is correct.

I accept the statements of people who ought to know, especially when they are clearly responsible people.

The civil service association of Ontario has stated clearly, and unequivocally, that there is political patronage in appointments in this province. I do not think any further proof is needed. The onus is now on the other side to demonstrate that it does not exist.

From what I have heard tonight, I am satisfied they cannot demonstrate that. These hon. members think that a merit system is what everybody else calls a system of patronage. It is only by that abuse of words that they can reasonably claim that there is not widespread patronage in the province of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I appreciate your indulgence. I have taken a substantial amount of the time of this House.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Before my hon. friend sits down, would he permit a question?

Mr. Bryden: Oh yes, I will be glad to, and I will now sit down. I thank you, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: May I ask my hon. friend who has just spoken this question? I assume, from what my hon. friend has said, that he belongs to a party which does not believe in political patronage. If that is so would he be kind enough to tell us whether this is true or not: That a candidate who has been defeated, either provincially or federally, for the CCF party is now the present chairman of the Saskatchewan power corporation.

Mr. Grossman: Oh no, it could not be, not in Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacDonald: Let us deal with this one, just to show hon. members how much of a red herring it is.

Mr. Bryden: The chairman of the Saskatchewan power commission is a very distinguished engineer who was—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Was he a defeated CCF candidate in either a federal or provincial election?

Mr. MacDonald: What does that have to do with it? He has 3 children, too.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister asked if he could ask a question. The question was asked and now the member is answering the question.

Mr. Bryden: It was hardly a question. It was an attempt to besmirch a man of very high qualifications—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I rise on a point of privilege, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDonald: Sit down, sit down.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: It was not my intention to besmirch anybody. Answer yes or no.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member never answered yes or no in his life.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I just asked the hon. member to answer yes or no, and he is upset about it, is he not?

Mr. Bryden: I do not think—

Mr. MacDonald: Does the hon. Minister of Energy Resources beat his wife?

Mr. Bryden: I do not think that the fact that the man has been, at some time in his life, successful or unsuccessful in a contest for political office should disqualify him for service in any public service, provided he has the qualifications. Mr. Cass Beggs, the chairman of the Saskatchewan power commission, is a man of the highest qualifications who was lifted out of Ontario from the University of Toronto where he held an appointment.

Mr. Rowntree: What position is the hon. member in to judge his merits?

Mr. Bryden: Well, he was a professor of engineering at the University of Toronto. As far as I know, he was defeated as a candidate, and that is the typical red herring—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I might say to my hon. friend that I listened with interest—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, does the hon. Prime Minister have the right to rise and make a speech now? He is not attempting to ask a question.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask the hon. member a question—

Mr. Speaker: I think the Prime Minister has an opportunity to speak almost at any time with the approval of the Speaker and the House.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, this is a matter we should clarify—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not claim that. All I ask is this: Would the hon. member permit me to ask him a question?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker should clarify this—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now the question is this, sir, that I would direct to my hon. friend. Is his position, in relation to the employment of members of the party he belongs to, is it the same as that of Sir Wilfrid Laurier who said that he was opposed to political patronage but he almost invariably found that the Liberals made the best appointments?

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, it was not Sir Wilfrid Laurier who said that. No, it was not. It was Rt. hon. C. D. Howe.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I have spent a long time answering rhetorical questions, which were really just excuses for speeches. I have borne with the hon. Prime Minister, because I can understand he would like to make some speeches to improve upon the one he made earlier in this debate. So, I will answer this question but I would ask that this be the last rhetorical question directed to me.

I have never talked to Sir Wilfrid Laurier. I do not know what his position was, but I do not agree with that position if it was as the hon. Prime Minister has just stated. I believe that appointments, promotions, demotions and all other matters relating to employment in the public service should be in the hands of an independent commission entirely removed from political influence. That is my opinion. If Sir Wilfrid Laurier were here, I have no doubt he could take care of his opinion.

Mr. R. E. Sutton (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, just as a point of information, could I ask whether the hon. member (Mr. Bryden) in referring for some two hours to Ontario Hydro and cross examining and contradicting statements which I had filed on oath, could I ask how many affidavits the hon. member filed; and secondly, could I ask if the hon. member filed the copies of the documents to which he made reference? If he has not done so, would he do so? I ask because the rule of this House is that he vouches for them and there may be some very serious charges arise out of these.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): I would point out—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I did not ask the hon. member who is now speaking. I asked Mr. Speaker. Would Mr. Speaker tell me whether any affidavits were filed, the answer I would respectfully submit is either yes or no.

The answer I understand, Mr. Speaker, is that no affidavits were filed.

Secondly, would Mr. Speaker advise me whether any documents were tabled for examination, because the rules of this House require that a member referring to documents not tabled vouches for the accuracy of them and there may be some very serious charges arise from them.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of privilege, I would like to state first of all that I did not—

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, which takes precedence over a point of privilege, there is no point of privilege involved. I have not referred to the—

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Minister making the rules for this House?

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: I am referring to the rules of this House, my hon. friend.

Mr. Speaker: The Minister has asked a question of the Speaker and the answer to the question which I presume finishes the matter is no.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, I submit it does not finish the matter, because the hon. Minister, who did not take the trouble to listen to what I had to say, is now trying to interpret it, and I would call to your attention, sir, that I did not call into question—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): The hon member is out of order.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, surely I have a right to clear up this gross misinterpretation.

Mr. Speaker: I think we are getting a little touchy. The question was quite simple—if documents have been tabled. It is quite obvious to all the members as it was to the Speaker here tonight there were no documents tabled and the answer to the question was no. I believe that finishes the matter.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, there is a real innuendo in this. In fact, there is more than an innuendo—

Mr. Speaker: I am not maybe so perceptive as some members with regard to perceiving innuendoes, and I declare the matter is finished.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, may I now table some of these documents that he apparently wants?

Hon. Mr. Frost: In moving the adjournment of the House may I say that the programme tomorrow is to carry on with the same programme.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.10 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 19, 1960

10 O'CLOCK A.M.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS ACT, 1957

Hon. F. M. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Department of Highways Act, 1957."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE STATUTE LABOUR ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Statute Labour Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Minister explain the bill, please?

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, this bill provides for the calling of meetings to elect road commissioners in areas affected by statute labour boards, and it provides several alternative methods of calling the meeting in place of the one method now provided. It also provides for the payment of road commissioners engaged in working on their roads, but not including their own statute labour which they must perform in respect of their own lands.

THE HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT, 1957

Hon. Mr. Cass moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Highway Improvement Act, 1957."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow). In an article in the press Wednesday, February 17, it was announced by the Ontario burley tobacco marketing board that no acreage would be allotted growers in the coming season. Inasmuch as this decision will take out of production around 9,000 acres of land, and a crop worth $6.5 to $7 million, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture what steps the government has taken to market this surplus burley tobacco, and what compensation plan to provide the farmers who will be losing an important source of income?

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow (Minister of Agriculture): Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question from the hon. member for Kent East, I may say that it was brought to my attention for the first time a few days ago that, apparently, there is an abundance and surplus of burley tobacco. I am not too conversant with tobacco, but I understand that there is a limited use for burley tobacco.

The result is that they have accumulated, apparently, a supply at least adequate for two years—that would be 1960 and 1961—if there were no tobacco grown in either of those two years. I might read the editorial in the London Free Press of February 18, I think, which covers this fairly well:

It is a shock to learn that burley tobacco, the first type grown in Canada, is not to be produced in Ontario in 1960. A surplus of more than 10 million pounds is on hand, almost enough for two years' consumption on the basis of 1958. Burley tobacco is used as a mixture for blended cigarettes; for some types of pipe tobacco, and in plugs for both chewing and smoking.

Increased use of cigarettes, decline in pipe smoking and virtual disappearance of chewing tobacco have dealt burley a considerable blow.

The Ontario burley tobacco marketing board has decided that they will allot no acreage to growers in 1960 and permit the surplus to be used up. By this means it is hoped that, in 1961, producers could return more nearly to a normal crop with confidence that their product would be sold.

This limitation of production seems wise when it is estimated that only 1.5 million pounds of burley is exported, despite efforts by the board to expand overseas sales. Domestic consumption and export through this year should use up about 7 million pounds and possibly permit full growth in 1961 on the 9,000 acres used for this crop.

This action by the burley board should give the flue-cured tobacco growers some thought. They are being offered a new system by buyers which would produce 18 months' domestic supply and allow for 40 million pounds export in 1960 to replenish depleted stock. Tobacco export should rightly be a major part of this trade, but growers must watch against a major overproduction without guarantees by buyers.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that, as the hon. member for Kent East knows, this burley tobacco growers board comprises both growers and buyers and they have decided, in their judgment, that it would be in the best interest of the industry if they refrain from giving rights this year.

I might read a clipping from this morning's Toronto Globe and Mail reported from Chatham by the agricultural representative, Don Rutherford:

The provincial agricultural representative for Kent county today praised the Ontario burley tobacco marketing association for suspending burley tobacco production this year. He said the association took the only course open, in view of the lack of market for the crop. The action was not taken hastily or without considerable thought. The association should be commended for facing the fact and not trying to hide behind someone's skirts on the problem.

He said the 4,500 acres used for burley in Kent could easily be planted with any one of several crops, such as corn or soya beans.

I think, from my understanding of soil type for burley tobacco, that it is a reasonably heavy pliable soil that adapts itself to other crops, so I would presume that those who have been growing burley tobacco this year should give consideration to growing other types of crops suitable to the area.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister a further question? Does his department assist the board in trying to find export markets for this burley tobacco? I understand he has streamlined his department, he has an assistant to the Minister or Deputy Minister of marketing, and I wonder if he does try to find markets that would assist this industry, or if he does take any part in this way.

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, I might say that, for instance, in respect to flue-cured tobacco, Mr. Perkin, the marketing commissioner, made a trip overseas with the flue-cured tobacco people last year, with respect to trying to find export markets. I might say that the department works very closely with the farm products marketing board and the commissioner of marketing in respect to helping these people with their farm products.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture an additional question.

The Toronto Globe and Mail, in its issue of Thursday, February 18, had a story in which Mr. Everett M. Biggs, assistant Deputy Minister of Agriculture, is quoted as saying that the hog organization in Ontario, through a communications programme, had expressed 4 attitudes—fear, misunderstanding, anger and downright antagonism—and apprehension was spreading throughout the province.

Do Mr. Biggs' remarks reflect the hon. Minister of Agriculture's thoughts about the hog producers marketing board? If so, would the hon. Minister outline the government's plan for bringing about a better understanding among the hog producers of the province?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Well, Mr. Speaker, in respect to the question submitted by the hon. member for Oxford, I would say that Mr. Biggs, who has been dairy commissioner for some dozen years in this province and recently appointed as assistant Deputy Minister of marketing, is a young man with, in my opinion, a great deal of ability. He is quite capable of expressing his own opinions, and the opinions he expressed at the annual meeting of the Canadian Holstein-Friesian association, I understand, were his own.

But I have this morning received a copy of Mr. Biggs' manuscript, that he delivered at the annual meeting of the Holstein association, and I think I should read into the record of the House, in context, what remarks Mr. Biggs made in connection with the views that he has in respect to the certain aspects of the hog marketing plan in the province of Ontario.

I might say in the first part of his address he was referring to milk marketing, and I think that is irrelevant to what the hon. member is interested in at this time. I am going to start with the part that deals with hog marketing, as Mr. Biggs sees it:

At the outset of my comments today, I suggested that possibly we needed a warmer climate in the market place. It was not intended exactly as a pun, but I have here in my hand the official publication of the Ontario hog producers association and, while I am most understanding of their problems and appreciate their sincerity of purpose and their successfulness in creating a place in the sun for the hog producers of this province, at the same time exception must be taken to some of the attitudes and misunderstanding with which we are faced today.

I have referred to the official publication which I have here, The Market Place.

I read that the whole of the much vaunted marketing legislation is just window-dressing. It is meant for ornament, not for serious use.

This is a gross misrepresentation of facts. It had been said many times, and it is the truth, that the province of Ontario has gone farther in providing legislation for the marketing of farm products than any other jurisdiction on the North American continent.

At the present moment we have 17 marketing plans, 3 of which are under The Milk Industry Act, the rest under The Farm Products Marketing Act and covering 29 farm commodities.

Is this an indication that this is ornamental legislation? Is this an indication that this legislation has not been made available to farmers?

I am sure that the producers realize that this legislation was introduced at the request of the producers, it was supported by everyone who recognized the necessity of the farmers' place in the market place. It was, and has been, made effective in the midst of a considerable amount of opposition from those people or organizations who may be opposed to this type of marketing legislation.

We do have a weakness in our legislation. This weakness is that it can provide only for the marketing of agricultural products within the province. I feel we are fast approaching the time when the farmers of this province, and the rest of Canada, will have to think in terms of a national approach to marketing.

This, of course, will entail close discussions between various provincial marketing groups. Our farm leaders are beginning to realize that, with certain commodities, it is virtually impossible to have an entirely provincial marketing programme which is restricted to unorganized or unco-ordinated efforts in other provinces.

For the good of all farmers, and for the good of our marketing programmes in this province, we should be going along in an atmosphere of understanding.

Let me make it clear that the department has no quarrel with the producers, either as individuals or as a group.

On the other hand, I had the impression, as I did several years ago, that for some reason or other The Department of Agriculture is finding itself in the ring with the hog producers association, and that there are a lot of interested parties holding it in there, including those who are violently opposed to the hog producers marketing plan and possibly to the principle of organized marketing itself. This is a situation which must be corrected.

My personal fear is that this situation might cause the whole marketing board system to be held in ridicule. This would be entirely unfair. There must be a thorough understanding and a working confidence among all farm groups, particularly those organized under marketing legislation and the administrators of that legislation, to which they owe their existence.

One of my first acts, after recently receiving my overall marketing responsibility, was to spend a whole day in the hog producers' office on Dundas Street West, Toronto. I wanted to obtain a thorough picture of the administrative organization.

I am pleased to say that I was extremely well received and I was most impressed with the efficiency of the administrative machinery in the office. I also had a most friendly discussion with the hog producers marketing board itself. I went to the hog producers' office a strong supporter of organized farm marketing, and a supporter of the hog producers marketing plan itself.

At that time, however, I pointed out to the hog producers marketing board that there was a great need of some sincere discussion on certain aspects of their marketing plan, and that possibly they were in a better position than anyone to come up with a solution. I believe they are giving sincere consideration to the problems which they realize exist. I have studied, as closely as I have been able to, the hog producers marketing plan; I still believe that the plan as a whole is sound. I believe it has overcome a great many of the abuses and lack of bargaining power which the hog producer had formerly.

I also believe that it is not perfect.

However, I am quite sure that we will, through realistic friendly discussions with the hog producers marketing board, reach a mutual understanding and respect which is necessary in any human relationships.

However, I do not think our department would have the respect of the farmers of this province, of the hog producers marketing board itself, if we sat back without a reply or comment on some of the things which we believe are not sound, some of the things which we believe are having—and in the future will have—a very much more detrimental effect on organized farm marketing in this province and the rest of Canada, as well as some of the misrepresentations of fact, to which the hog producers and others were subjected to recently.

We will have, and we certainly must have, some discussions in the immediate future on those matters which are closely tied to the mechanics of the hog marketing picture.

However, in the few minutes remaining, I want only to take issue with one thing and this is attitude. There are 4 conditions paramount in the province, at the moment, which are a direct result of the attitude expressed in the communications programme of the hog producers association. All 4 of them are serious.

They are fear, misunderstanding, anger and downright antagonism.

None of these attitudes contributes to the strength of public respect of organized producer markets. Apprehensions are being felt throughout the province because of this growing feeling. I am firmly convinced that, unless there is a change in attitude, there will be a serious detrimental effect on this province and its present marketing programme and any which may be contemplated for the future.

As an indication of this, I was advised, in all sincerity, a few days ago that if I dared to take a stand on a few of these issues, I would be subjected to deliberate and ruthless smear programmes.

Since I have always been a strong supporter, and possibly a much criticized supporter, of strongly organized farm marketing organizations, I refuse to accept this word of caution. I will be extremely disappointed if my comments are not accepted in the sincerity in which they are presented, so that I will be allowed the privilege of working with producers generally, and strengthening to an even greater degree their position in the market place.

I think, Mr. Speaker, it is not necessary for me to read the balance of this address. I would be glad to table it in the House for the information of any of the hon. members.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, in reply to the question of the hon. member for Oxford, it is more or less a coincidence that yesterday, in reply to a letter I had received from a very good friend of mine, whom I have known for some years, who was president of the Peterborough federation of agriculture, I acknowledged his letter yesterday in order to illustrate to this House that the views expressed by Mr. Biggs might be very comparable to my own.

This is the letter to Mr. Clifford Johnson, past-president of the Peterborough federation of agriculture:

DEAR MR. JOHNSON:

I was interested in your views as expressed in your letter of February 6, relative to the hog producers marketing plan. I am glad you recognize the interest which the government has taken in providing the necessary legislation to permit the farmers to market their commodities collectively.

This I have always felt could not help but be to their advantage, since as an individual the farmer's bargaining power is practically nil.

I would like to make it clear that I believe that on the whole the hog producers marketing plan is bound to work to the advantage of the producers, but as I have said on many occasions, in any experimental programme such as this, there must be a flexibility whereby progress is made through trial and error.

It is regrettable that an attitude of inflexibility would appear to have been assumed by the hog producers marketing board.

As far as the government is concerned, it is not our wish to interfere with any marketing plan. But in this far-reaching experimental legislation which we have provided, we do have a responsibility to the hog producers to insure that there are no principles in practice which could be open to suspicion and criticism and which, in the long run, would be detrimental, not only to the hog producers, but to all farm marketing plans.

Early in 1958 it was pointed out to the hog producers marketing board that the government questioned the private treaty method of selling by telephone. We thought then that we had an understanding with the board that, following the vote in July of 1958, further meetings would be held in order to consider a method of sale which would be on top of the table and therefore beyond reproach.

Much to my regret, the board assumed a non-negotiating attitude. It is unfortunate, in my opinion, in view of the great advantages which could accrue to the farm people of Ontario through sound orderly marketing plans, that some people have found it necessary to carry on a campaign of abuse, intimidation, and vilification against any person or group which happens to have views which do not entirely coincide with their own.

The great success of democracy has been brought about by negotiation on the part of well-meaning people, with a common interest, in trying to work out solutions to problems with which they are confronted from time to time.

It has been a great disappointment to me, as one who has been a strong believer and supporter of farm organization, to see one group in the community working in a manner which could not be anything but injurious to the long-term interest of organized farmers.

The film which was recently produced for and by the hog producers marketing board to illustrate the operation of the hog marketing plan in this province substantiates the conclusions which the government and its advisers reached in connection with the present methods of selling, whereby, through a selling monopoly which they are granted, the selling of all hogs in Ontario are entrusted to a few salesmen who negotiate sales by telephone. No one is suggesting that there has been any collusion, but in fairness to the salesmen the system should be such as to remove any possible grounds for suspicion or mistrust.

Therefore, I feel that, in the long-term interest of collective marketing, a system must be devised whereby the human element is removed from the operation to the greatest possible degree.

I have given you my comments and sincere views and opinions on this matter as I realize you are the same as myself, one who is keenly interested in bettering the lot of the farmer in the market place.

I am prepared to table a copy of my letter to Mr. Johnson, Mr. Speaker, because it points out my views in connection with this hog marketing operation at the present time.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Minister of Agriculture a supplementary question?

As in all issues, it is not a case of black and white. The hon. Minister of Agriculture was quoted 18 months ago by a delegation, which is willing to give affidavits as to the authenticity of that quote, that he hoped that the plan would collapse before the vote was held a year ago July.

Is this indicative of the kind of attitude that has produced the situation we now have?

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow: Mr. Speaker, I have made it abundantly clear on many occasions, and in writing, that I believe in this marketing plan and I think there is a great deal of merit to the present hog marketing plan in this province.

Mr. MacDonald: But, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister has not answered my question. He is going along with Mr. Biggs on the attitude. Now I agree we have sown the wind and now we are reaping the whirlwind.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): The question was answered. I say the hon. member for York South is out of order, and I think that this should close the matter.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would just like to have your ruling, but I am not finished as yet. If you agree with the hon. Prime Minister I will be glad to sit down.

Mr. Speaker: I consider the question answered by the Minister of Agriculture.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Before the orders of the day, Mr. Speaker, I would like to place certain documents on the table of this House.

They are photographic copies of documents appearing in a return that was tabled in the House of Commons at Ottawa on June 22, 1959, and they consist of copies of a letter dated February 6, from Mr. Ward L. Leroy to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario at London; a letter of February 17 from Mr. Leroy to Mr. Huddleston of Hydro in Toronto; a letter of February 27 from Mr. Leroy to Mr. Stiles of Hydro in Toronto; and a letter of December 16—all of these, incidentally, are in the year 1958—a letter of December 16, 1958, from Mr. Leroy to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario in Toronto, attention Mr. Tidy. These were the only letters that I referred to that are not already on the record, Mr. Speaker.

In my remarks last night, I referred to minutes, and I quoted from minutes of the Indian band council. Naturally, I do not have those minutes. But, as I stated, the extracts I quoted I copied down from the minutes in the presence of the chief. I would like to put these letters on the table just to complete the record.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Before the orders of the day, I would like to reply to questions asked on February 11 of me by the hon. member for Wentworth East (Mr. Gisborn) based on an article in the Toronto Daily Star of the day before.

The first question was: "Is the Skyway Bridge operation subject to prosecution under the Hamilton smoke abatement by-law?"

The answer to that is no. The Crown is not subject to prosecution.

However, we do recognize that unsatisfactory conditions exist there, and I may say, for the information of the hon. member and the House, that, previous to his question and even now, my engineers from the department have been working with the smoke abatement officer of the city of Hamilton with respect to this problem.

The second question was: "Does The Department of Highways intend to take action to clear up this situation?"

I have already indicated the answer to that. I may say that the installation causing the article in the Star is a temporary one used to keep ice off the plaza of the Burlington Bay Skyway, and there have been certain changes made in the mechanical installation which we believe have abated the nuisance considerably. When the final installation is in, I am quite sure that the hon. member, and all the people of that district, will have no cause for complaint.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I ask that there be a little variation from the order of business that I suggested last night? There are some bills on the order paper that might well go through committee stage, particularly the private bill orders.

I would move, sir, that you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of the whole, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

THE HOSPITAL SERVICES COMMISSION ACT, 1957

House in committee on Bill No. 54, An Act to amend The Hospital Services Commission Act, 1957.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister for an explanation of this particular bill? It is a very brief bill, simply providing that this Act shall be deemed to have come into force on January 1, 1960, and the explanatory note simply provides that this bill will bring the Act into line with the federal-provincial agreement.

My question of the hon. Minister is simply to ask the reason for this and what is meant by the federal-provincial arrangement.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Chairman, when The Ontario Hospital Services Act came into being it was arranged that those in receipt of burned-out pensions, for instance, would be admitted to hospitals for tubercular patients and for the mentally ill under coverage by the Ontario hospital services commission ticket.

Now the ticket does not begin to pay for their care, and since the federal people do not share in that cost, we had discussions with them beginning immediately after the inauguration of the plan, when we saw the unfairness of this. They very reasonably also saw the unfairness of it, and decided that, henceforth until such time as they become sharers in the care of the tubercular and mentally ill patients, they will pay the full costs of the maintenance of those who are ordinarily their wards.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Who are ordinarily the federal government's wards?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Ordinarily wards of the federal government.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, do I understand the hon. Minister to say that the expenses of the recipients of war veterans' allowances are not paid for by the federal government?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Their hospital ticket was paid for, as I understand it, by the federal government. But the federal government does not share in the cost of maintenance of tubercular and mentally ill patients. This only applies to the tubercular and mentally ill.

The war veterans, the persons in receipt of war veterans' allowances, are usually cared for in a federal Department of Veterans' Affairs hospital. If not, the hospital to which he is directed is paid, either through a ticket or by the federal government, since they are sharing the costs of general hospital care. They are not sharing the cost of mental or tubercular hospitals and those are the only cases referred to in this agreement.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 39 reported.

THE SANATORIA FOR CONSUMPTIVES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 56, An Act to amend The Sanatoria for Consumptives Act.

Sections 1 to 3, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 56 reported.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee rise and report certain bills without amendment.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain bills without amendment, moves the adoption of the report, and begs leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. R. E. Sutton (York-Scarborough): Mr. Speaker, in rising to participate in the Throne debate I propose to speak about the farmers in my riding, their trials and tribulations.

But, first, I wish to congratulate you on your election to the high office of Speaker of this Legislature. I have been most interested in the press accounts of your life story which reads like a Horatio Alger book.

As a teen-age youth from England coming to Canada to make your fame and fortune, you brought with you all of those qualities of industry, enthusiasm and fair dealing which invariably lead to success in this great province of ours. By careful living and saving your hard-earned money, you were able to set aside $1,000 each year of the first 7 years, when you brought and paid for your own farm. This was a truly remarkable achievement.

Your qualities of hand, heart and mind have been recognized by high municipal and provincial offices these many years. There is nothing like plain hard work and common sense to help one get ahead.

I wish to compliment you on your business acumen and foresight in getting out of the chicken business before the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) dropped the price of eggs to 19 cents a dozen.

I say again that I am very much impressed with your record as a bona-fide farmer. I was a farmer myself for 15 years and know something about this subject. Well, maybe not a farmer—I think they called me an agriculturist—one who makes a little bit of money in the city and loses it all in the country. It was my good fortune, however, to place one of my cows on the Dominion honour roll. She was first, having broken a record that had stood for 19 years.

Mr. Speaker, those 15 years spent on the farm were the most satisfactory period of my life. The independent way of life and the close personal friendships one forms cannot be duplicated in any other industry.

Hon. J. Root (Minister without Portfolio): It is a boy.

Mr. Sutton: I understand that a Royal Prince has been born to the Queen.

Mr. Speaker: The member must have some phenomenal powers, not possessed by myself, because I have just received a note now that the Queen has just had a son.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): May I say that His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) has caused a cablegram to be sent from the government, and from the assembly, and from the people of this province, congratulating Her Majesty and extending to her our best wishes and our loyalty and affection at this time.

Mr. Sutton: Mr. Speaker, to continue, the farmer is an individualist. His ideas of free enterprise and his way of life must be preserved at all costs, even though his numbers are becoming fewer and fewer.

My riding of York-Scarborough is some 70 square miles in area. Just 10 years ago, we were nearly all farmers except for 40,000 people around the fringe of East York and the city of Toronto proper. Now our population is close to 200,000. Indeed, it is estimated that it will go to 500,000 in the next 20 years. We have left, in my constituency, only 54 farms, all of which have been over-assessed this year by the Metro assessor, Mr. A. Gray.

I have had several meetings with this group of bona-fide farmers over the past few months, and have had their executive committee come to Queen's Park to see the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender). Some of these farmers' assessments are as high as $400 per acre. With our mill rate of 56 mills, it means that their taxes run above $2,000 per annum. One can realize the burden this represents when their total revenue from milk contracts and general farming is around $4,000 per annum.

The ridiculous part of this high assessment is the fact that, on the town line between Markham township and Scarborough, our farmers are assessed from $300 to $400 per acre while, right across the road in Markham township, identical farmland would be assessed at $40 per acre.

It seems to me that a low assessment for the bona-fide farmer would have 100 per cent. approval in the numerous areas in the province where this situation has appeared. It is only right and proper to protect him against being put out of business or being driven off his property. Just as soon as his farm is bought for sub-division, provision is then made for the high assessments by the sub-divider.

A redraft of the amendment to The Assessment Act, to protect the bona-fide farmer, I believe, will soon be presented to us by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. I hope it will receive the approval and support of the hon. members of this House.

I mentioned the fact that the farmer is a great individualist. One man standing alone can accomplish very little, and it is my belief that the farmer as a class is put upon and taken advantage of by a great many people. I am sorry to say some government and government agency employees are too arbitrary with the farmer. It has always been a policy of mine, long before my election, to take the part of the farmer at every possible opportunity.

In 1955, almost the day after my election, one of my farmer friends came to me with a complaint against Hydro. Hydro had put power lines across his farm in 1951, and were again taking another strip of his property without making settlements for the first right-of-way.

When I investigated the situation, I found 10 or 12 of my farmers were involved, as far as Scarborough was concerned, and also a greater number in Pickering outside of my riding. My friends were about ready to take drastic action to prevent Hydro from unloading the necessary steel to erect the towers.

The Hydro property men, Harry Hustler and Mr. Huddleston, were determined not to pay more than $350 per acre, although the Inoson farm, in the immediate vicinity, had sold a year previously for $800 per acre, and negotiations were then going on to purchase Morris Hammell's and Frank Sewall's farms in the area for from $1,200 to $1,500 per acre. The hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs was on the Hydro commission then, and when all these pertinent facts were brought to his attention, a very fair price, around $1,250 to $1,500 per acre, was paid.

The farmer still has to cut the weeds and cultivate the land under these unsightly towers. It seems to me Hydro should be prepared to pay the current price, plus 10 to 15 per cent. damages for right-of-way over a farmer's land, as there is no doubt that the property has been depreciated in value.

Farm organizations have always been of great interest to me, and I was very honoured when elected president of district No. 5 in the Toronto milk producers association. Many years ago this took in all of East York and Scarborough, and was the biggest district in the Toronto milk shed, with 400 shippers at that time. I doubt very much that there are any farms left in East York today—and as I mentioned earlier we now have only 54 farms in Scarborough.

The marketing agreement of the Toronto milk producers was the base or quota system. In other words, the farmer's milk production for the months of September, October and November—when the cows are in the barns and off the grass or pasture and when milk is most difficult to produce—would be the base for all the following year.

For instance, if the farmer was able to produce 7 cans of milk a day during those fall months, he would be paid top price for 7 cans, but no more, all next year. When the cows were on pasture, production would go to 10 cans and more, but for those extra 3 cans over the 7-can base, which was the same milk in every respect, he would be paid the secondary price or commercial milk price.

This is how it works out at today's prices—for the 7 cans he would be paid $5.10 per hundred-weight, less 35 cents per hundred-weight trucking charges in Scarborough. For 3 cans or any amount of milk produced over the 7-can base, he would be paid $2.60 per hundred-weight less 35 cents haulage charge, all based on 3.4 per cent. butterfat. There is a scale of adjustments up or down on milk testing, lower or higher than 3.4 per cent. The rate in this example paid to the farmer is $4.35 per hundred-weight, or about 11 cents a quart. It is a very erroneous idea that the farmers are paid $5.10 per hundred-weight for fluid milk sent into the city dairies.

At the time I was active in district No. 5 there were 132 of us, out of the 400 members, shipping our milk to Blantyre Dairy—run by the Paulger Brothers and located on Queen Street East. The dairy was agreeable when we, the shippers, wanted a marketing arrangement known as 90 and 10, or in other words 90 per cent. of milk produced to be bought by the dairy at top price of $5.10 per hundred-weight and 10 per cent. at the secondary price of $2.60 per hundred-weight, again based up or down from standard 3.4 per cent. butterfat; and again less haulage rate to the city of 35 cents per hundred-weight.

With this system the blend price—the true price the farmer receives for his milk—is $4.85 per hundred-weight. This is 50 cents per hundred-weight more than the quota method, and would mean $4 a day more for any farmer shipping 10 cans a day and $3 a day more for the average shipper of 8 cans per day, or $1,000 more per annum.

We found ourselves in trouble immediately with the Toronto milk producers on the 90-10 formula. They said if we wanted to have our milk sold in Toronto, we had to conform to the Toronto milk producers' quota system of marketing. I then incorporated the 132 shippers into the Agincourt milk producers association.

A corporation, as hon. members know, is an artificial person created by law with powers, objects and purposes as set forth in the charter, with a separate and distinct life from the members that make up the corporation.

We had already started to ship milk to the Blantyre Dairy on the 90-10 formula. On a complaint from the Toronto milk producers association to the milk control board, Blantyre Dairy was called before the board and threatened with cancellation of its licence unless they paid for their milk on a quota basis.

By this time we had our Agincourt milk producers association charter, and being one person by law we put the corporation on quota, but paid the members of the corporation 90-10. We had Mr. Joseph Sedgewick represent us when we were again called on the carpet before the milk control board, but they could do nothing to change our operating methods. We then withdrew our group from the Toronto milk producers association and the 1.75 cents per hundred-weight we were paying to that organization went into our own treasury.

We now have something like $12,000 in Ontario and Government of Canada Bonds, a nest egg we are building up to be used possibly to take over the haulage of our own milk some day, or for some other useful purpose, like hiring the best legal talent to protect us from Everett Biggs' milk pooling plan.

The Toronto milk producers were not going to give up the fight that easily, so the next episode took place after many of our customers had sold their farms along Dawes Road, now Victoria Park Avenue, and moved further out of the city near Claremont and Stouffville. Some of these new locations were from one mile to one-and-a-quarter miles off the Blantyre routes.

We applied to the Ontario transport board to have these routes extended to pick up the milk of our own customers and were denied. Our farmers refused to place their milk on the Borden and Silverwood trucks.

It seemed a stupid thing; Silverwoods went down one road and Bordens went down the other. It was just as stupid as saying that Eatons and only Eatons will go down this concession, while Simpsons can only go down the next concession.

Naturally our farmers would not leave Blantyre. These farmers of ours, who were off the route of the Blantyre Dairy, refused to put their milk on the Bordens and the Silverwoods trucks, and carted their milk each morning and left it on the side of the road on the nearest Blantyre route. It was not a very satisfactory place, one will agree.

We appealed the ruling of the transport board and again appeared before the milk control board. I remember Judge Curry from Manitoulin Island was in the chair. Hiram McCallum was there representing the general public; there were also members of the Toronto producers and Toronto distributors representing their groups.

After the hearing, we were asked to wait in the next room, and told they would give us their ruling in the matter. We were called in and told the milk control board had to take the advice of the transport board and were therefore denying any extension of the Blantyre routes.

I asked the judge if he would answer a question. He said he would. I asked if a farmer could ship his own milk, and he said yes. Then I asked if 3 or 4 or more could co-operatively ship their own milk, and again he said yes.

We went immediately to the Agincourt branch of the Bank of Nova Scotia, signed a note for $3,000, bought a truck, painted the name of Agincourt milk producers on the side of it, hired a man to drive the truck for an hour each morning, picked up the milk of our 6 customers, met the Blantyre truck at a pre-arranged place on his route, and transferred the load of 40 or 50 cans.

This went on for some years with a great deal of complaint from our enemies, but no further court cases. The deduction from all our membership paid off the loan at the bank.

Each fall I used to put these farmers out selling Dominion of Canada Savings Bonds. I made them sub-agents and they turned all their commission in to pay off the loan. Here it was demonstrated that the entire membership was prepared to stand behind the few who found themselves in difficulties.

The Agincourt milk producers association has always been a very closely knit organization. I was a trustee for years, at no administrative cost whatever, on their excellent hospitalization plan. On payment of $3 per month, a man, his wife, and all children under 18 were given exactly the same protection and coverages as the Blue Cross. Now we give our membership Physicians and Surgeons Insurance. As for hospitalization, we now collect the membership premiums for the Ontario hospital plan.

We always regretted the fact that Everett Biggs, after he was appointed dairy commissioner, always referred to our organization as a selfish little group that he was going to level. I believe he will try awfully hard to do so, if and when he ever brings in his idea of milk pooling.

We always thought he would have been better advised to raise the standards of all the shippers outside our group, instead of trying to lower us to the level of those struggling away on that quota system of shipping milk. Our organization is so successful that we have always had a long waiting list to get on as shippers.

A couple of years ago, when a new Act was put through the Legislature called The Milk Industry Act, I thought too much authority was being given to the milk commissioner. In the standing committee of agriculture, I raised this point of Everett Biggs' desire to level our association, and I moved that the whole Act be deferred for one year. The motion was seconded by my hon. friend opposite from Oxford (Mr. Innes), I believe.

The hon. Minister of Agriculture, present at the meeting, guaranteed the 90-10 formula for the Agincourt milk producers association if I would withdraw the motion. My seconder and I withdrew the motion. I am sure the undertaking of the hon. Minister on that day two years ago will be honoured as long as we operate under the Act then being discussed. I would expect that before milk pooling could ever be instituted, a new Act would have to be drawn up. We will cross that bridge when we come to it.

There has always seemed to me to be powerful forces lined up against us to conform to the quota system whether we like it or not. And I have never been able to make up my own mind exactly, but the Bordens organization and the Silverwoods organization and other similar dairies buy their milk on a 70-30 formula and sometimes 60-40 and sometimes 50-50. These organizations claim that they are selling some milk commercially, and that they have to have this surplus. They separate the milk and get the cream to supply their restaurant customers and they use the surplus milk for cottage cheese.

The other day the Blantyre Dairy made a submission and there was a covering letter in it, by Elliott Harrington, the president of the Agincourt milk producers. I had copies of these two letters distributed to each hon. member of the House. The Blantyre submission pointed out that they are almost 100 per cent. on home delivery of milk. They have gone to terrific expense in purchasing 50 or 60 refrigerated trucks, I think each truck was worth $3,000 or more. They are so efficient that nearly all the milk goes in the bottle for home delivery. Milk left over in today's work is the first milk delivered the next day, so there is no waste. It does not come back to the dairy to have the milk separated and the butterfat taken out of it. There is no waste in the operation of the Blantyre Dairy. They are certainly the best dairy in the city of Toronto today, without exception.

They are complaining because the price of milk, so far as their raw products is concerned, is set by this government on a wonderful basis of formula pricing. Formula pricing is tied into a long list of basic commodities, including labour, the wholesale price of all commodities, the seed price, everything the farmer uses in producing milk. If that formula goes up by 19 cents, then milk goes up 19 cents a hundred-weight to the farmer.

In 1951 this government set a store differential of one cent. Then next year it was raised to 2 cents. In other words, if milk to the householder was 23 cents it would be 21 cents in the store.

This thing now is completely out of hand, and milk is being used as a loss leader. One sees advertisements of some little butcher shop, saying, "2 quarts of milk for 29 cents," and then in small type it says, "Provided you buy $5 worth of merchandise."

Now I maintain, Mr. Speaker, that we should do something by way of setting a minimum store price on milk, and we should stop the use of milk as a loss leader in our stores.

Mr. Speaker, I sat here last night when one of the hon. members opposite spoke for two hours and a half, and I was squirming in my seat wondering when on earth I would ever have the opportunity of taking part in this debate. I have many more things to speak about in my riding. I am very grateful for the indulgence and kind attention of the hon. members. I am going to stop at this point and give some other hon. member a chance.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, I want first to add my congratulations to the many you have received since your appointment to this high office. I know you will fulfil your duty with dignity and fairness to all.

At this, the first session of the twenty-sixth Parliament, I would like to thank the people of my riding for the great honour they have bestowed on me. Also, Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate those who have been elected here as hon. members of Parliament. A man with a seat in Parliament, representing his fellow citizens, belongs to a chosen few. In that role he has a right to be proud, a right to know that he belongs to a high tradition, and a duty to see to it that, so far as lies within his power, he must never tarnish that tradition.

What hon. members of Parliament can do is to try with whatever powers they possess to be worthy of Parliament, to respect and honour it. And, Mr. Speaker, when the visitors to Parliament see empty seats, they must not conclude that hon. members are not doing their jobs. What they must realize is that absent MPP's may be engaged in many important chores, calling on government departments, answering scores of letters and receiving delegations from their constituency. Parliament is more than a theatre.

Mr. Speaker, I am indeed proud to be the representative of that great county of Lanark, which, during the years 1815-1820, had its first settlers from the Scottish highlands.

The first representative to Parliament for Lanark was Alexander Morris in 1820, elected for the eighth Parliament of Upper Canada. To his memory, the historic sites society has erected a plaque in the town of Perth, and one of my first duties after election to this House was to assist at the unveiling.

It was in the same year, 1820, that the survey of the village of Lanark started and was well settled in the following year along the banks of the Clyde River. From this brief historical sketch, Mr. Speaker, I want to tell hon. members of the tragic fire in that village of June 15, 1959, a village of 900 people; many of its residents are direct descendants from these Scottish immigrants. The fire started at noon and spread to burn 35 structures, both business and residential, leaving 100 persons homeless. Thanks to a divine miracle, no one suffered any major injury.

Lanark is the type of village where we would like to retire—away from the noise and rush of the city, closer to the right values, the leisurely friendships, the better observance of religious principles, and the more wholesome raising of our children.

The people of Lanark can look back with pride in the years to come, long after their community has been restored, on how they faced the calamity of fire on such a scale. There were acts of heroism, and in particular the devotion to duty of the firemen and telephone operators will be long remembered. Fire ripped the heart out of the village—but the prophecy “Lanark will be re-built” is being fulfilled.

Mr. Speaker, you may ask why I should burden this House with this story. But I want to let the hon. members know of the great assistance we received from this government. The first job was to extinguish the fire, and the village fire brigade was assisted by the Lanark county mutual fire aid system, which is one organized by the fire marshal's office and is under the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). This aid system consists of the municipalities of Almonte, Bathurst township, Carleton Place, Lanark, Pakenham, Perth and Smiths Falls.

Due to the fire, as all communication by telephone from the village was burned. I might say again the Ontario provincial police used their radio system to keep communications going to the outside.

The Department of Agriculture immediately offered the dormitory of Kemptville agricultural school for sleeping accommodation.

The Department of Public Welfare sent two representatives with orders to give all aid and necessary relief as needed—to see that food, clothing and care were available.

The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario rushed men and material, and by nightfall lines were rebuilt and lights were on.

The Department of Highways sent equipment to help clean up the rubble.

The Department of Planning and Development has given all assistance in laying out the new area.

The Department of Municipal Affairs gave to Lanark council guidance in distribution of the relief fund and all matters in which council were disturbed. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) wired condolences from himself and the government, and promised help and financial assistance by matching, dollar for dollar, all contributions collected.

The Department of Education was under the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop), and I would like to express my personal thanks to him for his kind attention to matters in Lanark and for his visit to us.

At this time I want to congratulate the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Roberts) on his appointment to his important cabinet post. I wish him every joy and success in his new work.

Mr. Speaker, this co-operation of all these government departments has helped and encouraged my people in Lanark village to rebuild and for this, on their behalf, I express my very sincere thanks to this government.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to comment on some points of the address of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. MacKay). The programme of modernizing mental health is very important in Lanark. At Smiths Falls is located one of the hospital schools, but this building has never been finished. One wing is yet to be added, which would care for 300 more children. Here is a building set up to carry this extra wing, using the same roads, the same office and administration, and the same services; there are people available for manpower and there is a waiting list of over 500. I would urge the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) to complete this project in 1960.

Mr. Speaker, I would here pay tribute to the Ontario hospital services plan—from personal experience, and from that of my constituents. However, I do find that some elderly people do not understand the punch cards sent out from the electronic computer. Could it not be arranged for the administrator of our hospitals, or a welfare worker, to be available one day per month for explanation, and to have this fact advertised, so they would have their hospitalization attended to? Could we not advertise so that the remaining 6 per cent. would be covered?

And now, Mr. Speaker, to supplement our health service, a new physical fitness programme is to be inaugurated. In my riding of Lanark was born, in 1867, the world's greatest physical educator, Dr. Tait McKenzie. He attended Almonte high school and McGill University, and on graduation took entire charge of physical education at McGill and became medical director of physical education, the first post of its kind in Canada.

At the same time, he was lecturer in anatomy to the university; held a private practice specializing in the treatment of deformity by exercise, and was private physician to the Governor-General of Canada.

As a former country boy with medical observation of the tragedies inflicted on youth by the obliteration of playing spaces by industry and smoke, he dedicated himself, above all else, to physical education. In 1904, he accepted the chair of physical education at the University of Pennsylvania. He attempted first to correct the restraints of sedentary life by setting-up exercises and, secondly, to develop physical intelligence.

Mr. McKenzie's book Exercise in Education and Medicine, published in 1910, is a classic. His many articles, written with authority as a physical educator, surgeon-scientist, and artist-sculptor, show him also as a champion of the people. He organized and administered professional and lay societies in an attempt to provide physical opportunities for all ranks, not only for the favoured most skilful few. His teachings were avidly adopted among educators in Japan, the Philippines, India, France, Great Britain, Canada, and elsewhere, as well as in the United States.

Mr. McKenzie's former summer home and studio, the "Mill of Kintail," near Almonte, Ontario, contains the originals of many of his most inspiring works of art and the records of his career. It is now a museum and shrine dedicated to his memory.

Here is the only shrine in the world to a great physical educationist, and a plaque commemorates him and lists his achievements. This programme of physical fitness should bear his name, and this summer home should be a national shrine and park owned by the province of Ontario.

In regard to highways and highway safety, one of the worst conditions I find on the road are the buses and transport trucks which continually follow cars too closely—blinking their lights—as if an ordinary motorist has no right to be on the road. Their schedules should be carefully checked, and they must be made to abide by speed limits and laws of the road.

In His Honour's address, mention is made of the highways and bridges to be built—these are most important. But again I want to point out to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) the dangerous "S" curve at the outskirts of Smiths Falls where this curve crosses a railway track which is concealed by high banks. There has been one forward step taken—after a fatal accident, a warning flasher was installed. I strongly urge that The Department of Highways work with the town of Smiths Falls to have this crossing eliminated during 1960.

Mr. Speaker, although a large part of highway budget goes to municipalities, there is much need for more development roads. With winter maintenance costs so high, as we are in the snow area, many townships use over half their budget for this purpose, so they are able to do only routine road maintenance. Many of my townships need these short stretches built for school bus service, mail routes, and so forth. There is one road in particular, which I asked for last year—and that was the short stretch between Brightside and Hopetown—which would complete a connection between a county road and a highway. This would encourage tourists to come to my riding.

These, Mr. Speaker, are some of the problems I bring from that great county of Lanark which I have the honour to represent and I shall always look to the interests of my people.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, in rising to take part in the debate on the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne, I would first pay tribute to you, sir, on your election as Speaker of this assembly. I have had the privilege of sitting with you in this House for quite a number of years, and well know your abilities as a private hon. member, as chairman of committees, and as a chairman of the committee of the whole House. I am sure that you will conduct your duties and responsibilities in the high office to which you have now been elected in the same manner in which you distinguished yourself as the hon. member for your own constituency.

I would suggest to you that I would not share too great a concern about the education some of the hon. members opposite are trying to pass on to you in your capacity as Speaker, because I think it is well known that the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr.

Macaulay) will soon be the leader of the Progressive-Conservative party in Ontario. I think, sir, that he is now trying to set ground rules, or familiarize himself with the rules of the House, because he expects to occupy, for a considerable length of time, the office of leader of the Opposition.

Now, before I go on to some of the main subjects of my address, I want to pay tribute to the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) who has just recently vacated the office of Minister of Education. There are some things that impress a young man when he comes into this House, and I think one of the things that impressed me most, in my years of service here, was the very kind understanding that the then hon. Minister of Education had for people who had problems of education—particularly those in the north.

I can well recall—and I hope the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) does not hear this—but I can well recall two or three agreements and understandings we had to reach about badly needed education facilities in the north, which were brought about simply because the hon. Minister understood the problems, not necessarily from the legalistic sense or the educator's viewpoint, but from the mind and heart of a man who has an understanding and sympathy with people.

I do hope sincerely that the hon. Minister from Eglinton will have many years of association with us in this House, and that he will give us the continued benefit of his advice.

Now yesterday we had the pleasure, and certainly the privilege, of listening to an address by the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope), who is my colleague in northwestern Ontario. I want to say this, at the outset, about the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions, that he has distinguished himself in that capacity. And I say this seriously, because I know a lot of people were wondering just how the hon. member for Port Arthur would make out as a Minister of Reform Institutions. But I would say to you, sir, that so far he has done an outstanding job.

I would say also that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions has done an outstanding job, in and out of this House, for northwestern Ontario.

But I would say this also, that sometimes—and that was why last year I advocated that perhaps he should be Minister of Travel and Publicity—he gets carried away in his enthusiasm.

I was not able yesterday to hear his entire address because of delegations of people here from northwestern Ontario who took up some of my time elsewhere in the building. But I have heard my hon. friend's speeches for about 25 years, I guess, and in his enthusiastic approach to his subject which, in current times is the Tory government, he does wax over-enthusiastic.

One thing that has disturbed me a great deal, particularly in this session, is the fact that I do not recall ever having heard as much as we are hearing these days about former governments.

Now, I am one of those people who are in the age grouping that had little or nothing to do with Hepburn governments or Henry governments or Bennett governments and Ferguson governments. We are the kind of people I submit, Mr. Speaker, who are looking forward to 1965-1970-1975—in other words, to the future of this province. We are not too concerned about the past. What is past is past.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Tory times are hard times—well he is going—

Mr. Wren: The hon. member opposite raises a good point because it is very significant, Mr. Speaker, that whenever the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) is on his feet talking about why somebody is here, and not over there, one never hears him say very much about the Henry governments, or about the Bennett administration in Ottawa, and with very good reason.

Mr. Grossman: Now the hon. member is going back.

Mr. Wren: And the hon. Minister—no, but he asked a question, I am very pleased to answer it. The hon. Minister from Port Arthur raised a point yesterday about the fact that the first thing the new Hepburn regime said when they came into office in 1934 was: "Close highway camps in northern Ontario."

Mr. Grossman: They fired everybody.

Mr. Wren: Well, I will tell hon. members what they got fired from, Mr. Speaker. It was from $5 a month. That is what they got fired from, and they were immediately rehired a week or two later at 30 cents an hour which, in those days, was a very significant increase from the 20 cents a day slave labour which they worked under the Henry administration, supported by the Bennett regime in Ottawa.

Mr. Grossman: Does he mean they had to fire them in order to give them a raise?

Mr. Wren: If the hon. member wants to dig up the past, we can go back quite a piece, because I swung a sledgehammer during the building of the trans-Canada highway for 20 cents a day. Every blow that was struck on the head of steel by every man who did any work on that highway was registered in the polling booth—those who were of age to vote—in 1934.

The closing of those slave camps in the north, I submit, Mr. Speaker, was nothing to be ashamed of. As a matter of fact, repeating somewhat what I started out to say on this particular subject, we are quite willing over here to let people rest in their graves. If hon. members want to continue on the opposite side their ghoulish work of digging up the dead, let them keep on with it. We are not interested in what has happened. We are interested in the future.

I would admonish the hon. Ministers on the government benches opposite to remember what happened in Fort William in June. I am talking about 1959 now. What happened in 1959, in June, when the then member for Fort William on the public platform made reference to past Premiers of this province never being able to reach the Lakehead in a sober state past North Bay, or words to that effect. The hon. Prime Minister of Ontario—who is still the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario, Mr. Speaker—was on the platform that night, and did not deny or sever himself from that opinion. And hon. members saw the result of what happened in Fort William on June 11.

If hon. members want to keep digging up the past, it is all right. Keep it up.

The hon. Minister of Reform Institutions was talking about industry in northwestern Ontario yesterday. He talked about the amazing growth and the explosion in development and so on.

I recall being with him at a convention of the northwestern Ontario municipal association in Kenora last fall and, at that time, the only suggestion he could come up with for new industry in northwestern Ontario was the growing of mushrooms, and he said he had gone into that matter quite extensively.

I do not know whether it was a coincidence or not, but in the Financial Post of just a few days ago, there was quite an article prepared by a well-known agriculturalist on that very subject, the growing of mushrooms. This is dated January 23, 1960, and the headline of the article is "Mushrooms as Tricky as Orchids." And the sub-headline goes on to say, "If you think raising mushrooms might be a simple sideline, read before you invest."

And, of course, they provide a good deal of interesting information.

I was most anxious to read this when I saw it, because I well recall the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions saying that here was northwestern Ontario's new opportunity, raising mushrooms. Well, when I got through reading this article—wherein the author, Francis Baldwin, pointed out all the hazards which are associated with the growing of mushrooms—I decided that I did not dare endorse the recommendation of the hon. Minister to grow mushrooms in northwestern Ontario.

An hon. member: We could appoint a marketing board.

Mr. Wren: Well, I do not think we would have to appoint a marketing board in the north to market mushrooms. I do not think there is any great need for that.

Now, another thing the hon. Minister very carefully skirted around when he was talking about northern Ontario yesterday—and its great explosions—was the matter of the industry that is disappearing in northern Ontario. I refer to the diminishing production of some of our industries and the reasons for it. Instead, he went on to say how happy everyone is with what is going on.

Well, I do not know, Mr. Speaker, but when some of the people up there read some of these speeches, they feel something like the poor little fellow in Moscow sitting down on the sidewalk reading Pravda. As he is reading the usual propaganda appended to the front page of a Russian newspaper, he is looking at it saying, "How can things be so good, when things are so bad?"

The hon. Minister did not tell us about the very real danger of the Canada Car and Foundry plant closing at the Lakehead. He did not tell us about the very diminished production of ships at the Lakehead ports. He did not say anything about that at all. And it happens to be right in his own city. I do not know how he could have overlooked it.

All he said about Elliot Lake was that the people who were going to be displaced at Elliot Lake should be entitled to transportation out of Elliot Lake. Now that is something that even an hon. member of this House gets, Mr. Speaker—at least he is entitled to transportation home after the session. I think that was one of the weakest illustrations of what has happened at Elliot Lake that I have ever heard.

I must reiterate what the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) said the other day—that it is strange indeed that not a single Tory supporter in this House from northern Ontario has interested himself at all in the Elliot Lake problem, not one. Not one.

And you know, Mr. Speaker, I enjoy reading because, when I attained the age of about 16 years, my mother stopped me from reading funny papers, and told me that I should read something more enlightening. But things can get dull around here at times and one feels the need of some relaxation. Now when I go to bed at night, when over-tired or over-taxed, I can usually relax by reading this document known as the Progressive-Conservative Speakers' Handbook, 1959.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): It was 889,000 votes.

Mr. Wren: Yes. Yes. But—

Mr. Grossman: That is not hay.

Mr. Wren: It is just amazing—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: It was not 300,000.

Mr. Wren: Well, the hon. Minister of Transport makes a point there. But those 889,000 people would like to get hold of this book right now, and have a look at what they have done after what they said. Then it might come down to about 488,000 votes.

But, Mr. Speaker, if you do want to amuse yourself, and read something that will not over-tax your mentality at all, and yet give you some mirthful relaxation, I suggest that you have a good look at it.

I would suggest that northern Tory members should go into the mining section of this big document. There is a gentleman's face on it, I think all hon. members are familiar with him.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): He is the chairman of the mining committee.

Mr. Wren: Oh, is he? But I think the hon. Minister might read what the Madison Avenue boys told him to say about Elliot Lake in June, and read the Toronto Globe and Mail of a day or two ago, and just compare it. In fact, it might be rather shocking. I would suggest that it would be something that he would not enjoy.

Now, going on with northern problems, I also heard a lot from my hon. friend from Port Arthur about the great many new pulp and paper mills that have been built. He referred to this thing and that thing. But I do not know if he ever received a copy of this document put out by The Department of Economics entitled The Lakehead, Northwestern Ontario Region. It was published in 1959 by the authority of the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan).

I might say it is a very good and very comprehensive economic study of northwestern Ontario, and I want to commend the people from The Department of Economics who prepared it.

But I am afraid my hon. friend from Port Arthur did not read it, because it has some odd things to say. He told hon. members all about the new pulp mills in recent years.

Well, on page 10 of this report it says, in an illustrated chart, that in 1949 there were 11 pulp and paper industries in the northwestern Ontario region; in 1955, 6 years later, there were 10; and in 1957 there were 10.

I think another page he did not read was page 11, where they discussed the saw milling industry in northwestern Ontario. It points out there that in 1949 there were 220 establishments in northwestern Ontario, but in 1956 they had been reduced to 137. Somehow that escaped his attention. He did not say anything about that.

The number of employees in 1949 in this industry were 1,176 and that is a drop down of 687.

This report which is, as I say, quite clear and quite extensive, also points out how the management and control of the forest industry in northwestern Ontario is pretty well devoted to management units of industry. It has reached the point, as a matter of fact, where the entire area of accessible timber between the Manitoba border and the Quebec border is taken up by a handful of corporations.

The secondary industries in northwestern Ontario have been pushed aside. The secondary industries in northwestern Ontario, or many of them, are on the verge of extinction including industry located in my hon. friend's riding, or immediately adjacent.

I refer to the Northern Wood Preservers Plant. This is an industry which employs 250 men the year round—a minimum of 250 men would please any community. Any community in Ontario would be pleased to have that industry move in. Yet they cannot get timber requirements for any more than one year in advance.

I can leave to your imagination, Mr. Speaker, the difficulties in which that industry—and hundreds like them in northwestern Ontario—find themselves in their marketing and financing problems.

Now this bring me to a subject which has been discussed in this House before, and I have to mention again. That is the assurance and the reassurance that a pulp and paper mill would be established at or near Sioux Lookout in northwestern Ontario. That has not developed yet. At the present moment the economic picture is such—and the umbrella under which the paper industry must function is such—that it is not too encouraging at the present time.

But I am going to discuss that in detail during the budget debate, and on the estimates of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner).

What I am pointing out here is simply that our overall economic policy in the north is such that it does not lend itself to the encouragement of new industry. That is another thing my hon. friend forgot to mention.

Last year, delegates from northwestern Ontario chambers of commerce and others, when appearing before the government, were assured—by no less a person than the hon. Prime Minister—that a connecting link by way of an access road would be built between Sioux Lookout and the Savant Lake highway. They went back and reported accordingly to their people, only to find themselves in the embarrassing situation now that responsible Ministers of the Crown have to tell them it will not be built immediately.

The necessity for a causeway between the mainland and Mackenzie Island in the Red Lake area has been something which has been constantly placed before the government for years and years. Again, before election time, this project was promised as having some high degree of priority. Now that the election has passed, it has gone back to its former niche in the scheme of things.

Another matter which I wanted to bring to the attention of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts)—I am sorry he has left his seat—is the very serious state of certain facilities used by the Ontario provincial police in the town of Dryden. As a matter of fact, I think it would be well if the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) were to send some responsible inspector or official to inspect the cell facilities at Dryden. I do not know if there are any worse in Ontario, because I have not visited that many jails. I do not think a jail is a healthy place to be around. They might forget to let you out.

But I would say this, in all seriousness, Mr. Speaker, that Dryden is in the centre of a whole district-wide police area and has to use cage-like cells in the basement of a very, very old building with no sanitary facilities whatever. There is nothing in there but the ordinary pail, and male and female prisoners are herded in these cages at the same time. On week-ends, as many as 22 people have been put into a space of less than 100 square feet.

I think the Ontario provincial police deserve something better than that, and I think there is great need for our health authorities to pay attention to a situation like this. The money has been voted—tentatively at least—and the matter was before the treasury board on other occasions. But for some reason or another delay continues—

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Corrected forthwith.

Mr. Wren: I am glad to hear that from the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs—that the Dryden jail situation will be corrected. While he is correcting that deficiency he might visit with his colleague, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell), and perhaps see if he might be able to issue some of that wine I was talking about the other day to some of his officials, and see if it will put some life into them.

One of the biggest problems government departments have in northern Ontario is with public works. This House votes the money, the general policy and programming are laid down, and then it runs into the unholy procrastination which seems to be the policy of The Department of Public Works.

And, may heaven bless me, I would like some hon. members of this House to have a good look at some of the work which The Department of Public Works do themselves. It is just fantastic, I assure them.

The other problem I want to raise at this time, Mr. Speaker, is one that I have already taken up with the hon. Minister of Transport but one which is very important to us. The cutting and sale of pulpwood is one of our basic incomes for small contractors, in some cases, and for the farmer in northwestern Ontario. We are up against this situation. The Department of Transport, through the provincial police, is strictly enforcing loading regulations on the highways.

I have no complaint to make regarding the provincial police or The Department of Transport officials, they are doing what they are instructed to do.

But what is happening is this. It is going to curtail, if not end, much of the delivery of wood to the paper mills. The truckers are not complaining about the licence fees. They are paying, and they are willing to pay, the full tariff licence fees for the truck in question.

But what is happening is that any extra loading put on these trucks, of necessity, to fulfil contracts made a year ago, is having to be taken off. They cannot deliver the wood for the contract price if that policy has to be followed. They maintain that the frozen state of the roads at this time of year—January, February and March—when they are usually delivering wood, is such that no serious damage can be done to the highways.

I would appeal, Mr. Speaker, to the authorities in question to examine this closely, to see if some realistic application of policy and regulation could be entertained.

Now I want to make some comment, Mr. Speaker, about the Gordon committee report in line with amendments that have been made, according to the address of His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay), and on some other matters.

Mr. Speaker, I feel that I personally cannot share some of the enthusiasm about the Gordon committee report on government organization in Ontario which has been expressed in this House. In fact, to me, there are some disturbing overtones, overtones in events leading up to the appointment by order-in-council of the committee.

Throughout the last decade, some glaring weaknesses in government administration broke through, perhaps due to the pressures of the post-war era. But, without particularizing or pointing to people and events, I would say that methods in administration belonging to a quiet era were retained on the canyon floor while the need for reality was on a much higher plateau in the last 10 years. And there developed some serious deficiencies in important areas of public responsibility—to name a few: highways; hydro; education; agriculture; transmission and the use of energy; federal-provincial fiscal relations; provincial-municipal fiscal relations; taxing authority of boards; and northern development.

Now, all through the flying fifties, stop-gaps were applied here and there. Select committees, government committees, and Royal commissions stumbled and groped and succeeded, through varying degrees of competence, in correcting abuses in an already seriously depreciated machine known as government.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister no doubt was seriously concerned, as is evidenced by several of his speeches in this House, when, on some rare occasions he took the sober view—that is to say, a view separated from the intoxicating effect of relatively meaningless majorities—about public administration in Ontario. The hon. and gallant gentleman on those rare occasions displayed the attributes of generalship and once in a while made vital decisions as a good general would that shook the comprehension of objectors and equally faithful followers.

Then, through the whole area of agony and decision, he discovered in our midst a man with a sense of public duty and an equal patriotic fervour to do serious service for his country, because here had emerged a man, though not so skilled in the art of political expediency and panic remedies, a man with a background of training and economics and a sense of social consciousness that transcended provincial expediency and showed promise, as indeed this spirit has, of attracting wide public attention.

As we surged toward the swinging sixties, people were gradually becoming aware that political expediency had as surely depreciated as a weapon of progress as the muzzle-loader had as a weapon of war.

Then, again on the Canadian scene a public figure emerged with a dedicated sense of curiosity—something I would commend to the hon. members opposite. I refer here to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), a man not so adept as some at shocking the public conscience, nor as agile as the hon. Prime Minister at skating around a dangerous hole in the ice. But the hon. leader of the Opposition will, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, make a great Prime Minister of this province.

It has been well said that men make a real contribution to society when they seek to satisfy their own curiosity. When solutions have to be found, men look about constructively, and it is the sober truth I submit that emotion will not displace research and application.

Exposed to flank attacks as he has been at times, to rapier-like political thrusts through some temporary deficiencies in his armour, nevertheless, there has prevailed a determined curiosity about public administration in matters like education, liquor, highways, government by boards and commissions, and so on. Gradually the hon. leader of the Opposition excited the interest of the public, because they could see that here was a party leader seeking not to hurt or to maim people, but seeking instead to heal gaping wounds in our public structure that were draining away our private and public strength.

Mr. Speaker, the Provincial Auditor (Mr. Cotnam) was one of the first to take note of this trend and, following a decade of suggestion, hinting, urging and investigation and what have you, last year he took the bold step in his report to the Legislature of advocating a committee to study organization of government. He, too, was aware that a new look was developing in the province.

The hon. Prime Minister simultaneously recalled his own sober thoughts on the same subject and, with a pen loaded with processed political anticipation, he built his own thoughts into a letter outlining terms of reference for what became the Gordon committee. The committee reported back in conformance with the hon. Prime Minister's wishes, except for a few details.

That is the weird aspect, Mr. Speaker, of this report. For, despite a very carefully worded suggestion to the committee that their survey could go as deeply as they chose, the committee chose to remain on the surface. Some observers reflect—and I share that opinion—that the committee did little else than append their names to an already developed pattern.

In effect, it was something like an immaculate conception. The committee seized the ideas and philosophies of our hon. leader, and the better expressions of the government hon. leader, with a conclusion that could read—"We cannot go deeper until we conduct more diving tests."

Well, time is of the essence today. If I get through before one o'clock I will be glad to.

The best kind of society can be built only on a firm philosophy, and in this report there is little with which to convince anyone of any new philosophy. The document is actually only an approach to a report, and—I sincerely reflect—designed only to search out further what the new general, the hon. leader of the Opposition, has in mind.

Mr. Speaker, I submit that this is not good enough. There is a vital need to probe at depth, to reach in and harness the biggest business, the business of government, to the times. We are not as self-sufficient in progress as we lead ourselves to believe. We are not, in the structure of government, as equipped as we think we are to meet this new age of productivity and challenge of the 1960's. It is the business of government to do for people what they cannot do for themselves. In a general way, we have forgotten that proposition, and certainly the committee completely ignored it.

I sometimes wonder, by way of reflection, why this government does not take credit, among so many other things, for inventing the "do-it-yourself kit," for we have the kind of government in Ontario today, Mr. Speaker, which so often says: "That is a good idea but do it yourself."

It has become, I submit, like the farmer, who, every time he sows, digs up the seeds and wonders why he does not raise a crop. We are doing a tremendous amount of negative talking, some of it like Jack Benny's violin solos—the sounds would be better if they were left in the cat in the first place.

We have reached a point, I submit, Mr. Speaker, where loyalty to party transcends loyalty to country and the democratic process of government. I am sad to say, Mr. Speaker, that our press has tended to envelope an area of particular coverage, eliminate or buy out competition, and then revert to some fixed policy on news and editorial pages and expound it, supported by a veritable army of government public relations men such as this country has never seen.

I wonder how many hon. members have counted up the number of people, reported in the Gordon committee report, who are employed for strictly propaganda purposes?

Mr. Speaker, in this debate we witnessed, as an example of what I am talking about, a national newspaper printing not a single line of our hon. leader's address on the speech from the Throne, although their own reporters praised the work and sent in reams of copy. Where is that spirit of service so badly needed in Ontario today? Are people in power in the newspapers afraid? If so, of what are they afraid? I ask because I have been told that the truth never harmed a person or a nation.

There are some notable exceptions in TV coverage, I say, Mr. Speaker, a moving spirit in imparting news and information which some of the press, according to degrees of prejudice, do not report.

At the outset, I mentioned 9 areas of deficiency in public administration. To press my argument, permit me to illustrate one example. I will deal with the others in the budget address and estimates of one kind or another.

But the one example is the inefficiency, through departmental conflict, of government on northern development, a vitally important subject again totally ignored by the Gordon committee.

There are real areas of concern on this subject alone. The first is the economic structure of northern Ontario; and, secondly, the co-ordination of effort between departments of government. And, in the field of economics, let me say this: It is actually shocking, Mr. Speaker, that Ontario, for the first time in history, is taking issue with freight rates—the factor which can build or destroy northern Ontario.

Then there is a deeper problem, that of developmental investment—that is to say, government money. I may say here, Mr. Speaker, that there have been significant expenditures of public money in the north—for example, huge amounts in Hydro development. But—I remind hon. members—largely revenue-bearing capital debt expenditure.

In other fields, in education, in health, roads, welfare, in tourist trade, deficiency exists.

The government of the day might logically argue that they are spending all the money they can find on northern Ontario. I am going to fully examine that premise on another day in this House.

But the submission I want to advance here goes into the heart of our fiscal policy, and I submit that the vast area, known as northern Ontario, as a segment of the Canadian economy is as justly entitled to so-called "have not" assistance as the Maritime provinces and the Prairie provinces.

For example, Mr. Speaker, take a compass and describe a circle with Toronto as the centre and the town of Kenora as the extremity, and as one swings the compass they will find the other side of their circle deep in the heart of the Maritimes. That is the equivalent distance between the two points.

But in the north country we have all the problems of the Maritimes and Manitoba, and some other Prairie provinces, with none of the same returns from our federal-provincial tax rental arrangements.

I remind hon. members of the perfectly ridiculous event of two years ago, when the province of Alberta received equalization payments in the millions, and we in northern Ontario actually paid for these gift certificates handed out by the Alberta government. What a glorious binge those people had on those $20 certificates! The government got most of it back in the Alberta liquor stores. But we in the north had to look on in sober reflection.

It was an old Jewish prophet who once reflected: "Shall I give generation to others and myself be barren?" I think it is worthy of reflection that this undeveloped empire of some 700,000 people between Quebec and Manitoba deserves better treatment in the organization of government when next the division of taxes is worked out at Ottawa.

I would carefully suggest, and strongly urge upon the hon. Prime Minister opposite, that he should, in effect, be negotiating for two provinces, southern Ontario and northern Ontario, for we are entitled to the same kind of division of the pie that the Maritimes and Manitoba and some others enjoy.

While we are seeking funds to assist tourism, for example, and small business promotion and the like, we do not want to see auditoriums built in Calgary and Edmonton with our money. We belong to Ontario and deserve the kind of recognition that is coming to people for their own loyalty.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if northern Ontario is given the proportional equalization payments which will go to Manitoba, on a basis of population, we will quickly be enabled, as a unit, to by-pass Manitoba in industry and development. Manitoba, with its ornate Parliament buildings and its 50-odd man Legislature, has no more treasure than we who represent our vast area with just a handful of members.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we are the roof of Ontario, sheltering its future wealth. But so far we are just like the cat on the hot tin roof. We are not getting very far with our treasures.

We have iron, gold, copper, nickel, lead, zinc, timber, and uranium which the government does not want to talk too much about right now. We have fish, game and manufacturing, and we can outrun Manitoba in most of those things. I am talking now about the entire northern Ontario region. We have some other future claims.

Ottawa takes the lion's share in forest taxation. Through corporation tax structure and other bases of taxation, they take away from northern Ontario much in taxation and give very little back. They do the same thing with mining taxes, and they do the same thing with liquor taxes. They are taking a great deal more than Ontario takes out of it and putting nothing back into the development of the northern reaches of the province.

In addition to all that, we are labouring under the pressure of Ottawa's tight money policy which concentrates available credits to centralized corporations and finance companies.

One thing I think that will go down in some areas to the undying credit of the hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) is the fact that he has provided a heyday for the sharpies in the finance and small loans business.

In the north we are under the pressure, too, of the devaluated American dollar. It is a perfectly ridiculous situation. It hits our forests, our mines, our tourist trade, and our commercial fishing industry and hits them hard.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, very close attention has to be paid to these subjects.

I submit also that Ontario has too long been cutting for the high card in northern Ontario. I say this because, politically, this government, as far as the north is concerned, has an overdeveloped gambling instinct. With their small investment they are hoping for high returns.

But if they ever expect to get the returns from northern Ontario which we need, and which this part of the province and the rest of the provinces enjoy, they are only to get it if they do something about putting development money into northern Ontario, and developing it before other provinces take away from us the heritage that belongs to us.

I could go on at some length on this Gordon committee report. But I will save some of that for another day, particularly in the total neglect of civil service as a factor in government, and the case of professional salaries in the civil service area.

Now I want to turn for a while to another equally important subject. We hear a lot in this House, Mr. Speaker, about equality. It may be found in bits and pieces, but it really does not mean a great deal unless it is going to be developed under an umbrella of liberty.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Everybody the same.

Mr. Wren: In fact, equality, simply stated, is a development from liberty. Freedom of action will always produce equality if there is that freedom of action. That is what I want to talk about for a few minutes.

It is interesting to learn from college surveys that the vast majority of those in college today seek security usually in some safe corporate berth. It is equally interesting to reflect that it is the worker in Canada who still dreams of owning his own business. It is the worker, or his son too, who will man the working posts. These posts are becoming more and more technical every day.

A Canadian worker, be he Christian or Jew, must first of all be a good worker, armed with a suitable education regardless of his particular faith. Second-class graduates of elementary schools, Mr. Speaker, are not good enough, for the effects register in the work force, the secondary schools and in the universities. They must instead be developing to the fullest, within the mental capacity they possess and within general limitations. If we are not prepared to recognize this, then we face the danger of losing control of our own destiny.

Our vast technological civilization calls for vast social machinery. The key to social machinery is education. A directed effort will not be easy for what I have to say. It is the responsibility of all leaders, be they political, business, educational or religious. Top men in government, and in the press, and in business have to lend their full prestige to a deep—and no longer to be ignored—problem.

Despite what we are told, up to the university level, our children are less well trained these days. They do not write, read or think as well as they did, and they are decidedly not as disciplined in the mechanics of study and learning.

We all agree that part of the answer lies in better qualifications and pay for teachers at the elementary level.

But here is a situation in Ontario, where over 20 per cent. of the enrolment of elementary schools, particularly in our 5 leading industrial centres, have to get along on $1 for $9. How on earth can the cost of the increased salaries and equipment be met? Is it going to be the policy to allow this 20 per cent. to go on in life inadequately prepared?

Already we witness increasing unemployment, allied with increasing production. It will be difficult enough for the trained, but to what future do we dispose the semi-trained? The child's mind must be tied to learning, and thinking is the purpose of education. Then it must be given to all who will become citizens, take jobs, raise children, and who are going to have more and more free time.

It is important to recall here that it is the work force which will have more and more of that free time, more than some will know what to do with. Are we going to fail in this area completely?

Now, it has always been my opinion, expressed at times at the price of considerable personal abuse, that people who differ from me in religion, politics, racial origin or colour are also good Canadians and part of the fabric that builds a nation. Certainly our nation has become strong in its philosophical relationship with all nations, and yet has remained a vital link in the Commonwealth of nations.

Very recently in this House, Mr. Speaker, the hon. leaders of all political parties marked the occasion of the 200th anniversary of the Jewish community in Canada. They paid tribute not only to the deserved recognition of our Jewish citizens, but also expressed or implied at least, that Ontario is a jurisdiction where men and women are free to pursue their non-treasonable objectives in this life without discrimination of any kind.

But note here, Mr. Speaker, that on each occasion when this House pays tribute to any race, colour or creed in our province, silence on the subject implies perhaps more forcibly than words can imply, that each of these fellow citizens—to whom tribute is paid—is a subject of our Sovereign, Her Majesty Queen Elizabeth II, and is not beholden to any other power in Ireland, England, Scotland, France, Italy, Israel or any other place on earth.

I respectfully suggest, Mr. Speaker, that no hon. member of this House will rise in his place to state that any of our religious or ethnic groups have any other public loyalty save those freely expressed to Her Majesty. We who are hon. members of this House should know, for we, individually and collectively, represent all the people of Ontario. And lest I be misunderstood, Mr. Speaker, I do implore that any who do not believe what I would call a fundamental precept should, when I resume my seat, tell me that I am wrong. Then I shall no longer follow a path of illusion.

I seek no advice on platitude, but conversely a supported statement that I am in error. In that rebuttal there should be a statement to whom, other than our beloved Sovereign, any particular race or creed in this province owes allegiance. That, to my mind, would be the fair way to rebut some of the views I will expound. For then no person or group will be smeared, no innuendo will transpire, and we can examine the facts in the clear light of day.

I am one of those seeking knowledge. If there be groups in Ontario who some might suggest are disturbing to our society, then I am prepared to listen and to be properly chastised by hon. members of this House. For each one of them, as I, was elected by a poll of all the people.

I do not seek to compromise any one person. I seek only the answer to a deep and fundamental problem, seriously affecting society as it is known today, and society as we shall find it 20 years hence.

I am approaching a difficult subject well knowing my shortcomings in knowledge. But I present views from my own studies over many, many months, respectfully for your consideration, Mr. Speaker. When you do criticize, I hope you will examine all I have to say rather than out of context which intolerant people sometimes do.

There is need, too, I submit, to do more thinking in this House and less political in-fighting. Great issues must be resolved by reflection and study.

To my mind, Mr. Speaker, the most vital problem facing this industrial expanding province is accelerated opportunity for education of our children, education equally and indiscriminately available to the child of every citizen of Ontario.

One of the obstacles that crosses the path of progress in this field, Mr. Speaker, is cost, particularly at the local level. Generally speaking, grants average 40 per cent. of costs, but specified locally they vary widely.

It is the policy of the party I support, Mr. Speaker, that the province must assume an ever-increasing share of the cost of education. I think the reason why this government has not adopted our policy, as they have so many others, is because of the distribution of local taxes and provincial grants in respect of elementary schools. Unless I reach the core of these remarks, the problem of resolving direction in elementary education in Ontario cannot be solved. Through policies and legislation to date, the share of taxes to public schools, particularly in urban areas from the local level, has reached the point—Toronto, Windsor, Hamilton, London, Ottawa, for example—where, in cities in Ontario of 90,000 and more, nearly 91 per cent. of local assessment goes to public schools, while slightly more than 9 per cent. is directed to the support of separate schools. Simultaneously, provincial grants in these areas are increasing to separate schools—though nowhere near approaching the vast gulf in local taxation.

Now, in recent years, I will acknowledge that this government has paid to separate schools many more dollars from the consolidated revenue fund through various plans and policies. It has been policy to pay more from the Treasury to separate schools without disturbing the picture at the municipal level. This is what has happened since 1951, when I came into this House, and when this government moved to assist separate schools in a special way.

First, Mr. Speaker, through the new grant formula, some substantial financial relief has been granted to separate schools.

Secondly, special regulations to assist the 5 urban areas of over 40,000 in population were constructed to assist especially in that type of urban area.

Third, having regard to violent prejudices in some areas, the government has attempted to extend the systems under a principle of equal treatment for all people regardless of colour, race or creed.

Fourth, Ontario regulations 49/58, with particular reference to section 10, subsection 1, was the instrument under which per-pupil grants were increased to provide this aid. It is here, too, that municipalities with a lower assessment per classroom receive larger grants which help in the separate school dollar problem. It simultaneously and unobjectionably aided public schools.

Fifth, the government has assumed, I submit, that to enable a degree of equal opportunity in elementary education, separate schools will have to be granted equalizing finances from the Treasury to take the place of taxation not available at the municipal level.

Now this programme has developed quietly and without publicity, through painstaking and persistent negotiations. But now we reach what might be termed an impasse, particularly in heavily populated areas. For, if we continue to subsidize from Treasury under regulation 49/58, public schools will need less and less at the local level, which is commendable of course. But then industry at the local level will pay less and less for schools, and residential property at home and the provincial Treasury here will absorb the differences which will come from all the people.

Here I am setting out a situation which now exists. What shall the government do?

These basic changes in policy and practice were not mentioned in the speech from the Throne, so it is a matter of conjecture. It is reasonable to assume that undertakings have been considered. But the problem is how to move needed millions of dollars from one area to another.

Now let us analyze some of these fundamentals since regulation 49/58 has been applied, and examine the picture as it is revealed from reports of the hon. Minister of Education and statistics from The Department of Municipal Affairs.

The hon. Minister's report for 1958 reveals over 1 million pupils in elementary schools for the period under report. There were 784,000, or approximately 76 per cent., in public schools; and 243,000, or approximately 24 per cent., in separate schools.

As I mentioned earlier, over 20 per cent., or something like 212,000, attended at elementary schools in the 5 cities in Ontario with a population over 90,000. And nearly 65,000 of these pupils, in fact over 30 per cent. of that 20 per cent. in these urban areas, attended separate schools.

In these areas such as Windsor, London, Toronto, Hamilton and Ottawa, these very startling statistics have developed. From 1955 to 1958, the public school enrolment increased in these areas by 12,500 and some-odd pupils, or, expressed in percentage, about 9 per cent.

The separate school enrolment from 1955 to 1958 increased by 12,045, or slightly less than the public school increase, in other words an increase of 23 per cent. The number of public school classrooms in 1958 went up to 4,200, and an increase of 358 classrooms over 1955. The separate school classrooms increased almost in line with the increased enrolment, almost 23 per cent., for it went up to 1,848 classrooms, an increase of 344. That is using a basis of 30-odd pupils per classroom.

Now, when one examines these figures, the gap becomes wider in retrospect. I say this because, according to the assessment and tax figures of these cities, the additional 12,000 public school pupils had available nearly $9.2 million which was something more than $44 a pupil in additional local taxes, while almost the same number of separate school pupils had available slightly more than $1 million or $5.50 a pupil. There is that wide variation between $44 per pupil on the one hand and $5 per pupil on the other.

This points up, Mr. Speaker, no doubt, why regulation 49/58 was invoked to help the separate schools. Certainly we can no longer ignore a 9 to 1 ratio and then continue to talk about equality of any kind in Ontario.

But let us look at the local level for just a moment in the cities I mentioned.

Statistics of municipal affairs show conclusively that, in the case of these 5 cities, only about 3 per cent. of the combined industrial and commercial assessments is available for separate school support. For 1958, the clerks of these cities report the combined industrial assessment something like this:

The total for public schools, $1.539 billion, or 96.8 per cent. of the taxable industrial and commercial assessment. Separate schools on the other hand have $50,244,000, or about 4 per cent. In other words, out of a total industrial commercial assessment in 1958 of over $1.5 billion, the separate schools were entitled by law to tax only $50 million of that total.

Now, it could be stated that legislative grants in pupil grants, and inverted classroom assessment grants, could make up the difference of over $1.5 billion in taxable assessment. But illustrated in a levy of 50 mills for school taxation, which is not an unusual figure for Ontario today, it would mean this: We would have $1.488 billion of taxable assessment to apply to a rate of 50 mills, which would equal almost $75 million in added grants under this regulation 49/58—and, of course, this would have to go as well to public schools. It is obvious that the bulk of nearly $75 million would have to come from extraordinary payments of one kind or another if any degree of equality were to be achieved in only one area of elementary education.

Now, where would the loudest explosion of public opinion develop? From those who object to any adjustment and distribution of assessment at the municipal level, or from those who object to distribution of $75 million additional from the consolidated revenue funds? If the latter developed, I repeat that industry at the local level would escape a due share of school costs. The proceeds of a substantial sales tax or some other form of new tax would have to go to separate schools.

As another illustration, if Ontario succeeded—and they are not having very much luck with it so far—in collecting the belated $100 million from Ottawa in 1962, by that time the dollar realization of 1958's projected $75 million will have advanced to take all of the anticipated $100 million which we expect to get from Ottawa.

These comparisons may seem ridiculous, Mr. Speaker, but they are not so. They are hard facts that must be faced by this government. The public is waiting to hear what will be done. It is one thing to advocate better qualifications for teachers at the elementary level, but it is a fact again that separate schools cannot pay the present-day levels for either qualified or unqualified teachers.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I point out to my hon. friend that it is 1 of the clock. If my hon. friend would move the adjournment of the debate, why we could proceed on Monday.

Mr. Wren: I just want to conclude this one statement and I will move the adjournment.

It is one thing to advocate better qualifications for teachers at the elementary level, but it is a fact that separate schools cannot pay the present levels for either qualified or unqualified teachers. Relief of the present situation is urgent, compounded by increasing daily enrolments. It follows that qualified teachers will go to the source paying equal salaries for equal qualifications.

At that point, Mr. Speaker, I would move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, on Monday we meet at 2 of the clock. We will proceed with the Throne debate on Monday afternoon and evening and Tuesday afternoon and evening—subject to this, there may be routine matters on the order paper that we can clear up as we did today.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 22, 1960

2 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome, as guests, pupils from the following schools: Knob Hill school, Scarborough; Westwood junior high school; Shaw Street public school; and Howard Park public school, all of Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. A. F. Lawrence, from the standing committee on legal bills, presents the committee's third report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act to amend The Short Forms of Conveyances Act.

An Act to amend The Short Forms of Mortgage Act.

An Act to amend The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

An Act to amend The Short Forms of Leases Act.

An Act to amend The Wages Act.

An Act to amend The Police Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): May I ask for clarification, Mr. Speaker, on motions? I am just curious to know what the rules of the House are. The other day the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) moved a motion and the hon. Prime Minister asked that he be given the opportunity to consider it until Monday—that it be taken as notice.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): To be placed on the order paper.

Mr. MacDonald: As a notice of motion. Now I moved another motion subsequently, and I find it is placed along with notices of motion which traditionally are left until the end of the session. Now this clearly, if it is going to have any application at all to the work of the House, must be considered with relation to the public accounts committee. How do you explain the discrepancy in handling of what was finally taken as a notice of motion on the part of the hon. leader of the Opposition and the one that I—

Clerk of the House: It is in Nixon's name.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I take it then, Mr. Speaker, that these are going to rest on the order paper until the end of the session, so that we will not have any opportunity to broaden the terms of the reference to the public accounts committee.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): In the fullness of time.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we just want to get that very clear.

Mr. Speaker: There will be ample opportunity, according to the rules. They are on the order paper.

Orders of the day.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The annual report of the Ontario research foundation for the calendar year 1958.

2. A report relating to the registration of births, marriages and deaths in the province of Ontario for the year ending December 31, 1959.

3. The annual report of the commissioner of the Ontario provincial police from January 1, 1959 to December 31, 1959.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I should like to make a reference to the fact that, throughout our province and our country, as well as other countries of the free world, Brotherhood Week is being celebrated from February 21 to February 28. Special programmes and celebrations, sponsored by the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews, will be held to observe this week, and there are other organizations that are participating.

Mr. Speaker, it gives me very great pleasure to be associated once more with the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews in the observance of Brotherhood Week.

This week was first celebrated within the boundaries of Ontario. I did not know that, as a matter of fact, until I began looking into the matter. It was 13 years ago in 1947 in the city of Guelph that the first observance of this sort took place.

Since that time, the observance of Brotherhood Week has spread throughout the country.

This year, Canadians will be taking a part in special activities in all Canadian cities from the Atlantic to the Pacific. In Ontario nearly every city and many of our municipalities are arranging programmes. In these ceremonies, of course, it is very inspiring that Ontario residents of many racial origins, religious beliefs, and cultural backgrounds will gather to strengthen the bonds of unity and understanding between all groups in our province, groups that go to make up the tapestry of the Ontario way of life.

This week gives us an opportunity to rededicate ourselves toward the tightening of the bonds of mutual understanding between all sections of the community. This spirit of tolerance and understanding, which has long existed among our citizens, has enabled our country and our province to grow great and strong.

As a matter of fact, I have mentioned before on these occasions that it was actually the basic fact that people of the two great races in this country—French and English—were able to form a partnership of respect and understanding that made our country possible. I think perhaps that is one of the great examples that our country can and does give to the world.

We have that very famous example of understanding which took place in the county of York and, I believe, in the old riding of Rimouski in Quebec, where each riding was prepared to accept the nominee of the other race in order to further the undertaking of our country.

But I should say that this occasion should not mean the observance of the principles of tolerance for only one week. I must admit,

Mr. Speaker, I am not fond of that word "tolerance," but nevertheless it has obtained perhaps a special meaning, in cases such as this, and should remind us that brotherhood should be practiced the whole year round.

We should always remember that hatreds among various groups and fear among various sections of our community have no place in this free and democratic country.

This province has done very much to further the observance of the things I have mentioned by statutory enactments which, aside from anything else, are broad declarations of the viewpoints of people. These things have been written into our statutes, and I think we in Ontario have every reason to be proud of the leadership our province has given in the matter which is so vital to the peace of the world. As a matter of fact, if this matter can be solved then warlike preparations fade into the background.

I am very glad indeed to commend the celebration of Brotherhood Week to the people of our province. I congratulate the Canadian Council of Christians and Jews upon their work in arranging for these days of rededication to the great ideals of understanding which made our country possible, and which we know have worked in our country and will work in making the world a better and a safer place.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to join with the hon. Prime Minister? I would simply like to underscore what he has said in reference to the fact that the spirit of this particular week, devoted as it is to the principle of brotherhood, must be practiced 52 weeks of the year.

I think that we can do nothing better than to try to understand the simple concept of the word "love." It would seem to me that it is a word that has become abused in many respects. It has taken on many connotations. But one of its elementary connotations certainly is the intellectual honesty, if you will, of recognizing the privileges and the opportunities of others, and in particular the fact that we are all human beings created by one Divine Providence. Who has instructed and directed that we love one another. I think that that concept is the one we are trying to emulate at this particular time.

I can do no better than try to underscore what the hon. Prime Minister has said when he referred to the fact that the principle is not a principle to be espoused during one week of the calendar year and then forgotten for 51. Instead, it should be effectively practiced throughout all the 52 weeks.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in associating myself briefly with the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition on the occasion of Brotherhood Week, I would just like to note this one fact. During the past few years there has emerged a very lively interest in matters of brotherhood, as evidenced by the fact that, during the other 51 weeks of the year, today we have an almost spontaneous willingness to challenge acts which are in violation of brotherhood or to support efforts to promote brotherhood.

On this occasion I think it would be well that we in this House should take note of the fact that the press of this province has perhaps done more than anybody else in this cause.

There was a time, years ago, when Brotherhood Week was something we talked about for one week, but there were gross violations of the spirit of brotherhood, and they met with very little concern from the general public.

Today, I am sure hon. members will have noticed that, if there is a violation of the spirit of brotherhood, it becomes an issue which captures the headlines. I am sure we will all agree that is one thing that should be capturing the headlines. It is their contribution which I think is making Brotherhood Week a year-long week instead of just a 7-day period.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I believe I had a question directed to you earlier this morning and I would like to ask the question at this particular time.

Mr. Speaker, in the Toronto Daily Star of Saturday, February 20, the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton), in commenting on the location of a federal government nuclear research centre, was quoted as saying about the federal hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce (Mr. Churchill):

If he is playing nothing but games for his own province for political patronage and for political spite against Mike Pearson, then I am through with the party. If he does not state economic reasons to support the Manitoba choice, I will consider resigning my seat.

The story also says that the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin obtained information that the Diefenbaker government refused to build the new atomic plant at Elliot Lake because the area is part of the constituency of the federal Liberal leader (Mr. Pearson).

Would the hon. Prime Minister assure this House that official representation has been made to Ottawa favouring the location of the new research station at Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I am obliged to the hon. leader of the Opposition for notice of this question which I received this morning. I am very glad to assure him that the answer to his question is in the affirmative.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, but now, Mr. Speaker, may I point out to the hon. Prime Minister that this is a serious matter. I am not suggesting that he is not treating it seriously, but I think we should pursue it by way of a supplementary question.

I think the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin did this House a service when he forthrightly came forward and made his explanation.

Now, the hon. member must have had some reason for making the statement that he did. He certainly was concerned about the matter, and rightly he should be, as he represents this very riding. There must be some merit to what he said, and I am concerned that the answer of the hon. Prime Minister—that is “Yes, a representation has been made”—evokes nothing more than that.

I would hope that the hon. Prime Minister will agree with me that we, as residents of this province, have every right to feel slighted if the difficult situation that prevails in Elliot Lake is not remedied in any manner that is available at the present time.

One of the things that can be done, although it may not be the whole answer, is to insist absolutely that the federal government avoid any petty politics and make a strict determination on the merits of the case as to whether or not the research plant will be in Manitoba or Elliot Lake.

My understanding is that there is no reason why it should not go to Elliot Lake. If it helps that area, then I for one feel—and I am sure I represent the majority of the individual hon. members of this House when I say that I for one feel—that it is the obligation of the government to make the strongest representation, and absolutely to insist that the federal government do something because the homes are there; the facilities are there; the people are there.

Mr. Speaker, I am not talking for the sake of talking, but I feel very strongly about this matter. I would hope that we have the assurance of the government that, irrespective of what has been done heretofore, it will be followed up in no uncertain public fashion with a strong demand that the Diefenbaker government reconsider the whole proposition.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, would I be in order today if I attempt to table this letter which I raised in the House on Thursday or Friday?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is that the famous McKenzie document?

Mr. MacDonald: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say, Mr. Speaker, I have no objection. The fact is, I think, my hon. friend—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, have I the right to table this? Can I comment after the hon. Prime Minister has finished?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Would my hon. friend read it, I would like to hear it myself. Perhaps—

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I would be glad to read it. Mr. Speaker, the letter reads as follows. It is dated Toronto, June 7, 1944. In other words, Mr. Speaker, within a year of coming—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask my hon. friend if he would read the letterhead, too? I would like to hear it all.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the letter:

CAMPBELL, JARVIS AND MCKENZIE
Barristers and Solicitors,
OFFICE, 603 STERLING TOWER, Bay and Richmond Streets,
Toronto, Canada.

June 7, 1944.

H. J. DONNELLY, ESQ.,
Box 564,
Kenora, Ontario

DEAR HARRY:

The liquor board will require the services of 3 men for temporary work during the summer as follows: Store 66, Kenora, June 30—July 11, $4.20 a day. August 12—August 26, $4.20 a day. September 5 to September 18, $4.20 a day. [This is 1944].

Store 86 in Dryden, July 17 to July 29, $4.20 a day. August 9 to August 19, $4.20.

Store 87, Sioux Lookout, June 2 to June 15, $4.20 a day. September 5 to September 18, $4.20 a day. November 2 to November 15, $4.20 a day.

The man, of course, must be physically fit and capable of doing counter work as in a retail store. Will you please let me have your recommendations?

Yours sincerely,

A. D. MCKENZIE.

P.S.: You will note that the commencing date for Sioux Lookout is June 2. Will you please inquire from the manager of the store to see if there is any change in the dates, and if there is still time to send the recommendation to Toronto, would you do so? If time is pressing, I think it will be in order for you to make your recommendations to the manager of the store.

In other words, Mr. Speaker, documentary proof of the close collaboration of the Tory party with the personnel department of the liquor control board.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask if the hon. member is tabling that?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, I am.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): That will not make the newspapers, it is too old.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I say to my hon. friend that I would like him to take notice of the fact that Mr. H. J. Donnelly, mentioned in that letter, was subsequently appointed as a county judge by the Liberal government then at Ottawa, which gives an indication of the non-partisan actions of this government.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I would just suggest, if the hon. Prime Minister wants to pursue this, that he inquire of some of the top Liberals in that area as to why Mr. H. J. Donnelly was appointed.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes. Well, Mr. Speaker, I reserve the right to file some letters written by the hon. member. I will do that some day.

Mr. MacDonald: Will the hon. Prime Minister also file the verbal instructions that come from his office to the civil service commission for appointments to everything, including the racing commission?

Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I have a question that I would like to address to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner), notice of which I have given to him, through you, this morning. Last Friday—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. member a question before he leaves that letter? Is that an original letter, or a photostat?

Mr. MacDonald: This is a photostat and I have the original in my possession.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Could I ask where that letter came from, Mr. Speaker? Is that fair?

Mr. MacDonald: I will be glad to inform the hon. Minister, that letter came to my office by special delivery from a person who thought that it was in the public interest that the people of Ontario should know the close integration of Tory party politics and government appointments.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Speaker, I know something about that letter and that is why I would like to question him exhaustively. If I might later, I will probably tell this House how the hon. member got that letter and why.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I will be very glad to hear it.

My question, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests is as follows: Last Friday, the Toronto Daily Star carried an article on page 7 under the by-line of Monroe Johnston, relating how one Oscar Lehtinen—a Fort William timberman—was given 27 acres of Crown Land involving 3,000 feet of shoreline on Dog Lake, north of Port Arthur, in exchange for his burnt-off and cut-off lands which had been mistakenly replanted with spruce and pine for The Department of Lands and Forests.

Since this switch in lands was made as a result of planting errors during the ministry of Mr. Clare Mapledoram, and since Mr. Lehtinen's newly acquired lands are now being offered for sale by real estate agents in which Messrs. Mapledoram and Lehtinen are partners, and at a profit which will reportedly range between $30,000 and $60,000, what explanation has The Department of Lands and Forests for this deal?

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, I am sorry to advise the hon. member that I have not had sufficient time to prepare a proper answer because of the fact that this deal involves land which is located many hundreds of miles from here. It is necessary to get certain information regarding the matter from our office at the Lakehead. I hope to have an answer for him tomorrow.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day—and I may be out of order in this but judging by the favourable reception that my question received, Mr. Speaker, with respect to the Elliot Lake situation—would the hon. Prime Minister consider moving a motion on behalf of this Legislature suggesting that the federal government reconsider the location of the new reactor plant in Manitoba?

I do not want to move it, Mr. Speaker, I realize that I would be out of order. But I would ask, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister give thought to this. I think he would receive not only substantial support from all sides of the House, but I am sure from the people of Ontario generally. I would be glad to second any motion that he might make in that particular respect.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I have listened to what the hon. leader of the Opposition said in his supplementary question. I had intended to reply, but the hon. member for York South intervened with great anxiety with his question, therefore I did not have the opportunity.

I may say that, first of all, I share with him the high regard that he has for the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin who, for many years, has been a valuable hon. member of this House. I may say that his absence this afternoon has nothing whatever to do with the statement which appeared in the press, but is due to the inclement weather from which we have suffered.

First of all I say to my hon. friend that resolutions of this Legislature, directed to the government of Canada and the Parliament of Canada in the past, have not been conducive to getting a settlement of some of the problems that we want to settle. I think my hon. friend the member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) will remember a resolution that was passed about 20 years ago at this time—in the year 1940—moved by the Prime Minister, I forget who seconded it now. My hon. friend will agree with me that was not conducive to a settlement of the problems with which this House was engaged at that time.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Maybe it is the reason the hon. Prime Minister is there now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I do not know about that. There are many reasons for the fact we are here now. I tried to give hon. members some of those the other day.

However, Mr. Speaker, might I say that I do not treat these matters lightly. As a matter of fact, the other day I was going to make an extended statement in reference to this, but I was blocked by the agility with which one of the hon. members of the Liberal group pointed out that I had exceeded the time limit, and therefore I did not have the opportunity.

Mr. Reaume: That was from over there.

Hon. Mr. Frost: But I would say to my hon. friend that I feel very strongly that the facilities of such places as Elliot Lake and Bancroft, including the area in my own riding in Cardiff township and in Bancroft—where very large sums of public money have been extended—ought to be utilized by the governments of this country. I say without hesitation I believe that to be so, and I can assure my hon. friend that we will press for solutions of that kind. We in Ontario have invested very many millions of dollars in Elliot Lake and in the Bancroft area.

Mr. Reaume: How many?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, very, very many millions, and so have the federal people. Now, might I say to my hon. friend that I trust there is not a split in his own party on this subject, but—

Mr. Reaume: Or on any subject.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, on any subject, that is correct. I do not like to see the hon. members quarrelling among themselves, I mean that always hurts me.

But might I say to my hon. friend that I was quite interested in the remarks made I believe by the hon. member for Fort William (Mr. Chapple), and addressed, I think, to the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions about the fact that he did not think the amount of money should have been spent in Elliot Lake. Am I not right that he said that? I think he did.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): No. No sir, that was not what I said.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did he not say that he thought that too much money had been spent in Elliot Lake? Did he say that the other day?

Mr. Chapple: No sir, that is not what I said.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I will have to refresh my memory from Hansard.

I was quite interested, from looking at some of the newspaper reports, that on June 4, 1957, there is a report from Blind River stating that hon. Mr. Pearson, accompanied by that distinguished hon. gentleman from Essex North who spoke at that time, urged the building of post offices and more houses and everything. As a matter of fact I read his speech, and I thought it was a very good speech.

This speech was reported in the Sault Ste. Marie Star on June 4. The hon. member for Essex North, among other things, said that this area was in a fix until the government—that is the Ottawa government of those days—relaxed the monies. He said, "Of course this takes time and it is definitely not a political promise." That was made just immediately before the federal election of 1957.

Now, I would say to my hon. friend I agree with his premise on this. I think that, in the light of what had taken place, it was necessary to build these houses and to build these arrangements that were there. I point out to my hon. friend from Fort William that he is credited with this in the Hansard of Friday, February 18:

I am afraid that the hon. Minister from Port Arthur is a little wrong there. I feel, that the government had no right to build the townsite in the first place, and certainly the way they did it by taking over 144 square miles and running it to the south.

Now he says he does not think we should have spent any money on the townsite.

Mr. Reaume: It is the way they did it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say the hon. member for Essex North should correct that because he was up there in June of 1957, when hon. Mr. Pearson made the other assertion and I agree with him.

Mr. MacDonald: Who is playing politics now?

Mr. Chapple: May I make an explanation of that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, sure.

Mr. Chapple: I do not believe that the government—in the respect that I was referring to—should put money into any town without being able to have some control over the end product. Now what I mean by that is that, if we are going to take over a town and run it, we are going to have to protect that town to the extent that the town can operate over the years at a profit, to the extent where it can pay off its obligations.

But we were not able to do that in building these towns. Therefore, those towns should not have been built in the first place.

But seeing that this government went ahead and built them and so on—well that was fine. Everybody was happy.

But the point is this. We are in the position we are in today because that particular point was not covered by the government when they first undertook to build these towns.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say, Mr. Speaker, that I think my good hon. friend from Fort William might go and hold a caucus with the Rt. hon. Mr. Pearson, and with the hon. member for Essex North, and get the thing straightened out, and see if he can arrive at—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): The hon. Prime Minister has the responsibility. We would be very glad to have the responsibility.

Mr. Chapple: I do not care what government it is as long as it is good government, and that is what we are interested in.

Mr. Reaume: May I answer that for a moment without having any arguments with anybody?

It is true that I was up there, on or about that date, and it is also true that I was up there for a very good work and a very good cause. Now, at the time I was there, many, many thousands of people, of course, were occupying huts and garages and trailers and things of that sort. I urged, as did others, the building of a permanent type of home, always having thought that a home is the most important thing in the world.

Now, the part that is strange is that this province—and that is the part I pointed out before—felt that Elliot Lake was to be a permanent place, that Elliot Lake was going to go on for years and years and years. In this belief they did, in fact, pour in millions of dollars of the people's funds, only to find that, at the end of approximately 5 years, the whole thing had gone flat.

I just want to make one statement here in the House, that it is all right for all of us to argue about what we said in June, 1957.

It is all right for us to say that we think that these 4,000 people ought to have work, and we can all make long speeches on that. But I think the important thing for us to bear in mind is that, first of all, there are 4,000 souls in that area who very soon are going to be out of work.

The other thing that I think we ought to bear in mind is the fact that the province does indeed, along with the federal people, have a vast amount of money invested in Elliot Lake.

Now—are we going to do anything at all? Are we going to try to protect the jobs and the homes and the lives of those people?

Secondly, are we going to do anything at all to safeguard the amount of money that we have invested in Elliot Lake?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must say that I take no objection to what my hon.

friend has said. I am not complaining about what he said in company with hon. Mr. Pearson in 1957. I am only pointing out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I would not want to see his party split, he understands.

We are proposing to the federal government that we should take joint action in efforts to maintain these communities and to overcome any damage that may threaten by reason of the curtailment of the uranium market. Not only are we after an extension of these contracts—and mark this, there is good reason to hope for an extension of the contracts—but I would also say this, and I think this is more important—we are looking into the matter of assignment of some of these contracts.

I can assure my hon. friend that my riding has suffered very much by the fact that there was the assignment of one of the contracts in the riding to, I believe, an operation out in Saskatchewan.

Now I think that is very definitely harmful and unfair to that community. I said that here the other day and I say it again now.

True, no one would be so unreasonable as to say that anyone in the 1950's could see the possibilities or the difficulties of uranium mining in the 1960's, and that applies to all governments concerned.

On the other hand, I do think that, in the interests of common sense and reason and fairness, all governments should get together to not only protect the huge investment Canadians have in this project, coming from the various levels of government, and also from private funds, but to protect the interests of people who have been brought there. Now I do not think I can be more specific than that.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE PUBLIC LIBRARIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves second reading of Bill No. 46, "An Act to amend The Public Libraries Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE TEACHERS' SUPERANNUATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Robarts moves second reading of Bill No. 47, "An Act to amend The Teachers' Superannuation Act."

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may we have an explanation of this particular bill?

Hon. J. P. Robarts (Minister of Education): Mr. Speaker, in regard to the 3 bills, I explained them fully on first reading, but I would be happy to deal with the last one, Bill No. 47.

The first section provides that teachers who are employed by trustees' organizations may continue to contribute to and benefit from the teachers' superannuation fund. In explanation of that, teachers who are employed by teachers' organizations in official capacities are allowed to participate in the fund, and this extends the same privilege to teachers who may be employed by trustees' organizations.

Section 2 simply provides that the actuarial valuation of the fund will be done as of the end of 1958, rather than as of the end of 1957 as the legislation presently provides.

Section 3 provides that, in certain cases, the commission may change a recommendation for a partial disability pension to a recommendation for a total disability pension subsequent to the death of the person disabled.

The circumstances that give rise to this amendment are as follows: If the person is partially disabled, perhaps it will be some time before a complete assessment can be made. With that in mind, he is given a partial disability pension subject to a medical examination some time in the future. Now, if the individual dies before that second medical examination it may very well be that his dependents will be penalized because he should have had a full disability pension in the first place. This simply gives the commission the discretion to deal with cases of that type.

Section 4 provides for regulations to extend and clarify rights of contributors to make payments in respect to a period of absence rather than a leave of absence.

At the present time, if teachers can get leaves of absence for certain purposes, they may, when they resume teaching, then pay up into the fund for the period which they have been away from teaching. But they may do so only if they resume teaching. This would permit them so to do when they are not on leave of absence but when they have ceased employment.

It simply means that some boards will grant leave of absence and other boards will not, and for a teacher to take a sabbatical year in some instances he may have to resign. This amendment will permit them to take their sabbatical year and then, after they have resumed teaching, bring their contributions up to date and resume their proper position in the superannuation fund.

There is another point in this final section 4 dealing with courses of study as set out in the regulations. Now, the courses of study are becoming so great that we want to change the Act so that the teachers submit their course of study to the commission, and the commission can decide whether it is a proper course of study to permit the teacher to resume his position in the fund after he has completed that study.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): As one who is vitally interested in this Act, may I be permitted to ask the hon. Minister a question?

My understanding is that, for some time, the teachers' federation has been pressing the government for a change in the regulations from the last 10 years to the last 7, or the best 7 years. It is my understanding, further, that that question was presented to the cabinet, last fall.

Will there be anything done in that regard this year by the cabinet, or are any further amendments to The Superannuation Act envisaged by this government?

Hon. Mr. Robarts: Mr. Speaker, we do not anticipate, or I do not anticipate, any further amendments to this Act this year.

Mr. Troy: I just asked the question. I am not prepared to carry on now. It seems to be practically definite as far as the hon. Minister is concerned.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, when I adjourned the debate on Friday, I had reached the point in my remarks where we were discussing the advocacy of better qualifications for teachers at the elementary level in our schools. I concluded on that day by pointing out that relief of the present situation is urgent, compounded daily by increasing enrolments, and it follows that qualified teachers will go to the source paying equal salaries for equal qualifications.

It is quite coincidental, as I pick up that leaving point, that the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and the remarks of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald), representative of his party, should deal with Brotherhood Week, because it is this very essence upon which these matters are well founded.

I would say here, Mr. Speaker, that with a new hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) appointed in this province, a post in which I wish him well, the new hon. Minister faces the challenge of the century. I say this because he is going to have to make decisions, and get his government to support decisions, to extend the principle of equality to the field of elementary education, and get away from the creeping dystrophy of today's policy. Or, alternatively, he is going to have to announce that he does not agree to equality and will maintain the status quo.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that this decision must be made, because absence of policy is holding up very vital decisions on education in Ontario, and this inequality stands right across the road of supreme decision.

Now one will hear people say: if Catholics, and Jews, and Anglicans, and others, want their separate schools, let them pay for them, the public school is there to attend.

Without discussing the wide practical ramifications of such thinking, the constitutional aspect, and the aspect of religious freedoms, preclude any further discussion here. That has been settled in other areas many years ago, and I do not think there is any validity for any suggestion that there will be a change in thinking.

And I do not think, Mr. Speaker, that it is valid for some separate school boards to say today, "Leave this subject alone, we are doing better every year on private negotiation." Why do I say this? Because increasing enrolment pressures will, within a decade, reduce even this stopgap to a vacuum. And deals are not the answer to any problem because too many little people suffer from the results. Separate school children at the present time are not getting the buildings, the equipment, and the staff, to fit them for a useful academic life.

Who envisaged, when present legislation was principled, the industrial giant we have today in Ontario? And who envisaged the day when people of whatever denomination would be arm in arm as they are in community development in other ways? And who envisaged then the day when Christian and Jew would unite before God in common purpose?

Why then can we not resolve those things we boast about every week in this House—equality and the abhorrence of discrimination? If we really and truly believe in those things, then we have to start at home. Surely there will be areas of compromise, I can realize that, but it can, and must, be approached with deep understanding of what we mean by equality and anti-discrimination.

In Ontario today and tomorrow, we cannot afford in any area to have second-class educational opportunities. That may have obtained in the year 1900, but it will not obtain in the year 1970.

I could point out some glaring anomalies in the field of school taxation, aside from some of the practical aspects. For example, there are cases where Crown companies and public utility companies supported by all the people can only direct taxes to one class of the people; where lands owned by one class must be taxed to support the other class. In brief, the residential assessment bears nearly the whole burden for some classes.

There is no prediction I can find to suggest any marked decline in urban population in Ontario. The converse is true. So, to start, we are going to have to come to grips with this problem at the urban level. And this leads me to "a" conclusion—I did not say "the" conclusion, because it is only fair, when reminding an hon. Minister of the fearful decisions he must make, to suggest what he might consider; if he does not, certainly a successor shall.

First, we cannot continue to shade grants of public funds. Grants policy must be clearly stated and applicable to all classes eligible for those grants.

Next, urban areas with populations, we will say, exceeding 50,000 might, by statute, adjust distribution of local assessment to areas of need at the rate of 20 per cent. per year to allow for progressive readjustment over a 5-year period.

Third, the bold but realistic step might be taken progressively to absorb the approved costs of education at the local level, and distribute the overall cost of education over the whole economy of the province and ultimately end school taxation at the local level.

Now, we may well ask if there are any precedents for this sort of thing in Ontario? Yes, I say, Mr. Speaker, there are—and some very recent precedents.

For example, one of the questions asked about parochial schools is where would the money go.

Now in our hospitals, I am happy to say, there is much less discrimination. And the Ontario hospital services commission accepts normal budgets from all approved hospitals in Ontario, despite the belief they have. The government has quietly recognized job valuation whether the services were performed by lay or religious people trained in the particular profession. And I have much commendation for that decision when it was made, and which has since been carried out to the full.

If this will apply in the field of health services, my question to the hon. Minister of Education is: Why would it not apply in school services as well?

We cannot lag longer because, as I have already said, the whole structure of education is in the balance. We cannot stand still. So what we are looking for here is a clearly stated policy.

In 1958, the enrolment in our elementary schools was on a 70-30 per cent. basis, just generally. The increases show that this gulf will narrow until, in 1970, the gap will approach a 55 to 45 ratio in urban areas, even allowing for continued Ottawa policy at the present time of restricted immigration from Catholic countries.

Here are the relevant facts to support my contention that action and policy are necessary now.

Across the province, grants to elementary schools in the last few years have been as follows: In 1955, $46,815,000; in 1956, $50,182,000; in 1957, $67,663,000; in 1958, $87,823,000.

The grants to public schools increased from $36,883,000 in 1955 to $66,602,000 in 1958.

The separate school grants, in dollars, increased from $9,932,000 in 1958 to $21,221,000 in 1958.

And in 1958, the grants to elementary schools were 76 per cent. public and 24 per cent. separate.

Now in 1958, total expenditures on elementary education—that is to say, grants plus local levies—were these:

In Metropolitan Toronto, $47,450,000 was spent; 94 per cent. in the public schools and 6 per cent. in the separate schools.

In other cities in Ontario, a total of $40,194,000 was spent; 83 per cent. in the public schools and 17 per cent. in the separate schools.

In the whole province, a sum of $136,680,000 was spent; 89 per cent. to the public schools and 11 per cent. was the province-wide average for the separate school system.

Now, using 30-odd pupils as the average classroom, these comparisons are valid as to number of classrooms, according to the report of the hon. Minister of Education. In 1958, there were 22,404 public school classrooms, an increase of 3,083. In 1958, there were 6,955 classrooms, an increase of 1,602.

But when we get to the breakdown of enrolment it becomes very interesting indeed. In 1955, Ontario had 676,000 public school pupils or 78 per cent. of the total. Separate schools had 187,368 pupils or 22 per cent. of the total. In 1958, that increased to 784,100 in the public schools and something like 250,000 in the separate schools, a ratio of 76 to 24. But it is significant here, in giving these figures, to emphasize the startling changes which took place in metropolitan areas.

Now in 5 cities in Ontario with populations of 90,000 and more—those that I mentioned the other day—when we take a look at the cost per pupil, we find some very glaring differences in cost which prompts my recommendation to this House, and to the hon. Minister of Education, that he has to come down to some policy if we are not to reap chaos in our elementary school system. I say this because this is what the figures show.

In the city of Toronto in 1955, the cost per pupil in public schools was $242; and in separate schools it was $59. In 1958, in Toronto, there was a cost of $315 per pupil in elementary schools; and $63 per pupil in separate schools. In other words, in Toronto, for example, the public school authorities were using an extra $73 per pupil, an increase of 30 per cent.; while the separate school system were only able to use $4 per pupil increase, or a difference of 7 per cent.

In Windsor, the public school increase in cost from 1955 to 1958 was $5 per pupil or 2 per cent.; while the cost for the separate schools was $4 increase, up to $64, which was a 6 per cent. increase.

Only the city of London actually had any significant change in costs. The separate school system in the city of London, according to their figures, showed that, in 1955, $71 was the cost per pupil, and in 1958 that had dropped to $63. In other words, this is a decrease of $8 or a decrease, if one wants to express it that way, of 12 per cent.

In Hamilton there was an increase of $9 to $185, or a 5 per cent. increase for public school pupils; while the separate school pupil costs went down a dollar, as was the case in London.

This is another instance of a down trend where they had a dollar less in cost per pupil, down to $65.

In the city of Ottawa, the cost per pupil in 1958 was $217 in the public school system, which was an increase of $57 over 4 years; while the increase in separate schools was $13 to a total of $193 per pupil, or a relative increase of 35 and 16 per cent. respectively.

I quote those figures to show the very pressing problems people in elementary education have when they have a cost of pupil ratio of that kind available to them.

Now, according to statistics, published by The Department of Municipal Affairs and available to the House, there was an average overall increase of 33 per cent. in expenditures on education, in these 5 cities of over 90,000 population, which had varied and very interesting results.

In Toronto, for example, the expenditures on education increased from $15,727,000 in 1955 to $21,878,000 in 1958. Now the total for all these cities worked out as follows: The $31,650,000 for all cities, $28,101,000 public and $3,549,000 separate in 1955 to $37,300,000 public in 1958 and $4,722,000 for separate schools in 1958. The difference here remained at the usual 9 to 1 ratio, for, at the end of 1958, the public schools were getting 89 cents of every dollar, while the separate schools were receiving 11 cents in these 5 cities.

Now the enrolments in these 5 cities are quite startling, as I pointed out on Friday. But to go into more detail on them, the public school enrolment in Toronto in 1955 was 65,000, by 1958 it had increased to 69,500. The separate schools enrolment increased by a proportionate amount, 17,000 to 20,800. And it is in this area where the increased enrolments are significantly almost side by side in numbers. The local assessment for school purposes, in the 5 cities aforementioned, work out to some rather staggering totals.

The total for all 5 cities worked out as follows: $2,440,017,000 in 1955 for public schools, as against $212,470,000 for separate schools in that same year. Now this increases to $2,724,000,000 for public schools and to $275,765,000 for separate schools at the end of 1958. It is significant to know here that the 4-year increase in public school assessment—in other words, the increase over the 4 years in question from 1955 to 1958—exceeds the total separate school assessment at the end of that period. In 1955 the ratio for public schools was 11.5 to 1; in 1958, that ratio was about 10 to 1.

In the year 1958, general returns show these percentages of rate down in division of assessment. In the city of Toronto, residential assessment was 89 to 11 per cent.; in London, 88 to 12 per cent.; in Hamilton, 83 to 17 per cent.; in Ottawa, 72 to 28 per cent.; and in Windsor, 66.5 to 33.5 per cent.

But over in the commercial and industrial assessment we find these figures:

In the city of Toronto—that is Metro Toronto, of course—the public school share of the commercial-industrial assessment is 98 per cent., for separate schools 2 per cent.; in London it is 96 to 4 per cent.; in Hamilton it is 96.5 to 3.5 per cent.; in Ottawa it is 92.5 to 7.5 per cent.; and in Windsor it is 93 to 7 per cent., making a 5-city average of commercial-industrial assessment distribution of 95 to 5 per cent.

Of course, in the field of telegraph and telephone assessment, the separate schools received no share of assessment at all. So the 5-city-wide total worked out to a percentage of 88 per cent. for public schools to 12 per cent. for separate.

Now these are very glaring figures indeed when one realizes the concentration of industrial activity there is in these particular cities in Ontario.

In 1958, local assessments totalled nearly $3 billion—and for simplicity I have used round figures. The application of tables to 4 decimal places will increase public average to near 90 per cent. and reduce separate average to 10 per cent. or below.

But out of nearly $3 billion in assessments, separate schools claim $276 million, or less than 10 per cent. Interpretation of statistics and statistical points are relevant in these calculations. Then, in 1958, the assessment returns for the 5 cities under review stand like this:

For the 5 cities, as I said this totals nearly $3 billion, in fact, $2,999 billion. $2,724 billion are school assessments and $276 million, or 9 per cent., separate school assessments according to the municipal figure.

But, using bulk figures to the nearest thousand dollars and even percentages, the general picture resolves itself in a 91 to 9 ratio. This is a picture which appears to render impractical the province assuming more and more the cost of education.

Policy is needed now if we are to move forward, and all classes of society in Ontario look to the new hon. Minister with confidence to tell us what that policy shall be, because obviously the people of Ontario must know. I say this because the fundamental foundations necessary to advance the cause of elementary education in Ontario are at a standstill until these vital decisions are made and we know in what direction we are heading.

Now, I will turn to another matter, Mr. Speaker.

The other day I made the statement in this House that I was surprised that not one Tory hon. member for northern Ontario had spoken up, individually or collectively, about the problems at Elliot Lake. It later turned out that the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) went on national CBC and later gave statements to the press which certainly indicated his courageous outlook on this problem.

But in the news reports it is notable that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce for Canada (Mr. Churchill) did not reply to the challenge of the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin to substantiate a choice of a Manitoba site as against Elliot Lake for economic reasons. I agree with my hon. friend from Algoma-Manitoulin that it is a preposterous waste of public funds to set out to build, in Manitoba, an expensive layout of townsites and auxiliary amenities when there is a ready-made site available at Elliot Lake.

To establish a site of this kind in Manitoba, at this time, is sheer folly, and could not be reasonably construed as anything else but political chicanery of the worst kind.

Surely, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario, who contributed so much to the election of Canada's hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Diefenbaker) will not sit idly by and witness such obvious denial of Ontario's prime right.

How on earth can the government of Canada justify the expenditure of public funds of this degree in Manitoba, when they have this ready-made community in Ontario? How can any government justify to its people the additional extraordinary expenditure in Manitoba, or elsewhere in Canada, when the anticipated expenditure would be sheer waste of public funds, inasmuch as a great proportion of the costs have already been expanded by not one, but two governments, namely Ottawa and Queen's Park?

If the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario is not prepared to accept this theory, then the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin would have no other choice than to resign his seat and leave the decision to the electorate, as he has already indicated he would do in his statements to both the CBC and the press. We would welcome a by-election on this issue to provide the people, the court of last resort which the hon. Prime Minister so often champions, with the opportunity to decide.

We would likewise, Mr. Speaker, welcome into Liberal ranks an hon. member who chose to depart from the ranks of a party which would, for very obvious political reasons, suggest to build in another province that which is already available in Ontario.

In this era of tight money, surely the powers-that-be in Ottawa cannot justify spending millions for new facilities while the very facilities that they have already paid for through the taxpayers are available in Ontario. This is a challenge of statesmanship for the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario because, after all, the real source of federal government taxation rests in this province, and in the province of Quebec—the majority of it.

After building a community at Elliot Lake, are we to abandon it and build yet another in Manitoba just because an hon. federal Minister of the Crown lives in that province?

Now, before I take my seat I want to have a word or two to say about a land deal which I would ask this government—and more particularly the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) of the province—to keep an eye on.

Plans are underway, we are told, to build a new and better bridge at Pigeon River in the northwestern part of Ontario. We are told that the highways will be straightened out to some extent on this side of the boundary, as the Minnesota authorities have started out to do on the other side.

First of all, there is a consideration there for the Canadian people who have been doing business at the present bridge. We are under an obligation to those people to see that they are moved and compensated for any loss of property or income due to any relocation of the road or the bridge.

I am not entirely satisfied that the new bridge is necessary at all. However, if experts in that field decide that it is, and it is not just a problem of more immigration officers to clear traffic more quickly, then I would not quarrel with the building of the bridge.

But on the other side of it, on the Canadian side, American people have been quietly buying up bits and pieces of land all along the right-of-way and between the proposed right-of-way and the lake. Some of this land has been "fixed up" in some rather mysterious way, not through the government but in other mysterious ways.

What I am pointing out here, Mr. Speaker, is, due to the decision of the two governments to provide these new facilities at Pigeon River, the United States citizen is sitting there first, with the objective in view of putting our own Canadian people out of business who have been there for years; and secondly, to make himself a killing on the sale of land immediately adjacent to this proposed bridge at Pigeon River.

I can only suggest to the hon. Minister of Highways that he should not tarry, as Hydro did, but move in and expropriate this land now and make it available as park and tourist facilities for the Canadian people and out of which Canadian people can make an income.

I could not sit down, Mr. Speaker, either, if I did not have something to say about "booze," because the administration of our liquor legislation in Ontario is one of the things that never ceases to puzzle us. Of course, we come back to all the issues of the day because we were told in the speech from the Throne that there would be significant—or there would be at least—changes in Ontario's liquor legislation. I do not see any real change projected, nor have I seen any predicted that will stop this nonsense, which the liquor control board follows, of compelling owners of tourist resorts to drink in bedrooms.

I think it is very disgraceful, Mr. Speaker, when people who have tens of thousands of dollars invested in a respectable tourist establishment find that, if the owner's wife wants to entertain a friend or a guest she must—not by desire but by board order—entertain that guest in one of the bedrooms, namely her own, because the board, by order, restricts that person to that particular bedroom.

Who dreamed up this scheme of things now, where some tourist operators can have lockers on their properties to accommodate guests who will want liquor, and others cannot? I do not know who dreamed that regulation up, but it is one of the most fantastic we ever heard of.

I would not want to take all the time of this House this afternoon to tell hon. members how it works, but I will in committee one day, because it is very fascinating. It takes just as long, as a matter of fact, for the American tourist to make his purchases after he gets here—and arrange them beforehand—as it would to tell my story, but it is really fantastic.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Are these local option areas?

Mr. Wren: Oh, no, there is no local option area here. The only option we are under is under the option of the liquor commission, or the liquor licence board, as the case may be.

I brought some of these matters to the hon. Prime Minister's attention from time to time, but there are long delays involved sometimes in getting an answer to a letter.

I realize the hon. Prime Minister is a busy man and cannot just deal with everybody's letter the very day it arrives. But some of them, on very important public questions, have a strange way of being acknowledged and forgotten. A little note comes along which says, "You will hear about this in a few days," but these days stretch on into many, many months.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not remember anything of that sort.

Mr. Wren: I will give the hon. Prime Minister one example. A couple of years ago the hon. Prime Minister promised me he was going to make a tour of Toronto and have a look at some of these places I talked about then. But the hon. Prime Minister did not get his pocketbook and come along.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I did make a tour of Toronto and looked things over.

Mr. Wren: Well, I will tell the hon. Prime Minister what happens, Mr. Speaker, with our legions. Hon. members know that these are the people who were the great heroes in 1914 and 1939 and who, everybody said, were going to save the world for democracy.

Liquor inspectors fly into a screaming rage—the "screaming meemies"—when they walk into one of the legion branches and find what we term "an old sweat," a veteran of World War I, having a bottle of beer while he is playing bingo. The poor chap probably cannot go very much farther due to his age and disabilities from his services in World War I.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He does not belong to my branch.

Mr. Wren: The hon. Prime Minister can go down to the taverns right in the city of Toronto and he can look out his window to see them any time he wants to. As long as one has $26 they will put the whole bottle of rye, or whatever one wants, right in front of him. One can drink one drink or the whole bottle, it is up to the individual, but yet for the "old sweat" to have a pint and enjoy it with his bingo, that is a terrible thing. They rush right in to seize the licence right off the wall.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): But they have not—

Mr. Wren: Well, no, not if one is having beer, it is dangerous, according to instructions.

But I wanted to say a word too about the composition of the commission. I am talking now about the liquor control board, just to keep these things separated.

I think we have an ideal set-up now, Mr. Speaker, in the province of Ontario, because we do have a fine gentleman as chairman of the liquor control board (Mr. Collings). He is a man who, I understand, does not imbibe, and for that I respect him. Perhaps that has some merit in a province which has one of the highest per capita consumptions in any of the free countries of the world.

But now we have an "ideal" system because we have a fine gentleman at the head of the board who can get a person in, and introduce him to the art of drinking, and now we have a man especially appointed at the other end so that when one gets so befuddled and befuzzled that he does not know whether he is coming or going, this man is to catch the drunk person at the chute coming out and see if he can sober him up and do something for him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Perhaps the hon. member needs that.

Mr. Wren: Well, if this was a new practice, I would be very interested in it, but the bootleggers in the days of the Red Lake gold rush used to have that system. They would have one fellow to get you in there and then, after you had been in there for a while and got all mixed up, they had somebody to take you home with a dog team or a taxi and see that you came to no harm.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is that not all right? It is a nice way to run things.

Mr. Wren: Well, even the bootleggers of those days got smart after a while, and they decided that the best way to control this thing, and perhaps lay off that fellow at the back door, was to control the drinking there in the first place, and it worked out very well.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the hon. Prime Minister about something he has been discussing in and out of the House, and I think it is worthy of mention. He has led us to believe—and the people in the province to believe—and I find there is no opposition to this at all, that he intends to increase the indemnities and provide a pension plan for hon. members of this House.

I am not sure of this, but I believe that either the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden) or I would be considered, I suppose, the highest paid private member of the House, due to mileage involved. But in any event, I am certain that the hon. member for Rainy River is no better off at the end of the year than I am. In fact, I think the hon. member for Rainy River might be in a worse position due to added travelling because he is a government hon. member.

I know my hon. colleagues share with me the idea that all salaries and indemnities in this House should be subject to review, and that some provision be made for the old-timers who have served this country faithfully and well over the years.

I would include, Mr. Speaker, people like my hon. friend from Port Arthur.

I do not think the hon. Ministers of the cabinet, especially those who do their work as well as he does, get paid enough for the time entailed, and for the responsibility which falls on their shoulders, many times managing affairs and managing dollars far in excess of what companies would expect a man to do for the same pay in industry.

Now, Mr. Speaker, having said that, I would say that when summer comes again it will be time the hon. members of the House had another look at the north, particularly northwestern Ontario, and I am hopeful this year that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) and the hon. Prime Minister and others will get together and let all hon. members have another look at that place, because it certainly needs it.

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, it is with much pleasure that I rise today to take part in the Throne speech debate. This is my ninth season in the House and I believe it is the third time that I have taken part in the Throne debate.

I know it is a matter of protocol, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate you at this time on your new appointment. I do it, not only through a matter of protocol, but I congratulate you, with all the sincerity I can muster, on being elevated to the position of Speaker. I feel that, after so many years in this House, this House is justifying the opinion that the people in your county have had of you for so many years.

I noted that the ambitions of the Opposition led them even so far as to question your judgment here last week.

But I would suggest that, speaking to you as a fellow farmer, after some of these hon. members have harrowed some of the ground that you have been plowing here for the last 16 or 17 years, they will then be in a better position to question your judgment.

I would also like to congratulate the hon. mover (Mr. Davis) and the hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman) of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne.

It is rather disturbing to some of us, who have considered ourselves "young fellows" around here, to see a man like the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) come in here and begin to realize that we are no longer among the younger men, that there are some good-looking men and some younger men moving into this House, apparently with lots of ability.

And, of course, in regard to the hon. seconder here—the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman)—his ability has gone without question these last number of years.

I would also like to congratulate the new hon. members to this House. There are maybe a little more than the average number this year, but I just noticed that from the time I came in in 1951, that there are, taking a quick count, some 48 new hon. members who have come to the House since that time. There are 48 of the old members of 1951 left and some 50 new members.

It shows that the mortality rate, not only from the grim reaper but for other reasons, is fairly high in this House.

I realize of course, Mr. Speaker, that there are hon. members who have been here much longer than I; that they would have much more interesting figures than mine, but I just wanted to bring them out to show how things have changed since I entered this House in 1951.

I would also like to offer my congratulations to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer). I would also like to offer my sympathy at the same time. I congratulate him on his personal re-election, and also the fact that he doubled the number of his followers in this House. Yet, with these additional hon. members, he has also added to many of his problems.

When he and his party jump up so often this year, they remind me of the kids on Christmas morning—they have many toys, they are rushing around opening them up and grabbing new ones. Yet, when it comes night-fall, they find they have become tired of those new toys. They are like the little girl who takes the doll she had, for several years, to bed with her, and it comforts her.

The parallel I want to draw on this, Mr. Speaker, is that I think, after the hon. leader of the Opposition gets through juggling these new hon. members around, when the session is over, he is going to take most of his comfort out of those two great hon. gentlemen on his immediate left and right.

It has not been announced officially, but I take it that he has a shadow cabinet over there. They remind me of the American missile programme down at Cape Canaveral. Although some of his new hon. members have been jumping up at every opportunity—I do not know how the rest of the hon. gentlemen here see it—many of them have failed to get off the launching pad as yet. Others have blown up just after they got up. I have noticed that the hon. leader had to pull the trigger and blow a few of them up. One of them has gone into orbit I understand but his signals are weak and is no longer getting through to his party.

Mr. Speaker, on Friday, February 12, the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) rose in the House and attempted, in his maiden address, to justify his presence here, and endeavoured to direct some, what I call unjustified, criticism against the government and The Department of Public Works.

He was really aiming at Health most of the time, but he was stepping on my toes at the time, so I feel that I should question some of his remarks. Just so that the House will know what I am referring to, I want to quote from Hansard on that date, and these are the words of the hon. member:

I suggest that one of the difficulties that The Department of Health may have—in carrying out a desire that the hon. Minister from his speech of a year ago showed—of improving the health facilities in this province, is caused by two things.

First of all, these hospitals are put up by The Department of Public Works. A department should construct and give the orders itself, and make its own plans, because after all, the building of hospitals for the province of Ontario is not just a matter of bricks and mortar, but it is really a social plan. It is a scheme to rehabilitate people to health.

So I feel that this could be done more efficiently if the department itself, The Department of Health, had the power to issue the contract, and to really decide how big that building is going to be.

But The Department of Public Works

seems to be having control of this—they pretty well do, I believe—and it would seem for the record to suit their own purposes.

I am of the opinion, Mr. Speaker, that it is in order and proper that I should point out to the hon. member for Parkdale that, prior to addressing any suggested criticism against the government, or my department, his statements should be based on facts and a thorough knowledge of the fundamentals and respective acts of government departments.

Mr. Speaker, The Public Works Act, proclaimed in the last quarter of the last century states, in brief, that all public buildings and government buildings, and all works acquired or constructed, enlarged or repaired, shall be managed by my department. I doubt, very much, if it has even been suggested before that other government departments—or in particular, The Department of Health—should construct their own buildings.

The suggestion and intimation by the hon. member for Parkdale that The Department of Public Works presents one of the difficulties that The Department of Health may have in carrying out their programme, indicates an immature knowledge and understanding of the work carried out by The Department of Public Works in the past.

It indicates, most certainly, a lack of appreciation of the basic fundamentals required in planning and co-ordinating any building project, from the embryo stage of requirement to the fulfilment of that need, by the completion of, and occupation by the tenant; a building which is a practical, efficient, beautiful, and an economical solution to that original requirement or need.

Mr. Speaker, may I say that in the past I believe The Department of Public Works has provided, and given, the desired and required service to all government departments—with respect to these varying housing needs—in a spirit of co-operation and efficiency that cannot and should not be attempted, or suggested to be duplicated, by The Department of Health or any other department. Most certainly, Mr. Speaker, that essential assistance and service is being given today to The Department of Health and all other government departments.

I can concur with a portion of the address of the hon. member referred to, but must, at this point, amplify his realization that the building of a hospital for the province of Ontario is not just a matter of bricks and mortar. It is, I agree, a social plan. It is, I agree, a scheme to rehabilitate mentally ill people to health, if possible, within the realm of present-day medical knowledge. This plan, however, cannot be realized without the assistance and co-operation of The Department of Public Works.

The Department of Public Works, as suggested, does have control of these works, and I will illuminate this control in just a moment.

Mr. Speaker, to no department, at any time, have we dictated, and I quote again, "Just how big that building is going to be." Nor have we, nor will we, build to suit our purposes.

Mr. Speaker, the technical staff of my department are, and can be considered to be, experts in their respective fields. The proper analysis of space allocation and utilization—colour, harmony, illumination, the proper use of specific materials to specific uses, heating, ventilation and air conditioning, engineering know-how—are the trademarks of my department. The ability to do research, planning and the co-ordination to bring all the multitude of technical problems together, through co-operation and teamwork, to produce a resultant efficient and beautiful building into being, are the trademarks of my department and staff.

May I point out to this House that the plans and specifications for the new radiation laboratory, now under construction for The Department of Health, were developed completely within The Department of Public Works. To our knowledge, nowhere on this continent is there a similar building that has contained, within its walls, the planning and engineering required for this building.

May I add, too, that the complete interior design, colour, furniture, draperies and equipment for the occupational therapy section of the Ontario Hospital, Brockville, were developed and constructed by The Department of Public Works.

The Brockville Record and Times, on May 1, 1958, carried editorials, accounts and photographs of these facilities, with the feeling that accomplished results were outstanding.

The design and installation of special equipment and furniture for The Department of Education—the Belleville school for the deaf—is of such high calibre and function that a commercial concern requested, of my department, exclusive rights to manufacture and market similar products. Mr. Speaker, a version of one particular item is now being marketed.

The horticultural station for The Department of Agriculture at Vineland was constructed by The Department of Public Works. The design of furniture and equipment, and the selection of colours can be said to be outstanding, and it is generally conceded that the building is the finest in its class, in Canada.

To the hon. member for Parkdale, may I say, that many, many more outstanding works by my department could be cited. May I add, sir, that we do not dictate the size of buildings, nor the needs of buildings, to other government departments, but we do control and manage public works in Ontario. I suggest it would take a long time for anyone in any department to duplicate our service to the government, and to the people of this province.

We have done this well in the past—we will continue to do so in the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I should like to say a few words about dining-room facilities.

There has been some criticism in the House this year regarding the dining facilities that are available to the hon. members.

I find, in my own life at home, that I can criticize my wife for many things, but one bit of advice that I always give myself is that I never allow the children or myself to criticize the food that is put in front of us. This advice was fathered by the depression years. I feel that this advice is good for anyone, any place. Do the ones criticizing realize how the ladies that wait on us must feel?

The civil service association have done a remarkably good job in providing food at cost, not only to the civil servants but to the hon. members and their guests at the buildings here. However, I want to assure the hon. members that their criticisms are not going unheard. One of the great difficulties in providing good food is the fact that it must be cooked in the East Block and brought over to the Main Building. We, as members, expect this food to be in good condition, whether we go in for our dinner at 12 o'clock or at 2 o'clock.

I want to tell the hon. members that we are looking into the possibility of providing additional dining room facilities which will include the actual preparation and cooking of the food on the spot. I am hopeful that, when the Ontario hospital services commission move into their new quarters this coming fall, arrangements can be made to acquire some of their space at that time.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words about the Queen's Park area.

For the third time in the last 70 years a major decision faces the government of the province of Ontario as far as the Queen's Park area is concerned. In the lifespan of many of our older citizens, there have taken place drastic changes in our way of life, of which our predecessors in this chamber could little dream. This stately building, completed in 1892, was considered the ultimate in space requirements for the various government departments. The Prime Minister of the day even expressed some doubt that it would ever be used to its full capacity.

In less than 20 years, an expanding population and a popular demand for an increase in the functions of government brought the first major decision, the building in 1909 of the north wing, housing the library and The Department of Education. Further expansion, following World War I, brought the second decision to erect the East Block of executive offices, which were opened in 1928.

Mr. Speaker, we are all very much aware of what we may refer to as the explosion that took place in Canada, with respect to the economic and industrial upsurge and growth which was felt after World War II, and is still taking place today. Certainly, as the material needs for our peoples were felt and met by industry and commerce, there has been a parallel need for government services which also has been felt and been provided for.

The problem of meeting the additional housing needs of rapidly expanding government departments has been a difficult one. The Department of Public Works has met this need by acquiring suitable buildings in many different locations, and renovating and modernizing them for office accommodation where it was economically feasible to do so. When it was not possible to meet open demands in Crown-owned properties, other buildings—or portions of buildings—have been provided by leasehold means.

As a result of this unprecedented expansion, government services are now widely scattered throughout Metropolitan Toronto and, in some cases, departments have, of necessity, had to split operations in more than one location.

This, I am sure hon. members will agree, has added further administrative difficulties to already overburdened staffs and services.

Too, Mr. Speaker, although some government departments are presently accommodated in areas that are too small and undesirable for their operations, permanent, more desirable accommodations and alterations are required, to be consistent with the sound economy required in planning and providing for the future.

As mentioned in the speech from the Throne a definite move is now being made by my department to return and rehabilitate the scattered government departments to Queen's Park.

In the past few years, several properties to the east and in the area of the East Block have been acquired and assembled, as they have been available on the market. I am pleased to say with the acquisition of a key property—a whole city block, immediately to the east of the present East Block—last fall, my department is now proceeding as quickly as possible to plan and make provisions for a development programme worthy, and in keeping with, the finest government traditions.

As an example of some of the progress that has recently been made, may I refer to the completion of the new building on highway No. 401 for The Department of Highways. We have been in the process of occupying this building since last Christmas. The Department of Highways have vacated considerable areas in the East Block, and particularly leasehold areas in various sections of Metropolitan Toronto. This has enabled us to further consolidate other government departments of the Queen's Park area such as The Departments of Health, Welfare Transport and Agriculture. It has also enabled us to release some 36,000 square feet of leasehold accommodations.

Mr. Speaker, this is not a small programme, and perhaps a few quick figures will amplify to the House the scale of the development required. In round figures, government departments in Metropolitan Toronto occupy some 1,677,000 square feet, of which only some 520,000 square feet are provided in buildings not subject to consolidation.

As close as is possible today, it is estimated that the growth of government departments will require, in the next 5 years, some 600,000 square feet over and above today's requirements. In brief, the need for approximately 1.2 million net square feet of new office accommodation in the Queen's Park area is known. We must plan beyond this, and insure that further needs can be provided in an orderly and economic manner. It is still too early to advise further, regarding the shape of this development.

Right now my department is busy assembling data and doing research as necessary for such a programme. Soils investigations, surveys and models of existing buildings are being, and must be, prepared. Studies on existing services such as hydro, storm and sanitary sewers, and water must be made with respect to our present-day known requirements and our future requirements.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that history records man's constant effort to change and improve his environment, and he has changed it through building. He has also damaged his environment through bad building. It is, therefore, my hope that, through further planning and execution, Queen's Park to the east will shape the gigantic, and apparently chaotic, forces of our time into a reasonable and orderly process, and create a physical environment of serenity and delight worthy of this authority by the people of Ontario. With the support of the people of Ontario we are, Mr. Speaker, well on the way toward this goal.

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton): Mr. Speaker, as I rise to address this House through you, my first words, of course, are to offer my congratulations to you on your elevation to the chair. Many hon. members in the past have served in this capacity, in this high office, but I am sure none have excelled you in ability or in the dignity with which you carry out your duties.

I also feel that the Deputy Speaker, who is referred to as a neighbour of mine, the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Morrow), also deserves congratulations. He has served in this House for over 12 years, and I am sure we are all happy to congratulate him on his appointment.

Also, I would like to offer a word of congratulations to the mover of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) who is a freshman in the House, and also to the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) who seconded the motion.

Both of these men did a very, very able job, and I am sure that every hon. member of this House joins me in extending congratulations.

Reference has been made in this House, sir, by many of the hon. members to the retirement of the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) from the portfolio of Education. I am sure that I can add very little to what has already been said in extending words of praise on his behalf. They are well earned. He has made a great contribution in the years gone by, and was persuaded to retain that post until illness made this possible no longer. His duty came first, as far as he was concerned, and I am sure that, as years go by, it will be said that the hon. Minister from Eglinton was one of our finest Ministers of Education.

Then too, Mr. Speaker, I would just like to add a word of congratulations to his successor, the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Robarts). He has taken on a job of great magnitude, but I know—from what I have seen of him in the past 4 or 5 years—that he will ably meet that task and do great honour to this province. To him also I offer my congratulations.

Now, as I speak to hon. members I wonder where I should begin, and to what extent I should deal with any one department. I consider myself a rural member. Geographically, I am a rural member, although the greater majority of the voting population in my riding is urban. Nevertheless, through our rural municipality I have found a great deal of pleasure in working with The Department of Highways.

Little needs to be said about highway construction in our particular area at the present time, except this, Mr. Speaker—I am most happy and pleased with the progress being made with the Queensway through the city of Ottawa. That programme was first talked about some 4 or 5 years ago, and during the past year it has come into reality. Today I may say with a great deal of pleasure, construction is progressing very, very rapidly. And I am sure that I speak on behalf of all the hon. members in the Ottawa area when I say we are most pleased and happy about this.

In addition to that, of course, my main interest in road building and road construction lies in the municipalities, our county council and our township council. We have in our county, in the past 5 years, expended about $750,000 on developing roads.

That money, of course, comes entirely from the Treasury here. It is money that, in the great majority of cases, none of the municipalities would be able to find to expend if it were not for the generosity of this government. In addition, as hon. members all know, this government pays 50 per cent. of the cost of every dollar expended in the municipalities on roads. So it can be said, Mr. Speaker, that this government is serving the municipalities well, as it consistently demonstrates.

To move out of my own area just for a moment, we have in effect, in the province of Ontario, the biggest road building and maintenance programme in the history of this province. The present road building programme is expected to be completed by 1970.

The majority of the hon. members will remember that, some 3 or 4 years ago, the Opposition were telling us we could never complete such a programme in less than 20 years. But the facts are, of course, that the work is being done, and properly administered and properly looked after, with the result that we are at least 4 years ahead in our programme.

Indeed, our whole maze of King's highways in this province, it is hoped, will be redesigned and re-constructed. The completion of highway No. 401 is just in the offing. The completion of the trans-Canada highway, through this province, is just in the offing. Skyways and new bridges are under construction, and international bridges are now on the planning boards. So I can say to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. members of this House, that we must be proud of the progress this government has made in the road building business. I offer my sincere congratulations to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) and his staff.

Our county, 3 years ago, launched into a capital expenditure programme whereby they put down about 70 or 75 miles of permanent road at a cost of something over $1 million. Today they are contemplating, with the approval of The Department of Highways, going into another programme of road building on a capital basis, where we hope to spend perhaps another $8,000 or $9,000. This is possible only because of the leadership given here, and the co-operation between the members of our county council and this government.

Now, may I say a word or two to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner). His department of government has made great strides. I am thinking particularly now, Mr. Speaker, of the parks development in this province. Do hon. members realize that some 5 or 6 years ago we only had 5 or 6 parks in this province, and that today we have upwards of 75 parks with another 20 parks under construction?

And in passing, sir, I must mention that one of these parks is in Fitzroy Harbour in my riding. This, I believe, will be one of the finest parks in the province of Ontario. Some 415 acres are being developed, with accommodation planned for some 7,000 or 8,000 people.

Such tremendous undertakings are going on all over the province.

Mr. Speaker, again it is my privilege to offer my congratulations to the hon. Minister, and particularly to his staff under the parks division.

I wish to say just a word or two about agriculture. Each day we hear some hon.

member of the Opposition criticize this government. But we never do hear them say anything about what this government has accomplished for agriculture. Although there are many things I would like to deal with, I do not feel I should take the time today. But I will take more time when the Opposition and agriculture—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Sure, we will hear about that.

Mr. Johnston: I know they are anxious to hear. They skip all the things that the government does. All we ever hear from the Opposition is something about 19 cent eggs, and 18 cent hogs. But I would like to, if I may, deal for just a moment with what this government is doing in the field of extension and research.

Take the brucellosis deal, for instance. Last year more than 400,000 calves were vaccinated in this province at no cost to the owner, but at cost to this Treasury of over $500,000. We do not hear about that from the Opposition.

On the other hand we spend, I suppose, $80,000 or $85,000 on warble fly control each year.

In our great field of breeding units in this province, this government again makes a great contribution. Why, last year they paid premium on 585 sires in this province at a cost to the Treasury of over $48,000. That is only some of the things that this government is doing.

One other thing I must mention before I pass on, Mr. Speaker. It relates itself to the work that is being done by our agricultural representative service in this province, and our 4H clubs. When the Ottawa winter fair is on, we have the greatest exhibit in 4H work not only in Ontario, but in the whole of Canada. This work all started with the agriculture representative service in this province, and has gone ahead in leaps and bounds.

I must say here—and I am very proud to say it—our county livestock judging teams participated at the Royal Winter Fair, and came out on top with about 40 teams competing. This is something that is not reached very often in this province, and something that we in Carleton are very proud of. In turn, we are proud of our Department of Agriculture under our very able hon. Minister (Mr. Goodfellow) and his staff.

Now, if I may, I will draw the attention of the government to one or two things which need looking into during the next year or two. I refer first to an Ontario Hospital for the Ottawa area. This is something that we have required in our area for many, many years, but the demand for it today is greater than ever. I draw this to the attention of the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) who, I may say in passing, has given great leadership in the field of hospital services, and in every other field concerning his department.

I would like to say to him now that there is a great urgency for such a hospital in our area. I know that plans are now being laid for a great expansion of such a programme in this province. But the urgency is acute in the Ottawa area, and I hope he will consider providing our area, at the earliest possible moment, with an Ontario Hospital.

In passing, I would just like to say that the Ottawa Sanatorium is now being vacated. I understand that part of it will be used by the Ottawa civic hospital on a temporary basis. I am pleased to hear this.

But I must suggest to the hon. Minister that it would make an ideal site for an Ontario Hospital for mental patients.

Now, sir, there is one other matter of great importance to our area. I was particularly pleased just a moment ago to hear the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) make reference to the need of centralization of our government offices in this city. I was quite pleased to hear him make that reference because it is exactly what I intend to do now.

Do hon. members know that, in Ottawa, we have provincial government offices scattered all over the city? Many of them are located in places where it is difficult to park, or in places which are undesirable in other ways.

I believe that provincial government offices occupy perhaps 50,000 square feet of space in Ottawa, and that does not include Hydro or The Department of Highways.

In the offing, we can see a need for perhaps another 10,000 square feet of space, so I suggest to the hon. Minister of Public Works, and to the government as a whole, that consideration be given at once to a new government building in Ottawa to house all these offices. Let us take action now to have it properly centralized with adequate parking facilities.

Mr. Speaker, mention has been made in this House, in recent days, of the fact that this government does little or nothing about housing. I would like to point out that this government is continually improving housing conditions in this province. Why, in my own riding last fall, a deal was closed whereby some 675 acres will be developed in a land use project where the services will be provided, and only the exact cost of the lot, and cost of the building itself, will be paid for by the purchaser. Under this plan, some 2,500 or 3,000 units will become available at the lowest possible cost to the property owner. That is one illustration of what is being done by the government.

In closing my remarks, I would make reference to the progress that has been made in the province in the past 10 years at least. Why, with all the criticism we get, do we never hear these figures mentioned?

For instance, I have just been speaking of dwellings built in this province. In the past 10 years, more than 425,000 units have been built. Nearly $20 billion has been invested in physical assets in our fast developing economy. The standards of our living in this province have gone up about 40 per cent. in regard to buying power over the past few years.

Ontario's electric power capacity has been increased 3.5 times. Ontario's forest production has risen in value by 55 per cent. Our mineral production has risen in value by 150 per cent. Almost 100 per cent. of this province's people are being serviced with electricity. We have tremendously developed our water resources. In this respect, we still have a big job to do, but properly administered as they are, they are going forward in a big way that will mean millions of dollars to this province in future years.

Mighty strides have been made in education, I need not mention it. Why, I suppose the money spent on education has gone up 14 or 15 times in the past few years. They tell me there has been a new school, or an addition to a school, completed in every day in every year. That is something that is hard to realize.

But Mr. Speaker, because this is true does not mean that we will not be faced with greater obligations. However, this government is going forward, prepared to face up to these obligations. I can assure hon. members that, with the leadership given here, the decisions made in cabinet council, and the co-operation between our hon. Prime Minister and other governments, we can look to the future with greater security than ever before.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I rise to take part in the debate on the speech from the Throne. First may I congratulate you, sir, on your honoured and responsible position. The Speaker has traditions in the British parliamentary system which date back to the 14th century. His is a most difficult and demanding chair which requires intelligence, impartiality and—if I might say so—a sense of humour.

In reading Hansard, and in talking to previous hon. members of all parties in this House, I realize that your predecessor won the highest acclaim during his term of office. He won the respect, and indeed the affection, of all the hon. members. I know Mr. Speaker, that you will vigorously pursue the same objectives, and that you will bring the same qualities to this office.

Now, at the start, I would like to say how honoured I am to be representing the riding of Dovercourt in this House. My riding pulsates with the vitality and colour of people from many nations. In it reside Canadians of many generations and people waiting to become citizens. Immigration is the story of my riding and indeed, some governments should recognize immigration is the story of Canada. The history of Canada has been, and is being, made by such people for, if one searches far enough back, they, or their families have come from lands across the sea.

I particularly feel I am a part of the people in my riding, for I have worked for a number of years in The Department of Citizenship and Immigration when the great flows of liberal immigration were being encouraged by Liberal government, and I myself was a part of one of those earlier flows.

I came to Canada as a war evacuee from the British Isles, and I know the strangeness of accent and clothes as I walked, somewhat apprehensively, into the schoolroom at Oakwood collegiate in my riding.

My wife and her family were also part of the great liberal flow of immigration, because she and her family had fled from the Communist terror which was ruthlessly controlling their small proud country of Estonia. They fled, risking their lives, in a small sailboat to get to Sweden, and she eventually also had the feeling of being a stranger as she walked into one of the collegiates in my riding.

We are both profoundly grateful for the opportunity which this great country has given to both of us.

I am proud of being a member of the Liberal party which, based on firm liberal principles and tradition, always attracts and welcomes men and women of many backgrounds, without wanting to use them for political expediency or political exhibition. As I stand here, I am deeply conscious of our British constitutional heritage which will permit a young man, despite his social, his economic and his national background, to represent a riding in this great House.

I know there are boys and girls who are sitting in classrooms, and possibly feeling strange in them today, but I know, sir, that their story will be like mine, that some day they will stand in this House representing a Liberal government. I should be charitable and say also there will be others in this House, at some future date, representing Conservative Oppositions, and also members of the new party, whatever its name might be.

Now, I would like to emphasize the generous character in the Ontario people. In my opinion it runs as deep and as strong as the rocks of this old rock-ridged province—that is a term that I picked up in the House.

There are many generous people in all our ridings. Indeed, the people who took me in when I first came over to Canada, now live almost next door to the hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost).

The reason I refer to the humanity in the hearts of the people of Ontario is because I intend to appeal, on that basis—and not on political grounds—to this House. And I think it is most appropriate that I should make this appeal on Brotherhood Week. It is most appropriate that I quote the words of the hon. Prime Minister this afternoon when he said in connection with brotherhood: "It is actions that count, not only words."

In the speech from the Throne, sir, we heard, and I quote from it:

Turning to 1960, we are advised that nearly all economic indicators suggest a year of continued expansion and progress which will carry us to new heights of prosperity.

And I would hope that it will also carry us to new heights of humanity, not only for the citizens residing in Ontario but also for people abroad.

When I am talking about people abroad, I am thinking particularly of the 22,000 men, women and children who are in European displaced persons camps. I am also thinking of the 100,000 displaced persons who are wandering around Europe.

In these camps, the people wait and wait, and there is a bleak futility in their hollow eyes. Their memories are of the brutality of men to men, and their hopes are vague and despairing. They are hoping that, perhaps by some chance, they may have the opportunity to start a new life far away from the drab, cramped, desolate quarters of these camps.

New heights of prosperity were mentioned in the speech from the Throne, but it does not mean very much to these innocent victims of harsh and impersonal warfare, and it does not mean much to their thin youngsters.

I would like to just examine who these 122,000 men, women and children in Europe are. As did our pioneer fathers, the United Empire Loyalists, they fled their homes and risked their lives to cross borders in order, as they hoped, to live under a political system which they cherish. They hoped that they were coming to freedom.

I would like at this point to give one example which I heard from Ron Lowman of the Toronto Daily Star, who had visited these camps recently, and who described the appalling conditions of despair and poverty in these camps.

He talks of one young couple who had fled from the tyranny of imposed communism. They had risked the frontier, with its guns and its barbed wire, for the sake of their two young babies. By day they hid, shivering from cold and fear, in the woods, and at night—in the dark winter nights—they stumbled and ran towards the border. Finally they reached the border and, clutching their young children in their arms, they handed them over to the friendly helpers across the border.

But, as Ron Lowman says, both of these babies were dead. They were dead from freezing.

And now I suggest there are many others in these displaced persons' camps who have reached the frontier to get to freedom, and have made it. But they also are living as the dead, frozen by 3 things—that is, as far as getting to Canada is concerned. First of these is red tape. They are frozen, secondly, by the inability of the federal and provincial governments to get together; and thirdly—and principally—by the indifference of the people in this province towards their plight.

Now, before going further, I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) on the very sympathetic and understanding approach that he has taken on these people. I know certainly that, during the International Refugee Year, he has allowed 3 TB refugee cases to come here—that he personally intervened in their cases.

I would also like to congratulate the Ontario government for what they have done. They have agreed to accept one-third of the TB refugee patients that will be brought in by the federal government. But I am sure that the conscience of this House had never thought that the federal government would bring in only 100 TB patients, just about enough to fill a Greyhound bus.

And what have other countries done in this area in connection with refugees? Just take little overcrowded Norway. They have accepted 1,400 handicapped people and their relatives. What about little overcrowded Belgium? They have accepted 3,000 of the sick and aged.

Have we no empty TB beds in this province that we could take more? According to the hon. Minister of Health, he has informed us recently that we have 2,000 empty beds in the province. Will these TB patients always be under our care? I have been informed that 37 out of the 100 to come in by the federal government will be out of sanatoria by March.

Perhaps the question is asked: Well, what do refugees and immigrants provide or contribute to our economy?

I would like to point to some figures in this respect. In 1957 alone, immigrants paid in direct taxes $190 million. Between 1951 and 1958, about 1,365,000 immigrants came to Canada. They established more than 248,000 households, they purchased 173,000 stoves, 105,000 electric refrigerators, 128,000 washing machines, 72,000 vacuum cleaners, 207,000 radios, and more than 81,000 automobiles.

I could take examples of the many thousands of refugees who came to Canada under the great Liberal waves, and I can show their contribution. But I feel that the economic benefit of these people is all too obvious to us. Some people might suggest that these waves of immigration take jobs away from Canadians. But it is obvious, from what I have just said, that they create the market for buying goods, and this creates jobs.

In every wave of immigration there is also a large proportion of dependents who do not enter the labour force but who need to buy goods. For example, in 1958, of 127,700 immigrants only 63,078 were workers.

I know that the hon. Prime Minister recognizes this need for more people. But does he recognize the moral needs—that we should not choose only the healthy and that we should not place parents in the heartbreaking position of deciding whether to break up their family because one child, or one member has TB or some other illness. I ask because this decision, to a large extent, is in the hands of the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario.

The provincial government decides if it will accept the TB patient on the 50-50 basis with the federal government, and in 1956 this government decided that active TB patients would not be accepted. There are voluntary organizations in this province—there are church organizations—who were wanting to sponsor TB patients in order that Canada can hold its head high during the World Refugee Year, but there is no agreement as yet, between the federal and provincial governments.

We can talk about eloquently about brotherhood, but I suggest that this would be a splendid week to take some action and try to work out this provincial agreement. I suggest that this government should immediately demand that the federal government sign an agreement with the provinces, or else make an unilateral agreement with the federal government. This agreement should include that refugees can be admitted to Canada by sponsors and I would like to say in the definition sponsorship should be broadened, and also include voluntary organizations and other than close relatives.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Will the hon. member permit me to make just a brief explanation of a point of which he seems to be misinformed?

We have an agreement with the federal government relative to the TB refugees. Our agreement has been widely accepted, widely acclaimed by the federal people that we here in Ontario will pay all the hospitalization costs of the patients, while the federal people look after the welfare costs.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate very much the clarification by the hon. Minister of Health and I am aware that from 1948 to 1958 we have brought in 2,363 TB patients. I am also aware that, during the Hungarian refugee situation, there were 172 who went into TB sanatoriums and of that 172 there are 170 who are out.

But at this point, may I point out that the voluntary organizations and church groups do not know what the situation is going to be concerning the continuing responsibility for the people they sponsor to come in.

I agree that this is not in our hands, as much as it is in the hands of the federal government, but I think that if there is anyone that has influence with this particular federal government in Ottawa it is this government.

I suggest that our province should press to get this agreement clarified so that the voluntary organizations can know where they stand regarding bringing people into Canada.

I would say that if they would do this, and I strongly recommend it—that if we did get this agreement made with the federal government, in connection with responsibility of continuing care for the voluntary organizations—then they should put an advertisement in the ethnic papers to inform the newcomers of these changes. By doing so, they would also reap the congratulations which they would very richly deserve. I think this is a great concrete suggestion that we should carry out on Brotherhood Week.

I would like to talk now of my impression as a new hon. member in this House.

I must say that I have watched with admiration the polished and assured manner of the master of politics, the hon. Prime Minister whose role is already written, not only in this province but in Canada.

I have watched with admiration the relentless zeal of the hon. leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald). I am sorry he is not here at the moment to hear my compliments to him. He has a fierce dedication to his socialist doctrine and his qualities of fiery temper and courage will always be useful in an opposition.

I have watched with admiration and pride the calm reasoned approach of my own hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer). He is a humanitarian and a hardworking intelligent man who is deeply concerned with solutions to the obvious gaps in prosperity and opportunity in this province.

As I watched these 3 great men performing in this House, it struck me that there are 3 main approaches to the problems in our society today.

I think the first approach is, that one can suggest complacently that all is prosperity and either ignore, or pay little attention to, the real problems around us.

The second approach is that one can talk excitedly about these problems but offer no solution, or offer impractical solutions so far sweeping that they are financially impossible, or are not in line with the temperament and character of the people of Ontario.

The third solution is to earnestly and critically study the problem, and fearlessly offer responsible solutions.

I consider that my hon. leader, and my party, are trying to follow that third solution.

And I look at the policy of the government to see what kind of approach they are taking. Let me take a statement of the hon. Prime Minister from that famous book that was put out during the last election. In it he says:

We shall aim, on a sound sensible basis, at achieving higher living standards and at making the fruits of Ontario's progress available in an ever-widening circle.

Mr. Speaker, I would suggest that the circle certainly needs to be widened, and I suggest it needs to be widened at once because there are a lot of people who are outside of the ever-widening circle now. I would just like to point this out. Sometimes, when I listen in the House to the prosperity that we are all enjoying under the Conservative government, I wonder if it is only I who am perplexed until I go back again to my own riding and think, over the weekend, of some of the people who come into my office.

I think, for example, of the desperate man who came to see me. His wife is pregnant and he is searching futilely for work in order to retain his dignity. But there is no work. He lives in a single room with his wife. He has his furniture in the warehouse and is hoping that perhaps things will brighten up and he can have a better place when his child is born.

But now are there many people like this in Ontario at this time? The latest figures of unemployment—and I should say this is of unemployed persons seeking work—were 170,447 on December 12. That is almost as high a figure as we had during the depression. It is not a very widening circle of prosperity for these people. Last winter there were 225,000 unemployed—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): That would include the seasonal unemployment—

Mr. Thompson: Yes, I must be frank that this figure is of those seeking employment.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): The labour force is a little higher—

Mr. Thompson: It is a higher figure than the Dominion bureau of statistics figure.

Last winter there were 225,000 unemployed, and did they enjoy the prosperity that the government boast about? But what did the government do itself? Well, it boasted and bragged about a winter works programme as though it was going to provide utopia for everybody. But did it? The winter works programme actually provided 9,000 men with jobs for a few weeks, or gave about 4 per cent. of the unemployed work to do.

What about the problem of adequate housing for the people of Ontario? The hon. Prime Minister, in his report to the people, talks about 425,000 dwellings—inferring that the province assisted actively in some way in building these dwellings. Actually the province only provided assistance in respect to 4,234 rental housing units and 4,672 lots of land to family units.

What has this government done for the 76,000 alcoholics in Ontario in 1958? After all, they made $76 million from the sale of liquor last year. Did they spend much of this with respect to the alcoholics? They had a foundation to help 500 of the 76,000 alcoholics, and I would be very interested to know how many beds they have in connection with the treatment of alcoholics through this foundation.

What about the elderly citizens in our province? It was shown by the Ontario welfare council report on economic needs and resources for older people in Ontario that 40 to 60 per cent. of the 454,000 senior citizens past the age of 65 fail to meet the minimum level of income necessary and this income—the minimum—would provide a budget which would provide $35 for a woman for a month's rent and $40 for a couple. In this province of great prosperity, 40 to 60 per cent. of the 454,000 senior citizens cannot live at this minimum level. This is some new height of prosperity for the senior citizens.

What about those people who need medical drugs? In the Kefauver report and investigation, he showed the tremendous soaring prices on these drugs. I quote from the Toronto Star:

The Ontario government has moved into this picture in the sense that they will investigate the price the Ontario government paid for medicinal drugs. Not the price the public paid.

In today's speech from the Throne, the government said it will ask an inquiry into the prices paid by hospitals and other provincial institutions be held. There was no reference to the prices paid by individual members of the public, though the inquiry is thought to have been sparked by United States Senate hearings on that aspect of the problem.

In the United States Senate hearings, held by the Kefauver committee, drug profits were said to hit 1,000 per cent. One arthritis medicine, testimony indicated, was made for $13.61 for a thousand tablets and sold to the public for $283, and after the Washington hearing a senior committee investigator said Canada's prices were even higher.

"Canada has the highest drug prices of any country in the world," asserted John Blair, one of the top men working on the investigation. "Ours are bad enough but yours"—

And I can show an example, right down in my own riding, where a mother of 3 children, who suffers from arthritis, cannot pay for the necessary drugs. Is she enjoying the prosperity that was spoken about?

What about the many who cannot afford medical treatment? I would refer again to the Canadian tax foundation which pointed out, in 1951, that people with low incomes suffer more disabling ailments per capita than those with higher incomes, and that these people with low incomes buy less medical treatment. They participate less in voluntary health insurance plans and apparently do not get the proper medical treatment.

What about the overcrowded mental hospitals, the hospitals for mentally retarded, the overcrowded jails, and the reform institutions?

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this government should take a very realistic look at what it talks about in connection with prosperity, and see just how many people are outside this widening circle that it boasts about.

Well, I would like to examine some of the departments that come under the much vaunted human betterment programmes of the Conservative government. The first one, in which I am interested in looking at, is the citizenship branch under The Department of the Provincial Secretary. I am interested because of my own background in this work, and also because this is a very real challenge to Ontario. One out of every 6 persons living in Ontario has come from other lands since 1945. Naturally it demands the work of dedicated people to assist in the happy integration of these newcomers.

In my opinion, the foremost of the dedicated persons doing this work are the editors of the ethnic press. I think that the late Arturo Scotti—who was a gentle, quiet, dedicated man—was a fine example of this group. His influence in the work of integration will be felt for many years. These men and women work for very little financial return, and yet their contribution to Canadian citizenship is immense. They are interpreting our way of life to the newcomer, and they have a wide circulation of readers. I would hazard that the papers represented in the Canada press club have almost 500,000 readers.

Before the election, these editors were honoured and congratulated by the government—in fact, by numerous hon. cabinet Ministers. Yet, sir—and I feel I should say this, because they told me of their disappointment in connection with this—just after the election, on the occasion of the dinner for Her Gracious Majesty, Queen Elizabeth, there was, in my terms, one outstanding invitation missing, and it was to the president of the ethnic press club.

These ethnic editors, with community leaders and with voluntary and religious organizations, have been in this work of integration for many years. Some of the ethnic papers go back almost to three-quarters of a century. They did a tremendous job during the great Liberal flow of immigration just after the war, and then, sir, after 13 years of Liberal immigration policy, the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips) came into the picture.

He came in when we had a new federal government, a Conservative government with its ebbing immigration flow, with a policy under an hon. Minister who, in my opinion, could possibly be termed as “the minister of citizenship and emigration.” But he came into this, and I congratulate him for doing that, and I feel myself that there is a definite government role when we have well over a million new people in our province.

There is a role from the point of view of the government in creating an atmosphere for harmonious integration, and there is a role in connection with legislation such as The Fair Accommodation Practices Act and The Fair Employment Practices Act. These Acts, in my opinion, still need to be more comprehensive, and they also need to be administered by a full-time commission.

However, I have a notice on the order paper concerning a bill on this, and I will not go into that any further at this time.

Well, sir, I decided I would like to find what were the policies of the hon. Provincial Secretary in connection with his new branch, so I read his statements in Hansard of last year, and I must say that he swept me to great heights of enthusiasm with his oratory concerning the qualifications for Canadian citizenship.

It was not until a little later that I started to think: “Surely, citizenship is a federal matter. It is a federal concern, and the Ontario government should not move in to establish Ontario citizens.”

I am quite aware that there are many people who feel very unhappy with the present federal government but they have never suggested that we should secede from the Constitution because of this. I am sure that the hon. Provincial Secretary also does not feel that.

But, sir, I was confused with what he was planning to do, and so I thought I would look at his policy more closely, and I reread this great speech that he had made and I felt sure that he was going to provide help in the preparation and filing of citizenship papers, and that all of these services would be available free of charge.

Now this also confused me because the federal government, whose responsibility it is to make out citizenship papers, charges to receive citizenship.

I was not the only one confused in this situation. If I could refer to an ethnic paper called de Netherland Courante and on the front page it has an editorial, “Ontario’s Own Citizenship.”

This editorial discusses The Provincial Secretary’s Department, it talks about the fact that he is not getting much co-operation from the federal government, and then it says that this might be one of the reasons, that the federal government may be afraid we will become Ontarians now instead of Canadians, and this danger is not imaginary.

Then, this concerns the editor—and a very able editor of a paper—and her confusion about this policy. Further up, she is describing this new citizenship branch which comes under The Provincial Secretary’s Department. She describes it in this way.

To the newcomer a provincial branch of citizenship might sound rather confusing, unaccustomed as he is to our various levels of government. It might be a little difficult to explain to him that there is a Department of Citizenship and Immigration in Ottawa, that there is a citizenship branch of this department at 1200 Bay Street, for instance, and that there is going to be still another citizenship branch but the latter has nothing to do with the former.

This did cause some confusion.

And then, Mr. Speaker, I decided there must be something more concrete in connection with the policy of this branch, so I read again very carefully what the hon. Minister had said, because I realize there is a challenge here. We have more than a million newcomers in this province. And I read through to the end, and, at the bottom, towards the end of his speech, I found, that his policies—at least, one of his principal ones—was to give receptions to new arrivals in every area of Ontario, thus creating uniformity and that he was going to serve coffee and cake, I think, to them as well.

Well, I examined more closely these receptions which is the main policy, I think, of the hon. Provincial Secretary's programme. I find that he wanted to give not one but two receptions. One was when the immigrants arrive in Ontario, and one was when the immigrant takes out his citizenship.

Now, here the hon. Minister expects a representative—and I am quoting from his speech—he expects a representative of his department to attend, and, I presume also, to arrange all these receptions. He expects representatives also of the 3 levels of government to attend, and the hon. Minister then states that he will establish an office with the necessary staff to carry out the policy.

Well, apart from the receptions for new arrivals receptions for new citizens would require quite a staff, because, in 1957—these are the latest figures I have for new citizens in Ontario—there were 55,366, and for example every week in Toronto there are something like 200 new citizens getting their papers.

So I do not know quite how much of a staff he is intending to have to follow this policy; and, secondly, I do not know how he expects elected representatives of 3 levels of government to attend these, because there would not be much time in the Legislature to do any other business.

Frankly, I think that receptions should be arranged and should be given by voluntary community organizations where one gets the spontaneity and the—informality—

Some hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Thompson: I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he drop his main policy of this much vaunted citizenship branch. In fact, I think he may have done so, because I have not heard of any receptions given by the new citizenship branch.

Mr. Speaker, another policy of this much boasted citizenship branch was that he was going to co-ordinate the work of the various departments of our provincial government. I want to stress again that this is an important branch. We have over a million newcomers in this province. So I am interested very much in seeing what concrete things are proposed by the branch.

I would agree that there certainly is a challenge in co-ordinating work of the various departments of the provincial government, and I congratulate the hon. Minister on that. But then I look to see actually what he has co-ordinated, and one thing that I thought would certainly be co-ordinated was the placing of advertising in the ethnic papers.

I find that The Department of Travel and Publicity sends out 12 advertisements a year to these papers. Other departments also send out advertisements when they wish, and of course, the citizenship branch itself sends out the odd advertisement, and when I say "odd" I mean in numbers.

But quite frankly, I would like to help the hon. Minister further by suggesting, and offering, some suggestions for his citizenship programme, because I think it is very important. I would like to give him these suggestions:

First, I think the hon. Minister should examine the great wealth of professional and technical skill amongst new arrivals which is not being used. I think the hon. Minister could convene with provincial professional associations and unions to ascertain if, with special training, there might not be a role for ex-lawyers, ex-dentists, and so forth.

In co-operation with federal officers, I think the hon. Minister should learn where skills are needed. Then the hon. Minister should take a look at the schedule of The Vocational Training Act, whereby the federal government pays half the cost, and the hon. Minister should also take a look at existing training facilities—in the evening schools for example—because I think the hon. Minister will find that there may be opportunities to train not only immigrants but also the unemployed and older people.

I suggest also, that the hon. Minister should urge an analysis of accidents which occur frequently to immigrants in industrial work.

Indeed, there are some questions that I would like to ask about these. Are accidents caused because of different work practices in Europe? Are the safety rules and the rights of the working man—such as workmen's compensation, minimum wages—are these being interpreted to the new immigrants on the job? Do they know their rights?

Then I suggest a further thing. The hon. Minister should try to find ways to encourage the unemployed immigrant to improve his job opportunities by learning English. I know there are day classes at the International Institute in Toronto, but I think perhaps—I am not sure of this—but I think perhaps there could be and should be more.

I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I think the hon. Provincial Secretary has a very fine dedicated staff. I had the privilege of meeting some of them. But I do think they need more policy in order that they can do other work than just arranging ceremonies in which they provide coffee.

However, I would be unfair to the hon. Minister if I suggested that was his only idea in connection with this branch, because I think the hon. Minister had some excellent ideas. I think one of them was that there should be a central information centre of government departments for the newcomer, and this is what the branch was going to do. I congratulate the hon. Minister on that.

I also congratulate the hon. Minister on opening—and I understand he has opened now—an office at the Union Station to assist new arrivals in finding suitable accommodation. I understand that the staff at the Union Station will examine the accommodation standards and rental rates.

In my opinion this is a very welcome precedent, because the provincial government is now going to assist in finding accommodation for one section of our population, and I am sure that they will not stop at just finding accommodation for one section of new arrivals—but that they will also expand this service to find suitable apartments and rooms for all citizens, especially for our older citizens who certainly need it. I congratulate the hon. Provincial Secretary on moving into this area, and I look forward to seeing whether the 10,000 families, who are waiting to get suitable accommodation, for example, in Metropolitan Toronto, should go to the Union Station office, or whether this government is going to set up other means for them.

I would like to take a broader look at the whole policy of the Conservative government to help any citizens to help themselves on their feet again when, for reasons beyond their individual control, they cannot make an adequate living in Ontario.

I think—and I may be wrong in this—but in some Conservative quarters there is still a feeling by some unrealistic persons that, in this wonderful richly endowed province, everyone is completely the master of his own economic destiny and unless bone lazy should be able to carve out a successful and prosperous niche for himself.

Well, I would like to tell anyone who feels that way that many citizens of Ontario today have little control over their economic future.

The recent publication of the government, on the departments and boards of governments of Ontario, points out that increased specialization in agriculture and industry and the beginnings of massive rural-to-urban population changes—both products of the process of industrialization—make men less self-sufficient, less able to control, by their own efforts, the things which affect their daily lives and well-being.

Industrialization has especially affected this province. Indeed it has if one looks at the figures. One generation ago 75 per cent. were self-employed, today 76.3 per cent. are employees.

In Ontario, there is approximately 56 per cent. of the total labour force of Canada, and I might add 53 per cent. of Canada is union labour. Some people may say, are these people getting big wages? They are getting big wages, they may suggest, and they can look after themselves, they can look after their own future.

Well, are these worker wealthy? The taxation year of 1955, which is the latest for which tax figures are available—or at least which I could obtain—would indicate that in Ontario roughly of all persons with taxable incomes, 20.5 per cent. had incomes under $2,000; 9.9 per cent. had incomes under $1,500; and 33.1 per cent. had incomes under $2,500. Moreover—and I want to emphasize this—of those with incomes under $2,500, 16 per cent. had one or more dependents.

Now, I want to be fair, wages have gone up since that time. But I do not think they have gone up that much, and even then—if they have gone up a little bit—how on earth can a family provide for their future if something should happen to them? If, for example, widespread unemployment occurs, if sickness hits the breadwinner, if the mother needs medical drugs, if age comes to the breadwinner and denies him further opportunity for work, what does the person do in Ontario?

Well, I thought I would like to look at the department which provides assistance to people in such circumstances. But before I discuss this department—and I am referring to The Department of Public Welfare—I would like to stress that full employment, in my opinion, is an answer to many of the problems which applicants have who come to The Public Welfare Department.

Now, in discussing The Department of Public Welfare, I would like to say that I think it has some very good legislation, but I also think it has some peculiar practices.

For example, on one hand there is much boasting about this General Assistance Act, which has still no regulations; on the other hand, we have The Charitable Institutions Act which has regulations, but even when the lives of 140 young children were in grave danger, these regulations were not applied. The government waited, it vacillated with political nervousness until, in the gravest emergency, the department was then ordered to move in the dark hours. Such political brinkmanship towards the welfare of young children, in my opinion, is deplorable.

However, I say at the start that this department has enacted some good legislation. For example, there is The Visiting Homemakers Act which provides for someone to assist in keeping together a home with young children when, for instance, the mother is ill and has to go to a hospital.

The question is, of this good legislation which the government has enacted, how many municipalities can afford it, how many municipalities implement this? Just take for example, this Visiting Homemakers Act; I suggest that there are less than 20 municipalities which are using that Act today. Now why?

In my opinion, it is because the municipalities cannot afford to initiate the necessary financial agreements with the provincial government. The arrangement to pay for education and welfare have been too heavily placed on the small property owner in the municipality, and yet these responsibilities are provincial responsibilities.

It reminds me of when I lived in the north of Ireland, and there was a situation of a farmer there who, when we were guests at his farm house, placed a very imposing slab of butter on the table and then he said, "Be easy on the butter, boys, it's one and four a pound. In fact, don't touch it."

This government, in my opinion, is enacting very able and progressive legislation. But, like the farmer, it is very difficult for the municipalities to enact it.

If one looks at the fifth annual economic survey of the Ontario bureau of statistics, the difference in percentage of purchasing power, as revealed between the counties in the province, ranges from York, with 32.14 per cent. to Haliburton with .9 per cent.

In other words, here is the situation: That low revenue—and I should say by the way, that those figures I think were taken in 1956, and have probably changed somewhat now—low revenue municipalities which often have the greatest welfare needs are sometimes the last to be able to provide services.

I think that the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) has shown most distinctly that this Municipal Act is outdated. I cannot help but recall his example of two full buckets of water in homes. The Act must be revised.

And now, Mr. Speaker I suggest that, not only the Act, but the administration of welfare in this province should also be brought up-to-date. And I would like to say that I am not criticizing the personnel of the department. I have not had the privilege yet of meeting the Deputy Minister. But I know, from people across the province, that he is thought of most highly. He is most respected in social welfare circles, and I know that he has a very dedicated staff.

What I am criticizing is the policy that is brought down concerning the structure of administration. I think it needs to be streamlined.

I know that today we have 17 district offices—that is, welfare offices, and 5 offices for the province itself—to administer the necessary financial help to those qualifying. In fairness, I should say that I think the department's intention is to try to streamline the administrative work. But I do not agree with the way in which they are going about it.

In order to clarify more of what I am suggesting, I would like to refer to The General Assistance Act, in which there is a clause saying it provides that the municipalities can amalgamate on a county level with respect to administration and finances. I do not agree with the way the province is going about this because it is going about it in this way: It is using regional administrators as good-will ambassadors to point out the advantages of county units. I do not think that is enough.

If the province will not revise The Municipal Act, at least they should do this much, they should offer some financial inducement to the municipalities to amalgamate administratively into county units. Such inducement could be the paying of the total cost of these county welfare offices. By that I mean personnel as well.

Now, why do I advocate such co-ordinated county units? In the 912 incorporated municipalities, there are municipal officers whose prime responsibility is in a totally different area from their secondary responsibility of giving welfare assistance.

I cannot help but wonder sometimes if the applicant is receiving, in all cases, the necessary informed help to put him back on his feet, because I think it is a fallacy to think that just giving financial assistance is going to help people. I think that if one had able, friendly counselling, this could do a great deal in this respect.

I would like to give just an example of how these county units could help in easing the strain on people going into institutions. I am thinking in connection with the aged. If we had this kind of unit we would be able to help the older people who could come to this centre for counselling, and again at the centre I hope they would be able to advise them and provide additional acceptable housing.

I think also that from the centre we could co-ordinate church groups and others who might go and visit old people who are living in the community, and let them stay in the community which they love, rather than having them placed in institutions to die.

I think this same thing applies with respect to the young people as well, and to the children. The emphasis I am trying to make is that we must have a preventive approach.

Now, sir, in connection with this, I am sure some people will say, "Well, can you get staff in order to work in these units?" I think that we can get the proper professional staff if they see that there is a provincial administrative unit that they can work up in. There should be an opportunity for them to move up.

I think also, sir, that if this province is wanting professional staff in welfare, they would not have such strong binding ties with respect to students who apply for scholarships. As I understand it now, in connection with young people who enter the school for social work, they have to sign an agreement that they are going to spend a couple of years working for the province, and I think that this is too early to ask them to sign. We should wait until they have had an opportunity of working in the school and deciding which kind of field they want to go into, rather than making them sign right at the start. I think, sir, that in this way we can get professional people.

I would like to commend the hon. Minister of Health for his approach in connection with the problem of nurses. He has called a conference together of nurses and others to examine whether we really do have a shortage of nurses or whether there are areas in which other than professional nurses need not work, and I think the same type of thing could be done in the social welfare field. I would suggest the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) might follow through on what the hon. Minister of Health has done in this respect.

I talked in connection with a preventive service, and I would like to show that I had background in stating this from probably one of the most prominent social workers in Canada, in my opinion. She has been lauded by the government, she has been recognized by the city recently. Her name is Miss Bessie Touzell. She has suggested that the objective of any welfare service should be, and I should like to quote:

To assist any person who, because of material or social disability, is in need of economic or social aid to re-establish himself as an independent self-supporting citizen who can contribute his full share to the economic, social and political life of the community.

That is her first objective. The second is:

To work towards the prevention of circumstances that will create incapacity and dependency, or will prevent a person from contributing to the economic, social and political well-being of his community.

And the third objective in connection with services is:

When re-establishment and prevention have failed, to provide for the care and maintenance of those who, from whatever cause, are unable to care for and maintain themselves.

I would like to point out why she suggests these kind of approaches. She suggests that, although care and maintenance programmes without rehabilitation services of any kind very often come first in time sequence, we have recognized re-establishment where resources and skill allowed, and states that must be our first theme.

I think, sir, that this government today is probably not practicing that. I think that, for example, in connection with our Hospital Insurance Act surely it makes sense to sign an agreement with the federal government with respect to out-patients and diagnostic service. It seems to me, if we have an out-patient service, that we probably will not have as many in-patients, and is not that the thing we are trying to avoid?

Secondly, sir, I would like to suggest that, with our old people—and I realize that this is an immense problem and that there are many complexities with it—but I do think there has been this trend, rather than building up community services, that we place old people in mental institutions. I know that the hon. Minister has a very forward-looking advance programme in connection with mental health, and I am looking forward to seeing this implemented with personnel and so forth.

Let me just point out that I do believe there are older citizens who have contributed their days and their work to this province, and how do they finish off their last days? They are put in mental institutions.

I would like to refer to a statement made in the Ontario welfare council by Miss Bessie Touzell, in which she suggests that our Ontario Hospital population, 16 to 64 years of age, increased between 1941 and 1957 by 17 per cent. And for the age group 65 and over, the increase was 153 per cent. Of all the old people admitted, a third are discharged within a year, and most of these are discharged at some time.

Perhaps these facts, she says, indicate that, under different circumstances, many of these old people need not have been admitted at all. Economic and social pressures are acute for the great majority of the aged, and few, if any, services exist to meet their needs in the community. Are they being forced into mental hospitals by economic and social conditions?

Some minimum supervisory services, suitable housing, health and homemaker services, and job and personal counselling, are necessary to support and protect many in the crises that are normal to their age and condition. Such services might cut the admission rate, and also make possible discharge of large numbers using mental hospital accommodation.

Then, sir, she points to another situation in which she says that similar findings have come from a recent survey of the Ontario hospital population. There are more than 2,000 patients who do not receive or require treatment, nursing or supervision. The behaviour of this group is said to be controlled and their freedom unrestricted. Why, then, are they in hospital?

In part, at least, the answer to this question is also suggested by the results of the survey. No fewer than 7,382 patients—one-third of the total in hospital—have no contact with their families. It is in the interests of the community, as well as these patients, that the limited resources of families in this connection should be supplemented and strengthened by community services.

That is what I am really trying to emphasize. That in welfare we should emphasize having community services, try to keep people out of institutions, and keep them in the community.

Another area that I think we should be taking a serious look at, is with respect to retarded children. Now, I realize that this is a very serious problem. I realize that 3 out of every 100 children born will be retarded in this province. As there is this great pressure of overcrowding taking place,

I suggest this—and I should say that I am not sure how much is being done with respect to research and the causes of retarded children—but I would like to refer to Dr. Gail Walter, who has been an outstanding doctor with mentally retarded children in the United States, and he suggests, in an article in the Ontario Welfare Reporter; That the retarded children institute will not reach true hospital status through merely adding to the staff—only by individuals who give service in ever increasing areas of the patient's life.

They can reach true hospital status when they can, and do, provide a setting for detailed study of the individual patient developing not only a symptomatic portrayal of his condition, but more importantly, seeking to relate symptoms to more basic causes of the factors—genetics, psychological, physical and biological. Then treatment should and must follow rapidly, completely and involving all those areas indicated.

Well, sir, I do not know how much is being done in connection with trying to discover what are the causes of retardation. How much research is done at Orillia? I will be interested in learning that from the hon. Minister of Health.

Well now, I would like to look for a time at another area of welfare in this province, and I am speaking now of the children's aid society and their important role. I cannot help but feel that in children's aid societies in this province—and indeed all welfare in this province—a certain hodgepodge development has taken place.

Now I would like to say that the children's aid societies across the province are staffed by dedicated and hard working people, and that their boards are made up of public-spirited citizens. But I think that they are extending their services and their energy to the breaking point on behalf of over 11,000 children. Some of them, as we look at the situation, raise part of their finances through community chest drives. Some can only work within the reimbursement which is given by the provincial government.

This suggests to me, sir, that some are being able to do a broader job with respect to the welfare of children than others.

I would suggest to this province that it should be taking a good, realistic look at this whole approach of working on the welfare of children in connection with children's aid societies, and deciding what are the responsibilities of the government and what are the responsibilities which should be assumed by the voluntary aspect of children's aid societies. I think there is confusion there.

I would like also to look at children's institutions in this province. Unfortunately—and I know that the hon. Minister must regret this—we must have children's institutions. But I do not think that such institutions should be for the normal child because I do not think that growing up in an orphanage is the happiest memory of childhood for any normal child. Modern authorities agree with me on this. Yet I realize that the emotionally disturbed child, who cannot relate to the intimacy of the family, may have to spend some time in an institution. I would like to say that the children in institutions are the responsibility of the government, the government is acting as the parent for the children.

Now, I would like to ask the government these questions. What are its standards for care in an institution? Is it clear about this? How many children are in these institutions? Is it an excessive number in each institution? How many children are there to a supervisor? What qualifications has the supervisor to deal with the emotionally retarded children? —

I feel that the government should very seriously consider the welfare of the children who, through no reason or through no fault of their own, have become wards of the government. They are the parents of these children, and I suggest that they should look very carefully at their institution to see that they have the proper kind of staff who can work with emotionally retarded children. I suggest also that, if there is some youngster who is normal, they should certainly see that his youth is not going to be spent within an institution.

I would like to close in connection with The Department of Public Welfare by just taking a look at this Central Assistance Act. This is an Act that caught the imagination of the government, and hit the headlines of a number of papers. I was interested in the 1957 annual report with respect to welfare services and The General Assistance Act. It says in the annual report:

A basic pattern of welfare services has been gradually forged in Ontario, and should lead to the removal of about every type of distress requiring financial support.

Well, sir, I became quite interested in seeing what this financial support means, and the first thing I found out, with respect to welfare assistance, is that, under this General Welfare Assistance Act, there is a maximum of $50 which will be given to a family, to help them with the rent.

Then I realized that there were certain conditions in connection with getting the $50 and these are some of the conditions. They will give $17 a month for one room and then they will give $3 for each other room.

Now actually, what this means in connection with their advanced approach in giving assistance, is that a person can only get the maximum if he has 12 rooms in his house, and I say it is most unusual for a person coming for relief to have 12 rooms in his house.

Then I was interested in connection with the maximum number in the family who can get relief, and I found that they will provide relief up to 6 children and after that, if there were 10 children in a home, well it is too bad for them, because 6 is as far as they will go, and that is the only amount of relief they will give.

I would like to suggest to hon. members recommendations from the welfare council, under social security for Canada policy statements, adopted at the annual meeting of the Canadian welfare council in 1958, and recommendation 8 says:

The operation of all public assistance programmes should be based upon sound and clearly defined standards, particularly with respect to:

(a) the amount of assistance, the appropriate federal or provincial authorities should determine on a continuing basis the minimum costs of individual and family maintenance at a level consistent with health and decency and this implies, (1) a definition of what constitutes a minimum level of health and decency; a schedule of minimum requirements based upon this definition and related to the age and size of the family unit—

I want to emphasize the age and size of the family unit, because this government with its regulations is holding firm to the fact that they just must have 6 in the family, and any more will not get help, —and then the third aspect is the periodic translation, a minimum requirement into monetary terms appropriate to the specific community, which would form the basis of a public assistance programme.

Now sir, in connection with this point, I was interested to see whether welfare grants increased according to the rising cost of living, and I find that, between 1947 and 1958, this was the comparison between grants and the rise in the cost of living. Grants for a head with 6 or more dependents went up in that time by 2.9 per cent. The cost of living went up in that time by 50.8 per cent.

I suggest that, in the field of welfare, there is a great deal still to be done, and to be studied. And I do not think that the government can honestly say that they have reached new heights for their people, that they have a widening circle which encompasses almost all the people of this province in connection with the sharing of the prosperity, because I feel that there are many gaps in this.

Now, may I turn to one last department with respect to their programme of human betterment, and I am talking of The Department of Reform Institutions.

I must say that I find that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrope)—my impression from sitting here is that he is a most enthusiastic and vigorous person. I find that he said—I think it was inadvertently—that he was going to bring reform into reform institutions last year—and I think that requires a lot of enthusiasm, to think he will do that with the situation there is. And I congratulate him on a number of things he has done.

But I just thought I would like to read what his policy was in Hansard, and I must say that it took a little time to get what the policy was, because apparently it is the practice of the government that they should congratulate the previous Minister, and in this particular department there have been about 6 or so previous Ministers, so congratulations went into a couple of pages.

I just happened last night to be reading a small book on the world famous orators, and I noticed where a Prime Minister of England was talking about characteristics of Conservatives and he said, there are two characteristics that are outstanding above all others in the Conservative administration:

First of all their infinite cleverness which was not always clever, and secondly, an inexcusable fund of self-approbation. Of this last quality they are possessed of too much, I should say the Liberal party interprets as too much—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Has the hon. member the date of the speech?

Mr. Thompson: The hon. Minister can have the book if he wants it.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Just the date. Just the day of it.

Mr. Thompson: Yes, certainly. It was from a speech at the Albert Hall in London on December 21, 1905. And it was given to me—I would be very glad if the hon. Minister of Transport would like to read it, it is quite revealing.

However, in connection with the congratulations, I see it is just a practice that has been carried on by many Tory administrations—but, however, I was interested in reading his policy on treatment of the offender, and I must say that, as I read it, it was the most progressive penological approach that could be taken.

And then, I read further, and I decided to look into the situation with respect to just how effective it was in practice, and it came to me as quite a shock that, for example in 1958, that this department was meting out whippings 65 times to inmates of the institutions, that Ontario had at that time 12 offences for which they could give whippings, far more offences in connection with giving whippings than any other province.

Well, I congratulate the present hon. Minister of Reform Institutions in that he decided to abolish this, because whipping has been described, for example, by a sheik from Northern Africa who visited England in 1935, and who was an expert in torture, and he was quoted as saying this:

That I have given up other ways of torture, the lash is infinitely more efficient, it hurts much more.

And indeed we know the situation, how much effect the lash has on some of the inmates. We know about the situation written up by Pierre Berton, of this young boy who could not face being beaten again and who hung himself.

I was interested to note, sir, why the hon. Minister had abolished whipping so soon, that is in 1959. I might say many other countries had abolished it almost at the turn of the century. I wish the hon. Minister was here because I would like to ask him this, and I am quoting from a paper: He gave his reason for abolishing whipping in May 1958 in the Star and I am quoting:

The hon. G. C. Wardrope told an annual conference of Ontario association of the children's aid society that newspaper criticism of strapping hurried their elimination.

Well, surely it could have been his philosophy of treatment that would have hurried the elimination, not newspaper criticism.

I would like to give him some reasons why he should abolish whipping in his institutions.

In connection with flogging, there was a study done by the British investigating committee of 1938, and this is what they discovered: That flogging seems to increase on criminals a tendency to commit crimes of violence, and they gave statistics on this, and there is a similar study in one of the states, again where they studied men who had been flogged and men who had committed the same crime but had not been flogged.

They found that there was a higher proportion of those who were flogged who came back as recidivists for very serious crimes.

I think on that basis, for the protection of society, if he is not convinced on a humanitarian basis, that he should have abolished whipping and had been convinced in his own mind that he did this on a basis of treatment rather than newspaper reports.

Well, sir, I would like to look a little more closely at this Department of Reform Institutions. First, I would like to say that I was very interested—I have not had the opportunity of meeting a number of the hon. members—so I had to read from Hansard to find out what their philosophy is about reform, and I was interested in the remarks of the former member for Ottawa South (Mr. Dunbar) as he was reported in Hansard of 1959, at page 1141.

Apparently he had gone to Europe, and he had looked the situation over there, and he was complaining in the House that he found it very hard to get into a Borstal institution.

He said that we have the finest institutions in Ontario. And the inference that I got—and it might be quite unfair to him—is that it should be easier to get people into institutions. I think that this country has gone hog wild with the idea of institutional care for either offenders or for mental cases or older people.

I would like to point this out, that I wish that the hon. member, who had been over in Europe, could have had a look at the penal system in Holland, given it a little more thorough look, because in 1959, with a population of 12 million, there were only 1,800 in jail. Yet in Ontario, with less than 6 million, we had 11,240 transfers just within the Ontario reform institutions.

Now, are we really so advanced in our approach to reform in Ontario? Let us have a look at Sweden, and some of the figures. In 1943, for example, in Sweden, there were only 7 sentences for 6 years or longer, there were 314 who were sent to reformatories for young offenders, and there were 224 who were sent to correctional schools. But we seem to appear to stand firm on a policy of placing offenders in institutions.

I would like to ask the government if they think this is a sound approach, because I will quote some opinions from some authorities in this field. Thomas J. McHugh, for instance, should know something about this, because he was in charge of 21,000 prisoners in the state of New York, and was in charge of Sing Sing and 15 other adult institutions. He says:

My experience has convinced me that few individuals, if any, actually benefit from penal institutions.

What does the hon. Minister of Justice in Ottawa say? He says we are ashamed by the fact that 4 out of 5 inmates go back again.

And what does Mr. Dan Coughlan, the chief probation officer for the province of Ontario say? He says that over 75 per cent. of the people admitted to penitentiaries each year have been incarcerated before and that between 65 per cent. and 75 per cent. of those admitted to provincial reformatories each year have been incarcerated previously.

What is the situation in Holland? Less than 1 per cent. of those in prison in the Netherlands are recidivists.

Well, this raises the question, what is wrong with our situation in connection with reforming an offender?

Well, I would advise you, sir, that this is a very important question, because, as many of us know, if the young boy or girl, who comes up into the courts, should get deeply into trouble, if he should get bad habits by going into the wrong type of institution, that young fellow, by the time he gets to the penitentiary, is going to have cost us something like $25,000 according to the Archambault reports.

Just purely from economic reasons we should be taking a good hard look at why we are failing in connection with reform and what we can do about it.

I would suggest, that the first thing we must do, when a young person comes before the court, and if there is a chance of his going to jail—in other words, if he is up with an offence where there may be a jail term connected with it—that we should have the pre-sentence report in order that an intelligent disposition can be made with respect to this young offender. But if we can nip the situation right at the start, with the first offence, we are going to do a service, not only to the youth and the family, but we are going to do a service to the taxpayer. I have a bill in connection with this, and I will not go further on that subject.

The other question that I have is: Do we really have adequate community services in the community prior to putting the people in reform schools or institutions?

Now, sir, I notice in the annual report of The Department of Reform Institutions, the director of training says:

It must be remembered that, before a child is committed to a training school, community efforts at adjustment had been tried and proved to be unsuccessful.

Well, I think if this government had had a good look at Holland or Sweden, and at the kind of community service they had in connection with rehabilitating the offender, they would be very concerned about the lack of community service which they have.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

It being 6 of the clock, the House took recess.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Speaker, I think I was talking about community services which could reform people who have committed offences in order that they would not have to be sent into institutions. I suggest that this government should feel deeply concerned about its lack of such community services, if it compared the services we have here with those they have in Holland and Sweden, for example.

Now there are others besides myself who are concerned about the lack of community services. May I quote Burma Morlock who is the supervisor of institutions of The Department of Public Welfare for the provincial government. This is what was said at a children's aid society meeting on May 17, 1958, as reported in the Toronto Daily Star:

LESS SERVICES FOR BOYS HERE

Delegates were told that there is a critical shortage of services in Toronto for emotional and socially unadjustable boys between 9 and 19. Many of these boys are being sent to training schools with the result that schools are overcrowded with many who do not require this type of training.

I suggest that this government, concerning work with those who have come in contradiction with the law, should look at the fact that they should have many more probation officers. I suggest also that they should look at the fact that they do not have sufficient travelling psychiatric clinics, residential clinics to cover Ontario completely, and that there should be such psychiatric clinics to aid the juvenile courts and I suggest that, in the north, this government does not have this service for the courts.

I suggest also that The Department of Reform Institutions should look at the role that the children's aid society can play in finding foster homes for young people rather than sending them to institutions. I think there should be both financial emphasis on this by the department as well as encouragement to the children's aid society to find these foster homes. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that the department and the government should be doing much more in assisting and encouraging voluntary groups to establish probation hostels, such as the Salvation Army hostel in Toronto. The reason why I am suggesting these community services is because I am deeply concerned with the overcrowding in reform schools. I am sorry that the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr. Ward-robe) is not here; I could point this out to him.

In his 1958 report, it is shown that at Bowmanville, Cobourg, and Galt, the capacity was 485, but on March 31 they carried an enrolment of 635. That is an overload of 30 per cent. I think that these reform schools are far too large to do adequate work with young people, and that they should be broken down into smaller units.

I would like to congratulate the hon. Minister on the staff training programme which he has instigated in the reform institutions, and I understand that approximately 64 of his staff are now attending an extension course at the University of Toronto. But I would say that this is only a beginning.

He has to do much more than this, because I would like to re-emphasize that this government is acting in the role of a father to the young boys and girls who have come before the law. Many of them have come from mixed up homes, many of them are difficult and disturbed children. I think that this government has a very strong obligation to try to get the best and the most devoted staff with the best training.

I think they have many dedicated people in the institution but I question these points. Has the government done its best to recruit the most qualified personnel? Does it have any full-time psychiatrists? I emphasize full-time psychiatrists as well as psychologists and social workers, because I do not mean those who just sit on the side lines in some office in the institution, but those who are having a real influence in permeating the whole programme that goes on in the institution.

I ask also, how does the government recruit its staff for institutions? What kind of entrance exams are required for people who want to enter the institutional service? Is there an adequate administrative set-up in this correction field whereby a young man could enter as a supervisor, as a guard, and hope that—over a period of years—he could work up to superintendent?

I ask about the salaries both for professional people as well as for the guards and supervisors in the institution. I ask this because I feel we should be concerned, as these people are looking after boys and girls for whom the government has the responsibility as guardian to get them on the best track. Looking at Trillium I find that certainly in connection with a jail staff review that was presented by an affiliation of the civil service association, it quotes that in Brantford, research showed that in 1958 a labourer employed by the municipality was paid $1.62 per hour against $1.58½ for the jail guard.

The brief goes on to point out the discrepancy in paying more to the labourer with no responsibility, other than to conform to the simplest instructions under close supervision, and to the guard called upon to perform a variety of duties with a high degree of responsibility.

And then, in the same Trillium, there is again a reference to an article that was in the Toronto Daily Star of January 7, written by Munro Johnston. This article states that there are more than 500 prisoners in Ontario jails who have never committed a crime. The conditions surrounding their confinement are shameful, yet most of them are decent law-abiding men and women. The unfortunates are the governor, turnkeys and matrons in 37 county jails in Ontario. A scanning of salary schedules applicable to county jails today can only bring astonishment that governors and guards alike have not indulged in an orgy of corruption as a means of augmenting them.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Who is the author of that?

Mr. Thompson: The author is Munro Johnston. It was written in the Star of January 7. I think it would be worthwhile for the hon. member to look at it.

Mr. Grossman: I thought the hon. member would give him the chance of an extra plug.

Mr. Thompson: I realize that The Department of Reform Institutions is not responsible for the county jails, but I hope that the hon. Minister will clarify the question of salaries paid to people he is recruiting for institutions.

Now, I would like to talk just briefly about the change of responsibility that is coming in connection with incarcerated persons between the federal and the provincial government. I would like to say again that the only way I can find out the philosophy, or the policy, of various hon. members of the government at this time is to read past Hansards. I must say that I do not agree with the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence), and I am sorry he is not in his seat so he could perhaps refute my point of view. But in the Hansard of March 13, 1959, on page 1147 he is quoted as saying:

If we are only looking after prisoners who have been sentenced for up to six months, these people are going to be very temporary as far as we are concerned, and there is not much we can do about them.

Well, I disagree strongly. I think that there is much that we can do for those people, and I think that the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) would agree with me on this, because I notice that he has recently been reported as saying that throwing drunks in jail does not cure them, and that he wants an extension of the alcoholic foundation. I should hope so—500 being treated out of 76,000 by this alcoholic foundation.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to point out that in Norway, with approximately 40,000 alcoholics, little Norway has 15 different institutions for the treatment of alcoholics and has 800 beds.

Well, what will be the type of offender with whom the province will have to deal when change of responsibility takes place? Presumably it will be the petty offender, first offender, the alcoholic, many with limited ability, with emotional instability, with a social insufficiency. In many cases it will be a marginal economic history, probably a single rather than married person. We want to watch and be sure that we have the appropriate treatment centres and staff to deal with such offenders, because it is of little use to have a diagnostic and a research centre if, after deciding the best treatment for the people who are sent to this centre, this government will not have the appropriate clinics with which to deal with them, or else have just a couple of clinics which will be overcrowded.

I feel that there is very definitely a necessity for the province to move much more aggressively into the extension of alcoholic clinics.

I feel also that they should move into developing more probation homes. I say this because I noticed in the hon. Minister's speech of last year that he pointed out that, of the 11,240 prisoners admitted on convictions, some 2,692 were under 25 years of age or 23 per cent., and 1,526 were under 21 years of age—just about 13 per cent.

I think if we look at the human betterment programme of this government, that we will realize that no matter how dedicated the staff is, we do need a more imaginative approach on the part of the government, a more imaginative policy which will emphasize prevention rather than waiting until the last moment and having institutional terms.

I had wanted to talk briefly about hospital insurance, because I have been getting a number of calls in my own office from people who are unemployed at this time. These people have made payments into hospital insurance, but in the situation of being unemployed, they cannot pay any more into it. These older people who have received letters—I have one case of a person who has received a letter, on February 15, which was warning her that she should get her dues in for hospital insurance by February 16. I know of other cases like this.

In fact, I think this whole situation with hospital insurance—of getting these dues in—is in a state of confusion.

I would suggest this, and I speak personally, that if we have 96 per cent. of the people signed up—and I think I am correct in quoting the percentage—then we should study the minority that have not signed up. If it is found that this group has not signed up because of religious grounds, or that they have not signed up because of some other personal conviction, then that is fine. But if it is merely a matter of not signing up because of neglect, then I would think that the government should seriously consider making it a compulsory system. It would certainly save the bureaucracy that is used in writing all the letters and warnings about sending in dues.

I say this also because to me the health of the people is very much like education. I think it is vital for the nation and for the province. I think it is vital today that we have a healthy people, particularly when we think of the tension-ridden world that we have, and the need—just for example—in defence that we should have healthy people.

We think of the loss to our economy, to our labour force, occasioned by people who are ill. It is quite clear from the Canada tax foundation report, which I quoted before, that our people in this province and nation are obviously not receiving the necessary medical attention.

What about the cost of medical treatment? The Canada tax foundation has shown that people with lower incomes need more medical services, yet they are not availing themselves of these services. Traditionally before, of course, higher rates were paid by richer hospital patients and these higher rates helped to pay for the services given to the poor. But I feel that today it is the average working Canadian who apparently is holding off from seeing a doctor. He has a sense of pride and independence and he does not want to accept services which he feels that he cannot pay for.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that this worries the medical profession, because they are men under oath who are dedicated to the service of healing. The last thing they would wish is that the doctor-patient relationship be disturbed through the concern that the patient might have in paying for such services. Or, on the other hand, through the concern that the doctor, who after all has to live as well, might have in collecting his fee.

Now, I know that doctors across Canada have tried in many ways to bring their services to the maximum of the people in their communities, and I also know that governments have tried to help in this as well.

When we look at the present system across the country, we see private organizations, in co-operation with industry, providing for insurance or pre-payment of medical costs by people who are willing and able to pay, with benefits limited to those who can be financed by the premium. We see provincial or local provisions for the costs of medical care of the indigent due to the separate programme. We see provincial provisions of certain forms of medical care which are therefore excluded from private plan benefits, federal provision of medical services of certain groups, and so on.

My conviction in this, and I am speaking personally, is that a complete comprehensive prepaid medical programme should be brought about, if possible, with full co-operation of the medical association.

But I would like to emphasize this, that if it is impossible to arrange a comprehensive prepaid medical plan without government funds, then where government funds are put into it, it would be necessary to have a commission or some body that reports to the government.

I would hope that this commission would include representatives of the medical profession, and I say this because I know that we must insure the principle of taxation with representation. And I know that this is a principle that every citizen, doctor or otherwise, believes in if he believes in responsible and representative government.

I stood for a comprehensive prepaid medical plan in my election campaign and I shall continue to push for this at every opportunity. I urge the government to seriously and immediately examine this and implement such a programme.

Mr. Speaker, you may say that the heights of prosperity and humanity which I am suggesting are unreasonable, and I do not agree. I think it is possible to help the people who are in a situation of being unable to help themselves through circumstances beyond their control, and I think this is financially possible. I feel that it can be done if this government would emphasize community services, preventive services, rather than this emphasis on costly institutional care.

I repeat that it is cheaper to have community services and preventive services to the taxpayer in the long run. It also provides dignity to the individual citizen.

But as I talk of these welfare services, I would like to emphasize that I think the greatest gap in our society, and in our province, today is the unemployment situation, because from unemployment comes poverty, slums and degradation of the human spirit. I think this government has a role to play in connection with the unemployment situation.

I admit that unemployment, to a large extent, has been the responsibility of the federal government. I admit that we are disappointed with the federal government's attitude to take responsibility. We had hopes of bigger things from the hon. Prime Minister of Canada (Mr. Diefenbaker) who had stated that "No man shall suffer from unemployment as long as I am Prime Minister." We hoped that he would not be presenting us with valentines each year; the valentine of Avro and now the valentine of Elliot Lake.

I think that there is a job that the hon. Prime Minister of Ontario (Mr. Frost) can do. The hon. Prime Minister believes in expanding the economy. I have been reading his brochure in connection with this. He places an emphasis on this.

Well, I say let us see more action. Let us see more hospitals built. We have the money, as the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) pointed out. In the 10-year period we have still got $65 million that we have not spent on hospitals.

Let us see the Bloor subway built to help the unemployed. Apart from the transportation benefit from this, in that it would transport more people than 3 arterial highways, there is the fact of helping the unemployed today. Let us, I suggest, prime the employment pump with public works, appropriate public works. Also let us, Mr. Speaker—I make the plea to this government—let us all work to attain these new heights, not only in prosperity but in humanity.

Mr. W. A. Stewart (Middlesex North): Mr. Speaker, may I, in rising to take part in this debate, first of all add my congratulations to you, sir, with all those already so well expressed, on your recent appointment as Speaker of this House to which you bring much dignity. You have enjoyed a long period of membership in this House which has been marked by your popularity among all hon. members as party Whip, prior to your appointment as Speaker.

I well remember the wise counsel and kindly interest you offered to those of us who were fortunate enough to be elected in by-elections during the many years you served as Whip.

May I also congratulate my good friend and neighbour, the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Robarts), on his appointment to the portfolio of Education. Those of us fortunate enough to come from that great area, known as the hub of southwestern Ontario, wish him well in his new post. We firmly believe he will be a most capable successor to a very outstanding hon. Minister, (Mr. Dunlop) who, during the most rapidly expanding period in the long history of The Ontario Department of Education, provided the youngsters of our communities, both rural and urban, with the finest system of education in all Canada.

In such a rapidly developing province as Ontario, it must continually be our objective to provide an even better system of education than we have had in the past. It is encouraging to note that suggestions, offered a year ago in this House by the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Morrow) and myself, to decentralize secondary teacher training in Ontario, are to be implemented starting with a summer course in the university cities of London and Kingston this year. Our new hon. Minister is to be commended for this action which will provide facilities for high school teacher training on what might be described as a local basis for eastern and southwestern Ontario. Undoubtedly, many local university graduates in both areas will take advantage of this opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, while on this subject of education, may I respectfully suggest to the hon. Minister of Education that serious consideration be given by his department to a standardization of courses and textbooks in the basic subjects of mathematics, English—including spelling, grammar and literature—history and geography.

Many parents, indeed teachers themselves, have called to my attention the facts relative to this point, and they are simply this: There are so many courses of study and textbooks available for any grade, in either elementary or secondary schools, that it might be considered unusual to find students in any given grade from various schools, even in one municipality, using the same courses or textbooks.

In a province where people are moving from one area to another, as they are in Ontario, this problem of what might be considered too great a variety of textbooks surely poses a substantial financial obligation on parents or school boards, in providing textbooks in the basic subjects, to which I referred, which are unlikely to be the same in the schools which might be involved in a move from one community to another.

Certainly there are those of us who will argue that a variety of textbooks provides a teacher with a broad source of information from which to prepare courses or lessons. However, it does seem to me that it is time our educational officials sat down and selected a standard course of study in the subjects I have mentioned for all grades, and a standard set of textbooks to correspond.

We might recognize, Mr. Speaker, that there is a difference in the areas of this province that we might zone, if you will, in the preparation of courses having to deal with science or vocational subjects. For those individual zones, I would suggest that it be left to The Department of Education to work out, with the local officials on a local basis, suitable courses of study and suitable textbooks for their particular area.

Complaints have come to me on numerous occasions regarding the quality of textbook construction. Apparently some books today do not last very long. We are told that the covers break off too easily, that the books fall apart, sections fall out and become lost and the book becomes useless. Perhaps this may be due to rough handling by students.

However, I would suggest that youngsters of today are not any more reckless with their school books than were we of a previous generation. In those days a set of textbooks, approved and authorized by the department, would sometimes serve an entire family on a hand-me-down basis, I am told. It is a rare case indeed today to find a used textbook fit for sale.

Mr. Speaker, there are several hon. members of this House who are professional educationalists. I do not pretend to be one of those professional educationalists. But, as a parent of a family of 4 school-age youngsters, and having heard these matters discussed regarding standardization of courses and textbooks by other parents and board members, as well as teachers, it seems to me there was some great merit to the system that was in vogue a few years ago. Perhaps it is time our educationalists realized that the problems I have mentioned here are, I suggest, affecting thousands of families in this great province.

Surely, from the wide selection of available textbooks in the basic subjects I have mentioned, agreement could be reached on standardizing our educational system. I know we have the most outstanding men in the department that can be found anywhere in this great country. I am confident, if these suggestions are worthy of their approval, that costs of education, to say nothing of needless frustration, can be greatly reduced through standardization and improved quality in textbook construction and preparation of courses.

Mr. Speaker, I wish through you to convey my congratulations to the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) on the establishment of the first diagnostic and research centre for retarded children in Ontario at the Beck memorial sanatorium in my riding—rather, I should say, the riding I have the honour to represent in this House. This is surely a great move forward in the field of human betterment. No longer is it good enough that we should try to provide only custodial care for retarded children—surely our interests should be channelled as well toward research into this ever-increasing problem.

We have listened to a very fine and a very long address by the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) in which he mentioned this very fact. I could not help thinking, when he was speaking of this very thing that I have mentioned—research into the causes of retarded children and this great problem that confronts us today—that perhaps he and I should suggest that to all hon. members in this House should be extended an invitation to go out to Byron and visit the Beck memorial sanatorium, where The Ontario Department of Health have already established this research centre, and to which just last week the first patients were admitted. The hon.

member would see there the very things that he mentioned this afternoon.

Under a staff of some 6 or 7 doctors that are there, and under the research technology that is being handled by Dr. Murray Barr, these children—in which we all show so much concern—are being watched, they are being studied. Indeed, research is going into the whole system of that particular child to see if there is any connection that can be found that will help us to control or correct this terrible disaster that does strike families so often.

So I feel, Mr. Speaker, that we have very definitely accomplished something in the establishment of that centre.

Much has been said in this House during the present session regarding the shortage of accommodation for mentally retarded children in this great province. We all know there is a shortage of accommodation—a shortage which I submit, Mr. Speaker, we must continue to do everything possible to correct.

The Ontario society for crippled children are to be congratulated for the great work they are doing for all crippled children, and particularly for those who show possibilities of rehabilitation up to age 19. It is then the rehabilitation foundation takes over—its primary function is to enable disabled adults to earn a livelihood.

It is gratifying to learn that consideration is being given by the hon. Minister of Health, the hon. Minister of Education, and the hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) to the problem of providing suitable living accommodation, with medical and nursing care, for young adults to continue their education in a sheltered environment in which they might very well be encouraged to become at least partially self-supporting. Think of what this means to these young people, who want so greatly to be as other young people, when they are provided the opportunity to be self-respecting and useful.

The number of these young people, mentally retarded or physically handicapped or both, who annually leave our institutions for handicapped children, is not great. But, unfortunately, there is no place at present for them to go—surely old people's homes, or chronic hospitals are not the answer. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, we encourage our hon. Ministers to pursue this problem to its solution.

The committee on education was recently told by Mr. Howard Beattie, director of special services, Ontario Department of Education, that Ontario provides the greatest help in education to handicapped children on the North American continent. Our school for the deaf at Belleville is a truly great institution rendering a wonderful service. The school for the blind at Brantford, with an enrolment of 225 is a remarkable accomplishment. Indeed, The Department of Education is providing full courses, and we are told that some of the students are taking courses at the Brantford collegiate.

Special courses for handicapped children are now in operation in several areas of the province. Local school boards, with classes of students whose IQ is considered to be below 50, are eligible for grants of $250 per year per child who attends half a day, or $500 per year for children who attend all day.

Great credit is due to local organizations and service clubs throughout Ontario for the establishment of schools for retarded children. Some 60 such groups have been formed, and are now receiving grants equal to 90 per cent. of the operating costs, not including transportation which is usually provided by the local service clubs. Of the 60 groups, 32 have received capital grants amounting to 30 per cent. of the approved capital expenditures—the balance of which is paid by local municipal councils and organizations.

Mr. Speaker, I suggest we have come a long way in recognizing this great problem in our educational system. But I wish to add my word of agreement to the ideas so well expressed by the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) and the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman), when, in the committee meeting on education, they suggested that handicapped children be treated as are other normal children in our community in the matter of grants paid by The Department of Education toward capital costs, instruction and maintenance for educational purposes.

Mr. Speaker, it is my understanding that there is an arrangement of matching grants between federal and provincial governments for rehabilitation. For a handicapped or disabled person to be eligible for aid, under this arrangement, there must be a reasonable prospect of successful rehabilitation to gainful work. It is this aspect which indicates the economic concept of this approach. No move is encouraged to be made to assist a disabled person unless there be this "reasonable prospect of successful rehabilitation to gainful employment."

Contributing to this decision is such a factor as job placement—for an employer must still be prepared to accept this employee when trained, or it is obvious that rehabilitation is not achieved. No one is employable simply because he has the intellectual capacity to understand what is presented to him and thus to acquire knowledge. He must also have the skill, either in fluent and acceptable verbal communication, or in the manual dexterity of written communication, to do something of dollar value with this knowledge, or with useful hands and tools create some product.

Those who are not acceptable for rehabilitation are those with severe physical disability who have, in many cases, a normal or above normal intellect. What they have to sell to an employer cannot be put to practical purpose because of these things.

If we were to limit our aid to the handicapped, especially to the physically handicapped by cerebral palsy, to those who will be gainfully employed, we would help only 2 out of 10. Authorities agree that 80 per cent. are unemployable—and are likely to remain so despite our greatest efforts.

Rehabilitation is a much misunderstood word. Far too long it has been thought to mean the restoration to gainful employment of the sick and disabled. This is an important aspect. But I submit, sir, it is equally important to rehabilitate the older person—who has perhaps suffered a stroke or some other crippling illness or disease—to the point where he is able to dress or feed himself, or to engage in even very minor activity.

Much rehabilitative work is being done by various interested people and groups. But it is an unco-ordinated activity—a hit-and-miss sort of pattern. It is my belief, Mr. Speaker, that this should all be drawn together under one directing authority—the logical captain of the team, I think, is the doctor. He is the first to see the patient. He should be the last to assure that the patient is rehabilitated—that is, restored to normal or as nearly normal living as is compatible with his residual health and ability.

Some time ago the hon. Minister of Health outlined a plan whereby all medical students, and all the many and different disciplines and professions interested in rehabilitation, should be trained during their undergraduate years in this concept of total rehabilitation for the whole man.

This plan, or one akin to it, deserves the careful thought and consideration of the government, since it has been proven that good rehabilitation is one of the best investments a nation can make.

Having said this, Mr. Speaker, I would submit that, since rehabilitation is primarily a health matter, the direction of any plan should come under The Department of Health.

Mr. Speaker, what are we doing for these physically handicapped yet mentally normal children? May I point out that, at the present time, there is no place for these children or young adults to be cared for in an institution. Many are being cared for in their homes, which truly is the best place for them. But what happens to the child if either, or in some cases both, parents die—where does the physically handicapped child go then? Obviously, not to an institution for the mentally retarded or to any of our institutions designed to provide education for those capable of rehabilitation.

Again, what becomes of the handicapped child who can be cared for as an infant, but who grows physically to the place where his mother is no longer able to care for him because the child has grown too heavy to handle in the home? Cases are known where the home has broken up, due to the obvious financial and mental strain, and other children, as well as the incapacitated one, have become wards of the community.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, the time has come when we who have been elected to represent all the people of our respective constituencies should give our wholehearted support to providing a home for these unfortunate young people, who, through no fault of their own, find themselves in the helpless position I have just described.

With other hon. members of the London area, I was invited a few weeks ago to attend a meeting of the cerebral palsy parent council of London and district. We were told of the great work being done across the province by this group and others interested in their problems. It is true that the public conscience has been awakened to a greater degree than ever before by the fact that people recognize cerebral palsy as a disability which can happen in any family, not something to be hidden, as in the past. If we get it out in the open, we may be able to do something for those families who have been so grievously afflicted.

With this thought in mind, Mr. Speaker, the London cerebral palsy parent council, among other requests, specifically urged the provision of residential care and treatment for all severely handicapped children, and particularly for all untrainable severely handicapped. Such a place for custodial, medical and nursing care should apply to children from 4 to 16 years of age, with suitable accommodation in sheltered workshops and residential vocational training for young adults whether or not they can ever be rehabilitated to an employable condition.

Earlier in these remarks, Mr. Speaker, I referred to the hon. Minister of Health and the diagnostic and research centre for retarded children which is now under process of establishment in buildings at Beck memorial sanatorium, taken over by The Department of Health from the London health association. The potential possibilities of the centre just mentioned are fascinating. Situated on a beautiful site, this great institution has all of the necessary requisites of an ideal location for further providing for the needs of the handicapped children for which no accommodation presently exists.

Might I therefore, Mr. Speaker, respectfully urge the hon. Minister of Health to seriously consider providing, at least to begin with, one of the several fine buildings at Beck for residential custodial care for these physically handicapped children in the London area? The research centre is a first of its kind in America—let us have another first in recognizing that, while provision has been made for the mentally retarded, no provision has been made for the untrainable, physically handicapped, and in establishing a suitable home for them at Beck. This home could very well serve as a pilot project for further expansion of this service in other areas.

The province, in its various institutions, takes care of a mentally disturbed, or mentally retarded, child from public funds if the parents are unable to contribute to the child's maintenance. But with a severely physically handicapped child there is no help or accommodation presently available. The parents of these children are all contributing, through general taxation, toward providing education and public health services for normal children, as well as helping to bear the cost of providing institutions for the care of the mentally retarded.

Does it not seem reasonable that parents with physically handicapped children ask why they are not considered? Mr. Speaker, I respectfully suggest every child is entitled to consideration of his needs in our community—the home, the school, the church, the recreational opportunities necessary for the normal development of normal children.

We as legislators, representing communities across the length and breadth of this great province, should be keenly aware of the necessity to have the essentials of community living which I have just mentioned.

Our whole economy is based on succeeding generations of normal children developing into normal adults who—in providing for themselves—provide the essentials for the development and progress of our country. In other words, Mr. Speaker, our cost of education, indeed all community services for our youth, are actually investments in the future. This surely is the economic approach.

In the case of these children for whom no provision has been made—the untrainable physically handicapped—is it not time we stopped thinking like economists, and started to think like humans?

It is my sincere belief the people of this great province are ready and willing to make the extra financial sacrifice necessary to implement the suggestions made in these remarks. As their representatives, we cannot do less than to accept the truth of the statement by that great American, Abraham Lincoln, when he said, "All men are born equal in the sight of God"—and are, therefore, entitled to equal consideration.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): Mr. Speaker, may I offer you, the only government member of Essex county, my heartfelt congratulations on assuming the honourable position of Speaker of this House? The government has appreciated the years of faithful service that you have given to your riding by giving you this merited recognition.

Essex country has been honoured in the past by having two other Speakers: The late Major James Clark, KC, in the Hepburn government, and Rev. M. C. Davies, who was a government member as recently as last year.

I want to wish you, Mr. Speaker, the same success that they have had, and even greater success.

The riding I represent, Mr. Speaker—Windsor-Sandwich—is both urban and rural. The border area, for that matter, has a balanced economy between industry and agriculture. Essex and Kent counties have a higher per capita production on farms than anywhere else in Canada. Crops are more abundant from these two counties than from 5 of Canada's 10 provinces. They have never experienced a complete crop failure because of mild weather and diversification.

I mention these agricultural features because these multi-million dollar crops provide raw goods for Windsor's industries. Farmers who raise cattle help Windsor's meat packing plants to produce products worth $18 million a year. Wheat accounts for another $7.8 million in cereal products and corn for another $18 million. Various canneries produce tinned goods worth $6.5 million. Soy beans, sugar beets, tobacco and other crops represent a return of many millions of dollars to the growers.

Greater Windsor's population, which was 150,650 in 1951, has risen to 190,880. It is Canada's tenth largest city and the fifth in the selling value of factory shipments.

The people of Windsor, Mr. Speaker, are industrious, so much so that they produce more in one year than do 6 of Canada's provinces combined. Contrary to the belief that it is a one-industry town, where at one time it was 75 per cent. automotive, as far as production was concerned, it is now 60 per cent. automotive and 40 per cent. non-automotive.

It is a city of small industries. Of its 450 industries, 400 employ fewer than 100 persons, and while Toronto has 38 auto parts establishments, Windsor has 28. It is a pharmaceutical centre as well as a food processing centre. It also produces $67 million a year in carbonated and alcoholic beverages.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, we can supply you the hangover as well as the cure. It is erroneous to believe that Windsor is not acquiring new industry. In the last 9 years, 105 new industries have been established in metropolitan Windsor. It also ranks fifth in industrial expansion; in fact $309 million were spent in plant expansion in the past 8 years.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before going on to expound the great assets of Windsor, I want to say that we are determined to achieve even greater things, and this government can help by means of legislation. Not more than two miles away from our border lies a great metropolis of more than 4 million people. This great city of Detroit, with its suburbs, stretches over an area of 35 square miles. Many people live as far as 30 to 40 miles from their work in downtown Detroit. These people would be only too willing to come and establish themselves in the Windsor area if provincial and federal relations were eliminated or relaxed.

For instance, an American coming by car to our Windsor area cannot use his car other than for transportation from his place of work to his domicile. If he stops to buy a package of gum or razor blades, he can be prosecuted. This to me, and to many people of Windsor, is certainly a silly law. Instead of attracting our American friends we are driving them away.

Up to 1945 there was no problem along this line, but such is not the case today. We urge the government to change these laws and let these people establish themselves in Windsor and create a new industry for us.

Succession duties also hurt, Mr. Speaker. They are so high that this province is the most expensive place for anyone to die. Taxes are so high they almost border on confiscation, to quote Mr. W. L. Clark, the editor of the Windsor Daily Star from one of his recent columns. If succession duties were reduced, it is likely a large number of Americans would change their mind and come to live in the Windsor area.

Many who work in Detroit would be closer to their employment than they are at present—miles out in the suburbs. A man works hard all his life so that he can leave something for his wife after he dies, yet she is being penalized because this government takes such a large amount of that estate in succession duties.

And why does not the government rewrite the succession duties laws so that they can be understood? I dare any hon. member of this House to read them and explain them in a very intelligent manner without taking days and searching volumes to find out just how they apply in individual cases. Lawyers are clever individuals and pretty cool, but even they hold up their hands in horror when clients go to them with succession duty problems.

The removal of these restrictions would create a new industry in Windsor which, I am informed by the Windsor chamber of commerce and the industrial promotion committee, would employ more than 4,000 people, directly or indirectly. This would certainly be an economic shot in the arm for the entire Windsor area.

I have pointed out, Mr. Speaker, the agricultural and industrial features of Windsor. May I say that we have progressed in other fields, too.

There were 9,631 new homes built in the metropolitan area in 8 years. A new $1.5 million collegiate was built in 1958, and an addition is being built at present. Another one was started in the township of Sandwich West in October last year. We have built a new city hall. An auditorium, which is a show-place along the waterfront, will be opened in May.

We have undertaken a $200,000 annual street lighting programme. We have expanded our parks, built new streets, and carried out a well-planned programme of street resurfacing, sidewalk and curb repairs.

We have embarked on a federal-provincial-municipal redevelopment programme which, when completed, will give a new look to the downtown area, and the district immediately to the east of it.

All this has been accomplished, Mr. Speaker, by a well-planned programme, and still Windsor's per capita debt is the second lowest of the 5 largest cities in Ontario—only $148.31 per person.

I know that certain hon. members of this House may say, Mr. Speaker, that this accomplishment is not so great in comparison to that which has been done in their own areas. But we think that this is outstanding considering that we, in the most southern part of Canada and of the province, have been considered as being more or less American.

When we have wanted certain buildings and institutions from this government we were told "yes" around election time. However, after previous elections, when the government had their 3 hon. members returned in the Windsor area, they forgot all about these promises. For too many years this has happened.

The people of Windsor and the surrounding area have grown weary of hearing that we are at the end of the line. They do not want promises any more, they want action. The result of the last election proves this, when the government lost two of its three seats. They have one seat and that, I may say, was almost taken away.

Why was a school for retarded children being built at Cedar Springs, miles from the nearest railway? Where were the sitting members of the government from the Windsor area when this was being discussed? Why was it not built in Essex county?

A provincial building for the downtown area has been discussed for months. The former member of the riding I represent was then the Minister of Public Works. Did he do anything about getting this building for the downtown area? And now, two years after, I find that the building is still in the planning stage. I wonder if this is government in action?

I say that a teachers' college is a must for the Windsor area. It is urgently needed. The number of teachers in the province who are from Windsor is indeed great. Yet, if they wish to attend a teachers' college, they must go to London where the nearest one is located. This has placed a hardship on those who wish to become teachers.

I know of several bright students who were forced to conclude their education at the grade 13 level because they were financially unable to continue their ambition to become teachers. They could have carried on if there had been a teachers' college near their home.

Requests by the board of education and the Windsor separate school board to The Department of Education for a teachers' college in Windsor have never received any action. All we received were promises and more promises.

What I found at the education meeting recently was that we come after Sault Ste. Marie and Hamilton. I also found out that, from 1908 to 1955, nothing was done about building teachers' colleges in the province, and that in 1955 they started to build one a year. Where was the government when they should have been planning?

Earlier I made reference to the great city of Detroit across the river from Windsor. It is the automobile capital of the world. Many cars are now moved from the factories to the dealers by auto transport. When they are shipped to the eastern United States, these trucks cross over the border at Windsor and go on to Fort Erie and enter the United States again at Buffalo by way of highway No. 401 to highway No. 3.

If highway No. 401 were completed from Tilbury to London, the Windsor area traffic would be increased to a great extent. All we have at present are 30 miles of this highway from Windsor to Tilbury. It is a beautiful stretch of highway, but far too short, and I say it will be obsolete before highway No. 401 is fully completed.

Many Windsor and district industries would find it of great help if they could ship eastward on highway No. 401. It should be a great transportation route, but all we have is a small sample of it.

Windsor is the most popular port of entry for Americans coming into Canada for a visit. Certainly the highways we have are not an attraction or an invitation for tourists.

Then I may say, Mr. Speaker, that we pride ourselves on The Ontario Department of Travel and Publicity, but we must provide a much more gracious welcome to our American friends. The Department of Travel and Publicity has set up two small buildings, one at the Detroit-Windsor tunnel and the other at the Ambassador Bridge, where tourists may stop and receive information on travelling. The American tourist certainly does not get a good impression of this province when he visits those buildings. They should be larger, more attractive, and open for longer periods of the year.

A few years ago, as chairman of the traffic committee of Windsor city council, I visited Ann Arbor, Michigan, to inspect their parking facilities. Ann Arbor is renowned in the United States, not only because it is the home of the University of Michigan, but also because of its parking facilities. They had built parking garages on 2-, 3- and 4-floor levels. This has been done at no cost to the municipality or to the state. They had been financed through revenue-producing bonds.

With municipalities facing the important problem of parking, and blocked by the high cost of acquiring land in the downtown area, the erection of garages on tier level would be one way of solving this dilemma. If legislation were enacted to permit municipalities, or civic parking authorities, to issue revenue-producing bonds, this would be of immense help. It would not force municipalities to issue debentures for these capital costs, thus safeguarding their credit for other needed work.

What has been successful in the United States could also be successful in this province. But it certainly needs the imagination which is lacking here.

For the past 10 years I have had the honour and the privilege of being a member of Windsor city council. I have, along with many other municipal elected representatives, wondered when the government would make certain changes in its laws with regard to municipal relations. This has been recognized by the Ontario chambers of commerce. Let me quote what they say in their policy statement and resolutions adopted at their 49th annual meeting held at Kingston on May 6, 7, and 8 of 1959:

Municipal government forms that part of our democratic system which is closest to our people, and in many respects can provide the most efficient, economical and human administration. It is recognized that, to do so, municipalities must be financially independent. This necessitates their having the proper taxing and licencing powers and subsidies to enable them to perform the functions allotted to them by the province.

Their recommendations to the government are these:

The chamber believes that the allotment of functions and systems of granting subsidies should now be the subject of a comprehensive study and review. The chamber recognizes that phenomenal growth in population, industrial development, education needs, and urbanization demands such as water, sewage disposal, parking, public recreation and hospital construction, have created acute problems to which the government has given prompt and sympathetic attention.

Necessarily these problems have been dealt with individually, but it now appears that emergency treatment of individual problems has created a very complex and cumbersome pattern.

The chamber believes that it should be possible, with advantage, to reappraise this system of municipal taxation and licencing as well as provincial subsidies to municipalities. The chamber is of the opinion that such improvement can be brought about only after a thorough study of all the pertinent facts and of the methods employed in other jurisdictions. It believes that the type of certain examination required should be conducted by, or with, the assistance of experts, and that all evidence and reports should be public information.

The chamber therefore recommends the appointment of a Royal commission as the most appropriate body to investigate and report.

Meanwhile, I say, Ontario municipalities carry on with a postcard government; there is no autonomy, no leadership.

I wanted to say something in regard to The Liquor Control Act, but the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) covered the topic quite well the other evening.

However, one point which he did not mention, and which causes some concern to dispensers in my area, is this silly law which prevents a person from having two glasses of beer in front of him. He must purchase one glass at a time, and empty that one before he can have another. Yet one can buy a bottle, not quite empty his glass, and still have another bottle in front of him. This to me is certainly foolish.

How often does one stop on his way home from work for two quick glasses, but is detained because the waiter has to follow silly regulations? Definitely there has to be a thorough investigation of these liquor regulations. And I do agree with all the recommendations made by the hon. member for York Centre.

Ontario Hydro has been criticized greatly on the floor of this House. We in Windsor, as I mentioned previously, have embarked on a $200,000 annual street renovation and new lighting programme. We financed this programme through the Hydro divisions of the Windsor utilities.

After paying for the new poles, the lights, the installation, the services, the maintenance, we still had to pay a 2 per cent. depreciation on the poles installed. Civic officials have protested but to no avail.

I would just like to quote from a brief presented by the treasurer and the commissioner of finance of the city of Windsor to the officials of Hydro, along with the general manager of the Windsor utilities, Mr. Tekoe, when they appeared in front of Mr. Duncan, the chairman of Hydro. Now, it asks here, why is the depreciation reserve necessary for street lighting fixtures? Paragraph 1 of the brief states in part as follows:

The customer in this case, the corporation, should be asked to bear all the utility annual cost for lighting the streets. Present total charges for street lighting include the following components;

1. A charge for power delivered to the street lighting equipment.

2. Capital charges on the equipment used exclusively for street lighting consisting of: (a) a rate sufficient to retire the outstanding capital on a 20-year serial debenture basis at the prevailing interest rate; and (b) depreciation at the approved rate used by the utility for general purposes.

3. The actual cost incurred in operating and maintaining the street lighting equipment.

In our opinion, item 1, item (a) of 2, and item 3 cover the full cost of street lighting to the utilities commission including interest on the outstanding capital. Therefore, item (b) of 2 is an excess charge over the actual cost to the utilities of operating the street lighting system.

This depreciation charge is, in effect, a duplication in part of the capital repayment which is held by the utilities commission to apply towards the future replacement of the capital works on which the depreciation charge is made.

Now, I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that in 1956 on a capital expenditure of $221,522, the depreciation at 2 per cent. was $4,430.44. In 1957, the city went over the $200,000 allotment and spent $324,857, and the depreciation charge on that was $6,497.14. In 1958, they spent $505,859, and their depreciation was $10,117.18. In 1959, this had risen to $792,349, and the depreciation was $15,846.98. Up to the end of 1959, just depreciation charges were $36,891.74, and to continue the programme to 1969 the city will have spent $418,661.54.

I contend, Mr. Speaker, that this is an extra charge on a municipality that is not necessary at all.

Mr. Speaker, I want to speak on a subject which has been my occupation for the past 26 years, namely, education. Before proceeding with the subject, though, I do want to congratulate the new hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) on his appointment and wish him great success. I also want to pay tribute to the hon. Minister without Portfolio (Mr. Dunlop) for his work in this field in the past. I know that I am joined by all the hon. members of this House in wishing him many happy years of health and happiness.

I am certain, Mr. Speaker, that if the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) had received from his hon. leader (Mr. Frost) the support he should have enjoyed, Ontario, as my fellow-teachers will agree, would have moved farther forward in education. In short, the deficiencies in education rest not on the shoulders of the hon. Minister from Eglinton but on the shoulders of the hon. leader of the government.

Mr. Speaker, education is the greatest challenge the government has to meet today, and must continue to meet in the future. Never before has there been such a need for persons skilled in the arts and sciences and technology. This means that the youth of our province must have the opportunity of obtaining the best education possible, if Ontario is to remain healthy, prosperous and progressive.

Unfortunately, the very foundations of education in this province are shaky and weak.

We need only to look at the United States to see the new emphasis being placed on education in this fast changing world. Federal, state and municipal expenditures for teachers, scholarships, bursaries and primary and secondary schools and universities are almost unbelievable.

In the past, we have been smug in our belief that our system of education was far superior to that of the United States. I, for one, contend that this is not so.

For example, North Carolina, Georgia and West Virginia—3 small states—demand that an elementary school teacher possess the Bachelor of Arts degree, and that a secondary school teacher have a Master of Arts degree. Unfortunately, Ontario cannot make a similar boast.

Furthermore, attendance at Canadian universities is not proportionately as large as attendance at universities in the United States.

In the hon. former Minister of Education's report of last September, he predicted that in 1959 the elementary school enrolment for this province would be 1,084,598, an increase of 57,000 pupils. He also predicted an increase of 18,000 students over the 1958 secondary school enrolment of 222,075.

Recently, I was told by officials of The Department of Education that 85 per cent. of grade 8 pupils enter grade 9. This is a figure I question. On inquiring what percentage complete grades 12 and 13, I was told that they did not have these figures. I say it was because they would not show a very pretty picture.

This does not bear out the province's boast that it leads in the field of education. I say emphatically that this government does not realize there is a crisis in education.

And how successful are secondary school graduates who enter university? They have been doing poorly. The failure rate of first-year students at Canadian universities has been 40 per cent. This shocking situation prompts some challenging questions.

Do students take a university education lightly? Hardly. Many go to university only as a result of a sacrifice by themselves and their families. They do not intentionally throw away a hard-won opportunity of obtaining a higher education.

Does the university put too much emphasis on sports or on campus activities rather than putting the stress on learning? This could be quite possible in some universities, where instructors feel it is no concern of theirs whether or not the student applies himself.

Are our students not receiving adequate instruction in elementary and secondary schools to prepare them for a university education? That probably is the main reason.

The manner in which this province turns out teachers, on an assembly-line basis, without sufficient training to enable them to impart knowledge the way well-qualified teachers should, has much to do with this sorry state which education is in. I think that this has been the biggest fault of many shown by this government.

We were told by officials of the department that there are at present 5,951 teachers in training in 9 teachers' colleges in the province. Of this number, 4,200 or about 70 per cent. are expected to graduate. Each year about 4,000 teachers leave the profession, leaving approximately 200 teachers to fill the demands of new classrooms. This is indeed a very, very small number.

The government has failed to provide the qualified teachers necessary to meet the demands of an increasing school population for the last 15 years because they made, by example, a poor case for teaching.

When our normal schools or teachers' colleges should have been preparing qualified teachers, the government has encouraged grade 12 students, upon graduation, to take a 6-weeks' summer course and then has graduated them as teachers. Last summer, some 800 of this group entered in the first-year course and 700 in the second-year course.

What happens to these 6-week teachers? They are placed in charge of classes of 35, 40 and 45 pupils. Some of them have even been placed in charge of grades 9 and 10—grades in which, only a few years previously, they themselves were students.

Is this fair to the people of Ontario who are paying such high taxes for what they have been led to believe is an educational system of which they can be proud? Is this fair to the 6-week teacher, who may suffer a nervous collapse because he or she has not the training to cope with the responsibilities arising in the classroom? If these teachers do manage to remain in the profession, how can they expect to advance with their limited training?

In short, I ask, where do we go from here?

If this province offered to pay the living cost for one year of those wishing to attend teachers' college, grade 12 and 13 students would have some encouragement to become teachers—teachers much better qualified than those who are judged qualified after a 6-week course.

A boy or girl forms a like or dislike for school in grades 5 and 6 of the elementary school. If we have competent teachers for these grades, and then carry on with qualified teachers in grades 7 and 8, we will soon find that more children of this province will enter and finish high school.

Mr. Speaker, I figure The Department of Education must be revamped, and I am supported by the president of the Ontario secondary school teachers federation. Too many of the top officials have been away from teaching far too long to form policies and recommendations suitable for today. The competent administrator is the one who keeps in close contact with the one he has to supervise and the policies he must carry out.

Now, let us look at the administrator. I use the term administrator, although it is admittedly clumsy, as a device to encompass the people who cannot be classified as classroom teachers—the assistant heads, the heads of departments, the vice-principals, the principals, the special consultants, the supervising principals, the assistant superintendents, the superintendents, and the directors of education.

And let me make clear the fact that I do not propose to cast the administrators as villains. But I feel compelled to make the statement that there is, particularly in the larger systems, an unfortunate overemphasis on administration. One might almost call it a fetish of administration.

Administration is emphasized because the sharp rise in school population focuses attention on practical problems. Trustees beset with expansion problems look to their administrators for solutions. The administrators, coping with building programmes, expanded curricula, and a teacher shortage, all at the same time, are overworked and cry for assistance.

New administrative positions are created and these, in turn, seem to create still more administrators. Each one of the new administrative positions can be justified. But the educational hierarchy grows, and each person's importance in the scheme is determined by his distance from the classroom. The farther away he is, the more important can he conceive his position to be.

What a contrast to the European tradition where the academic head of a school is still thought of as a teacher. The headmaster of a great English public school or of a grammar school, the rector of a European gymnasium, can still find time to teach one or two senior classes.

The president of a university, even on this continent, can often do the same. The late Sidney Smith, when president of the University of Toronto, always took one class in law. Cyril James of McGill usually teaches a freshman class because he makes the acquaintance of the incoming students and retains the outlook of a teacher.

Headmasters used to be able to do it in Ontario. But today, no matter how much they wish to do so, they find it almost impossible to follow the old tradition. Close supervision of teachers, a mass of paper work, and the necessity for "good public relations" keep them out of the classroom. Administration is emphasized; education is the poorer.

The emphasis on administration can be explained. It is, nevertheless, a dangerous development. A false sense of values is created. The competent teacher, no matter how much he enjoys his work, is led to believe that entry into the field of administration is the only path to success.

The supreme irony is that the competent teacher is seldom, or never, consulted by administration about his own specialty so long as he remains a teacher. If, however, he makes a partial or complete break from the classroom, he can then begin to speak with authority on all kinds of educational problems.

There is no necessity to restrict himself to his own field. The "expert" in this province is not necessarily the scholar, the author, the earnest student of education; he is more likely to be the man who has succeeded in persuading some school board, somewhere, to make him an administrator.

Administrative posts appear to carry with them full authority to make pronouncements on any aspect of education.

In order to keep the relative importance of administrative and teaching posts in proper perspective, it is well to keep two important principles in mind. The first is that administration exists for only one purpose, to make learning and teaching easier. The second is that whatever is desirable, from an educational point of view, must be made practicable by administration. Too often, administrative convenience sways educational practice.

I would like to mention here one classic example of "fuddy-duddy" thinking that is going on in The Department of Education.

Results of matriculation examinations are not released until late in August. This means it is far too late for the student to decide what university he or she wants to attend, and also too late for universities to determine what students it will admit, and to whom it will grant scholarships. All grade 13 examinations written by students in Ontario are sent to Toronto to be corrected. What is expected in the answer paper is given to teachers correcting the papers. The teachers are brought here from all over the province. Why could not the London papers be sent to Ottawa teachers to correct, Toronto papers to Hamilton and Windsor, and so on? Papers could be exchanged. Results could be returned to their proper destination. This could be done in 3 or 4 weeks. This would eliminate a great delay.

Because of the lateness of these matriculation results, one leading Canadian university—McGill—is conducting tests with entrance examinations used by leading colleges in the United States. Results of these tests would correspond closely with the examinations set down by The Department of Education.

If Canadian universities conduct their own tests to determine a student's ability, just because The Ontario Department of Education is following along in a horse and buggy, will this government still stand up and say how proud it is of its educational system?

I say, Mr. Speaker, that this government should be forced to write 100 times on a blackboard: "We are ashamed for allowing educational policies to lag so far behind the times."

The department is also guilty of allowing too much laxity in the courses of study. A pupil moving from Ottawa to Toronto in January finds he has either lost part of a year or he is ahead part of a year.

There is no uniformity in courses. The textbooks used in one city or town are different from those in another city or town, forcing an extra expense on parents who must buy these books for their children.

There should be basic subjects in both elementary and secondary schools on a province-wide basis. These subjects should be decided upon by teachers' associations because these are the people who come into close contact with the work.

The curriculum, whether it be for elementary or secondary schools, should be practical and deal with problems facing Ontario students today. Particular stress should be placed on English and mathematics. The cultural and other optional subjects should be decided by local choice. I may say, Mr. Speaker, that French could be one of the optional subjects in the elementary school.

Mr. Speaker, with the implementation of a province-wide basis curriculum, the re-introduction of high school entrance examinations is possible. These examinations would not be patterned after the old entrance tests of years back, but they would cover such subjects as mathematics, spelling and composition.

The same system could be established for grade 12 students in secondary schools.

For the past few years, this province has had a difficult time selecting school inspectors. At present, we have inspectors who have never been a principal of a school and who have had but 6 or 7 years' experience as teachers. Why?

It is because the salaries The Department of Education have been offering are far too low to attract highly qualified principals.

Here, too, is another place where government thinking has not kept pace with the times. Let me quote some of the salaries of these school inspectors. They are: $9,000, $7,200, $8,599.92, and I may say I see the name of my own inspector over here, who has had more than 35 years' experience as an inspector of schools, receiving—after the end of that time—$9,000 a year. That to me is certainly not recognition for the work that such a man is doing for this province.

In January, 1959, the Ontario school trustees council presented a brief to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and the hon. Ministers of the cabinet. In it, they recommended one step to offset the teacher shortage. That is, that fees charged for the training of teachers be eliminated, both at the elementary and secondary school levels. This would go a long way toward easing the shortage.

There are recognized universities at Ottawa, Kingston, Toronto, Hamilton, London, Windsor, Sudbury and Waterloo. However, if we live up to the principle of equal educational opportunities for all, junior colleges or small universities should be provided in such centres as Fort William, North Bay, Peterborough and Niagara Falls.

Government grants should be provided to students in need, so that they could receive at least their first two years of arts, or some equivalent.

We have offered scholarships and bursaries to top-ranking students, but we have forgotten the deserving students who have averages between 66 and 75 per cent. These students should be assisted as well. I remember reading that the great man, Sir Winston Churchill, certainly did not achieve, while he was attending school, an average of 75 per cent. or over. I wonder if we are by-passing such talented people?

Junior vocational schools are operating in Ontario. However, there are too few. These schools would help solve the educational problems in a great many centres, if the province would only co-operate.

Schools of this type can eliminate pupils of 13, 14 and 15 years of age in grades 6 or 7 who are being kept there because it is known they would have difficulty passing grade 8 examinations leading to high school.

In junior vocational schools such trades as barbering, shoe repairing and carpentry are taught. Although some students do not have the mental capacity to adapt themselves to a regular curriculum, they should be trained to find their place in society.

Members of the teaching profession have asked that legislation be enacted so that the calculation of superannuation will be based on the 7 years during which they received their highest salary instead of the last 10 years of teaching, as is the rule today.

Civil servants' superannuation is based on the best 3 years of their wage earnings. Teachers believe it is only fair and just that they receive the same treatment.

In the past 10 years, the government has increased its grants to boards of education, but, in spite of this, municipalities are still carrying the heaviest financial load.

In 1958, Ontario educational costs were $328 million. Provincial grants totalled $130 million and municipal expenditures were $198 million. This means the government is paying less than 40 per cent. of the cost of education in this province.

In some urban areas, this percentage is much lower. In fact, Ontario's contribution for education is one of the lowest when compared with the expenditures of other Canadian provinces.

I would like to quote to hon. members figures which were taken from the report of the Royal commission on education in the province of Manitoba. Now, taxpayers in Ontario's municipalities are paying the second highest per capita cost of municipal services in Canada. This is the cost of education: The province of British Columbia pays $36.64 per capita cost, the municipality pays $17.50. Alberta province pays $36.77, the municipality pays $19.36; in Saskatchewan the province pays $18.82, the municipality pays $31.43; in Manitoba the province pays $14.34 and the municipality pays $31.06. In Ontario the province pays $19.50 and the municipality pays $27.10.

I could carry on about the other provinces but the figures I have given indicate that municipalities in Ontario are bearing the second highest per capita cost for education in Canada. In 6 provinces the provincial government pays more than 50 per cent. of the cost of education; in British Columbia and Alberta the provincial government pays approximately 66 per cent. of the total cost of education, and in Ontario the provincial government pays approximately 40 per cent. of the total cost.

Municipalities are faced with heavy demands for services and costly projects. More and more of them are unable to carry on services as efficiently as they should, and property owners have been paying more and more in taxation. The limit has been reached in many centres.

If municipalities could be relieved of some of the financial burden for education, they could operate as they are supposed to function. The province must give them more financial assistance.

The Ontario mayors and reeves association and the Ontario school trustees council have presented briefs to the government asking the province to assume a greater share of the cost of education. This the province must do.

The grant system could be changed to bring about fairer government contributions.

For instance, if a classroom has 40 pupils, and the average daily attendance drops to 32 or 30 pupils, a school board finds its grant reduced. Why? Because grants are based on the average daily attendance. But the cost of operating a classroom is the same for 30 pupils as it is for 40 pupils; the teacher's salary is the same; heat, light and other services must be maintained.

It is foolish to punish a school board because school attendance drops. I suppose if an epidemic hit a city, and the schools were forced to close, the school system would go broke because it could receive no grants.

As for grants for teachers' salaries, I would say that teacher's salaries should be based on certification instead of a basic rate. This would encourage boards to have better qualified teachers. If this were done over a 5-year period, with the boards receiving more as the teachers became better qualified, the board would be providing a greater incentive for a teacher to seek better certification. It is one way of obtaining a better class of teachers.

The acquiring of knowledge is not only reading, 'riting and 'rithmetic. The body as well as the mind must be developed to have a balanced individual. Allowances should be given also for gymnasia. Costs of the municipal portion of the building should be met with debentures guaranteed by the province and financed through government-approved agencies and not discounted on the open market. This would lower the cost of financing.

More emphasis should be placed on buildings with two or three stories, instead of having them all on a one-storey level. This would reduce property costs in urban centres.

The government should realize that it has a great responsibility to the people of this province—a responsibility it is not meeting. In 4 out of 5 cases, the average man or woman will say that his or her main concern is the proper education of the children and the welfare of the family.

Who will determine the future of this province? It will be the youth of today. We must have an educated population to keep up with the swift-moving times. But the policies of this government have made Ontario a laggard instead of a leader in the field of education.

Monsieur le président de la chambre, le district que je représente contient une grande population canadienne-française. Je manquerais à mon devoir comme représentant de cette population si ayant les moyens de parler français je n'adresserais pas quelques paroles dans leur langue.

J'aimerais à rappeler aux membres du gouvernement provincial que dans ma région les premiers colons de la province sont établis à Sandwich dans la vieille paroisse de l'Assomption. En réalité la paroisse de l'Assomption fut établi avant qu'il y ait une paroisse à l'ouest de Montréal. Sur le terrain même de cette église se trouve l'Université d'Assomption qui aujourd'hui s'agrandit de jour en jour. Nous à Windsor sommes très fier de cette université. Elle rend des services qui ont élevé la culture, la connaissance et la mentalité des gens de toute l'arrondissement de Windsor.

Les noms tels que Ouellette, Drouillard, Marontette, Reaume, Langlois, Marion, Gignac, Pelletier et Parent sont des noms de familles de pionniers dans ma région. Leurs contributions au développement de la municipalité sont incalculable. Ils font tout en leur pouvoir pour conserver leur héritage, leur langue et leur foi. Ils demandent que tout soit fait pour que ceci ne leur soit pas enlevé. Ils ont établi leur classes bilingues, leurs association de Saint Jean-Baptiste, leurs cercles littéraires leur sociétés de Richélieu, leur caisse populaire.

M. le président, ces canadiens-français sont un groupe dont je suis fier d'en faire partie. Jamais ils ne causeront des inquiétudes à la province. Voilà déjà trop longtemps ils se sont établis dans cet endroit pour perdre ce qu'ils ont travaillé si fort pour conserver. Ils ont joué d'une liberté qu'on trouve dans un pays comme le Canada. Ils sont heureux de voir que l'Anglo-Canadien s'intéresse à apprendre le français. Ceci est un avancement pour des meilleurs relations entre les deux races officielles du pays. J'inviterais les membres de cette chambre de faire tout en leur pouvoir pour encourager ce mouvement.

Vous avez peut-être remarqué que dans mes remarques sur l'instruction publique de la province je n'ai pas fait aucune remarque sur ce sujet de classes bilingues. La raison c'est que nous sommes satisfait. Le directeur en chef de l'instruction française de la province fait un bon travail. Je veux le féliciter. J'aimerais à féliciter le journal Le Droit d'Ottawa ainsi que les autres journaux hebdomadaire de la province, pour leur bon travail et de leur souhaiter un plus grand succès dans l'avenir.

It is my fond hope, Mr. Speaker, that one day, when our youth assume our places here, they might address your successor of that day fluently in the languages of our land.

Mr. A. Carruthers (Durham): Merci beaucoup.

Mr. Speaker, on rising to take part in this debate, my first words must be those of sincere appreciation to all hon. members of this House for the cordial, friendly reception which I have received from them. The many courtesies extended, and the co-operative spirit so manifest by all, have been of great assistance to me in helping me establish myself in this new environment.

Secondly, may I offer, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. mover and the hon. seconder of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne my sincere congratulations. The hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) has a record of service in his community which is very highly recognized. The ability and personality of the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) have won for him, I am sure, Mr. Speaker, a long and distinguished career in the political life of this province.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Who is it that the hon. member is speaking about?

Mr. Carruthers: And to you, Mr. Speaker, may I also extend, along with many others, my sincere congratulations on your appointment to your most high position. From the friendly, efficient and impartial manner in which you are presiding over the affairs of this assembly, it is indeed apparent that you fulfil those duties in the highest traditions of that office.

To the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) may I offer my congratulations on his appointment to his responsible position, and the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Robarts) on his appointment to that most important of all portfolios, that of Education.

May I also at this time, Mr. Speaker, offer a word of appreciation to the former holder of that office, the hon. Minister from Eglinton (Mr. Dunlop) whose services in the cause of education are recognized, not only by teachers and school boards, but by everyone interested in the cause of education throughout this province.

It is indeed an honour for me, Mr. Speaker, to represent the historic and key riding of Durham as a successor to Major John Foote, VC, a distinguished soldier, a former Minister of the Crown, and a man highly regarded not only in his community but, I am sure, by his compatriots in this House.

Mr. Speaker, it is a particular honour to be a member of the government at this time, when it is under the leadership of an hon. gentleman (Mr. Frost) who is one of the greatest, if not the greatest, Prime Minister this province has ever known. At a time, Mr. Speaker—

Applause.

Mr. Sopha: I would hate to see a vacancy occur.

Mr. Carruthers: At a time, Mr. Speaker, when this province is undergoing its greatest era of prosperity and its greatest development—a development unsurpassed anywhere in the world.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would be remiss if I did not make some mention of my hon. friends to the right. I have listened with a great deal of interest, and a great deal of patience, to their long and extensive speeches.

It is rather confusing to me, Mr. Speaker, why there is this necessity for such long and drawn-out speeches. Abraham Lincoln's speech at Gettysburg, a speech which will be remembered as long as history remains, lasted only a few minutes. One of the greatest speeches of all times, the Sermon on the Mount, only took a few minutes. Mr. Speaker, it only takes a matter of minutes to read the whole story of the creation.

I have listened on numerous occasions here to long speeches of criticism of government policy, sometimes, but rarely, constructive. May I say to my hon. friends, who form this buffer state between us and the official Opposition, that they have my sympathetic understanding.

Mr. Speaker, I had a dream the other night and in that dream I beheld myself ascending the golden steps which lead to the pearly gates. This, Mr. Speaker, would be an impossibility for a politician of my type and it was merely a dream.

But in that dream, I saw myself reaching the summit, and there I was met by St. Peter in his glistening white robe and he said to me, "Carruthers, where did you come from?" and I said, "Durham county." "Well come on in," he said, "heaven is a beautiful, wonderful place but I am afraid you will not like it as well as your former abode."

Now, Mr. Speaker, this was only a dream, but there is indeed a real element of truth in it, because I consider that I come from one of the finest parts of the province of Ontario, and live among one of the finest groups of people to be found anywhere in Canada.

This is an historic riding originally settled by United Empire Loyalists, Scottish and Irish settlers. It has, of late years, increased in numbers by good immigration sponsored by this government, the immigration of many new Canadians who have brought with them new ideals, new skills and—above all, Mr. Speaker—a sincere desire for freedom. This is an historic riding, not from the fact of battles fought or victories won, but from the peaceful development of farm and industry, by a people endowed with a pioneer spirit and who have instilled that spirit into all their accomplishments.

Here in the villages of Tyrone and Enniskillen was born the great General Motors Corporation of Canada, and here in 1852, in the village of Newcastle, began the great Massey-Harris-Ferguson corporation.

Here lived and worked, Mr. Speaker, one of the world's greatest hymn writers, Joseph Scriven, the writer of "What a Friend We Have in Jesus." Today Durham is proud of her historic sons.

Mr. Speaker, we are greatly honoured by the fact that the former Governor-General of Canada, Mr. Vincent Massey, has recognized Durham as his future home. He is a man who gave to that high office a new and greater importance and is a person who has won the love and respect of all people wherever he went.

Mr. Sopha: Now say something nice about a Conservative.

Mr. Carruthers: This is an industrial community, for along the lakefront of this riding may be found some of the most diversified industry in Canada, including the manufacture of rubber tires and rubber products, files, conveyors, bathtubs, atomic metals, leather goods, and a great variety of other products. This is the home of the famous Eldorado Mining and Refining Corporation, and Port Hope may be considered still at least the uranium capital of Canada.

To the north of this lies a great diversified agricultural industry, from the bountiful apple orchards in the south to the famous Durham potato fields in the north. Because of its favourable climate, soil, and freedom from early frost, this area has now become one of the province's most important tobacco growing areas.

Here we now find farms, which at one time operated only on a marginal basis, selling for and valued as high as $75,000.

This industry has brought a great new source of wealth, a great new source of assessment, and has provided a greatly increased amount of work for its people.

Durham has also some of the leading dairy and beef farms of the province and, of late years, turkeys and other poultry have been added as a source of income. It is indeed gratifying to see the advantage the farmers of this area are taking of this government's marketing legislation and the collective marketing of their products.

It is also worthy of note that the farmers of Durham are taking the lead in the field of farm product advertising, which I sincerely believe, Mr. Speaker, is one of the answers to the farmers' problem.

The farmers of the riding which I have the honour to represent do not seek in vain, or hope in vain, but within the framework of this government's marketing legislation they are studying their problems, have taken their hats off to their forefathers who gave them their land and this opportunity and, with their coats off to the future, are answering the challenges of today.

May I at this time, Mr. Speaker, offer a note of appreciation to the present hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass), and to his department, for the great assistance and development of the highway system in Durham county. The 3 major highway developments taking place in this area at present, together with some secondary roads to be developed in the future, will place this county and this area in pace with its great industrial development.

The extension of highway No. 401, from Newcastle to Port Hope and beyond, will eradicate a dangerous bottleneck at Newcastle, and will put an end to the present congested traffic on highway No. 2.

This part of the province, Mr. Speaker, used to be one of the potential flood areas of the region. In the past, the town of Port Hope and the lower valley of the Ganaraska have suffered much from this great destructive force. But now, thanks to the Ganaraska conservation authorities, and with the co-operation of the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) and his department, this vast watershed of approximately 20,000 acres has, to a great extent, been reforested, providing not only flood control but a great sanctuary for wildlife and a source of income now in Christmas trees and pulpwood.

It is now an area of much beauty, and flood control has also resulted in the raising of the water level in that locality which had reached a dangerous low.

Durham, bordered on the northwest by Lake Scugog and on the east by Rice Lake, is now becoming an important tourist area. The two highway developments which are in operation at the present time, in the centre and north of the riding, will be of valuable assistance in the development of these areas in the future.

The rapid development of Durham has brought with it problems of housing, zoning, education and all the other problems which accompany growing pains. These, however, are being dealt with in an efficient and in an intelligent manner by our municipal bodies.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak briefly in connection with education. This appears to be education night in this assembly, and I listened with a great deal of interest to the hon. member for Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Belanger) when he criticized government policy, and there are several points, Mr. Speaker, with which I can agree.

But due to the vast and rapid development of this province, I do not think that this government can be criticized for the great shortage of teachers which has taken place over the past few years. I think congratulations are in order to the hon. former Minister of Education and to the present hon. Minister for the marvellous way in which they have attempted to solve this teacher shortage.

The former speaker criticized the 6 weeks' course for teachers. But, Mr. Speaker, from practical experience, I do commend the department very highly for the course of action which they took in that regard. It has been my privilege to help select a number of these teachers for our own community. On every occasion, they have been a great success. We have 3 or 4 of these teachers on our staff at the present time and we are well satisfied.

Not only that, but from a practical point of view for the teachers themselves—for these students themselves—it is a wonderful training. Under the guidance of experienced teachers, these people gain a knowledge they will never gain at college, and the following year, when they do go to college, they will have had the advantage of a great deal of practical experience. In every case, they tell me, that experience has been invaluable to them.

We know it is not the final solution to the teacher shortage but it has had wonderful results.

Criticism was made, I think by the hon. member for Nipissing (Mr. Troy), the other day in committee, that this government has no policy or objective, or does not appear to have any objective, in their educational programme. I would like to disagree with that because I firmly believe, from practical experience, that this government has an objective and a policy in their educational programme.

I would like to take a moment or two to outline what I consider to be the policy of this government in regard to education.

What are its aims?

First I would say, Mr. Speaker, it is to teach our youth to think clearly, independently and courageously. There was a day not too far distant when much of our thinking was done for us. We looked up to certain individuals in our communities for guidance and regarded them as intellectual giants.

But that day, Mr. Speaker, is fast disappearing. Those people towered over their fellows like mountain peaks rising out of the sea. But, as the standard of living rose and our educational opportunities increased, this gradually changed and, as the level of intellectual knowledge rose, these people began to shrink to our own level. No longer are they regarded as intellectual giants but, in many cases, they are now considered odd.

How have these intellectual giants been replaced, Mr. Speaker? Have we learned to think more clearly and courageously? I am afraid not.

Instead of trying to excel, the tendency in the immediate past has been to copy. We pattern our lives after our neighbours and friends. In other words, we tend to keep up with the Joneses.

Our lives tend to be controlled by advertising, television, movies and social clubs, and in turn these powerful mediums are being controlled more and more by fewer and fewer monopolies. Few people dare to express unorthodox ideas. It is more and more difficult to have men and women engage in public life because of the very things which we see going on from time to time in this Legislature.

Therefore, one of the first aims, and one of the main objectives of this government in education is, and should be, to teach the youth of this province to think for themselves. This aim is most apparent in our English programme, and I would recommend that everyone take the opportunity of studying some of the present-day textbooks, some of the present-day readers, using the manual as a study assistance, and discover the objective of this government in that regard.

The second most important aim, Mr. Speaker, is to inculcate the spirit of tolerance. There cannot be democratic stagnation. The free flow of ideas is the lifeblood of democracy, and the true democratic society is the result of the pooling of these ideas.

Now, this is where our educational system receives a certain amount of criticism from the fact that we have what appears to be an abundance of textbooks. But the idea behind it was to give freedom to the expression of ideas.

We saw an example of this in the education committee the other day. The city of London had presented a course of study in science. These courses are coming in from all over, and these ideas when pooled will give us a better basis for our educational programme.

The third aim, Mr. Speaker, is to develop the ability to earn a living. This used to be the prime aim of education, and today it has lost none of its importance. For today, with automation being introduced more and more into our industrial life, and with the opportunities for unskilled labour becoming fewer, education must play an ever increasing part in the fulfilling of this objective. We may postpone a bridge or a road for a year or two, but we cannot postpone a child's future.

The fourth objective of this government, in education, is to develop good health. Formerly our youth were taught almost a strictly hygiene course. But today the objective is to teach, not only an understanding of the body physically, but an understanding also of the emotions resulting not only in a greater knowledge of one's self, but also in a more sympathetic understanding of others, as to the reason why they act as they do.

The fifth aim, Mr. Speaker, is to teach a basic knowledge of good and evil. In this day of material progress, there appears to be an increasing disregard of Christian virtue. It is most important, and it is the objective of our system, to teach a knowledge of good and evil. This is done today through a vastly improved reading and history programme, and in this we have a great deal of competition from newsstands, movies, and television.

There is good and bad in everything, but the good is not distinguished from the bad, and the bad—like scum—always has a tendency to come to the top. Therefore it is one of the duties of our schools, it is the objective of our system of education, to teach these basic virtues—and what better basis can we get than that of Christianity, which teaches us to be perfect even as our Father in Heaven is perfect?

The sixth aim, Mr. Speaker, should be to teach the proper attitude toward recreation. The working day of the individual is becoming shorter, with the result that he or she may have more leisure. The problem of the school is to teach the proper use of this leisure time.

There is too great a tendency today to be watchers of sport rather than participants, so today the child is being taught that there is also pleasure, not only in sport, but pleasure in work that is directed towards improvement of the home; improvement of surroundings; and improvement of ourselves intellectually. The young people are being taught to develop the characteristics for a happy family relationship, tolerance for the other members of the family, and respect for parents. They are taught to develop good citizenship and an understanding of, not only the privileges but also the responsibilities, of a democratic way of life.

Finally, they are taught to develop a concept that education is a continuing process beyond school.

Too many of our pupils, as has already been pointed out, have a tendency to put a period at the end of their formal education instead of a comma. We live in very uncertain times and, as we look to the future, all of us face two possibilities: The ending of this civilization, such as it is, or its final flowering and fulfilment in greater progress and peace to all mankind.

Education is our only hope, and indeed it is our challenge of the future. This government has recognized that fact, and has adopted a policy of spending on our wits a sum at least comparable to that which we are spending on luxuries and explosive defence. Last year this sum amounted to over $172 million. By doing this, if trouble comes—and God forbid that it should ever come—mayhap our wits may save us.

We are investing, Mr. Speaker, billions of dollars in seaways, power projects, and nuclear weapons of defence. But I maintain that the financial page of any newspaper cannot portray an investment equal in value to the youth of this country. All the potential wealth of our mines, our forests, and our soil cannot equal the potential power of our youth. They have more potential power than the St. Lawrence seaway, Niagara or Chalk River.

The potential idea in the mind of one single youth may some day change the pattern of our whole existence. These young people rely on us for the present, but we shall have to rely on them in the future. We must develop their powers, therefore, to the full, not only for our sake, but that our children and our children's children may help make this country, this province, and the rest of the world, a better place in which to live.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that I have been quite general in my comments. But I did not feel that, as a new member of this House, I would be justified in making any statements which might conflict with knowledge that I might gain hereafter. Many of the things which I have heard discussed in this House have been repeated in committees, and I do not like to thresh the straw more than twice or thrice at the most.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I was simply going to take out on a lot of hon. members what they have taken out on me, but after that speech I think I will temper justice with mercy and forget about it.

I guess the first thing I will do, Mr. Speaker, is congratulate you and, in fact, just second all the other congratulations which have been given tonight, because it is getting late and past most of our bedtimes.

But I do sincerely want to congratulate the new hon. members and all those who received new positions in this House.

Hon. members know that I first came to this House in 1945, and since then I have heard a great number of addresses. Some of them were certainly long and tedious. The hon. members talked about their back fences and their front fences, and they were ambiguous, and may I say they did not follow any order of sequence.

Although I have not the education that a great number of hon. members here have tonight, and could not comprehend what they were trying to say, I would certainly like to have looked into their innermost parts to find out if they understood what they were saying themselves.

It reminded me of an incident which occurred in the House of Commons in Britain a few years ago, when the late King George was on the Throne and the Labour party was in power. The Prime Minister of the day rose and delivered a rather long and more or less monotonous address, and he looked over at the leader for His Majesty's Opposition, Sir Winston Churchill, and he saw that Sir Winston was apparently asleep. So he appealed to the Speaker and said: "The hon. leader of His Majesty's Opposition is asleep, showing contempt for this House." Immediately Sir Winston replied, "Mr. Speaker, I wish to God I was."

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Mr. Speaker, I think the first clap was enough. I mean I really do think that.

Now, I want to say the next thing with all sincerity, and that is in speaking of my staff. I may say that the magnitude of my vocabulary is altogether too limited to express the loyalty, as well as the efficiency, which they have displayed during my year and about two months in The Provincial Secretary and Registrar's Department. I love every one of them. That is in the proper manner. I hope I may repay them in some measure some day. Probably I may take them fishing, who knows?

Mr. Speaker, I feel that at the outset I should tell the hon. members for this House that The Provincial Secretary and Registrar's Department has a much greater magnitude than most of the hon. members realize. As a matter of fact, I did not realize this until I entered that department.

I might say this tonight, in tempering justice with mercy, that I am going to deal with two things only. The first is what we may call our main branch, the company branch of which my Deputy Minister, Mr. Cudney, holds sway over the maintenance. Probably I should not say that, but the policy I hold in the palm of my hand. Nevertheless, I do want to pay tribute to Mr. Cudney.

Hon. members will feel impressed when they realize that, down in Osgoode Hall, they are using a book on the companies branch—or in regard to either the companies or corporations—which was written by my Deputy, Robert Cudney, QC. I cut a piece out of the paper, and I put it in my scrapbook, and I intend to keep it into perpetuity, because there were so many nice things said about him. However, as I said, I will leave that out for another day to read the balance. But he has made a name for himself in the legal field.

May I say to hon. members that I have 11 lawyers under me, God help me, that is all I want to say. Doctors are bad enough. I think I do not need to say more.

Now, perhaps at the beginning I should request your indulgence in asking hon. members to bear with me during certain rather dry and dusty periods, because a great deal of the work of The Provincial Secretary and Registrar's Department is suggestive of parchment paper and dust.

Yet while it can, in some respects, be less exhilarating than the work of many hon. Ministers, nevertheless, like the Scotsman's kilt, there is much more to it than meets the eye.

First and foremost, my department is charged with handling the secretarial work of the government. I am told that I sit down and write everything everybody says, but if I had to do that, Mr. Speaker, I would resign tomorrow, because I am a little lazy on that side. Now this includes the preparation of government dispatches. These are mainly between the Lieutenant-Governor of Ontario and the Secretary of State for Canada, and may be either on behalf of Canada or some foreign government.

The Provincial Secretary is also the custodian of the Three Seals. Now I did not know that before. I knew I had one, but I did not know I had 3. First, there is the Great Seal of the Province of Ontario.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Now everybody stay quiet and really learn something tonight.

First, there is the Great Seal of the Province of Ontario, second the Privy Seal of the Lieutenant-Governor, and lastly, the seal of the office of the Provincial Secretary and Registrar. All documents issued under the Great Seal, of the Lieutenant-Governor's Privy Seal, and many documents issued under the seal of the Provincial Secretary and Registrar, are recorded.

Among such documents and records are commissions for public inquiry, commissions of appointments as Queen's Counsel, notary publics, justices of the peace, and commissions authorizing persons to take affidavits, free grants of land, Crown land sales, transfers, Crown leases, mining lands sales and leases.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): The hon. Provincial Secretary has too much to do.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: If hon. members—whether they belong to the Opposition or my own side—say anything about politics when it comes to that, just let them not come near me for any favours. My staff is restricted to just a few efficient people.

In addition to the secretarial work of the government, the Provincial Secretary has the administration over the following Acts. Now I am only going to read just a very few of them because I am in just as much a hurry to get home as hon. members: The Corporation Act, 1953; The Corporations Information Act, 1953; The Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act.

How many hon. members know what mortmain means? I was very happy to hear one of the hon. members speak French. I did not understand a word he said. Mortmain means dead hand. That is what I found out after I came into this department.

I continue with the Acts over which my department has administration: The Corporations Security Registration Act. I think that started a very, very long time ago. There are The Official Notices Publication Act; The Marriage Act; The Justices of the Peace Act; The Notaries Act; The Commissioners for Taking Affidavits Act. I will tell hon. members that the next is The Alcoholic Foundation Act.

An hon. member: Now he is getting hot.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Not too hot at my age.

Now we come to the companies' division. The work of the department in the administration of The Corporation Act, 1953, and other Acts relating to corporations includes the issue of letters patent, but also many other matters such as the issuance of supplementary letters patent. I certainly had a lot of trouble learning all that stuff. I thought I was back in school, but I know what they mean now. Orders accepting surrender of charter and authorizing the keeping of books out of Ontario, licences in mortmain.

An hon. member: What does it mean?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well, I will tell the hon. member what it means. It means to have a licence to hold land. Is that not right?

Mr. Sopha: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: If hon. members want to try me out tonight, I am ready for any question they like. The hon. member knows I am trying to miss a few—

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Ask those lawyers if they can write a prescription, Doc.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would like to ask them if they can read any of their writing. That is what I would like to know.

Now, there is one thing I want to tell the hon. members of this House. In 1954 we had 600 new companies that were incorporated in that year.

Mr. Grossman: No business at all.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well, I am not putting that out. I am just telling them facts. This year, or rather in 1959, we had 11 times as many. We had between 6,500 and 6,600, and if hon. members want to know the exact number it is 6,585. I did not get that off here either. Say, after I have heard the speeches from northern Ontario, I am not even making any comment.

Now the public office is also called the search office. Try and search for it. It is maintained by our main office for public searching on any records of corporations that are incorporated by letters patent of this province, or by licences granted to form corporations, or to any incorporated corporation carrying on business in this province. Does that not sound like a lawyer? Approximately 23,300 searches have been made in the public office during the calendar year 1959.

Now my predecessor whom I love very much, Mr. Dunbar—If he had got up and read those figures, I would have said: "Who cares?"

Now we come to the last article, The Marriage Act office. This is not the time to slap the desk. The Provincial Secretary has the administration of The Marriage Act.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That reminds me, remember—God help the man who will not marry until he finds a perfect wife, but God help him even more if he should find her.

The Marriage Act, 1950, enacted in the 1950 session of the Legislature, was proclaimed and came into force on October 2, 1950.

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I would like to put this. Anyone married before 1950—

An hon. member: Is not legally married.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I did not say that. The Provincial Secretary has the administration of The Marriage Act. The marriage division is concerned with the administration of The Marriage Act dealing with legal formalities in connection with the solemnization of marriages in Ontario, and the sympathies to the groom thereafter. That last sentence could be deleted.

Now look, I am getting serious now.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): They thought the hon. Provincial Secretary was not busy.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Just let them come down to my office and I will prove it.

Now, the second part of my address, and remember this is the first time I have said the second and I do not say this is the conclusion, and I will never come to it either. I now come to the citizenship division.

I want to say to the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) that there is nothing I can say against him tonight, but I will deal with him later.

The hon. members may recall that, when I announced this establishment in this House on February 19, 1959, I voiced the view that we in Canada have all taken a just pride in our country, which we regard as the land where all races, religions, and nationalities form an ever-changing human mosaic pattern.

I said that we are all working co-operatively to maintain and improve our way of life.

I feel that is the main purpose for the establishment of the citizenship branch. In practice, it is to assist in speeding the successful integration of newcomers to Ontario into our Canadian way of life, to aid them in whatever way we can, in adapting themselves to their new surroundings as quickly and as easily as possible.

An hon. member: Good.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well, I spent a long time writing this, let the hon. members not forget that. In its widest sense, this may well mean a constant effort to maintain and to improve—and even possibly to create—good relations and perhaps better understanding throughout this province between our many ethnic groups. By ethnic groups I want to say to the hon. members of this House, I mean all of us.

Applause.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well, that is the first clap I really thank hon. members for. By ethnic groups I mean all of us, whether we be the original Canadians, like the North American Indian and the Eskimo as well as native Canadians like ourselves, or those Canadians by choice who have come here more recently from other lands. The establishment of the citizenship division does not mean that it is an entity unto itself—

Mr. Grossman: Well, I guess the “not” belongs there.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Pardon?

Mr. Grossman: He still left it in there.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Its purpose is to assist in integration, in liaison with all government departments that for some time have been dealing in the citizenship field. We have first the federal authorities. We have several departments within our own government. May I say to the hon. member for Dovercourt that we have many voluntary agencies, which we are using a lot.

The hon. Prime Minister of this province (Mr. Frost) and his government have long been taking a very great and active interest in the well-being of Canadians by choice. Some day I am going to tell hon. members how I got that name—Canadians by choice—many of whom arrive here with no knowledge of our language. For these The Department of Education, through its community branch programme—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: That is right, thank you very much. I got it here after all. The Department of Education, through its community branch programme, has established classes in languages and citizenship—now let us remember this—in nearly every secondary school in Ontario, as well as in many of our public schools and our separate schools. The Department of Education pays the school board 90 per cent. of the cost of these instruction courses. That is higher than any figure that was quoted here today. I thought hon. members were going to get above it once or twice but they did not.

Now, they also carry out the same instruction programme in remote parts of Ontario where The Department of Education trains people to go out there and it does not cost the immigrant one dollar.

Now, I am going to name over the various departments that have worked in co-operation with our department.

The first, of course, would be The Department of Health. I would say to the present hon. Minister (Mr. Dymond) that I still love The Department of Health. From my own personal experience, I know well what The Department of Health has been doing with its special orientation classes for nurses and laboratory technicians who come to us from other countries where conditions are different. I am well aware of the sympathetic assistance which The Department of Health has long given to doctors trained in foreign lands.

I would like to say here that medical men especially trained here are fortunate because we have a uniform system. Those trained in either the United States or on the Continent have not that same uniformity, so our college of physicians and surgeons have to grade them. A great number of them are very, very poor; a great number of them are very, very good.

As a matter of fact, hon. members know very well that Hitler destroyed one of the greatest surgical places in Vienna I think that this world ever had. I was over there for a course—I did not stay too long because I did not have the money. But I stayed longer than another fellow whom—well, I saw him going in and I met him coming out.

We all know that very recently the hon. Minister of Health and his department have accepted the responsibility for supporting and treating refugees, even though they are infected with tuberculosis. That is a humane act.

I just want to say this—remember, under our British Constitution of 1867 we, in the province, are not allowed to bring in anyone from any place except from the British Commonwealth of Nations. So, no matter how much this government wants to bring in people from any country except British possessions, it is impossible for us to do so. The federal authorities have full jurisdiction over this.

Then we come to The Department of Labour, which assists tradesmen from other lands who possess certain qualifications by making such concessions as can be made to enable these workers to establish themselves in fields where this can be done without lowering standards set by the various crafts and trades.

I feel that all the hon. members of this House are aware of the fact that it is necessary for an individual to reside for 12 months within a municipality before he can become a real citizen and obtain welfare benefits. Should the necessity arise this can, of course, pose a certain hardship on any new arrival who becomes indigent, since he will not have had the opportunity to reside for that length of time in any municipality. In such cases, this government pays the bill.

On two occasions since the end of World War II, a specialized form of aid to newcomers has been made available by The Department of Planning and Development.

Immediately after the war, this department organized an airlift from the United Kingdom for immigrants, and temporarily set up an office in Toronto to help these people find employment and generally get settled.

Then, under the hon. Minister of Planning and Development (Mr. Nickle), it worked in co-operation with the Red Cross and a great many voluntary organizations, in providing special aid for refugees from Hungary.

Now these are only a few samples of what this government has done. May I point out that the hon. Prime Minister of this province—and it does not matter what party one belongs to, he has got to admit this—that it is one of the greatest things for Canada, not only Ontario but Canada, to have an hon. Prime Minister with the vision which Mr. Frost has had, to guide the destiny of this province as well as the whole of Canada to the rest of—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): He is a long piece back.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well now, just a minute. Now let me talk. The hon. member knows that I did not interfere with anyone else speaking. That is true—as a matter of fact, just for that, I am going to go back a little piece. Does the hon. member realize this, I have not talked half as long as other hon. members did?

Now, do hon. members realize this: That, during the first world war, a man was sent—do hon. members remember his name? Well, if they do not, I am not going to tell them. Then, in the second world war, Churchill was sent to save the world. May I say that Frost was sent to solve the difficult problems facing Ontario after the second world war.

Now I am going to talk to the hon. member for Dovercourt. It is going to be pretty nice, believe it or not, because of my bringing up. I do want to thank the hon. member for Dovercourt for his congratulatory remarks, as well as for what I consider to be good constructive criticism. At this time may I suggest to the hon. member that he come to my office and we will talk this over. We may not be in agreement on everything, but we will bring out an even better policy, if that is possible, which I doubt. But I really will welcome him, I want to say that to the hon. member.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you very much.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): He is going to be after the hon. Provincial Secretary in a minute.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: It is all right with me, I mean I can go the other way just as fast, do not forget that.

Now, if hon. members will just do this—and it will save me a lot of time—if they will read last year's Hansard—I know most of them have not even read this year's Hansard—for Thursday, February 19, 1959, the afternoon session, they will see that practically everything the hon. member for Dovercourt said today is right in there at the bottom of page 451, then go on to 452 and 453 and the third epistle is on pages 454 and 455.

Now, Mr. Speaker, these are my closing remarks.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Oh, do not quit now, do not quit yet.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: But I want to say this in all sincerity. I do not care whether the 3 levels of government give these people a reception when they come, and give them a reception again after the 5-year period when they take their oath of allegiance. It reminds me of our next-door neighbour, a few years ago, when I was on the farm, who fed the hens once a week. Now that is not enough, the hon. member for Kent West (Mr. Parry), will verify that. That is exactly the same principle we are following.

These people have the intestinal fortitude or courage to leave their homeland, to leave a great number of loved ones, to leave fellow citizens who spoke their language, and come over here to this great nation of Canada. I might tell hon. members, off the record, that 62 per cent. of them finally settle in Ontario. Everyone who comes over—

Mr. Crossman: They must have heard about this government.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well, as a matter of fact, I learned that they did. But before my time, the strange thing is that they still heard of this government. But I say this in all sincerity.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Phillips: These people left their homeland. They came over here, and I have heard a lot of unjust criticism given to them. Some of it is this, that they get off by themselves and speak only their own language. Would not we, if we were in a strange land? I have heard some people suggest that they may be talking about us. Well, all I have to say is that I hope they were, but no doubt they were not even interested in anyone, because the language that they spoke at home which they were hearing was music to their ears.

Now, we give them two parties, it was suggested. We do join, Mr. Speaker, with all these voluntary organizations, service clubs and so on, but that is not enough. We have to extend to these people the right hand of fellowship. We have to invite them into our homes or else, I say, let us quit any form of immigration unless we are going to accept them wholeheartedly. That is what I stand for. Hon. members know, I think it was in—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: Well, that all depends. The hon. Minister has to submit it to me in writing the day before.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: What I wanted to ask the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker is this: Is it not true that the only basic Canadian is an Indian, and that all the rest of us are DP's with seniority?

Hon. Mr. Phillips: I am going to answer that in a political way, and that is going to be this. We feel that we have two types of people on this continent who were the originals. They belong to the Mongolian race, and if hon. members do not believe it let them study their anthropology which I had to do against my will years ago. The Indians and the Eskimos are very closely related to the Oriental race. Now I think they were the first immigrants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to conclude my remarks. What I would like to see us all do is this—and I made up this definition as I came into this House tonight. Let us turn on real Canadian charm for these people, and my only definition of charm is the ability to captivate other people without apparently doing anything about it. The charm of it is that one cannot define its ingredients.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I think the hon. members would like the previous speaker to end the debate each night of every day.

I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): In moving the adjournment of the House, I will say that a night session will be held tomorrow night and when we resume tomorrow, after the orders of the day, we will have the resumption of the debate on the Throne speech.

Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 23, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome as guests students from the following schools: Ridgetown agricultural school, Ridgetown; Sutton high school, Sutton; Havergal college, Toronto; Eglinton public school, Toronto; and Balmy Beach public school of Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. H. L. Rowntree, from the standing committee on private bills, presents the committee's third report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act respecting the municipality of Shuniah.

An Act respecting the municipality of Neebing.

An Act respecting the Canadian National Exhibition Association.

An Act respecting the city of Windsor.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

An Act respecting the township of Kingston.

An Act respecting the town of Oakville and the township of Trafalgar.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in connection with the sittings of the House, I did discuss this point with my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), yesterday. I believe that tomorrow being Wednesday, in the ordinary course we will be using that as a committee day. But due to the fact that the budget will be introduced on Thursday, it is desirable that the two budget resolutions be introduced tomorrow and, as I explained to the hon. leader of the Opposition, tomorrow I would like to take the opportunity—or the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) would take the opportunity—of introducing bills having to do with certain amendments to The Labour Relations Act and The Judicature Act.

Now, it will not be necessary, I imagine, for the House to sit for perhaps more than half an hour, which I do not think will unduly interfere with the committee arrangements.

On Thursday, if this meets with the approval of the House, we would like to have the House meet at 2.30 instead of 3 o'clock. That is solely on account of press arrangements. It is more satisfactory, apparently, to have the House meet at 2.30 because of the press in the province.

Now, we have had some cases where, before the budget is delivered, it has been customary here to brief the press on the budget, except insofar as it relates to taxation changes. Very often, due to the efficiency of the printing presses, some of the speech is on the street before it is delivered, and if we can avoid that by meeting at 2.30 I think it would be altogether desirable.

Now, sir, with that explanation I would move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it do stand adjourned until 2 of the clock tomorrow afternoon. Also that this House will meet at 2.30 o'clock on Thursday next; and that rule No. 2 of the assembly be suspended insofar as it might apply to this motion.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, in that connection, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister whether or not there will be a night session on Thursday night?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I did not anticipate that. No. I do not think that we will have another night session this week after tonight.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

Hon. C. Daley moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the hon. members will recall that, in 1953, the compensation payable to dependents of workmen who died as a result of injuries was increased. However, the increase applied only to cases where the death occurred on or after April 2, 1953. The purpose of this bill is to have the increase also applied to cases where the death occurred before April 2, 1953. The increased payments for this group will commence in May, 1960.

THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

Hon. Mr. Daley moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Act, under the present section, names the Acts administered by the department. It serves no purpose because the reader never knows whether or not it is up to date. In fact, when it is brought up to date at every opportunity, it may become misleading because of administrative changes by executive action between sessions of the Legislature. I mean by that, that when The Department of Labour is required to administer some new Act, or some new action taken by the executive council, it has to come before the Legislature. This Act would enable us to just administer anything that is given us to administer by the executive council.

The second section is regarding fees. This will give the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council authority to impose fees in connection with certain services that we render, particularly in regard to inspection of deep sewers which require a great deal of our time and for which at this present time we charge no fee.

THE BOILER AND PRESSURE VESSELS ACT, 1950

Hon. Mr. Daley moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Boiler and Pressure Vessels Act, 1950."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is somewhat similar to the one I have just introduced, namely, that it authorizes the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council to prescribe the fee as set out. This has particularly to do with the welding industry.

THE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Daley moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Employment Agencies Act, 1960."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill will give the department authority to licence and regulate employment agencies. At this point we do not go very far because, actually, we are not aware of how many of these agencies there are, how they operate, what their fees are, and how they are charged to employees or employers. This bill will give us the authority to first licence them and to regulate their activities. I think this bill has been considered greatly in demand by a great many people in this province for some time.

THE FAIR ACCOMMODATION PRACTICES ACT, 1954

Mr. A. E. Thompson moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Fair Accommodation Practices Act, 1954."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE POWER COMMISSION ACT

Hon. R. Macaulay moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Power Commission Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Could the hon. Minister make an explanation of that?

Hon. R. Macaulay (Minister of Energy Resources): Mr. Speaker, the general nature of this bill is, I think, what one could call a series of housekeeping amendments to bring some of the legislation into conformity with a number of recommendations which have been made by the officers of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario as well as by the treasury branch of the organization.

There are, however, a few changes, I think, on only one of which I will comment today. I think it is of perhaps singular interest to the House that, under The Power Commission Act for a number of years, there has always been a provision that, where there was to be a transmission line built, and there could be no agreement between the owner of the property and the commission as to the price that should be paid for the land beneath the transmission line, or regarding the damages that might be sustained by the owner in the construction of the line, that an application could be made to what was called a valuator, to determine both the compensation and the damages. From the valuator an appeal could be had to the municipal board of the province.

The amendment which I have introduced is one which permits the establishment of what is called an arbitration board, one very much like the type of organization to hear similar matters in relation to pipe lines, upon which there will be representation of the interests which are affected by these transmission lines, representatives of the federation of agriculture representing the farm lands over which these easements pass, and other relative economic interests. In this way, there will be a broad representation upon this committee which will consist of 3, or not more than 5, persons who will determine the amount of compensation to be paid for these lands and any damages to be paid, in addition to which there may be an appeal to the municipal board.

PRESQU'ILE PROVINCIAL PARK

Hon. J. W. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act respecting Presqu'ile provincial park."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this bill is to expunge part of an obsolete plan of survey of lands that have been acquired by the Crown for Presqu'ile provincial park, and to remove any distrust or doubt on title that may have been created by the plan.

THE PROVINCIAL PARKS ACT, 1958

Hon. Mr. Spooner moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Provincial Parks Act, 1958."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, the purpose of this amendment is to permit the Minister of the department and any municipality, with the approval of the Ontario parks integration board, to enter into agreements with construction and maintenance of roads. The same authority will also apply to road commissioners elected under The Statute Labour Board Act.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, might I say to the House that I had a very pleasant surprise today from the hon. leader of the Opposition who comes from that great county of Waterloo, in which is situated the city of Kitchener, the home of the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen. Now, he was good enough to present to me a tie like the one he is wearing, and I may say, sir, I would have put this tie on this afternoon but I say to my hon. friend that I did not want to run into difficulties with my wife, who might say it is a little out of line with the colour scheme that she dictated I should wear. After all I am only my wife's husband.

But I may say that I propose to wear this on a suitable occasion, which I hope will be before very long.

I was saying to the hon. leader of the Opposition that to me the colours are reminiscent of other days. As is known, I am a native of Orillia, a famous hockey town in its day. I very well remember the great games immediately prior to the first world war that were played between the Kitchener team—Berlin at that time—and Orillia.

I mentioned some of the names of those who played, George Hainsworth, Leo Truskinsky—I do not think that is the exact pronunciation—Mr. Seibert, and others who afterwards played in the senior series here in Ontario and became professionals. I forget under what name but in any event they were very famous hockey names.

I am glad to acknowledge that, and to wish the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen every success in upholding the colours of our country, and I am sure that they will.

Now my hon. friend, the leader of the Opposition, is going to California to Squaw Valley I think on Friday. We want to wish him well, and I would like him to take along a cheque from the government and people of Ontario. It is made out, I may say, to the Kitchener-Waterloo Hockey Club Limited for $2,500.

I would say to my hon. friend that I know, being the Opposition critic, that he will see that the money is properly applied; and secondly, I want to assure him that it is not going to add anything to the net debt of the province, because this is already taken care of by an appropriation of The Department of Labour. I will send this over to him now, sir, with the very best wishes of the people of Ontario.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, this is a very pleasant occasion. I might say that the exchange of the tie for $2,500, I think, is demonstrative of the generosity of the hon. Prime Minister in this particular respect. I assure him that the people of Waterloo county and, I am sure, of all of Ontario and Canada, appreciate this.

The particular team that will compete, and is competing—and thus far has competed very favourably—in the Olympic rundown comes, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, from my home constituency. It has been my pleasure for a long while to be associated with the team, and to be a member of the executive of the team.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the team is very much cognizant of the responsibility that it has to demonstrate the ability of Canadians to play our national game more expertly than any other. I did say to some representatives of the team, when they were about to leave for Squaw Valley, that I just have a sneaking suspicion that they will do what all Canadians, and particularly I am sure we in this House, expect, and hope of them—that they will win the Olympic championship.

Now, speaking very personally, I am pleased likewise that the hon. Prime Minister has made reference to the fact that I would like to go to Squaw Valley to attend the final game. I do not think anybody can accuse me of campaigning in that far distant land, but I am sure that all hon. members of the House will appreciate my particular interest, and I hope the interest of the House, in the final result.

I was rather concerned about an excuse, but I assure hon. members now that I have with me the $2,500 which, as the hon. Prime Minister said, is not made payable personally, that I will have more reason than ever to excuse myself from this House, not on Thursday next, when the budget will come down, but on Friday and possibly Monday.

Mr. Speaker, it is a pleasure to accept this cheque. I can assure you that it will be welcome, and I only hope that, on my return, I can bring back the greetings that I think all hon. members of this House and the country at large expect, and that is demonstration that our team has been successful in the Olympic championship.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, some years ago we had a very distinguished guest from the United States, Governor Mennen Williams, visiting this Legislature. I remember on that occasion he presented the hon. Prime Minister with a bow tie. I would like to ask him what happened to that one.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not know.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

The 26th annual report of The Department of Municipal Affairs for the year ending December 31, 1959.

The 5th annual report of the Ontario telephone development corporation of the province of Ontario for the year ending December 31, 1959.

The 1958 statement of the returns under sections 235 and 241 of The Municipal Act.

Hon. L. P. Cecile (Minister of Public Welfare): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I have some information to give the hon. members of the House.

In the middle of January this year, a classified advertisement was placed in most of Ontario's daily newspapers to say that 5 children, all from one family—ages 7, 6, 5, 3 and 2 years—were available for adoption. These children had suffered from neglect and the subsequent desertion of their parents.

The response to these ads was quite amazing and heartwarming. Because of the public interest in this young family, I would inform the House that these children have now been placed for adoption with a family where their future will be well assured.

I would like to read a portion of a letter which has been received from the local director of the children's aid society who is responsible for these children, and I quote:

We were so thrilled yesterday with the meeting between the adoptive parents and our 5 wards. The children had been well prepared and, in much less time than expected, they made friends with all members of their new family. After about half an hour, we chatted with a 6-year-old and asked her if she liked her new mommy and daddy. With a broad smile, she said she did.

We then asked her when she wanted to go and live with them. She beamed again and said, "Now." The others responded accordingly. The little girl went home with the adopting parents yesterday, and they are returning tomorrow for the other four.

How marvellous for these children that such a promising door has been opened for them.

Our sincere thanks.

The primary consideration in the placement of these children is, of course, related to their security, within a permanent family setting.

It will be interesting to note, however, that the cost to maintain each of them in the care of the children's aid society is at present $2.36 per day or a total of $354 a month for the 5 children. If they had not been placed on adoption, we could have anticipated the total charge of at least $58,000 to maintain them in care until they reached 18 years of age—and all from public taxing sources.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, in passing, how much we appreciate all those who applied to adopt these children. I sincerely hope that their homes will be considered by the societies throughout Ontario for the adoption placements of other children.

I would just add that we are continuing the programme to give children in the care of societies a chance to have a home and parents of their own. It is my earnest desire that every child who is now in a temporary foster home, will either be adopted by the foster parents or be placed in a permanent adoption home.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like the opportunity to reply to the question which was asked by the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) yesterday.

The question was this, and I quote:

Last Friday the Toronto Daily Star carried an article on page 7 under the by-line of Munro Johnston, relating how one Oscar Lehtinen—a Fort William timberman—was given 27 acres of Crown land involving 3,000 feet of shoreline on Dog Lake, north of Port Arthur, in exchange for his burnt-off and cut-off lands which had been mistakenly replanted with spruce and pine by The Department of Lands and Forests.

Since this switch in lands was made as a result of planting errors during the ministry of Mr. Clare Mapledoram, and since Mr. Lehtinen's newly acquired lands are now being offered for sale by real estate agents in which Messrs. Mapledoram and Lehtinen are partners, and at a profit which will reportedly range between $30,000 and $60,000, what explanation has The Department of Lands and Forests for this deal?

That is the end of the quotation.

Mr. Speaker, there are two matters that concern us here. First, the planting of a piece of private land by officers of the Crown, officers of The Department of Lands and Forests, was done in error.

I have examined very closely into this problem and the facts are as follows: Our local office at Port Arthur, checking their local office land records, believed they had found a suitable piece of planting land that had apparently reverted to the Crown. This was in error. They did not double-check at the land titles office, and it was subsequently found that this land had been purchased by Oscar Lehtinen from the settlers' loan commission, who had a loan against it.

I believe I could explain it in this manner, that the settlers' loan commission had foreclosed their mortgage, taken certain legal action, and that a notice of this was posted in the local land records office in The Department of Lands and Forests at Port Arthur.

And as I say, the clerk in charge of this particular branch did not search the land titles office when it was decided to plant this land, and accepted that the land had reverted back to the Crown.

Now, by the time that the error was brought to the attention of the officers of the department, the trees had been planted on the land. We were then faced with the problem of making compensation to the owner, or abandoning the trees planted. It was decided that it would be much more desirable to acquire the land than to abandon the trees which had been planted.

So the second phase of this problem was one of compensation.

The owner, Mr. Lehtinen, suggested a trade of shoreline land nearby on Dog Lake. Shoreline land was selling under the regulations at one dollar per foot frontage. This is the same price charged under the regulations in effect today.

The values our men estimated we had in the trees planted in error, were made up of trees, tree planting and the land. Our men computed the value of a piece of property which was transferred to us eventually as follows: 65,000 trees at 2 cents each—$1,300. The planting cost of 65,000 trees at $32 per thousand, $2,080. And 143 acres of land at $2 per acre, $286, for a total of $3,666.

We then estimated that the value of the land that we would transfer to Mr. Lehtinen—and I will deal with that in a moment—the value of the land to Mr. Lehtinen, made up of the shoreline, trees and tree planting, because trees were planted on the Crown land which we originally owned as well as on the land owned by Mr. Lehtinen.

Now this was made up of, as I say, the shoreline, the trees, the cost of planting the trees and 18.5 acres of land, not 27 acres of land.

So we placed a value, using the same factors, the shoreline of 2,826 feet at $1 per foot, $2,826; 20,000 trees at 2 cents each, $400; the planting cost of 20,000 trees at $32 per thousand, $640, for a total of $3,866—or $200 more than the value we placed on the Lehtinen land, on which we had planted the trees.

So we proceeded to negotiate with Mr. Lehtinen, and we finally made a deal where he would pay us $700, which meant that we were transferring to Mr. Lehtinen property we valued at $3,866 and we took in exchange property valued at $3,666 plus $700 in cash, which totalled $4,366.

Now the reason that we exchanged this area, and did not buy Mr. Lehtinen's interest in the land planted, is that we had on Dog Lake many, many miles of shoreline and, over the years, we had only sold one parcel for summer resort purposes. I would estimate that the shoreline of Dog Lake is perhaps something like 60 miles. I have a map of it here, and if any hon. member is interested, he can estimate the amount of shoreline that there is there.

The tree planting was done in the month of May, 1958, and it was only at the end of July, 1958, that The Department of Lands and Forests knew it had made a mistake in planting private land. I was then the Minister of Lands and Forests and I dealt with the problem.

Now, since Mr. Mapledoram's name has been injected into this discussion, I asked him what was his interest in this land. He informed me that he knew nothing of the matter during the time that he was Minister of Lands and Forests. This land on Dog Lake is Mr. Lehtinen's own private affair and has nothing to do with his business. Furthermore, Mr. Mapledoram advises me that Mr. Lehtinen is not a business partner of his, but is engaged as a salesman in his insurance and real estate office at the Lakehead, at either Port Arthur or Fort William.

Now, in commenting further on the Toronto Daily Star quotation, please note that Mr. Lehtinen got 18.5 acres of land from the Department of Lands and Forests, not 27 acres. Mr. Lehtinen got 2,826 feet of shoreline, not 3,000 feet of shoreline. Furthermore, I am advised by The Department of Lands and Forests, through the office of the surveyor-general that, of the 2,826 feet of frontage which Mr. Lehtinen did acquire, only 2,100 feet of it would have been suitable for sale by the Crown under its summer resort locations.

It so happens that Mr. Lehtinen owns sufficient other land that he can use the extra 726 feet of frontage, which would have been lost if the Crown had developed this area for summer resort lots.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that with that explanation, I am sure the hon. member for York South will realize that, in that great, broad, expansive country of northern Ontario, it is sometimes a little difficult to trace township lines and lot lines, and that errors of this kind occur from time to time. It is the Minister's responsibility to deal with those matters to the best of his knowledge and ability.

I think that the deal I made with Mr. Lehtinen is a satisfactory one, and that the interests of the taxpayers of this province have been amply protected.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister a question, a copy of which I believe has been forwarded to him. The question is simply this: What disposition is to be made of the Sarnia land investigation?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I am very glad my hon. friend has asked that question, because I undertook to submit to the House a written submission of this matter to the committee on energy, or in any event, to a suitable committee of this House.

Now, I have given this matter a very great deal of consideration, as have the members of cabinet council. I can assure my hon. friend that the problem is not in drawing the submission, but it is one involving the rights of the Legislature to subpoena certain persons and to require their presence.

Now the two principal points are as follows:

1. It would seem to me, and to members of cabinet council and no doubt to hon. members of this House, that it would be completely desirable that the presence of the Indian chiefs and the Indian council should be required, in order that full particulars of the negotiations would be available for consideration. The powers of the legislative committee in this regard—now I say this after consultation with the law officers and others—the powers of the legislative committee in this regard are doubtful, owing to the fact that it involves the service of papers and documents upon Indian lands which are not under our jurisdiction, but are under the jurisdiction of the federal government.

In other words we might be faced with the same problems that Hydro itself was faced with in dealing with the members of that band.

Now, if such service were affected and it were found to be within the competence of the legislative committee to so subpoena, there would then be the problem of enforcement in event of non-attendance. One can see that is quite a problem. Failure to appear would be, of course, in contempt of the Legislature, and the procedures for enforcement are the calling of the person or persons refusing to obey the subpoena to the Bar of the House.

In such a case this would probably be a wholly undesirable procedure, as it would involve the trial of the persons by this House. That is one of the problems involved.

Now everyone, sir, will recognize the problems of jurisdiction there are in relation to the Indian tribes. I could call my brother chief, the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), to my side in relation to that. As a matter of fact, I happen to be a chief of this tribe down at Sarnia myself. Some years ago I was made a chief of that tribe, and I have the feathered headdress and other regalia. I would deem it a matter of high embarrassment, and I am not saying this in any facetious way at all, that the chief or chiefs of this tribe should appear here in regalia, and that we should have to try them in connection with this matter.

I would think, sir, in view of other complications, particularly the matters we dealt with on the Six Nations reserve, that it would be a situation to be avoided.

2. It is very probable that the presence of certain federal officials would be required, and there is very real doubt as to whether a committee of the Legislature would have any powers in this regard. No doubt the greatest of co-operation in this matter would be extended by the federal authorities. On the other hand, hon. members of this House would have the strongest objection to sending officials, and perhaps members of the government or members of this House, to appear before a federal committee, and I quite imagine that the reverse would be the case.

In any event, the matter of compellability is one in which there is very high doubt.

Now, sir, under these circumstances, it has been determined to refer this whole matter to a Royal commission, and today an order-in-council has been passed appointing the hon. Mr. Justice George Argo McGillivray, one of the justices of appeal of the supreme court of Ontario, to be a commissioner for the purpose of carrying out the recommendations which I shall read in a moment. Mr. Justice McGillivray is, of course, a federal judge which very probably cures most of the disabilities to which I have referred.

Mr. Justice McGillivray's reference is made pursuant to The Public Inquiries Act, RSO, 1950, chapter 308, and may I say that the reference reads as follows, and I will read this slowly in order that the hon. members of the House may get the full particulars of the reference. I will not read the formal parts of the commission but the reference reads as follows:

To inquire into the negotiations for the purchase and the purchase and acquisition by the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario [for the then proposed Lambton transformer station and related transmission] of certain lands lying within the Sarnia Indian reserve, No. 45, set out as schedule "A" to an agreement dated March 11, 1959, between Dimensional Investments Limited [the vendor] and the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario [the purchaser] a copy of which schedule "A" is attached hereto, and any rights, easements and options in relation thereto, and into any other or prior sales of the said land or lands in the vicinity thereof; and without limiting the foregoing to have particular regard to the manner in which the negotiations throughout were carried out, the methods used in obtaining the right to purchase and in the actual acquisition of the said lands and whether good business practices and judgments were employed and exercised and if there were any omissions or neglect in connection with the said proceedings and in relation to determining the price or otherwise in carrying out of the transactions to the detriment of the public interest, and if so, in what respects; and including the conduct of any part of the business in connection therewith including any negotiations and the value of any alternative routes or plant arrangements for the said purposes including land both within and without the said reserve and which, in the opinion of the commissioner is, or may be, relevant to the full consideration of the matter connected therewith, including the actions and conduct of members of the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, its officers, officials and agents and the directors, officers, officials and agents of the vendor corporation, Dimensional Investments Limited, and of such other persons and matters as the commissioner may deem so relevant.

That I think covers the complete picture.

Now, sir, His Lordship will have to assist him Mr. Joseph Sedgewick, QC, as commission counsel, and he will be given any other assistance he may require. The sittings will be in His Lordship's discretion. The time and place will be set by himself, but no doubt the disposition of the matter will be as expeditious as possible.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, very frankly, this comes as a surprise. I must say that we of the Liberal party have been, since the very beginning, interested in a complete investigation of this particular matter.

As I heard the statement of the hon. Prime Minister, I gathered that this particular probe is to be about as complete as it is humanly possible to make it. Now, if that be the case, I think that this is a proper disposition of this particular matter.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say, in addition, that I did not read schedule "A," that is the description of the land, but tomorrow, or on Thursday, I will table the order-in-council and the reference completely, so that hon. members may see not only what I have read, but the formal parts of the reference, plus the description of lands involved.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): May I ask a question, Mr. Speaker?

I am wondering if we can be assured now that this matter has been referred to a Royal commission, that there will be no further dark references from the hon. Minister of Energy Resources to people going to jail and having serious charges laid against them. I am not concerned about any that may be laid against me, but I am concerned about the atmosphere created by that type of statement.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, Mr. Speaker, I may assure my hon. friend that the best way to keep out of jail is to obey the commissioner and his directions, and I otherwise think he must be a free man.

Mr. Speaker, might I announce to the House that it is not proposed that there should be a vote tonight on the Throne address, or the reply.

On the undertaking which I gave to my hon. friend, the matter will remain on the order paper, and we will take the opportunity of reviving this debate from time to time, as seems expedient, and in due course we will have a vote on the question.

I will discuss that matter of the time of the vote with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. Prime Minister trying to delay the defeat of the government?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, we are not contemplating going to the country just at the present time, but we always have that matter in mind.

Yesterday, I advised the House that we would proceed with the Throne debate but I would like, if possible, to clean up some items on the order paper here in committee. To that end, sir, I would move that you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before we do that and before the orders of the day, I would like to bring something to your attention.

I must acknowledge at the very outset that in some respects I may be out of order, very technically speaking. But I would ask your indulgence, Mr. Speaker, because of the seriousness of the matter, that you might consider suspending the normal rules.

What I would like to do is propose a notice of motion which I understand I am in order in proposing, but possibly to move beyond that, and that is to actually move a resolution that will specifically identify this House with the request to the federal government to locate at Elliot Lake the nuclear research station which was scheduled for construction in Manitoba.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before you rule, let me say this: That I am quite cognizant of the basic rules of this House, but I am cognizant, likewise, that we have here a very serious economic and human problem. We debated this yesterday. Subsequent to yesterday's debate an extraordinary event, to my mind, took place.

This morning I am advised that the hon. Minister of Trade and Commerce in the federal government (Mr. Churchill) made an announcement in that Parliament which, while clothed in diplomatic or other parliamentary language, suggested, in no uncertain terms, that this particular project will be constructed in Manitoba.

I think that particular statement is of sufficient importance that we in this House should demonstrate, once and for all, our specific thinking with respect to this matter. I personally feel, and I feel sufficiently strongly to risk your censure, that this particular matter must, once and for all, be brought down to brass tacks. Either we are going to say publicly, and in no uncertain terms, that the federal government is doing something that is unfair to Ontario, or not.

I believe definitely it is. It seems to me that we have, in the Elliot Lake situation, a very human social problem.

Now, if we are going to continue to avoid these human problems, Mr. Speaker, I suggest to you that the time will not be far removed when people will abandon their confidence, not only in this Legislature but in our free enterprise system as such, and I think these people have every right to expect that their representatives, and we in this House, stand up boldly and say what is on our minds.

The simple thing that is on my mind is this: That the federal government, in my opinion, is either playing elementary politics with this problem, or is wholly lacking in human appreciation of the problem that exists at Elliot Lake and Bancroft.

Mr. Speaker, the situation in a nutshell is simply that at Elliot Lake there are the homes, and there are the facilities, and there will be a large number of unemployed people there within a relatively short period of time. Now, who can deny the fact that that area will be benefited humanly, economically and socially by the implementation of another industry? The only other one we know of at the present time is this nuclear reactor station.

For that reason, as I say, I am going to risk your censure and plead with you that this matter is of sufficient public importance at this time, not to adjourn the House because that has been done, but to suspend the normal rules and permit me to move a motion as follows:

That this House petition the federal government to locate at Elliot Lake the nuclear research station which was scheduled for construction in Manitoba.

Mr. Speaker, I move this particular resolution, seconded by Mr. H. C. Nixon.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out, Mr. Speaker, before you rule upon my hon. friend's motion, that, first of all, he is out of order on this count, that no private hon. member may have on the order paper more than one substantive motion in his own name. Therefore the hon. leader of the Opposition is out of order on that count, but I would say that I do not propose to press that.

I suggest perhaps he might put that motion in somebody else's name, so that he would not find himself impaled on the horns of the rules, so to speak.

Now, on the other thing, I would say to the hon. leader of the Opposition that I must ask, sir, that this be accepted as a notice of motion. I do that for very good reasons. With the hon. leader of the Opposition I may say that I share some very robust views in connection with these matters. I referred to that yesterday. But I would say that I am not without some experience in these matters and I see the hon. member for Brant pondering over the question.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Oh, I have it all pondered out.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes. I see the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) discussing the problem. Now, there are no two hon. members with more experience than those two gentlemen in this matter.

I would say that my experience with the matter of the Ontario Legislature directing petitions to the federal Parliament and federal government is one that has been attended wholly without success.

And I may say that I sat where the hon. gentlemen are sitting now some 20 years ago. I saw such a resolution passed in this House and I declared then, and I declare now, that never again would I be a party to that procedure. As a matter of fact, it was wholly unsatisfactory, wholly undesirable. My hon. friend here, the former Speaker (Mr. Downer), was present at that time.

I think that if my friend, the hon. member for Brant, were to dissociate himself from the atmosphere in which he lives under present conditions, he would agree with me on that.

I would say that the hon. member for Grey South must agree with me in that for this reason, that I sat very close to him in the days of 1940, and when that resolution was moved I never saw him move so rapidly out of the House in my life as at that time. As a matter of fact, the hon. member moved so rapidly that the vacuum caused by his moving out of the House almost drew me out.

After that experience, I made up my mind that never again would I, while I have my right consciousness, involve myself in anything of that sort again.

My hon. friend, of course, has strong views on this matter. But I would say regarding his strong views—he has expressed them and they are very clear now—that we are going to try to work out this problem to the best of our ability, and see what we can do to have that very fine community of Elliot Lake maintained and continued, and also the Bancroft area in which I have a very real interest.

I do think myself, quite frankly, as I said yesterday, that it was a mistake—of course, these undertakings were, as a matter of fact, given some months ago in connection with the Manitoba election—but I would say this: That because Ontario and Canada and the municipality have a huge investment in the Bancroft and Elliot Lake area, it would seem to me a part of good reason and good judgment that everything should be done to maintain industry in those places.

One of the difficulties, of course, of this present situation, as far as Ontario is concerned, might be implicit in that article that Mr. Leslie Roberts wrote about the Maritimes. I may say that I had some cause to disagree with him by correspondence in relation to a certain part of it.

But we in Ontario are not anxious, we do not want, to take business from Manitoba. As a matter of fact I have, as hon. members of this House know, encouraged industries in other parts of Canada—in Newfoundland and in the Maritimes. I am most anxious that the Maritimes should develop.

Anything that we could do here we would be glad to do. I think myself that an even development of Canada is something that is highly desirable.

On the other hand, it does seem unfortunate that, in order to have that, we should take something away that is so closely associated with a place like Elliot Lake which might, I would say, save the Canadian taxpayers as I see it very, very many millions of dollars.

Now, after all, my job here is to look after our province and its people. At the same time, I want to do that—as all hon. members do—in a Canadian way, in a way that is calculated to build up our country.

I do feel that the federal government might be well advised, before sinking tens of millions of dollars into projects and housing projects and townsite in another place, to have another look at the project in which we have a lot of money invested at the present time.

Other than that, I would say that I would have to accept the motion of my hon. friend as a notice of motion.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question?

I think there is complete agreement on the urgency of this, and my question is in relation to a decision that I thought had been taken in the committee on energy the other day. The hon. leader of the Opposition raised this issue, and we got into quite an involved discussion that went on for an hour or more. Out of it emerged a decision, that a committee of 4—made up of the hon. Minister of Energy Resources; the chairman of the committee; the hon. leader of the Opposition and myself—would meet to work out an agenda as to how we were going to come to grips with this.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I anticipate some serious problems involved in that committee coming to grips with the problem, because the committee on energy is limited in its jurisdiction. It is restricted to considering what relates to energy alone, not to the welfare problems, to the relief of municipalities, and so on.

I was hoping that this committee of 4 would meet so that we could at least sort out what could be done by the committee on energy, and what should be tackled, either back in the House or by some other action on the part of the government.

Mr. Speaker, my question to the hon. Prime Minister is this: What is happening?

We decided almost a week ago now that this committee was going to meet, it has not met; if this is coming to grips with an urgent problem, well, we had better watch out or we are going to rush ahead of ourselves. It is not good enough, because these people are facing emergency conditions.

The situation demands action, not dilly-dallying for a week before we get our committee meeting. Now what is the comment of the hon. Prime Minister there?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I would say to the hon. member that what he says has no relationship to this motion as I see it.

Mr. MacDonald: This motion is part of that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think that this part of the motion is entirely out of order. I am not familiar myself with the deliberations of the committee, I do not know what the motion was, or whether it is within the competence of the committee to so determine, but I am quite prepared to have a look at that.

In the meantime, I would say to the hon. member that we are pressing in an orderly way for a consideration of the problems of these two localities, and beyond that I would not want to go at the moment.

Mr. MacDonald: I just want to draw this to the attention of the hon. Prime Minister, that my comment is not out of order in relation to the motion that is being made. I say this because, clearly, one of the immediate actions in Elliot Lake would be the establishment of a reactor. It is only one part of the broader picture and my question is: What are we doing about the broader picture? As far as I can see, it is nothing.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am going to rise. I realize that again there is some difficulty about a technicality, but personally I feel very strongly about this, indeed I feel sufficiently strongly that I am going to ask you directly for your ruling on this matter. It does seem to me that this is a matter of great importance and a matter wherein the rules of this House could and should be set aside.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There is only one ruling that could be made, and that is this is a notice of motion. That is in accordance with the rules.

Mr. MacDonald: This has been dealt with for 6 weeks.

Mr. Speaker: I rule that it be accepted as notice of motion at this point.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Speaker, I must challenge you in respect to this particular ruling. Yes, sir.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Oh, this is getting ridiculous.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What I am afraid of, Mr. Speaker—and frankly, the situation is as obvious as one and one is two. The federal government is moving on this matter at this very instant and today. If we are not going to do anything about it, we have denied the opportunity of this House to petition that government to realize—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, might I ask my hon. friend on what rule he bases this procedure?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I base it on this very elementary common sense proposition, that the Speaker in this House has the right to suspend the normal rules at any time with the consent of the House, and that is all I am asking for.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: Unanimous consent?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Unanimous consent, that is right.

Hon. Mr. Macaulay: The hon. Prime Minister has indicated that it is not unanimous, in that he asked that this be taken as notice.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And the people of Elliot Lake are out in the cold, and the hon. members know it as well as I do.

Mr. Grossman: The hon. leader of the Opposition makes a beer garden out of this Legislature.

Mr. Speaker: It will be accepted as notice as aforementioned.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, no, Mr. Speaker. No, sir.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say this: That if there is any dispute on your ruling, the reasons for such should be given, and then you should have an opportunity of passing on it. The point is this, the rules are so very specific.

Mr. Wintermeyer: They are.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Very specific. If there is not unanimous consent on a matter of that sort, then obviously the Speaker has no option. Now, surely the hon. leader of the Opposition is not going to turn this House into a play house. After all, this thing is so obviously out of order—

Mr. MacDonald: Let us turn it into a work house.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I can prove all of these facts. But the simple fact is that likewise, as a man of limited common sense, I know that if we do not do something today we will never do it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that the point that my hon. friend is talking about is being decided today. As a matter of fact, the announcement of this matter was made several months ago, I think in the month of September, 1959, or in October, 1959. Now, I only point this out—

Mr. Bryden: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: —I only point this out, sir—

Mr. Bryden: On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, may I be allowed to rise on a point of order?

I submit you have made a ruling, it has been challenged, and I submit that any further debate is out of order.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): May we stick to the rules from here in?

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. members use the rules to avoid debating the issue, we will have to challenge them.

Mr. Grossman: How can we uphold the ruling if Mr. Speaker has not the right to use his discretion?

Mr. Speaker: I feel that there is no rule. I will read the resolution again:

That this House petition the federal government to locate at Elliot Lake the nuclear research station which is scheduled for construction in Manitoba, and I rule that this can be given as a notice of motion.

I do not believe it is urgent that it be put today. All those in favour of the Speaker's ruling will please say "aye."

All those who are opposed will please say "nay."

Mr. Grossman: Elliot Lake will not thank the hon. members for playing politics.

Mr. MacDonald: Who is playing politics?

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Call in the members.

The Speaker's ruling has been challenged. Will all members who are in favour of the ruling say "aye."

As many as are opposed say "nay."

The ruling was sustained on the following division:

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. J. Root (Minister without Portfolio): Mr. Speaker, since this is the first time that I have taken part in formal debate in this session of this Legislature, I want to join with others in offering to you my congratulations on your election to the high office that you hold. Through the years that I have been a member of this House, I watched you as you discharged your responsibilities in a way that was a credit both to yourself and to the people you represent. I know you will discharge your present responsibilities with equal credit to this Legislature. I would also like to pay my respects and congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Morrow) on his appointment as chairman of the committee of the whole House, and as Deputy Speaker.

He too has been a member of this House for many years. The fact that he has been returned at every election indicates that he has done a good job of representing his people. I know from personal experience that he is one of the ablest hon. members of this Legislature, and I wish him well.

I would like to congratulate hon. members of this House who have been charged with added responsibility during the past months. I am sure they will find their work interesting, and that they will be a credit to this Legislature.

At this time I would like to welcome personally the new hon. members to the House and I say that with all sincerity regardless of what party they may represent.

I remember the time I first took my seat in this House, and realized that the seats in this Legislature are not for sale. They belong to the people and the only way one can occupy one of these seats is to persuade the people back in the constituencies to decide that one is the member they want in the seat.

I welcome these new hon. members. I have listened to a number of their addresses, which were constructive and thought provoking, and I know these hon. gentlemen will make a great contribution as the days go by.

I want to congratulate the hon. mover and hon. seconder of the motion to adopt the address from the Throne.

My neighbour, the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) made his maiden speech on that occasion. As I listened to his address, and as I watched him in action around the House and in committees, I have realized that the people of the county of Peel have chosen well.

This hon. member is following one of the outstanding men in the public life in Ontario, the late Colonel Thomas Kennedy, but I am sure as the years go by that he too will make his great contribution. The hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) is well known in this House, in that he was the hon. member who finally succeeded in removing the last voice of the Communist party from this chamber. In the Throne debate he made an outstanding address. Through the years, the hon. member for St. Andrew has made a great contribution to the House.

In this address today I want to refer to a couple of events that have taken place in my own riding of Wellington-Dufferin. I think all know—particularly the older hon. members—that my riding is a rural riding. There are two small towns, a number of villages and hamlets, and the balance is made up of rural townships. The riding takes in two-thirds of Wellington county and two-thirds of Dufferin county.

I remember the evening of December 26, 1959, when my youngest son asked if we could eat supper by the light of a candle. It was the day after Christmas, and he saw candles placed here and there. To meet his request, the candle was lighted, and the electric lights were turned out.

Sitting there, eating supper by the light of a candle, made my thoughts go back to the men and women who pioneered this great province. I thought of my own grandfather who paid the first taxes on our farm in 1847. His father moved into the township of Erin before the city of Guelph was founded, back in 1826. Then my thoughts went on back to his father, who crossed the border along with other Loyalists in the 1790's.

As I thought of the men and the women who pioneered this great province of ours, the men and women who laid the foundation for the development of our nation, I thought of the way in which they took the word of God for a guide, and made their place of worship a centre of community life.

These men and women laid a solid foundation for the development of our nation. I would suggest to the hon. members of this Legislature, that they keep in mind that the peaceful, friendly, law-abiding communities of Ontario have not developed just by accident. This province has developed around solid principles.

As we take part in the debates and make decisions in this Legislature, I think we should keep in mind that we have a great responsibility to those who will come after us, and should see to it that we pass on the same solid principles for future generations.

The morning following the candle-light service—on December 27—we were confronted with an entirely new situation. We had lost our hydro-electric power during the night, and our telephone system was ruined. For days afterward, people were without power and, in fact, we had nothing dependable for over a month.

I bring that to the attention of the House because I want to pay my tribute to the fine job Ontario Hydro did in restoring power in a short period of time. Nearly 75 per cent. of the people in the Orangeville area were without power. At times, between 300 and 400 workmen were in the area, brought in from as far north as Kirkland Lake. All types of equipment were used—helicopters, snow-mobiles—and in a very short space of time that great public utility, which has done so much for rural Ontario, had restored our power.

I want to say to the House, and I want the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) to know, that the people of my riding appreciate what was done on that occasion.

During that period when we were without power, we realized what Hydro and this government has done for rural Ontario through its electrification programme. On the first night, we went to bed with the lights working, but when I got up in the morning, I had to find a match to light the candle that we had on the table the night before.

Then we went up to the high shelves and got down the oil lamps that we had stored away 8 or 10 years ago, and we lighted the oil lamps because there was no hydro power. Our heating systems were disrupted. We had to kindle the wood fire. Our pumping system had stopped. Our refrigeration was gone. Our modern toilet facilities had stopped. We had no radio, no television, no power for milk coolers. All of our appliances were standing idle.

In this situation, we were reminded of where our province stood just before the present government took office with its power and development programme.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Hon. Mr. Root: When this government took office, only 19 per cent. of the farmers in Dufferin county had hydro. Only 25 per cent. of the farmers in Wellington county had hydro.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Did the hon. Minister have hydro?

Hon. Mr. Root: No, I had no hydro.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): What was the matter?

Hon. Mr. Root: I had no hydro because the government that was defeated in 1943 had not thought of putting hydro up concession lines. They were using the taxpayers' money to build lighting systems on super-highways, between here and Hamilton and Niagara Falls, and the farmers were groping in the gloom of the same lamps and lanterns that their grandfathers had used.

Mr. Speaker, that short period, back in the month of January, reminded us of the tremendous job that this government did for rural Ontario, and how they completely changed the rural way of life. When we had to drive our cattle a half a mile for water for nearly a month, we realized what power means to the farmers. When some of my neighbours, who are in the dairy business, had to truck their heavy producing milk cows out of the area to find milk coolers to cool their milk, we realized what Hydro means to the farmer.

I bring this to the attention of the House because I want to say to the Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario, and to this government, that we appreciate what they have done for rural Ontario, and we appreciate the way that Hydro moved in and restored the power that we lost overnight.

The second matter concerning my own riding, that I want to speak about just now, concerns a tragic event that occurred just about a month ago. When a freight train struck one of our school buses, 4 of our young people lost their lives and another 18 were injured. Five of these are still in hospital. I want the hon. members of the Legislature to know that I passed on their sympathy to the community and to the families affected. I know they had the sympathy of every hon. member of this Legislature, regardless of political affiliation.

Last week, for 3 days, a coronor's inquest was held. The jurors sat and listened to the evidence of some 70-odd witnesses. On the basis of the evidence they heard, they have made a number of intelligent, constructive recommendations.

I want to say in the House today that I would like the hon. Attorney-General (Mr.

Roberts) to know that the people of my community appreciate the way his Assistant Deputy, Mr. Silk, conducted that inquest. I think it was a good thing for the community. One can feel a different atmosphere. All the facts relating to that accident were brought out in the open and laid on top of the table.

I only hope that, out of the recommendations that were made by the jury, we will find changes perhaps in legislation and regulations, and perhaps a greater sense of responsibility on the part of everyone to see to it that similar accidents do not take place in the future.

Now, Mr. Speaker, on June 11, the government headed by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) received a tremendous vote of confidence from the people of Ontario.

An hon. member: It is a minority government.

Hon. Mr. Root: As I listened to some of the hon. members opposite, I had a feeling that they failed to comprehend what actually happened. It may be that they are still living in the glow of the CBC broadcast on election night, and have failed to catch the figures that are in the Blue Book that was placed on their desks giving the facts regarding the general election.

In case they have not read the figures, I want them to know that the hon. Prime Minister was returned with every hon. member of his cabinet. Every member of a commission was re-elected; 71 members who support the government were elected. There were 22 in the official Opposition and 5 in the third party.

Let me give some figures that I think are significant: There are 98 seats in the Ontario legislative assembly and I would like hon. members of this House to realize, Mr. Speaker, just how many hon. members of this House won their riding with a clear majority.

We will take the third group. One member was elected with a clear majority. We will take the official Opposition. Six members were elected with a clear majority. Supporting the hon. Prime Minister, 44 members were elected with a clear majority.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): He is repeating the hon. Prime Minister's speech.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Would the hon. Minister permit a question? Could he tell us how many little pocket boroughs there were in that 44 that had fewer than 20,000 voters on the list?

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): It is as fair for one party as it is—

Hon. Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I would answer the question of the hon. member for Oshawa by reminding him that from time to time there is a redistribution in this province, and the seats are set up with the desire to give fair representation to all parts of the province. I think some of the hon. members who sit in urban seats, while they may have more constituents, have very small ridings, and it is much easier to service more people in a small riding.

I want to draw attention to some other facts, since hon. members are showing interest in my figures. Three leaders contested the election. The hon. leader of the third group (Mr. MacDonald) was elected by a minority vote, 1,921 short of half the votes that were polled in his riding. The hon. leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer)—and I have a great deal of respect for the hon. leader of the Opposition—was short by some 4,800 of half the votes polled in his riding. However, the hon. leader with whom I am associated, the hon. Prime Minister, had a clear majority of 7,207 over his combined opposition, almost 3 to 1.

I am pointing these facts out, Mr. Speaker, because as I have listened to hon. members opposite, I had a feeling that they failed to comprehend what the people of Ontario said on June 11.

In their speeches, the hon. members opposite discussed the great farming industry, agriculture. Let me tell them what happened in the rural ridings of Ontario. We will take the minority group. I repeat—there were 98 seats.

I predicted a year ago that the hon. leader of the CCF party was not fooling anyone when he talked about agriculture. I predicted then that he would not even run a candidate in most of the rural ridings, and that prediction turned out to be true. I think there were 17 rural ridings in which there was no candidate.

But leaving that aside, out of the 98 seats there was not one rural member elected.

In the official Opposition—and I am going to give the benefit of the doubt to ridings such as Waterloo North, where the vote is predominantly urban, and I will give the benefit to Stormont where the vote is predominantly urban—6 members of that party were elected in ridings that had a substantial rural vote.

The Progressive-Conservative party elected 44 members in ridings that had a substantial rural vote. And there is the picture, 6 to 44.

So I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, lest the hon. members opposite be carried away by some of the speeches that have been made by hon. members in their own party group—perhaps have not checked the figures—that they keep in mind that rural Ontario backed this government.

If they add up the total Liberal majority in the 6 ridings I have mentioned—and remember I have included ridings with a heavy urban vote—they will find it was some 14,589; while in the ridings that I have mentioned that supported the government, the majority adds up to a total of 125,100 or a clear majority of approximately 110,000 over the majority polled by hon. members who sit in the combined Opposition groups.

Mr. Speaker, you might ask why this happened. With that in mind, I would suggest that we take a look at the record of the government, at its sound progressive policy. Let us take a look at what has happened in Ontario since this government took office in 1943.

Mr. Whicher: What about Hydro?

Hon. Mr. Root: I mentioned something about Hydro a few minutes ago, but this government has advanced on a broad front in every field. With the change in government, there were many changes in policies, changes that have made Ontario the most attractive place in Canada in which to establish a home, a business or an industry. I say that without fear of honest contradiction.

There are 10 provinces in Canada, and when this government took office it was the only Progressive-Conservative government in Canada. There were all kinds of governments. We had CCF, we had Social Credit, we had Coalition, we had Union Nationale and what have you—we had Liberal governments. Yet more than half of the new people, and over half of the new industry, came to our own province under Conservative government.

In that period of time, Ontario has provided jobs for an additional labour force of 424,000 people. That is how many more people are working in the labour force of Ontario since this government took office.

Our socialist hon. friends may try to tell us about Saskatchewan under their policy. Let me remind those hon. members that, while Ontario has grown by nearly 2 million people, under the sound policies of this government, the province of Saskatchewan, under socialistic policies, practically stood still, and in 15 years grew by something like 50,000 people.

Let me remind hon. members that Ontario's new population of nearly 2 million people adds up to more than the total population in June, 1950, of Saskatchewan, Manitoba, and Prince Edward Island combined. Let us try to grasp what 2 million people mean to the economy of Ontario.

Let me remind hon. members that the total population of Metropolitan Toronto is around 1.4 million people. One would have to add to this figure the populations of Brampton, Milton, Georgetown, Acton, Orangeville, Rockwood, Doon, Fergus, Elora, Guelph, Kitchener, Waterloo, Galt, Preston, Elmira, Hamilton, Stratford, and they would still be many thousands short of the expansion that has taken place in Ontario since this party took office.

Why has Ontario attracted so many people and so much industry in recent years? I submit it is because of the sound policies of the present government, policies with regard to power development. In 1943 we had something like 2.4 million horsepower, and by 1958 it had gone up to 7.7 million horsepower, and it is projected that by 1962 it will reach 8.974 million horsepower.

There have been 23 new power developments in Ontario since the change of government. Cheap power has made possible industrial development. Rural electrification has completely changed the rural way of life. Ninety-four per cent. of the farms in Ontario now have power. I mentioned the former government's policy of cancelled contracts, lighted highways, and farms without electrical conveniences. The present government policy has been a policy of power development—power for industry and business; power for expansion; power for our farming.

The increase in population stimulates all lines of endeavour. It is a great market for our farm produce; a great new market for business, for industry.

We have power to operate new mines, new pulp mills, paper mills, and mills of all kinds, power for new towns built around mines and mills.

We think of places like Marathon and Terrace Bay and Atikokan and there are many others. These are but a few of the new towns and developments.

I do not have to tell people in this area of the great expansion in industry, business and population. We have only to look about us to see what is typical of all parts of Ontario.

What do 2 million people mean to agriculture? I used these figures before. Let us look at the per capita consumption of an extra 2 million people and they will consume annually approximately 175 million pounds of beef, 125 million pounds of pork, 20 million pounds of turkey, 50 million pounds of chicken, 50 million dozen eggs, 800 million pounds of fluid milk, 40 million pounds of butter, 300 million pounds of flour, 11 million pounds of beans, 50 million pounds of tomatoes, 300 million pounds of potatoes, 70 million pounds of apples, 100 million pounds of vegetables—and your onions come in among the vegetables, 17 million pounds of peaches, 10 million pounds of pears, 6 million pounds of plums, 3 million pounds of strawberries. These figures are taken from the Dominion bureau of statistics, if hon. members want to check them for themselves.

If we take the market value of the products we consume, we will find that our population growth has created a market that is worth many of hundreds of millions of dollars of purchasing power in the hands of our farm people. This is a new permanent market here today, and it is growing every month because of sound policies of this government. Farm people have many millions of extra dollars to spend in our villages, towns and cities. This money comes from the sale of produce to new people who call Ontario home.

This great purchasing power means extra volume for every kind of business. Extra business means more jobs, and again we increase purchasing power with further expansion.

While I am speaking of agriculture, let me remind hon. members that it was this government that introduced The Community Centres Act in 1949. There are 1,345 centres which have received grants totalling between $3 million and $4 million. Nearly $23 million is out in junior farm loans.

We look at our health budget in the field of human betterment. In 1943-1944 it amounted to $9,317 million. Last year we voted $81,201 million.

Many new fields are receiving assistance that received no assistance before this government took office. These include alcoholism research, health units, the Ontario heart foundation, building grants to hospitals, training certified nursing assistants, special capital and rehabilitation grants, grants to assist nursing training schools. We have the Ontario hospital plan with over 90 per cent.

of our people covered. We must remember that Ontario was the first to sign with Ottawa, making possible this scheme for all Canada.

The welfare budget in 1943 was a little over $18 million and last year we voted $61.7 million with increased assistance to the aged, blind, and widows with children. We were the first province with disability pensions. We have maintenance and capital construction grants for charitable institutions, maintenance and capital construction grants for homes for the aged and for day nurseries.

Let us look at education. In 1943, the total provincial grant was some $8.5 million. This is for elementary and secondary schools. Last year we voted $147 million. Increase in the last 3 years has been some $68 million. Grants to universities in 1944 amounted to more than $2.8 million, and last year they were $24.4 million. Add to that, scholarships and bursaries and the student loan funds that are available.

The new system of grants makes possible a more extensive education programme for both rural and urban scholars, including buses, school sites, cafeterias, industrial arts, home economics and general purpose rooms.

Then we think of highways. I am particularly interested in highways in the rural parts of Ontario. They are our life-line because almost 100 per cent. of our milk, and about 90 per cent. of our livestock and produce, is moved to market by motor transport. In 1943-1944 the total highway budget was $18.84 million. Last year we voted $261.3 million.

The municipal road subsidy in 1943-1944 was $4.9 million; last year it was $51.488 million. What would our municipalities do without the kind of assistance they are receiving from this government? What about development roads? In 1943-1944, nothing; last year $5.783 million. In other words, in 1943 there were less than $5 million for municipal roads and last year over $58 million.

In the villages, towns and cities in 1943, under the former government, the grants were nil. Now they receive grants along with the rural municipalities. Back in those days, what did we pay for bridges? Dollar for dollar. But under this government it is $4 to $1, which is 80 per cent.

Let us take a look at the municipalities and local taxpayers. The total grants to municipalities and school boards and associated agencies in 1943 amounted to $19.1 million. Last year it was estimated we would pay $310 million. The unconditional grants last year alone amounted to $25.3 million.

In other words, on unconditional grants, we knew we were going to turn over $6.3 million more than the total assistance for municipalities and school boards when this government took office.

On a comparative basis, provincial aid to the municipal taxpayer today adds up to just about 16 to 1 as compared with the record of the previous regime.

I could go on and tell hon. members of the leadership that Ontario has given to the St. Lawrence development, the bringing of natural gas to Ontario solving many fuel problems, in the development of our tourist industry, creating a Department of Energy Resources to provide power for future expansion and development. I could mention the water resources and conservation programme, our parks programme, and many other ways in which this government has given leadership in the tremendous developments that are taking place in Ontario.

I give hon. members these figures, to give them some indication of why the people of Ontario were not fooled and on June 11 gave this government the tremendous majority they did.

Let me conclude by reminding hon. members that the great programme that I have been talking about has been carried out without high provincial taxes. It has been carried out with about 60 per cent. of the capital construction financed out of current revenue. Fifteen years ago, it would have required 4 years of our revenue to pay our net debt. Today, only 18 months of our current revenue would be required to wipe out the provincial debt.

This is our record, tremendous developments without excessive taxation. It is a record that makes Ontario the most attractive place in which to live, and in which to operate a business or an industry.

Our programme has not been one of reckless promises. It has been a programme of orderly expansion and development, more people, more industry, more jobs, more wages, more business, more opportunity and, from these, more productivity and revenue to continue to do the job.

Now, Mr. Speaker, is it any wonder that the people swept this government back into power with an overwhelming majority? On January 26, we listened to the address that was delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay). His Honour's address outlined a programme that indicates this government, headed by the hon. Prime Minister, is not resting on its laurels, but is moving forward on every front. His Honour's address indicates that, as long as the present government holds office, Ontario will continue to move forward, the keystone in the arch of Confederation.

Mr. Speaker, last Tuesday evening we witnessed in this House a scene we will not soon forget. The hon. member for Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett) delivered an address that, in my opinion, was a model of what we expect from an hon. member of this Legislature, a credit to himself and a credit to the people he represents. Mr. Speaker, I am proud to put that address in the hands of my family, and have them read it as an example of the type of hon. members who are elected to this chamber.

On the other hand, the hon. member for Ottawa South was preceded by the hon. member for Bruce who, in my opinion, delivered an address that was just the opposite—no credit to himself or to the people he represents. The hon. member's attack on the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) was entirely uncalled for and totally unwarranted.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that if the fine people of Bruce knew what their hon. member said in his address, they would deal with the hon. member in an appropriate manner at the first opportunity.

It is not my intention to say anything about the hon. member's remarks concerning myself. I take them for what they are worth. The multiplicity of figures that the hon. member used, regarding the prices of agriculture products, indicated his lack of knowledge of his subject.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that over the weekend I read the speech I made in 1958, to which the hon. member referred. I stand behind everything I said, and would be quite willing to repeat what I said at any time. Indeed, I would be glad to go back and repeat what I said in 1957 or 1956.

In the hon. member's address he kept quoting the price of eggs and pork, carefully avoiding, for instance, potatoes and beef. The hon. member knows that, from the chart he was looking at, practically every grade of cattle had increased in value from 3 to 4 cents per pound between 1957 and 1958, increasing the value of Canadian cattle by approximately $375 million.

The hon. member carefully avoided that, although he knows that cattle prices are still at the same high level. The hon. member knows that last fall, stock cattle were selling at from 25 to 27 cents per pound in September, and stock calves were running from 28 to 31.5 cents per pound.

Mr. Speaker, the hon. member for Bruce knows that The Ontario Department of Agriculture, headed by the hon. Minister whom he attacked so unfairly, put up one-third of the capital cost for stock sale yards, for yard scales, for scales and auction rings, making it possible for the farmers of his own county of Bruce to receive top prices for their cattle in their home county.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, did I understand the hon. Minister to say that this government put up one-third of the cost of those stock yards?

Hon. Mr. Root: That is my information.

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Speaker, for the hon. Minister's information, the hon. Minister is entirely, completely wrong.

Hon. Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, I will have to accept the word of the hon. member. I took my percentage from one of the top men in The Department of Agriculture, yet the hon. member says that The Department of Agriculture is wrong. I think the hon. member is quite aware that the policy of organizing these stock sales was organized by The Department of Agriculture headed by the hon. Minister he attacked so—

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, let me tell the hon. Minister this, that this government, to my knowledge, put up only about $1,000 and we have $25,000 invested in that.

Hon. Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, now we are getting somewhere, the price is coming up, just as the price of eggs has come up in the last week. Mr. Speaker, if the hon. member for Bruce were fair, he would say that the farmers in Bruce county would want him to apologize to the hon. Minister of Agriculture for his remarks last Tuesday evening.

In conclusion, everyone knows that the two products mentioned by the hon. member for Bruce last Tuesday evening were placed under a deficiency support programme at the request of grass root farmers. For some months, the Diefenbaker government continued the policy of the former Liberal government, and supported the price of certain products.

This support policy created a situation where the taxpayer was paying for farm products that were not produced by farmers. These non-farmer producers produced a surplus that forced the market down to the support price, and created an unsaleable surplus.

A deficiency programme is designed to assist farmers, not speculators and middlemen. The present sag in prices that the hon. member for Bruce talks about will force the non-farmers out of business, and then—through a deficiency payment based on the average price over a number of years—the government at Ottawa will make up the loss to legitimate farmers.

This system is a sincere attempt to help the farmers, and was set up at the request of practical farmers.

Mr. Speaker, to conclude my remarks regarding the speech of the hon. member for Bruce, I would ask hon. members to look at the chart he referred to. It is on page 770 of the 1958 Hansard. I will compare the price of eggs on the chart with the figure quoted in the Toronto Globe and Mail just this morning. On February 11, 1958—these are the figures the hon. member was using the other night, half the time—and he used a lot of other figures during the debate. However, these figures are taken right from the Globe and Mail and hon. members can go over and put the Globe and Mail on the microfilm. They do not have to take my word for anything.

Grade A large in 1958 were 36-37 cents, and in this morning's Globe and Mail they were 35 cents. Grade A medium, in 1958—on February 11—were 34, and this morning they were 33. Grade A small were 32 and this morning they are 27. Grade B sold for 29 cents in 1958 and this morning 28. Grade C, 26 cents and this morning 22. When one compares the figures that are in the Globe and Mail, and realizes that the hon. member for Bruce came to this House and put into page 455 of this year's Hansard, a figure of 9 cents per dozen—one cannot but wonder what will some politicians do.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I rise on a point of personal privilege. The hon. Minister has suggested to me, by his insinuations now, that eggs have not been sold in the last two or three months in the province at 9 cents a dozen. If he is insinuating that, Mr. Speaker, he is entirely wrong, and I am prepared to place the bills in this House.

Hon. Mr. Root: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member last Tuesday evening was quoting figures that I used in 1958, and they were taken from the delivered price in Toronto, as quoted in the Globe and Mail on February 11. I have quoted the delivered price as reported in the Globe and Mail this morning.

Mr. Whicher: I am telling the hon. Minister what the farmer gets, Mr. Speaker, and the hon. Minister should stick up for the farmers.

Hon. Mr. Root: Well, the hon. member for Bruce did not say anything about what the farmer got in 1958 or 1957.

Mr. Whicher: I am telling the hon. Minister what the farmer gets today, and he cannot live on it.

Hon. Mr. Root: Well, Mr. Speaker, I want to say this to the hon. member, he will find a great multiplicity of figures that he used last Tuesday evening. He will find, for instance, that he said that eggs were down as low as 9 cents.

Mr. Whicher: That is true.

Hon. Mr. Root: And he compared that with the figure I quoted from the delivered price in Toronto. Now he was talking about one thing, and I was talking about another, and that is why I say, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. member misled the House. The hon. member said that grade A medium eggs were selling for 17 cents a dozen.

Mr. Whicher: That is what the farmer gets, Mr. Speaker. That is what I am interested in.

Hon. Mr. Root: In this morning's paper, grade A medium eggs were quoted at 33 cents a dozen. If they have come up 16 cents a dozen in the last week, why, the farmer will soon be out of the red in the egg-producing business, and everybody will be happy.

But, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to make these comments because I felt the hon. member's remarks were entirely uncalled for. They were no credit to this House. I will leave it to the hon. member for Bruce to take whatever action he sees fit. But I think he owes the hon. Minister of Agriculture an apology for suggesting that he has made a mess of agriculture. The farm people indicated that they are behind this government. Indeed, why would they not be behind this government? No government has ever done as much for agriculture as the present government.

Mr. Speaker, in conclusion, I want to say that I am sure that every responsible hon. member in the House who looks back over the record of this government, headed by our hon. Prime Minister, and who reads the address from the Throne, forecasting a great expansion programme in all fields, will want to see to it that a solid vote is cast when we vote to adopt the speech that was delivered by His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, I would say, in opening, that was what one might call a "rootin-tootin" speech.

I want to say, Mr. Speaker, that, coming from Essex as I do, I am one of those people who is very proud of the fact that you have been appointed as Speaker of this House. I have known you for a long time, and I think we are, I can say, friends. You bring honour to yourself and also to the people of Essex.

But more important, I think, than all of that, you have a very fine wife and a family whom I have known for a long time. I want to say that I think that your wife will make a wonderful hostess in the part that this lady plays in helping you to do your job and do it well.

I think it is important that the House should hear that the Speaker's wife, gracious as she is, comes from one of Essex county's old and respected families. Mr. Speaker has a number of boys and girls, and his family can well be proud of their father and mother. Conversely, the parents can be well proud, too, of the boys and girls they have.

So I am one of those who wishes you well. And I hope that you will not see fit, after my having said all that—and I really meant it—I hope that you shall not see fit within the next while to call me out of order.

Now, I have noticed that sometimes your job hits a kind of a rough spot, but I just want to say, as one who has been in this type of work for a long while, that as we travel along the road of life, even though we were not in this House, even though we were following some other walk of life, indeed every now and then we hit what is known as a rough spot. But I am sure that you are capable and able, and I am certain that if others have done it, you can do equally as well.

Essex county has been fortunate in the past while. We have had 3 Speakers of the House. One of these was the hon. James Clarke, who I think served this House ably and well. He was a man who fought for his King, and served his province, and became a very prominent person in the community of which I am proud. After that, came a man who had also served his King, a man who had served his church, and a man who occupied the same chair that you occupy now. I speak of Rev. Davies, Rev. Father Davies, one of the most outstanding men I think that ever came from our part of the country.

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister of Planning and Development): The hon. member sure promoted him.

Mr. Reaume: Father Davies is right. If there is any question about that, maybe we ought to straighten that point out. I did not feel that the hon. Minister was going to question me. I have some things to say after a while that he may question, but I really did not think that he was going to question that.

Now, Mr. Speaker, as I have said, I think you will rank among the very best. But you know in June—and I have heard so much about what happened in June—and I have heard so much about this business of “why you are over there, and we are over here.”

Now, in order that we might straighten out that little matter in a hurry, let us all agree that the only real reason that the Conservatives are over there and we are over here is because they got more votes than we did. But we do not think that it is going to go on forever.

As a matter of fact, we are now engaged in the work of laying plans and doing things that will change the order of things around this old House, and that day might not be too far away.

Now, Mr. Speaker, after the storm that took place in Essex county, the people of that great part of the province had the fortitude and the wisdom—if I might put it that way—to send to this House 3 Liberal members. I might say that if the wind and the storm had blown just a little bit more, they would have sent one more Liberal, but it so happened that they sent only one member of the Conservative party back.

Now, having done that, I was hopeful that—having in mind the importance of Essex county and everything it stands for—the hon. Prime Minister of this great province (Mr. Frost) might have seen fit to invite the only Tory member from that part of the province to his cabinet. I want to say that I think our present Speaker could have used his influence better as a member of the cabinet—in the inner circles—than he can as Speaker, although I have already said that I am proud of the fact that he was appointed Speaker.

But how the hon. Prime Minister ever overlooked the appointment of the present Speaker, and did not appoint him to some important post in the inner circles of government, I do not know. I want to say that I think that part of the province will suffer as a result of the oversight on the part of the hon. Prime Minister.

Now some may ask, and some may wonder, why 3 Liberal members were elected from Essex. Well, one of the very important reasons for it—and hon. members can put this one down in their little black book—is that the Tory government, which has been in power in the province since 1943, has not done one thing for that part of the province. The former members from Essex who were here—and maybe with all the good intentions in the world—were in a position to fight for the people of Essex county. But they got nothing for them at all. The people there just became sick and tired of all this monkey business, all these promises and no action. Therefore at the very first opportunity—and that opportunity came in the month of June—they kicked the Conservative members out holus bolus. I want to tell this House that they will stay out for a long time.

Now there have been some people who have rumoured, there have been some people who slyly say that, because of the fact that 3 Liberal hon. members have come from Essex, that the people in power now—I refer to the hon. members over there—will not give anything or do anything for that great part of the province. Now I do not think that is true.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Oh, no.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Minister says it is right.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, no, it is not right.

Mr. Reaume: Well, all right. But I just want to put the books straight, if I may, that the hon. members who are here along with me, I think the House will agree, are two fine looking fellows.

I remember that a year ago the Great White Father arose on the opposite side of the House, while I was speaking, and said: “You will not be back here next year.”

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa) I heard him.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. member heard him. Sure, we all heard him. Well now, I just want to say—

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): The hon. member cannot be right all the time.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Minister is not even right any of the time.

I just want to say that I never felt so good and so happy in the 53 years I have been on the face of the earth—

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): He looks older.

Mr. Reaume: —and I came back and I do not feel any older, and I brought two fine young hon. members with me.

Now our job, of course, is perfectly clear. It is to make abundantly certain that these rumours—and I think and I hope that they are false—that some on the benches opposite do not “take it out” on Essex county because we have 3 hon. members in the Opposition. Our job quite frankly will be to keep an eye on hon. members opposite.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Will he start—

Mr. Reaume: I wish the hon. member would get back in the wood pile.

It is to keep an eye on the hon. members over there and to work actively and to make certain that the interest of the people of Essex county is properly looked after.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: We do that for everybody.

Mr. Reaume: They will do it for us or they will hear about it.

Now I just want to say a word or two about the former hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Dunlop), and I must hurry along. I know there are other hon. members who want to speak and I suppose they are all anxious for me to hurry. I will not finish too quickly, but I want to say just a word about that fine Christian man.

I do not think in all the time that I have had the honour of being in this House have I ever encountered, or have I ever met, a finer Christian gentleman in every sense of the word. I can only hope and pray along with all hon. members that he and his wife will spend many happy years here with us. I hope that their health—both of them—remains good.

Now, I want to say a word, too, about some changes on the benches of the people in power, the government. I notice they have brought in a couple, at least, of capable young men.

Applause.

Mr. Reaume: Now do not clap too quickly. But I want to hasten to add to that that it will make no difference at all. It will make no difference at all who they ask to the cabinet over there. It will still be a one-man circus.

To the young hon. Ministers who were appointed—first of all, to the present hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts)—I will say I am very proud to call myself his friend. Here comes my other hon. friend back in the House. I am glad to have him back.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Is the hon. member not the fellow who said—

Mr. Reaume: Now, let the hon. Prime Minister just stay there for awhile, let him not get in a hurry. I am certainly glad to see him. Was he up at Elliot Lake for awhile, or was he just hiding behind the Throne? I did not know what happened to him but I am very happy that he is back. We want to make sure that he is healthy and well.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure, I am fine.

Mr. Reaume: Because, I read these papers every day that say that the health of the hon. Prime Minister is not good. It is reported that he is thinking about quitting—and now the Crown Prince gets busy and starts running around here. One would think he was a page boy. But I think that the hon. Prime Minister is very healthy and I think he is very well. I do not want him to quit, I hope he hangs around for a while yet, so that we can have the honour of beating him—

Hon. Mr. Frost: My dear hon. friend, that is what the hon. member said last time. But he did not do it. He said that last time.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, there we go, there we go.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Just this time last year.

Mr. Reaume: I want to talk for a moment now, if the hon. Prime Minister will just keep quiet. As a matter of fact, I have never seen the hon. Prime Minister's face so red as it was a little earlier. I was amazed and amused, because any time that we can find that his skin is getting thin, then that gives us the opportunity of the insertion of a little more of the pin. However, the hon. Prime Minister got caught about an hour ago playing his own game, and it made him so mad he would like to have boiled right out of his seat.

Well, now, Mr. Speaker, let me say the more the hon. Prime Minister boils, the happier we are.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I—

Mr. Reaume: Now, let the hon. Prime Minister just sit down. He has been talking all day. He is a little hoarse.

Now, I remember the hon. Prime Minister back in the days of 1943, and admittedly he and I were fighting on the same side of the fence, and he was a mild, calm, meek little fellow. Indeed, one would wonder whether he was around.

And then, when all these years have gone by, it is amusing to come back and see him in this raging mood, and running a great big one-man circus over there. One begins to wonder just what the years do bring about.

But I want to tell hon. members of an incident that happened early this spring. I thought it was funny and I am sure the hon. Prime Minister did not think it was quite so funny. But he came to Windsor, and hon. members know how they do it—the Tory party—with all the big pork barrels that they have. They splash big ads in the paper, and they say: “The Great White Father is coming to town. We will have a parade, and we are going to rent a great big hall, and we are going to have some people there. The Great White Father is going to make a great speech.”

Well now, the hon. Prime Minister came to Essex county and they went through all of the motions of their advertisements in the paper and the parade. I will give him credit, though, for one thing, and I want to mention this. He did not come to the automotive capital of the Empire in that great big black hearse he has. He kept that one out of town.

But anyway, he arrived in town and they went to this hall. Now, they had everything in the hall but people. And so the Tory party, the “big bugs” in it, you know, had a hurried-up session, a hurried meeting and asked: “Where are we going to get some people?”

So they rented a couple of buses and they went out to the old people’s home, and they promised the people some pop and ice cream if they would come out. It was a hot day that day, I remember. They said: “You just come out and we will have a ride on the bus and get some nice fresh air.”

Well, finally, a very few people arrived. As a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, there were more flies in that hall than there were people, and I remember I was some place elsewhere that day. I picked up a paper in the morning.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend—

Mr. Reaume: Just a minute, just a minute now, let the hon. Prime Minister just keep quiet for a minute.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is wrong. That was the election before last.

Mr. Reaume: I picked up the paper. I wanted to read about this great speech of the hon. Prime Minister’s, you see. It was a wonderful, wonderful crowd. There must have been all of 40 people at this great meeting.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Just a minute.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Sure. The hon. member told us about this before.

Mr. Reaume: Just a minute. So, the hon. Prime Minister arrived in town—we got to that point—the hon. Prime Minister arrived in town and went to the hall. So he got up there in his usual way, in the fullness of time, and within the 4 corners of this and that—one never knows what he is talking about—but he “takes off” on hon. Paul Martin. Now, our hon. Prime Minister accused him of everything under the sun, ridiculed him, and then when he finished with Paul—it was not so awfully important—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That was 4 years ago.

Mr. Reaume: Wait a minute. When he finished with Paul he started crawling all over me. Now, I want to thank the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member thanked me last year. I do not want to be thanked again.

Mr. Reaume: Let me thank him. Wait a minute, I want to thank him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What does the hon. member want to thank me again for?

Mr. Reaume: Listen. Mr. Speaker, I do not want to be called out of order. By reason of the hon. Prime Minister’s visit to Essex county, I was honoured by getting the biggest vote I ever had in the 31 years that I have been in office. As a matter of fact, I would like to have the hon. Prime Minister come back any time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member said the same thing last year. He is mixed up.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Prime Minister did me a favour. Mixed up?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, mixed up.

Mr. Reaume: I will tell the hon. Prime Minister how bad it was. The returning officer—whom the hon. Prime Minister appointed—on the night of the election was on the verge of not even counting the ballots, he was going to put them on the scales and weigh them.

Mr. Speaker, look, do not let the hon. Prime Minister go away. The hon. Prime Minister is leaving me right in the middle of my speech.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, the hon. Prime Minister has returned. That shows what a good sport he is.

Mr. Reaume: Thank you. The hon. Prime Minister is a good sport, I must admit that.

Well, now, Mr. Speaker, I have been here since 1951, and I have no intentions of going away from here. I like it here.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, the hon. member is going to sit over there for a long time, is he not?

Mr. Reaume: Not over here. I hope to be over there one of these days, you know. I have been looking over there and it looks as if it is not a bad place to be. I have my eye on it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Has the hon. member picked out his chair?

Mr. Reaume: I would like to be as close to the front as I could. But hon. members know that when any problems arise in the province, we always hear some prominent speaker from the other side of the House arise and say, "Well, now, let us take a look at the record and let us look back into the days of Hepburn."

Well, now, I just want to point out that there are a lot of young hon. members in the House today, like myself, who were not very old in the days of Hepburn, and I do not want to—as I do not think hon. members across should—burn in hell for the sins of past governments—including the Henry or Ferguson or Bennett governments. Good heavens, if we—

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): The hon. member has sins of his own.

Mr. Reaume: We all have, and that is what I am worried about. I do not want to ever have to burn for the sins of those other people.

Now, suppose we talk for a moment about, for instance, Mr. Ferguson. I remember as a small boy that one of the things he brought in was very important apparently at that time. He was the man who instituted and brought about the sale of 4.4 beer which was not fit for pigs to drink. Now, I will leave him rest.

Then we go on to the next man who followed him, Mr. Henry. Now, you will remember him well, Mr. Speaker, because you were around at that time—1933. I shall never forget this as a boy. The Henry government, on the eve of the election, came out with what was known at that time as the sunshine budget. This was a budget that—oh, it pictured everything in the whole province as being flowery, lots of money, no problems at all, everybody was happy in the hungry thirties and so—

Do not go away, please.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will see the hon. member after a while.

Mr. Reaume: I will see the hon. Prime Minister later, yes.

Well then, there were—as hon. members know—in that period of time, a large number of unemployed people in the province. So the Tories of that day, with the wisdom that they always think they have, instituted a public works scheme in order that they might put thousands of people out on a job.

This was the extent of the great public works scheme of that day. They hired thousands of men who went along the roads and highways of the province, and they dug holes here, holes there, holes everywhere. Then they had thousands more come along and fill up those holes. It was an utter display of the waste of the people's funds.

Well now, the Liberals came into office from 1934 to 1943. Now the government of 1943—there are still, on these benches over there, a few hangovers from that period, and I want to tell hon. members—

An hon. member: They look like it, too.

Mr. Reaume: That is all they have for the present. But I want to tell hon. members of one incident that happened in the days of the Drew government and it occurred in the city from which I come.

In that year, 1945, there was a great Ford strike. Some 13,000 people were involved in this strike and they were striking as any ordinary, bona-fide union men had a perfect right to do. But there was an appeal made in those days to the government in power at that time to send the—

Mr. Grossman: Liberal?

Mr. Reaume: Liberal, your grandmother. Tory! At any rate, there was an appeal to send down the group of provincial police from this city.

Mr. MacDonald: Tell them what happened in Oshawa—

Mr. Reaume: What happened in Windsor is what I am talking about now. The hon. member can talk about Oshawa when his turn comes. So what happened was—

Mr. MacDonald: He forgets—

Mr. Reaume: I already said that I am not going to burn in hell for the sins of other people or the hon. member's either.

Mr. MacDonald: Mention Oshawa then—

Mr. Reaume: Well, when the hon. member gets all finished making his speech, I will go on with mine, because I have a long way to go yet, and he is only holding me up and there are others who want to speak. So what happened was that hundreds of officers were flown into Windsor with instructions to break up the picket lines of the union in any way they could. With them, on those planes, came bombs, tear gas bombs, night sticks and props.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Allan.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Minister will have the opportunity, Thursday all day.

What happened then? When the police arrived there, they went into a large building which was occupied by a number of men on active service. They took those people out of their beds, made the active service people sleep on the floor of the barracks, while great big fat cops that were ordered to Windsor by the government who was in office at that time, slept in comfortable beds, and made the active service boys serve as batmen for them.

The Riot Act was read to those officers sent there by the people who were in office at that time, and the very same people who are here now. The police were sent there for the purpose of beating these unfortunate men over the heads with clubs, or breaking up picket lines in any way that they could.

Some hon. members: Oh, shame.

Mr. Reaume: Oh shame, your grandmother. Let me say this to the hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: What about—

Mr. Reaume: Let me say this to the hon. Minister, I am talking now about the Tory government. He spent 8 hours talking about the Tory government the other day.

There was not one ounce of human blood spilled on the streets of that city because of that strike, but if these men—these officers—had followed the orders they got from the people in power at that time, there would have been plenty of blood flowing down our streets. The Tory government—the people that hon. members over there are so proud about—would have been the ones responsible for it.

Now out of that, in case some hon. members do not know, came what is known as the Rand formula, which has been, I think, a tremendous help to many thousands and thousands of working people clean across Canada. So, even though Windsor was chosen as the battleground upon which a certain employer and employees fought out this issue, it was there that the issue was fought out, and it was there that I say that legislation was written in favour of the working classes of people.

Now, Mr. Speaker, for a moment I want to say a word about a report that was worked on and prepared by, I think, 12 men.

Mr. MacDonald: Eleven.

Mr. Reaume: How many? Eleven men.

On March 27, 1957, we were ordered, or directed by the hon. members of the House, to sit down and to review and go over The Labour Act of the province. Now, at the outset I want to make this honest statement, that on that group or committee there were members of all parties and, from everything which I observed, there was not a single man on the committee who was there for the purpose of trying to "do a job" on either labour or employer.

I think that each and every member of the committee came there with an honest and an open mind. I really did not see any evidence of any single member of the committee trying to, for instance, do any harm or injury to the working man. I do not think that we ever thought that everything that was written in that book, or is in there now, was going eventually to become part of the law of the province.

Our job was to go over these things, and we did not agree on everything. But of one thing we can be certain—I am sure that all of us had a free hand to do what we wanted to and to say what we wanted to. It was under the chairmanship of the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney) who, I understand, is home ill. I want to say that I do not think that I have ever served on a committee that was handled so ably and so well as the hon. Minister of Mines handled that job.

As I say, I did not see evidence of anybody trying to “do a job” on anybody else. We have oftentimes heard in the report that there is in this House a party, one party—the big 5—two heads with 5 people in the party. Well now, look—

Mr. Thomas: What does that mean?

Mr. Reaume: The hon. member will know what it means. I will explain it to him as we go along because we have lots of time, I am not going to hurry. I am not going to hurry and he can make a dozen speeches tomorrow if he wants to, I do not care.

But I do want to say that there is no such thing, within the rank and file of the union men and women across this great province of ours, as their having vested in any one party the right to speak for them and them only. That is just so much craziness. Now there might be some kind of an under-the-table deal, or behind-the-iron-curtain deal—

Mr. MacDonald: He ought to go to their conventions.

Mr. Reaume: I have been to the conventions when the hon. member was wearing short pants, and I want to say there might have been a deal going on as between the “big 5” and a few of the pork choppers of the unions. But that does not mean, Mr. Speaker, that the pork choppers of the unions are talking for the thousands and hundreds of thousands of people who are the rank-and-file members of unions across this province.

In my pocket I carry two union cards. And while the hon. member for York South was chirping away about what he thought about unions, I want to say that I fought for them for many years, and that is how I have those cards in my pocket. I did not buy them. I got them because of the fact that I fought for them for many years, and I have no intention of stopping that fight now.

Mr. Speaker, I notice it is 6 o'clock, so I will continue after the House resumes.

It being 6 of the clock, the House took recess.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, we were speaking about the great forces of people who are a part of the unions of the province, and I want to say a few more words about that.

I know that, in the United States, in the past number of years, there has been a feeling there that they should pass certain laws to restrict the operations of unionism. Possibly, over there, there was some real reason for doing it, and some real reason for taking the action that they have. But I want to make this statement, and I think it is right, that the unions of Canada, generally speaking, are composed of a large group of men and women who have joined together to protect their rights.

I have not seen any evidence at all in the operation of trade unions in Canada where anything crooked is going on. I think that they are made up essentially of good, honest people.

Now, the rights that union men and women have won through the long period of years are rights that they have indeed fought for. I think that if any hon. member has in mind passing anything that in any way restricts unions in organizing the unorganized, we might then be taking action against a group of people who have done much in the way of making Canada a good place for us all.

I honestly feel that many of the social Acts of Parliament that are written on the statute books of the province, and indeed of Canada, have been placed there by the effort and by the hard work of real union men and women. I would hate to see any of those rights taken away from them.

Now again, may I for a moment refer to this little blue book. I want to say again that I do not think that, when we sat for some 14 months or more, we ever hoped or thought that everything in this book would become part of the laws of the province.

Indeed, one thing that I found rather strange, yet probably it is not, in the hearing of all the briefs—and there was a large volume of briefs coming both from unions and from the companies—one thing certainly always stood out.

In the instance of the unions, they extolled the virtues of unions and in some cases they ran down the employer. In the briefs of the companies they always extolled the virtues of the company and ran down the unions.

But there was one thing, I think, that was absent from all of the briefs, and this became most apparent as we went on, and that was the question of who was going to protect the rights of the great multitudes of people in the province who were not either part of the union or part of the company.

And I think that is one point upon which we can dwell. I think that we must bear in mind the rights of the individual who is neither a part of union or a part of management. These people are, indeed, a very important part of the province.

There was nobody at the hearings, either through briefs or otherwise, who seemed to care a bit about the problem that was facing this part of the general public. Safeguarding their rights is, I say, a job that we in this House must do. In doing that, I have no idea what kind of amendments we are going to propose, I have not got the slightest idea. Being over here as I am, I would not have any means of finding out. If I had, I would.

I can only take from the word of certain hon. cabinet Ministers who spoke before unions, and indicated—if I read the paper rightly—that there is not going to be much change in the present Act as it is written now.

Well, as one of those people who signed this little book, I am not anxious or desirous of "taking a powder," because we only wrote it for the purpose of bringing it in before all hon. members, so that they, in their wisdom or good thinking, might advise us what is proper.

I want to say again that I think it would be advisable, concerning any amendment to the Act at all, that we should go slow on this problem.

I am not one of those people who do not think that the province is really on fire. I am one of those people who think that the bargaining table after all is the rightful and proper place to sit down and settle problems that exist between employee and employer. So I hope that the people who are responsible for bringing down any amendments at all will go slow.

I know there is a great need involved in the argument which has been going on between craft unions and the exchange, so I think that the only way we are ever going to solve those problems that exist—the boiling pot of the problems which exist—in the province between employee and employer, in the majority of cases, they are to be found right in the craft union and the exchange with whom they deal.

And I think this, that if a series of meetings are held, under the auspices of the department—and I think they are being held now—I want to say that I think that is an excellent plan. The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) has been in that office since 1943, and I want to say that, in my opinion, he has done a fairly good job.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): A wonderful job.

Mr. Reaume: Do not urge me. I went as far as I could go.

But I feel that we should go slow. I do not think that the people of the province expect us to become hysterical after reading the headlines in papers from the United States. I think that we, having our homes over here, have been associated and acquainted with both sides of the fence, and I would only urge that we take a good look at the thing before doing anything that is drastic, and that we might feel sorry for after it is all over.

I want to say this, and I cannot be so complimentary in this field. There is one thing that I think the hon. Prime Minister, and all others who follow him, might take a good peek at, and I hope that we do not hear any more of these long orations and speeches of his about this winter works programme.

We are concerned at the moment with 750,000 people in Canada who are out of work. Now I know there are some people who say it is not quite that high, but that, anyway, is the figure that I am going to use. So, as far as I am concerned, that is it.

And in the province there are 235,000 people out of work—and that again is the figure that I am going to use—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Right or wrong.

Mr. Reaume: Well, as far as I am concerned, it is right. Now, if the hon. Prime Minister can prove it is wrong, that is fine. Boiling it down to my own home city, I want to say that there are now some 10,000 people unemployed. I have never heard in the 9 years that I have been in this House—not once have I heard coming from over there—any programme at all that in any way has ever dealt with the unemployment problem as it exists or as it ever existed.

The only thing that we ever heard was a lot of phony talk about a phony winter works scheme that in the instance of Windsor alone—out of some 15,000 people who were unemployed at that time with this great Tory scheme from over there—gave work to exactly 118 people. Now, if that is the kind of plan this government is going to bring down again, insofar as I am concerned, we can throw it in the ash can, because it really is not any good.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that it is pretty nearly time that the province should wake up and do something about the many thousands of people who are roaming around our streets out of work. I think that it would not be expecting, or asking, an awful lot on our part if the hon. Prime Minister of the province might indeed ask for a conference with the federal government for the purpose of working out some kind of a scheme that may, in some way, solve this problem.

Now I do not want to be labelled an apostle of gloom. But I cannot think of anything any worse than having a man at the head of a family who is out of employment. And I think that I would be safe in saying that if it were not for the fact that we now have unemployment insurance in our country, and such things as family allowances, that we might easily, right now, be deep into the heart of a depression almost as bad as we were back in the days of 1930, 1931 and 1932.

So I am hoping that, from the hon. members opposite, some idea and some plan will come up whereby we can put many thousands of our people back in useful, gainful employment.

I remember in the House—well, I think it was a year ago—we were speaking of the auto industry, and at that time I was talking about cars that were made in Italy, France, England and elsewhere other than here in Canada. I was speaking about the purchase of cars, by the provincial government, that were manufactured in foreign lands.

Well, now, they are still buying cars made in other places than here. This government, indeed, I think, ought to have enough faith in the people who make our cars, by their hands and by their brains, to set the example—instead of buying all these little peanut wagons they have around here—by purchasing cars that are made by our own people.

At that time, the hon. Prime Minister said he had some kind of plan. Well, he never came out with that plan. But he was going to advise—and I think hon. members will find it in Hansard—the automobile people of the province what they might do in order that a man or a woman making cars might have a job 12 months of the year. I never heard any more of his plan.

I understood that he was going to call on the president of the Ford Motor Company and have a talk with him, and give Mr. Sale—who has only been in the automobile work for years—the benefit of what the hon. Prime Minister knows about making cars.

Well, I hope that if he has any ideas, he will step forward and make those ideas available to the people who are engaged in that work.

Now, Mr. Speaker, going back again to that time around June—and that was a rather hectic month or so—I want to say a word about the “big 5”. There is a “big 5”, the only party I ever knew with 5 people in it with two heads.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): The hon. member knows where he will spend his future life.

Mr. Reaume: I was around here before the hon. member was born, and I will be here when he is gone.

Mr. Speaker, it was a peculiar thing, and I am not making any statement as to whether anyone in this House is pink or red or blue or any other colour, but I just want to say I note that, in the past couple of days, there has been here an epidemic in the House, everybody wants to put something on the table.

Now, I have here a paper printed here in Toronto. I understand it is tinged or tinted or even painted, and we had it translated into English so we could all read it and it goes on in these articles urging the support of the CCF party. Now I do not know whether or not my hon. friends over here ask for it or not but the fact is—

Interjection by Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. Reaume: But the fact is that they have it, and if they have it, insofar as I am concerned, they can keep it. Nobody else wants it.

Now, the second thing that I want to table—and this is about the craziest thing I have ever read. I do not really know who printed it, but on the bottom it is signed by the 3 CCF people, candidates in Essex county, and it starts off:

Dear Comrade:

Mr. MacDonald: We do that in my legion.

Mr. Reaume: And then they go on with a bunch of screwy questions and they are something like this:

It is our impression that every Canadian now believes in the principles of the CCF party. Now we want to ask you a few questions,

Now there is a whole flock of them here, of course,

Are you in favour of mass unemployment?
Are you in favour of the wealth of the country ending up in just a few hands, etc.
Now if your answer is no, Comrades, you have got to vote for us—and it is signed, president of the Essex county CCF party.

Mr. MacDonald: They lived under the Liberals at Ottawa for all those years and they learned.

Mr. Reaume: Now I am going to file those little documents, because if anybody wants to spend a rather light half-hour, packed full of silliness and crazy questions, they are all contained in this.

So I want to say to these people who have appointed themselves—nobody else has appointed them, that is for sure—but what I want to say to the “big 5”, who have appointed themselves as the guardians of the working man, is that the kind of working man they are guarding and playing with makes upwards of $10,000 a year. They see they are not going to push anybody off the edge of the earth.

The Liberal party, of which I am proudly a part, has been here for a long time. These birds over here, sitting on the rail fence, are going I do not know where. I am not quite too sure of the name, is it Social Democrats?

But there is one thing that they know about, that is that they are trying to worm their way into the trade union moneybags so that they can still—for a long time to come if possible—sit on nice comfortable easy chairs. Now, we are not going to allow a bunch of crows like them to push us off the edge of the earth, so they can stop worrying about it any time now.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Reaume: Well now, Mr. Speaker, I just wanted to say a word and again—

Mr. MacDonald: He ought to go to the next—

Mr. Reaume: Well, why do you not put a button on that thing, Mr. Speaker?

Interjection by Mr. MacDonald.

Mr. Reaume: My goodness, we cannot get order around here tonight.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): The hon. member is disturbing the peace, the little peace.

Mr. Reaume: The other matter for a moment I want to speak about is The Department—or the former department—of Planning and Development.

Now, before I start on this, I want to say that I have a real affection for the former hon. Minister of Planning and Development. I just want to say to him that if he ever develops our province the way that he planned it, oh man, what a place it is going to be!

Now I think it is pretty near time as I have said often before. The hon. Minister is a fine fellow, but he is always at the back of the parade. Maybe it is because of the weight, but he should take a little practice and try to get up in front once in a while and do a little planning that really counts.

Now I know that after his trip—he was in certain parts of the north and some of my friends up there were mailing me copies of the papers in the north. I know that he did not feel well when he got back, but I suggest this, and I am happy incidentally that his department has been split because I think that he will admit that he got the work of the department into such a state of confusion that it will take Lorne Cumming quite a while to untangle things. After all, he, in effect, will be practically the Minister of the other department now—with a little help from the present men in office. I think that that was a very excellent move.

So now the only other department—and I wish the hon. Minister would look over here—is The Department of Public Works. Now there really is an important one.

Prior to that great day in June, the Tories in Essex county were running around, and were telling the people up there that they were going to build a school. They were going to build a public works building, a teachers' school, a college—nothing ever happened. This was announced, I think, a year and a half ago in the House. Not one step was taken, not one thing was done.

After the exit of two Tory members from this House, the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) came up to Windsor and said, "Now my dear friends, because of tight money we just cannot go on with these buildings now."

I want to say to him that this was a definite promise, made quite some time ago. The people up there are waiting for these buildings to start, and they are waiting for the hon. Minister to do something about it. They are not anxious for him to come down there and give them a lot of hot air, or speeches. It was a promise that came from the hon. Minister opposite; it was a promise that was made quite some time ago.

I submit that if the people wanted to add up all their broken promises, it would fill a pretty fair-sized book.

Now is the proper time to start keeping some of the promises, and they can start off right in Windsor, if they want to, in keeping the promises that they and other people made.

Mr. Speaker, I want to say just one more word about Elliot Lake and the problems that they have there. We have talked about this thing for about a week. I am just wondering if there should not be a meeting called—probably at the instigation of the hon. Prime Minister of the province—between the hon. Premier of Manitoba, the hon. Prime Minister of Canada and the hon. Prime Minister of our own province. Those are the 3 people who are involved in this. I am just wondering if our hon. Prime Minister, in his good, easy-going way, might not point out to the hon. Premier of our sister province how important it is that we get this reactor built in Elliot Lake.

I think if some steps were taken along this line, we might yet have the opportunity of having it built there. I have heard from people there, many of them. There are some of my own people there.

And I think, in all honesty, that there should not be any stones left unturned until such time that we have exhausted every avenue in doing everything we can for the people of Elliot Lake.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure and privilege to congratulate you, first of all, on your elevation to the distinguished position you now hold in this House. Based on long experience and backed by great tradition, the position of Mr. Speaker is, today, held in high regard by many Parliaments. You, sir, bring to the office certain qualities and qualifications which will enhance the office indeed.

In my own brief time in this Parliament, I have had cause to experience for myself your good judgment, your sincerity and your fairmindedness, among many other qualities. All of these, I submit, are qualities which equip you admirably for the office of Speaker.

I want to congratulate also the hon. mover and hon. seconder of the speech from the Throne. Since I know the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) and the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) are both very modest men, I have no intention of embarrassing them by reviewing in any particular their speeches. Both were good, I think we are agreed on that, and both had some points—many points, indeed—which were very evident and were very, very worthy of note.

Now, during the skirmish in which we all took part last June—I have heard it described in many different ways, it was a skirmish—and it might have been a good fight, Mr. Speaker, had there been worthy opponents, or doughty opponents against whom to fight. In my own opinion, humble though it might be, it was a skirmish, last June.

But there was one thing we heard above many others, and that was many references to the “tired old men” of this party, the Conservative party.

Well, as I look at the hon. member for Peel, Mr. Speaker, and many of the other hon. members on this side of the House, I am afraid I will have to go back to find some new dictionary in which I shall find a new and changed meaning for the word “old”, at least insofar as it refers to Conservatives.

Now, the hon. member for St. Andrew, who sits on the front bench, is a little more mature in years, but by no means a hoary-headed patriarch, and I can assure hon. members there is nothing tired about him, and his vigour and energy are very, very apparent on many occasions in this House.

Mr. Speaker, the interests and responsibilities of The Department of Health continue to grow day by day. This is only to be expected in a province that is growing and expanding as rapidly as this great old Ontario of ours is.

As a result of this growth, I think it is desirable that I try to break down the services of the department to the end that the hon. members of this House may have fuller knowledge of what we are trying to do. I intend, therefore, to deal only with the mental health division of The Department of Health at this time.

It would be trite indeed were I to say this is one of the greatest health problems of today—indeed, mental illness and mental deficiency form the greatest single health problem facing us here in Canada and, of course, in Ontario. I think one might say with justification that this is perhaps the last great frontier to be attacked and pushed back by medical science.

Having said that, I have to say, however, that in the field of mental health there has been rather rapid and dramatic progress over the past few years. There has been a very decided upsurge of interest in mental health and in mental illness, in its treatment and rehabilitation and prevention, and this has been evident and continues to grow.

Results of efforts along these lines have been so promising that hope is now supplanting the hopelessness that has pervaded this branch of medicine almost from the beginning of time.

For example, Mr. Speaker, the discharge rate in our hospitals is growing every year. Indeed, in some units of the Ontario Hospital system, discharges outstrip admissions. Who would have dreamed—other than the most optimistic in medicine—only a few years ago, that we would be treating the mentally ill in the out-patient clinics of our hospitals, or that we would be treating mental illness on a shift basis? Indeed, that is what we here in Ontario are doing now in our day-care and night-care centres. In the latter case, I believe the hon. members—since this is a relatively new procedure which has only been in practice for a very few years now—might be interested to learn something of how these centres operate.

Some person—it might be the housewife, the homemaker, the wife, the mother in the home—notices that she is not very well; she feels that she is tense and that as she might put it, “her nerves aren’t as good as they used to be.” On examination and diagnosis, it is found that she is showing early signs of mental illness. She might go to the day-care centre, report in the morning, get her treatment, stay with us all day, go home to be with the family in the evening and all night.

Or the worker may feel himself slipping; still able to carry on but he feels in need of care and medical attention. He may report to the same centre in the evening, after his day's work is done, there receive his treatment, stay with us overnight, go back to work in the morning.

It is remarkable how these new methods are showing such wonderful results. We have good cause to believe that almost 67 per cent. of all first cases are treated in these out-patient clinics and day-care and night-care centres.

They play another very useful role in the scheme of things in our new programme, and that is the help they provide for the patients who have been discharged from our hospitals.

Here, too, they have already proven their worth. Many of these patients, although apparently cured or at least restored to the extent that they can go back in society, find that the adjustment to normal living is rather difficult. They feel as though they still need a little help, they still need a crutch, something or someone to whom they can turn and upon whom they can lean.

Here is where the day-care centres and out-patient clinics play an exceptionally fine role. This in itself, Mr. Speaker, is no small effort, for it is serving to keep a great many people out of our hospitals who, but a few years ago, would have had to be readmitted.

Now, 5 new centres came into operation during the past year, others are now being prepared.

Added to the already established 3 Ontario Hospital out-patient clinics, 8 travelling clinics, 2 day-care and night-care centres, 3 child guidance clinics and one forensic clinic, these should be proof, I think, even to the most skeptical among us, that the mental health division is not quite so inactive as some would have us believe.

At those 18 centres during the past 12 months, 11,250 patients were seen for a total of 74,000 examinations and interviews, and approximately one-third of those patients were under the age of 17 years. Now the work of the division divides itself—

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): May I ask a question, Mr. Speaker, of the hon. Minister?

I am very interested in these day-care centres, and I am wondering how many more we have to have before we will cover the population of Ontario, or do we have a comprehensive coverage now?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It is difficult to answer the question exactly. Our aim at the present time is to establish one at every hospital, and that is what we are at present aiming for, and undertaking. There is one in the process—as I shall go on to tell hon. members—of establishment at New Toronto, but we plan one for every Ontario Hospital as a starter.

Now the work of the division divides itself logically or essentially into 3 services: (1) the care and treatment of the mentally ill; (2) the care of the mentally defective; and (3) community mental health services.

Before dealing with each one of these in their turn, perhaps we would do well to consider a few general points of interest.

First, I think there is the enormity of this health problem to which I have already made reference. In mortality studies, one never sees very much mentioned of mental illness, of mental defect or retardation because these are not killer diseases or disabilities. A look at morbidity studies would present an entirely different picture.

Mr. Speaker, these two—mental illness and mental retardation—constitute a greater problem in medicine than all other illnesses and diseases put together.

Statistics at best are dull and uninteresting as a rule, but at times I think we should take a very careful look at them if, for no other reason, than that of self-interest. Very well-founded studies lead us to believe that 1 out of every 10 of us will suffer some degree of mental illness of deficiency or emotional upset requiring specialized treatment in the span of a normal lifetime. That would mean 10 out of this assembly, at some time or another, will need the help of a psychiatrist or someone skilled in the treatment of the mentally ill, the emotionally disturbed, or the mentally defective.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Then I think that one can only guess at the impact of these conditions on the economy of our province. We do know what it costs us to maintain a patient—to maintain and care for those who come within our care. Our budget for this year ending, as hon. members no doubt know, is in excess of $43 million, and this excepts capital budget.

Added to this is the money expended for care of patients who report to the out-patient clinics and psychiatric units of general hospitals, and to those institutions recognized for the care of the mentally ill and the mentally retarded, outside of the Ontario Hospital system.

Now this, Mr. Speaker, I submit, only gives one a very faint idea of the total cost of this problem in dollars.

Added to this, there is the cost of lost earnings, there is the cost of exceptional services which usually or nearly always attend serious illness. There is the cost of disrupted family life, and who can equate that in dollars?

Oftentimes we hear expressions of alarm about the apparent increasing incidents of mental illness. This, I think, is not just exactly right. There may be an increase, but I would submit that the increase is more apparent than real, and I believe it can be explained in several ways. For example, it might be explained:

1. Because of the increase in population.
2. Because of the longer life expectancy of man.
3. Because people are increasingly anxious to seek treatment.
4. Because it is so very evident that there is more hopefulness in this field of medicine as compared with the hopelessness that has obtained so long.

These last two reasons, Mr. Speaker, I think are very important indeed. For more years than one can compass, this matter of mental illness has been surrounded by so much mystery, so much ignorance and confusion, it is most refreshing to see in our own time that some of the clouds of shame and stigma and ignorance are now being scattered, allowing the sunshine of knowledge and understanding to shed its rays upon the afflicted.

Now to look at the division of the mental health branch. First, the Ontario Hospitals for the mentally ill. There are 17 of those hospitals, Mr. Speaker, including those specializing in the care of epileptics, the criminally insane, and the tubercular mentally ill. In the case of the latter, the people of Ontario, I believe, can take a good deal of pride in the fact that we have, in Ontario, the best programme on this continent of tuberculosis detection and prevention for the mentally ill.

In these 17 hospitals we have 21,783 patients, almost evenly divided between men and women, giving the lie to statements often expressed that one sex or the other is more prone to mental illness.

During 1959 and up to November 30, there were 5,270 first admissions and there were 5,528 discharges in the same time.

Having said that, I scarcely believe it necessary to make much comment upon those figures.

I will underscore them, however, to emphasize that our hospitals are not what my hon. friend from Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) might have lead hon. members to believe—places of human storage. They are in the very best tradition—hospitals—places of healing where the sick may enter in the full hope of being made well, and restored to the position of useful citizens in the community. Unfortunately, this cannot be the experience of all, but the number so restored increases year by year as medicine advances in knowledge, as new drugs are developed, new techniques and methods perfected.

There were 1,509 deaths in our hospitals during the year, but it should be remembered that 22 per cent. of all our patients are over 65 years of age.

Our staff—that is, the staff of the mental hospitals—numbers 9,256. Included in this are 198 doctors, 88 psychiatrists, and many others who are specialists in other branches of medicine and surgery.

Besides the resident staff doctors we have, attached to every one of our hospitals, local doctors, general physicians, internists, surgeons, gynecologists, specialists in diseases of eye, ear, nose and throat, and specialists in every branch of medicine who act in a consultative capacity. I mention that to give hon. members some idea of the quality of care provided for our patients.

Two hon. members of this House recently suggested that this care left much to be desired. The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) was not very specific in this regard, although he did make some sweeping charges. I do not intend to say too much about them. I am sorry he is not in his seat. I am saddened to admit I have accepted the fact that he appears to be—and I have borrowed the word from one of the hon. members who referred to him previously—unregenerate. I do not really know what that means.

The hon. member for Parkdale, however, did make a specific charge, namely that, in October, 1958, a locally practicing physician was called by telephone concerning a patient in one of our hospitals who was seriously ill with pneumonia.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why this procedure was followed I have no idea, since we have had on our resident staff of that hospital for some years a well-qualified specialist in internal medicine. By the way, Mr. Speaker, I do state categorically that the hospital referred to did have at that date, October 1958, an oxygen tent.

The superintendent has advised me, and rightly so, that oxygen tents are rarely used because many of our patients are disturbed and restless and over-active, but oxygen is administered when required and when ordered by the physician in charge by intranasal catheter or by BLB mask—both of which are well recognized medical methods.

I have to say, Mr. Speaker, in the case of the hon. member for Parkdale, that he is a new hon. member. He very obviously devoted a great deal of time and study to the preparation of his subject but it would be a great pity, indeed, were he to offset all he gains thereby by adopting less admirable tactics.

It is a sad state of affairs if hon. members find it necessary to attract attention to themselves by playing upon the emotions or feelings of those, as described by the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Lewis), "who cannot speak for themselves."

Mr. J. Trotter (Parkdale): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege.

I was informed by that doctor about the oxygen tent, and he is quite certain in his own mind, and I am certain—I do not know what the hon. Minister has been told—naturally both of us are going by what other people have told us, and it would seem only reasonable that the superintendent would say there was an oxygen tent there.

But I am quite certain, regarding that occasion of October 15, 1958, that the doctor was correct. And I was not doing anything to get headlines. I was telling the straight truth, as I thought.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the facts speak for themselves, the inventory of our hospital shows that the equipment—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, may I rise on a point of order?

I think it is clearly set out that an hon. member must not impute unworthy and improper motives to another, and to say that he is simply making this statement to attract attention to himself, I say, comes clearly within that category.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Since when was that improper for a politician?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, I did not impute—I said it is a sad state of affairs if this hon. member finds it necessary to attract attention to himself by playing upon the emotions or feelings of those "who cannot speak for themselves."

I was imputing nothing, I am simply stating that the inventory of our hospital equipment shows that, in October 1958, we did have this equipment in the hospital.

Mr. Trotter: Did it work?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Of course it worked.

Mr. Speaker, our Ontario Hospitals are staffed by doctors, nurses, attendants and all the other groups necessary for the care of our sick, who are sincere men and women dedicated and devoted to a high calling. Caring for the sick calls for qualities of devotion and dedication not required in many professions or avocations—caring for the mentally ill puts even greater demands upon those so engaged.

Our staff have a high sense of duty and responsibility, and their difficult job is not made easier by statements such as those that have been made in this House.

Quite apart from the staff, how do you think, Mr. Speaker, the family, the friends and relatives of patients feel when they read such charges? They commit the patient to our care; they cannot know what treatment means or may involve, it is not possible to explain this to them quickly or easily. Yet they leave their mentally ill in our care, believing that we will do all humanly possible for them, will treat them as well as it is humanly possible, and will see that they are given, to the full, all the advances and advantages of modern medicine.

Is it not reasonable, Mr. Speaker, that they must feel some cause for doubt when they read and hear an hon. member say a patient was not given this best care because the hospital did not have an oxygen tent?

Part of the new concept of care for the mentally ill is the encouragement of patients to seek voluntary admission to hospital, or to be admitted on the certificate of the family doctor, just as they are admitted to a general hospital. We have some evidence that this is of great value and that it is growing in popularity.

In 1958, one in every 9 first admissions was voluntary. It is very enlightening, I think, that, in the same year, 1 out of every 4 readmissions was voluntary. That is, that of the patients who had experienced life and treatment in our hospitals, 1 out of every 4 who had to be readmitted came of their own volition. Statements such as the one I referred to will not do much to help us encourage patients to seek treatment early and voluntarily.

I believe, also, that this record of voluntary readmissions gives the lie to the "whispering campaign" spoken of by the hon. member. Of course, one will hear whispering—of course one will hear amazing and distressing things, some comical things in our hospitals. But remember, Mr. Speaker, our patients are mentally ill and one should judge their words and actions against this background.

I say, through you, Mr. Speaker, to all the people of this great province, they have just cause to be proud of the calibre, the sincerity and the devotion of the entire staff. They do a splendid job in somewhat difficult circumstances, and they rarely complain. I do not need to ask for their loyalty or their renewed pledge of dedication to duty—this is second nature to them—I know they will continue to give the same high standard of care to their patients, in spite of any statement made in this House, or out of it, concerning them.

But let there be no doubt about where I stand on this—I say to hon. members unequivocally—there is nothing whatsoever in the Ontario Hospital system to hide. We welcome visitors, indeed we encourage them, if they come in the prescribed visiting hours. We will welcome them more if their visit is in the interest of the patients and not out of morbid curiosity, or, if I may lapse into the vernacular, for the express purpose of "snooping."

I should point out here that shortage of well-trained staff has a very definite controlling influence upon the progress of our programme, and without this, all the building possible would be of little value. I can see no value whatsoever in having buildings to house the patients if we do not have a properly-trained staff to service them.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): That is right.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: And staff cannot be trained by a snap of the fingers—it takes from 3 to 5 years to train a psychiatrist after he has earned his medical degree, and has done a general internship, or a total of 10 to 12 years of intensive study and training. Only within very recent times have we seen doctors in any appreciable numbers going into this field.

The picture now, however, is brightening and we are very hopeful for the future.

Over the past few weeks, much has been said about the age of our buildings, and much of it has been repeated since this debate began. I do not intend to belabour this—I have already admitted the age of our buildings. But I have emphasized, and I repeat, they are clean and weatherproof, and I also repeat, Mr. Speaker, the age of the buildings, the unattractive architecture are, in my opinion, of secondary importance.

The most important feature to me is the programme being carried on in these old buildings—so long as it is new and good—progressive and constantly ongoing, I can get along with the old buildings.

Of course, I would like new buildings and will continue to harass the government to give me new buildings. But I assure you, Mr. Speaker, so long as I head this department, I will spend money first for treatment facilities, for patient care and for rehabilitation.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, some of our hospitals are overcrowded. There is no excuse in saying, I know, that this has always been so, it was so in 1840; just after Confederation the basement of the then Parliament Buildings was considered as accommodation for mentally ill patients. And I say this as an aside, Mr. Speaker, in case I incur your wrath or disfavour, sometimes I wonder if some of the patients have moved upstairs.

And this is the experience of every jurisdiction I know of. It is worthy of note, nonetheless, that nearly 8,000 of the 18,000 beds now in the Ontario Hospital system have been built since this tired old government came to power.

Now, I realize the hon. members across the floor are rather sensitive about history, they object to us quoting it, but I am encouraged to do this since some of them have been very anxious, within the past few days, to make issues of something which happened in 1951, in 1944, and indeed in 1905. Someone recently said, and I quote—I do not know the author:

History is like a surveyor's transit—unless we use it frequently to look back and get our bearings, it will not be of much help to us in running a straight line ahead.

So I look to history, Mr. Speaker, and I find that, when our hon. friends across the floor formed the government—or prior to that time—The Department of Health was erecting its own buildings and it was their party who changed the system which they now advocate once again.

Mr. Grossman: Shame.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: When I look at history again, Mr. Speaker, I find that when my hon. friends across the floor formed a government in 1934, the previous Conservative administration had plans prepared and underway for 4 new Ontario Hospitals. Construction was begun on two.

The party opposite completed the administration building of two and left them, as one hon. member has said, "to go to seed."

Mr. Grossman: Shame.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: At one of the other locations, the previous Conservative administration had assembled some construction materials. The Liberals sold these, and abandoned the site. The fourth site was completely abandoned.

Ah yes, Mr. Speaker, they will plead, "those were depression days," and that is true. They were days that called for wisdom and courage. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, had Ontario had in power strong men, we would not have the bed shortage we have today. They were little men with little courage and great fears, no vision but great despair.

I must mark this up to their credit however, Mr. Speaker, they did build one hospital, and by some strange and peculiar coincidence it was built in the riding of Elgin, just 35 miles distant from one of the largest existing Ontario Hospitals at London. Weigh that, Mr. Speaker, 1,800 beds in 9 years against nearly 8,000 in the last 12 years of this administration, and only one logical conclusion can be drawn.

But neither history nor recrimination will give us new and much needed beds. To that end, we have laid our plans for the future, although my hon. friend from Parkdale was despondent about what was being accomplished. The picture is not quite so bleak as he fears. Let me recapitulate what has been going on this year.

The new powerhouse at the Ontario Hospital, London is under construction and going ahead.

A clinic for day-care and night-care at the Ontario Hospital, New Toronto is underway.

A new dining hall and kitchen addition, and new laundry at Queen Street Hospital is under construction.

Fireproofing at the Brockville Hospital has been almost completed.

The trades building at the Hamilton Hospital is completed.

A new 600-bed wing at Hamilton is almost completed. Many lesser but equally important construction jobs are underway at this same hospital.

Fireproofing at the Ontario Hospital, Kingston is going ahead.

At Penetang, the new building for the criminally insane was completed during this past year. Here, too, the kitchen, dining hall, extensive renovation of electrical wiring facilities, and new sewage plant are all progressing.

At Thistletown the gymnasium, swimming pool and transformer room are all in progress, all up to schedule.

The hospital school at Cedar Springs is at least 3 months ahead of schedule, and is going ahead rapidly, and I think we should take note of the fact that, in the case of Hamilton and Cedar Springs, the work has been greatly held up because of strikes and these delays must be accepted; nothing can be done about them.

Last, but by no means least, Mr. Speaker, the Beck sanatorium at London became the property of this department and we have begun—on a small scale, it is true—what we believe is a most important research project into the causes of mental retardation.

Now my hon. friend from Parkdale also expressed some concern about projects which had been spoken of rather frequently over the past year, and I can understand his concern. I believe we share one thing in common, impatience with seeming slowness and lack of progress.

But there is more to building a hospital than just making an announcement about it. Land has to be acquired, plans prepared and, in this, progress has been made. We did acquire land in Perth and Grey counties. In the case of Goderich, the plans which were to be used for this were not acceptable to me, and I take full responsibility for rejecting them and thereby causing delay.

When I announced the New Look last year, I said that no more large hospitals would be constructed; that the whole concept of architecture should be reviewed and revised. The hospital of the future would be a 200- or 300-bed unit—albeit there could be 3 or 4, or more, of these units—self-contained under a central administration.

Mr. Speaker, the architects advised me it would take a year at least to prepare new plans—they are on the drafting boards, I have seen them—for the hospital at Goderich. The hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton) also has seen them, and they are going steadily ahead. I am not an architect, so I am in no position to argue with them about the time required to prepare the plan.

The situation with respect to the psychiatric hospital and institute is much the same. The choice of site here was more difficult, since the available sites were very definitely limited. This has to be closely linked with the University of Toronto medical school, so it has to be on or near the campus of the university. Such a site now has been found.

Much preliminary discussion and planning has had to go into this, between the medical faculty and my own department, and again the architects tell me it will take at least a year to prepare the plans for this project. They are not building these institutions every day. They are different. They have to do a great deal of study, a great deal of research themselves, before they can put their ideas or our ideas on paper.

I think I should say in self-defence that at least on two occasions, when I was purported to have "announced" the building of the psychiatric hospital, some of my hon. friends—

Mr. Trotter: Would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Dymond: No, I will answer the hon. member's questions afterward.

Mr. Trotter: Very well.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Some of my friends of the press had heard of, or picked up, the story and called me about it. Now, I like to co-operate with my journalist friends, and hence I was credited with "announcing" the hospital on at least 3 different occasions, after it had been officially announced.

There is much more of interest, Mr. Speaker, that I could speak about, or bring to your attention, concerning the Ontario Hospitals, but I want now to say something about the Ontario Hospital schools.

In the two, located at Orillia and Smiths Falls, we have 4,751 patients, ranging in age from under 4 to over 70 years. In our hospital schools, particularly in the more recent admissions, we can note a very marked change. The establishment of community schools for the retarded is taking care of a good percentage of the higher grade defectives and, as a result, those admitted to our hospital schools present a less hopeful picture than might otherwise obtain. Nonetheless, this greater community interest is highly commendable.

Again, much has been made of the old and obsolete buildings, and I shall say no more about them other than to observe, Mr. Speaker, that the flood of letters I have received following the reports expressed gratitude for the schools—overcrowded though they are—and stated that the children are better in hospital than they could be at home.

It might be of interest to you, Mr. Speaker, that last fall, I attended a meeting of the board of the Ontario association for retarded children, and discussed with them the overcrowding and what we were trying to do to correct it. I cannot speak too highly of their understanding, their support and helpful co-operation. I think it should be pointed out that many members of this body are parents of the patients in our schools.

Here again, Mr. Speaker, the programme is of primary importance in the care of the patients. We strive first of all to give them all the education they can absorb. Then we seek to train them, and oftentimes all we can do along this line—and sometimes we do not even succeed in this—but we try at least to train them well enough so that they can look after their own personal needs and wants. But for a very few, unfortunately, we manage to provide training that will enable them to support themselves, in part at least, if it is possible that they can be supported outside of the school.

As I have said on so many occasions—we have these patients with us 24 hours of the day, so we are not only hospital and school, we are home and parents as well. We have to provide play and recreation—and this, in itself, is a tremendous task.

Try to imagine, Mr. Speaker, if you can, providing all these things for 5,000 normal children, then magnify this 10 to 20 times, and hon. members may have some faint idea of what my staff has to do. There are Brownies and Guides, there are Cubs and Scouts, there are church and Sunday schools, physical training, games and sports, paper chases, movies, concerts, pictures. In one of the schools we have a choir that has made quite an enviable reputation by singing in churches and for clubs; they even appeared on a trans-Canada hook-up.

These are only a few of the activities, Mr. Speaker, but what a fascinating story they make, and how much more thrilling—not to belabour the fact that two of the buildings are 80 years old—far more exciting, far more interesting than the fact that two of our buildings are 80 years old.

Mr. Speaker, I said I had rather sadly decided that the hon. member for York South was unregenerate, that I would overlook what he said. However, there was one thing he did say which I cannot overlook. He spoke of the stench in some of the wards, as if to imply that the cleanliness of the hospital was not what it should be. Mr. Speaker, I visited those wards again after the hon. member had been there, and found the floors scrubbed as white as I had on every other occasion I had visited the school. My staff never knows when I am going to visit them.

Man is an animal, Mr. Speaker, with highly developed centres of intelligence. This puts him on a high social scale. But there are those unfortunates among us who, as a result of illness or disease, have lost use of those centres, or who have not been born with them. Oftentimes it is impossible to train such people even in most primitive and fundamental ways. I say to you, sir, that science as yet has been all but powerless to provide a fully satisfactory deodorant. I shall say no more.

The hon. member for Simcoe East (Mr. Letherby) dealt fully and adequately with this.

I do want, however, to touch very briefly upon the subject of research. It is true there has been a good deal of misinformation and lack of information. In basic research last year we spent over $250,000. To estimate the dollar value of clinical research is all but impossible, because in some measure all clinical work is of an investigative and research nature, especially in these days of advancing knowledge in this particular field of medicine.

Indeed, one research project, which has been in progress over the past two years at our Whitby Hospital, has been acclaimed widely, not only throughout Ontario and Canada, but throughout the entire continent, and many have sought information concerning it, and indeed have asked us to set up special courses of training for persons along this line.

I would like to suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, and to the hon. member for Parkdale, that here, too, he needs to get some factual information before dealing with the subject.

Mr. Trotter: I did. I have the facts.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: It does seem to be traditional that research is crowded into attics. That is not so in our case. We have good, though crowded, quarters for our basic researchers, but it is also traditional that great good has so often flowed from research carried out in such crowded quarters and with very limited budgets.

My hon. friend mentioned insulin research. It seems to me that I recall reading somewhere that the late Professor MacLeod grudgingly gave to Banting and Best the tremendous sum of $2,300 and stuck them away in very crowded quarters with very limited facilities. The results speak eloquently. I need say no more about them.

Of course, we could spend a great deal more money on research, Mr. Speaker, if we had it, but research is not parochial by any means. What we are doing here is but part of a great world-wide programme, a programme which knows no geographical or racial boundaries. The results are freely and readily available to all of us.

Rehabilitation is another subject about which much is said by many who know little about it. I am quite convinced that much can yet be done in this field, but I also say quite definitely that much is being done, and that by The Department of Health.

It should be borne in mind that rehabilitation of the physically ill and disabled has not been a dramatic feature of our economy or of our society. The difficulties attendant upon rehabilitation and re-employment of the mentally ill have been a great deal more serious and more difficult. Like research, this is not something which comes about by the magical waving of some fairy wand. It is something at which we must constantly labour. This, Mr. Speaker, we are doing.

This year we plan to set up a separate division within the department, to devote all its time to rehabilitation, in the hope that the new attitude of the public to the mentally ill will be reflected in the employers of labour.

Although, Mr. Speaker, it may appear that I have said much about this branch of my department, I have actually done little more than touch upon the highlights. Before I conclude, sir, I would, however, like to say to this House that there has been a very marked increase in interest in the work we are doing in our hospitals. This interest has been shown by volunteer organizations. Visiting groups and organizations have associated themselves with each of our hospitals across the province. They have done splendid work among our patients.

A few days ago, I got a report of one of those groups from one of our hospitals, which showed that these women had given nearly 5,000 hours of volunteer service to one hospital in the first 9 months of 1959. This is a splendid record. The value of such service is all but impossible to estimate.

What do they do with the patients on such visits? They talk, they write letters for those who are unable to do so themselves, they take the patients out for walks, they take them downtown to shop, they take them to their homes for afternoon tea, they play cards and other games, they teach them needlework, and a host of other activities.

To us in the field, this is a remarkable development. It shows that the old-time stigma which for so long has been attached to mental illness is slowly but surely disappearing. It shows that society is at long last shaking off the lethargy that has been hitherto the hallmark of society's attitude towards those unfortunate patients.

May it, Mr. Speaker, be but the beginning of a movement that will grow and spread like a mighty contagion that will ultimately touch and move every one of us who has had the good fortune to be born mentally normal, to be spared mental illness in any degree.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Speaker, I wonder if I may be permitted to ask a question of the hon. Minister of Health?

I was very interested in the explanation he has given of the work that he is doing, and I wondered whether there are elderly inmates who are remaining in mental hospitals but who are no longer mentally ill, and if so, how many there are and why they are in the hospitals.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: Mr. Speaker, the answer is, yes, there are elderly patients in our hospitals. I do not believe it is quite right to say they are no longer mentally ill, but they are well enough recovered that they could go out of the hospital. To that end we are building these infirmaries about which I told hon. members. The first one has been delayed by my own refusal to accept the original plans, it has been delayed one year, but the purpose is to provide housing for those.

Why are they in there? They are in there because they are unfortunately orphans. They have no family, they have no one interested in them. I believe that many of them would not do well outside of the hospital. They have become so accustomed to the environment that I do not believe they could well adjust outside of the hospital.

Quite apart from that, there is no one else to take care of them. They are our burden, and we intend to continue to look after them to the very best of our ability so long as they need it.

I am sorry, Mr. Speaker, I cannot really tell the number, but I could find it for the hon. member.

Mr. G. Lavergne (Russell): Mr. Speaker, may I address a question to the hon. Minister? In what stage of planning is the addition to the Ontario Hospital at North Bay? I refer to the surgical wing which I think the hon. former Minister of Health announced would be built at North Bay some time ago.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: That will be brought up when we are going over the estimates of The Department of Public Works.

Mr. Lavergne: Thank you very much.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, I wish to add my congratulations to those already extended to you on your appointment as Speaker of this House. In the short time I have been a member of this House, I have come to realize the tremendous responsibility that goes with this position. May your decisions be just and fair for all hon. members.

Hamilton East, which I represent, is very compact, totally urban, and I think almost every nationality is represented in it. The largest industries in Hamilton are located here—Westinghouse, Dofasco, Stelco, Harvester, Proctor and Gamble, and some of the few remaining textile mills.

Because the riding is centrally located in the city of Hamilton, it has become an ideal place for office workers to reside, and we have many shopping areas as well. So, in the main, the residents of Hamilton East are working people, employed in the mills, the offices and the stores of Hamilton.

I am very proud of the trust the citizens of Hamilton East displayed in electing me as their representative, and I intend always to keep faith with them.

To keep faith, of course, one must first have a clear understanding of the problems at hand. Mr. Speaker, I have worked side by side with these people for years. I know their problems as I do my own—they are exactly the same.

You see, Mr. Speaker, working people do not usually want to be millionaires, but they do want their place in the sun. They want to be assured of a steady income; they want to be able to build, buy, or rent decent homes, at prices they can afford; they want to be sure of a job and, when they are old, of a decent pension. They do not want to live in fear of the high cost of illness. They want to be able to educate their children to the limit of their ability to absorb and, Mr. Speaker, they want to be able to have a little fun, a little enjoyment on the way.

Is this too much to ask for? Is this too much to expect from our richly favoured land? Is this too much to expect from Ontario—Canada's wealthiest province? I do not think so, Mr. Speaker.

These are the things I want for myself and my family, for my friends, my neighbours and, in fact, for all Canadians. This is the reason I am so proud to sit here, Mr. Speaker, with this group of people who share these desires. Our CCF party was developed on the words of our founder, Mr. J. S. Woods-worth: "What we desire for ourselves, we wish for all." I can see no reason for departing from this belief. I see every reason for continuing to use these words as my guide.

Well, how are we doing in Hamilton East? Are we acquiring this needed security? I am sorry to say, Mr. Speaker, we are not. There are 17,000 people looking for work in Hamilton, and a great many of them live in Hamilton East. When our factories are laying off or closing down, it affects our offices and our storekeepers and their employees. True, we have the cushion of unemployment insurance, but it is no substitute for a full pay envelope, nor was it ever designed for this purpose.

With conditions as they are, and with the growing threat of fewer jobs because of automation, there has never been a greater need for a planned economy. There is an obvious need for management, labour, and government to sit down together to plan for a future in which all sectors of our society will benefit from the results of automation.

Instead, Mr. Speaker, we are faced with a great anti-union campaign right across Canada. It is a campaign designed to create, on the one hand, a picture of a kindly management, concerned only with the future of its employees, and on the other hand, a pretty horrible picture of a union movement to which the worker is chained against his wishes.

Now, Mr. Speaker, from the workers' point of view, this is just ridiculous. He remembers all too well that his working conditions forced him to organize into unions.

It was not easy for him to form his unions. Sometimes it involved a strike. In 1946, 3 large Hamilton plants—Westinghouse, Stelco and Firestone, as well as our local newspaper, were involved in strikes. Hamilton people will never forget the name of a man who once sat in this very House, Mr. Speaker, a man who never forgot his humble beginning. That man was the late Sam Lawrence, who was mayor of Hamilton during that year of labour strife. When he died last summer, working people knew they had lost a great friend, and I would like to pay tribute to his memory.

The union member knows the value his union has been to him, and he knows it was the worker who formed his union—not the union that captured the worker, as this campaign would have us believe.

Knowing these truths, the union member resents the implication of this new anti-union campaign. He resents that governments tend to legislate in support of his employer instead of protecting him. He knows that the protective legislation that does exist came about only to the degree that he and his fellow workers and union members were able to force it, through the expression of public opinion.

I know that other political parties, for instance, watch very closely the CCF share of the popular vote. Hamilton, an industrial city, with a population of about 280,000 is represented by 5 seats in this House, although 3 of these seats include large rural sections.

Mr. Speaker, I was interested in knowing in which party the citizens of Hamilton placed the greatest confidence. When I totalled the vote of those ridings in the city, I discovered that: 38 per cent. supported the CCF; 35 per cent. supported the Progressive-Conservatives; 24 per cent. supported the Liberals; and 1.4 per cent. supported the Labour Progressives, now called Communists.

This, then, would clearly indicate that working people from all areas of employment in Hamilton placed the greatest confidence in the programme and reputation of the CCF.

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to say a few words about the conduct of elections. I had hoped the Throne speech would indicate revisions in The Election Act. When an election is announced within the minimum time limit specified, the returning officers find it impossible to complete their duties properly.

I do not want to dwell on this matter at any length, but I draw your attention to the problem of enumeration. During this last election campaign, the time allowed for enumerating simply did not permit a proper job to be done. Many, many people were left off the voters' list and so were denied their right to vote.

The courts of revision sat at hours that made it impossible for shift workers to make personal appeals to have their names placed on the voters' list. So many were left off the voters' list, in Hamilton East, that I appealed to the election board, and they appointed a flying squad of special enumerators who succeeded in restoring voting rights to many citizens in Hamilton East. However, many, many more were denied their democratic right to vote.

This also raises the matter of election expenses. When this House sees fit to place some realistic limitation on campaign expenses—and I do not mean just local riding expenses, but provincial organization spending by political parties and their financial supporters—and when government advertising is not used to promote their party candidates, we will see a better balance in this House.

I will say just a word on government advertising. The ethnic papers in Hamilton had an upsurge of government advertising shortly before and during the election campaign. I cannot believe it was an accident. In any event, it would provide considerable assistance to certain candidates.

In my few weeks, sitting as a member in this House, I have listened with interest to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) and to the hon. leader of the official Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer)—and they talked so much about the past that my mind turned to the past too, but just to the recent past.

I wonder which is the true Liberal feeling towards labour? Are they the personal beliefs recently expressed by the hon. Liberal leader in Niagara Falls, or the one in Newfoundland—where Premier Smallwood and his Liberal government have actually legislated to deny working people the right to organize into the unions of their choice? And I look at our most western province—where, under the leadership of a Conservative turned Social Credit, I again see repressive labour legislation enacted in British Columbia.

Is it any wonder that I, and other working people, look at the report of the select committee on labour legislation—a committee composed mainly of Conservative members—and wonder if the pattern is to be repeated in Ontario under a Conservative government?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Did the hon. member read what his own hon. leader agreed to in the Act?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Most of it they went along with.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Good thing.

Mr. MacDonald: He should read about the dissension in his own riding.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, that is all right.

Mr. Davison: A great deal of credit must be given to our leader, the hon. member for York South, who was the only member of this committee who had knowledge of, and sympathy with, the aims of the trade union movement. He was faced with a tremendous task, and it speaks well for his patience and his ability that some of the recommendations made will be of some value to the labour movement.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): May I ask the hon. member a question. What is the source of the hon. member's information?

Mr. Davison: And I could say at this time he got very little support from the Liberals. A lot of blame is placed at the feet of the trade union members—mainly they are accused of causing inflation. How can this be true when only about 552,675 out of 1,714,000 workers are organized in Ontario?

Mr. Speaker, I feel very strongly that, far from being weakened, our labour laws need to be strengthened in favour of working people and their organizations.

First of all, in the matter of certification—as it is now, when a vote is ordered, the union can be certified only if it receives a number of votes equal to a majority of the employees eligible to cast votes. I feel the union is entitled to certification if it receives the support of a majority of the employees interested enough to cast votes.

If these same rules were applied to provincial and federal elections, we would have no government at all, because no hon. member has an overall majority of those eligible to vote.

There is another difficulty which unions encounter in the process of certification. It is a petition, bearing signatures of workers in the plant, who declare that they do not wish a union. Now the workers who do wish a union must sign an application for membership card, which must be countersigned, and the new member must pay an initiation fee of at least $1 as evidence of good faith. These cards are filed with the Ontario labour relations board and are the indication that the union does in fact represent the employees.

Oddly enough, Mr. Speaker, the employees who sign the petition are required to do nothing more. They are not required to even pay $1 as evidence of their strong desire to avoid being represented by a union. Even more oddly, when the case comes before the labour relations board, the petition signers are frequently represented by high-priced lawyers who are, from time to time, retained by companies on various labour matters.

I would strongly urge that petitions not be allowed because I feel the requirements for certification are sufficient.

Then there are the building trades. They have an extra difficulty to meet. It is not unusual for certification of these unions to be delayed to the point where the job is completed and the workers scattered across the country on other jobs. Clearly the Act lacks protection for these workers.

And while I am on the topic of construction, I would refer to the carpenters' strike in Hamilton which was recently settled. I am concerned with remarks the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) has made to the effect that one section of the construction industry must not be permitted to tie up an entire city's building activity by their strike. If this is his feeling, I wonder why he did not meet immediately with both parties and try to assist them to reach an early settlement. Instead, he waited 3 months and only entered the picture at a time when the strike was almost settled.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): That is not correct.

Mr. Davison: That is correct, that is when he acted—on the day before the strike was settled and it could have been settled—

Mr. MacDonald: It was settled before—

Mr. Davison: Municipal and civil service employees should be guaranteed the right to collective bargaining through the union of their own choice. I see no reason why they should be treated less favourably than other workers.

In a day when nearly all employers are perfectly willing to check off charitable donations, or to deduct payments of bond purchases, I can see no reason why even this government should hesitate to provide for the voluntary, revocable check off of union dues as a minimum.

Well, Mr. Speaker, one would think that when the workers, in spite of all the stumbling blocks, get their union certified that their troubles would be over—but they are just beginning. They must now negotiate a contract.

If, in the first place, there had been balance in the relationship of profits on the one hand and wages on the other hand, coupled with good working conditions, unions would probably never have been created. After unions were created, if this balance had ever been established generally, quite probably the function of the unions would now be different.

But, Mr. Speaker, when workers, through their unions, make wage gains, only to find that their employer has increased prices far in excess of the cost of the wage increase, he feels he will never catch up. He knows it causes hardship on the individual with a fixed income, but when the union offers to forego wage increases if management will reduce selling prices, their offer is never accepted. When one looks at the financial statements of some industries, and sees the increasing profits, one realizes why.

In 1958, the Steel Company of Canada, Hamilton works, had a strike. It was settled and the workers received a wage increase. I would like to draw to the attention of hon. members a few figures regarding the company's profits. They report a net profit of: $21 million in 1957; $16 million in 1958—the year of the strike; and $33 million in 1959. They will notice that profits doubled in 1959 in spite of the fact that the company during this time absorbed about two-thirds of the wage increase involved in the strike settlement.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Was that before dividends?

Mr. Davison: That is right.

I could be wrong in that, that is net profit so it would be after tax.

Companies feel, and it has been borne out, that every day spent in negotiations saves them money. They have every reason to stretch the bargaining period out and no reason at all to complete negotiations in a reasonable length of time.

The union has no way of countering this delaying action and our present labour legislation does nothing to assist in speeding up contract settlements.

It is my opinion, Mr. Speaker, that conciliation services should be on a voluntary basis, available to the parties only with the consent of the trade union concerned—that there should be a definite time limit of 60 days for the entire conciliation process, after which either party would be free to take economic action. I feel the time limit should be strictly adhered to, unless, of course, the parties mutually agree to an extension. This would require more conciliators, and the government should sponsor a training programme for conciliators.

I think, too, that minimum standards of working conditions should be improved by law. For instance, the 40-hour week has received general acceptance in Ontario. Why not make it a legal requirement, providing, of course, for maintenance of take-home pay?

Our laws provide for one week's paid vacation after one year's service. In my opinion, this should be extended to provide two weeks after one year of employment and 3 weeks after 5 years.

Management is refusing to hire the older worker because of the increase in pension costs such a worker represents. They do not feel they will get their money's worth out of him before they must pension him off. A government-sponsored portable pension plan would destroy this argument, and I am pleased to notice the Throne speech recognizes the need for such a plan.

I would be more pleased, Mr. Speaker, if it proposed establishing a committee to investigate the best type of such a plan, instead of one to investigate the need for one. If the need is recognized, why investigate it?

I realize, Mr. Speaker, I have spent a great deal of time on labour matters but they are of vital importance to the people in Hamilton East and to the working people in Ontario. When I think of our present Labour Relations Act and of the report of the select committee on labour legislation, and of the new labour legislation indicated in the Throne speech, I wonder if perhaps we should stop trying to patch up our Labour Relations Act. It might be better if Ontario had a whole new Labour Relations Act.

If that time comes, I hope the points I have mentioned today will be included in the Act. They would go a long way towards making life more worthwhile for the many working people of Ontario.

Mr. Speaker, I listened to the hon. member for Bruce very carefully because he seemed always to be on the verge of telling us something important. I was particularly interested when he told us that the farmer received only 19 cents per dozen for grade A eggs. Now in Hamilton we pay from 40 cents to 45 cents a dozen for those same eggs. Now it is pretty obvious that the difference of 21 cents or 26 cents per dozen is making the middleman rich.

Mr. Speaker, the answer to the problem of the Bruce farmers is very obvious, and I am surprised that the hon. member for Bruce has not encouraged the growth of co-operative associations in his area. The profit now enjoyed by the middleman could then be shared to the mutual benefit of the producer and the consumer.

Interjection by Mr. Whicher.

Mr. Davison: Mr. Speaker, I would point to one more disappointing omission in the Throne speech. I think most of us must realize that the $55 old age pension and the old age assistance allowance are totally inadequate to provide the essentials of life for our senior citizens. True, we have provincial legislation to provide a supplementary allowance of up to $20 a month for pensioners in need. But payment of this supplementary allowance requires that the municipality contribute its share. Actually, only 5,000 of the 300,000 pensioners in Ontario receive this assistance.

Since the federal government has failed to provide adequate pensions at an early enough age, I am of the strong opinion that it becomes the responsibility of the provincial government to meet this need. In closing, I would urge this government to accept its responsibility, to release the municipalities from the necessity of contributing, and to make the supplementary allowance of $20 available to all Ontario pensioners who qualify for it. Surely these people are entitled to live out their lives in at least a minimum standard of comfort and decency.

Now I am glad to see the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) back in his seat. I would just like to say a few words about some of the things he said.

First, I would like to suggest that I do not think he knows too much about rank-and-file people. I would suggest to him that, out of the 5 members of the CCF sitting in this House tonight, 3 of them happen to be rank-and-file people.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Right.

Mr. Davison: I carry a union card and I use it. The other thing I would like to comment on is this. How many men could get up in this House supporting labour and only vote against two of the things in there? I am surprised.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, traditionally, but enthusiastically, I wish at the outset to join with the many who have preceded me in expressing to you their words of good will. You have given many years of useful service to this province and to this House.

As you embark on your new career in assuming the function in this House that you do, I want to wish you well. I want to give you my pledge, sir, that during the time the electorate shall favour me to serve in this House, I shall do whatever I can do to be of assistance to you.

I should like to turn to the hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) and congratulate him for the very commendable speech which he made in moving the address of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne. At the same time, I wish to commend the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) for his valuable rearguard action. I wish to thank him in addition for the assistance he has given, especially to us new members, Mr. Speaker, by way of the comments that he hurled across from time to time.

I want to say to the hon. member for Peel that, in a way, I shall always envy him—if that be not too strong a word. Life is a series of missed opportunities, and I say to him that, if the fortunes of war had been different in June, I shall always like to think that if I had been on that side, my hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) would have chosen me to move the address. I know that my hon. leader, kind and good man that he is, will never tell me that he would not have so chosen me.

I reflect, Mr. Speaker, and I wish to tell you, that this session is not the first time that I have had the occasion to make a speech in this chamber. It was in the days of your predecessor, Rev. M. C. Davies, that the practice of turning this chamber over to the various forensic societies of our neighbour, the university, was inaugurated. This chamber used to ring with the high-blown phrases of youth as they solved the problems of the world.

I well recall the participation of my friend, the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence), and I can relate that even in the fullness of his youth he had a Tory spoon in his mouth.

Mr. A. F. Lawrence (St. George): Drop that Tory spoon.

Mr. Sopha: I say to the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), and I do so with trepidation, that he might consider him some time during the next 4 years for advancement. It may be that if he does not so promote him within the next 4 years that he, too, will suffer a missed opportunity.

Now, if I let my eyes travel down from the upper right corner and, again with fear and trembling, let them rest for a moment on the person of the hon. Prime Minister, I would say a word to him. Perhaps, Mr. Speaker, I am a good deal safer with yourself than I would be with your two immediate predecessors if I made a reference to theology and set up a theological background for my comments.

I listened, fascinated, during the speech of the hon. Prime Minister when he participated in this debate, when he regaled us with reference after reference to a government of our party which left office some 17 years ago. Though I was too young at that time to know much about such things, I began to wonder in the way of the Holy Writ, just how many generations are stained by the misdeeds of their predecessors. How true, sir, it seems to be in the hon. Prime Minister's books, in the words of Shakespeare:

The evil that men do lives after them;

The good is oft interred with their bones.

The hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon), in the height of the exorcism of the hon. Prime Minister, said:

"Leave the poor man alone, he is dead."

There is also a principle that we should say nothing but good about the dead.

When, on the one hand, the hon. Prime Minister exorcises Mr. Hepburn for failing to build Hydro sites, I invite him to remember that he had the moral courage to put his political life at stake when he passed legislation requiring the pasteurization of milk in this province.

Is the hon. Prime Minister not thankful, sir, that we have a new generation sound in body and limb? Perhaps the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) may connect the emptying of the sanatoria in this province to Mr. Hepburn's forthright action.

I know not, sir, of the sins of omission and commission of that government, and I know not whether many people in these days agree with the hon. Prime Minister. But I do know that I am proud to sit in this House, and on the same side of this House, as the hon. member for Brant and the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver), the first of whom is starting his 42nd year and the second of whom, the younger man, starts I believe his 35th. Conservatives have come and gone, hon. members have been here and governments have stood, but neither of these two eminent personages have ever fallen prey to the Tory blandishments.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): The hon. member would make good Tory material.

Mr. Sopha: "Why are they there, and why are we here?" That was the inviting question that the hon. Prime Minister asked. The very asking of it brought a loud and raucous demonstration from his supporters.

But the wording suggests that there may be many answers. The hon. Prime Minister gives a simple one, an all-embracing one. He says the imbalance in this chamber stems from what he calls "good government." Those hon. members, sir, who pound their desks might contemplate for a moment that 53 per cent. of those who voted, voted against this so-called "good government." They are over there and we are over here, but I say, in all respect, they are a minority government.

But, Mr. Speaker, in the fullness of time, and giving full answer to the hon. Prime Minister's question, I cannot restrain from casting my eyes to my left to look at this little group of 5. The initials for their party, Mr. Speaker—and this may not be original—can just as well stand for "Conservatives' Constant Friend." In no fewer than 34 ridings in 1955 and 28 in 1959, this group insured, by their presence in the contest, the election of the Tory candidate. One does not go on unsafe ground I insist, sir, when one interprets votes for the CCF as votes against the government.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): But not for the Liberals, they are too smart for that.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I do not for a moment welcome the diversion of my hon. friend from Woodbine, but I would urge the hon. Prime Minister in the future, and I do so with the deepest respect, that he should adopt a more benign and benevolent attitude toward this little fractured group over here.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Well, may I say to my hon. friend that if they had not been running we would have received all their votes over here. Where would the Liberals be?

Mr. Sopha: Well, Mr. Speaker, I can merely judge by the type of arithmetic that the hon. Prime Minister himself uses.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member's constituents would never vote for those people, would they?

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I have often wondered how to characterize this group.

Somebody has called them the "Five Tailors of Tulley Street." I suggest a more appropriate pseudonym would be the "Five Pharisees of Headline Street."

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do not be envious.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, unquestionably the hon. members of this House hold the hon. Prime Minister in high esteem. In my view, and in the view of many, he is a great citizen of this province and, above all, he is a great Canadian.

Now, Mr. Speaker, there must have been a reason for buttering him up in that fashion and I say to him that people must, or they would not long tolerate his government. For, in such widely separated places as Fort William and Windsor, the electorate have cast their judgment on the men who at one time ruled with him and in each case, they articulated, through the ballot, what the hon. Prime Minister himself would not say. They said to these men: "These men no longer enjoy our confidence."

The hon. member for Woodbine says, and I must say to him that I am struck by his phrase: "A cabinet Minister must not even seem to mix his private affairs with his public duty." No one who reads the historical development of our parliamentary democracy can quarrel with that assertion. Maybe here is a challenge to us in the Liberal party to say this quietly, affirmatively and emphatically to the electorate, so that the principles of parliamentary democracy may one day again flourish.

So, Mr. Speaker, I came into this House in the Opposition. It is an honourable place to be—not that we have any intention of permanently locating here.

Perhaps it might be useful, and I have set about the task to do so, to say a word about the role of the Opposition.

The only authority with which I can speak on the subject is the fact that the people of this country, I must add under a Liberal administration, invested something in the neighbourhood of $15,000 to $20,000 in me—that is to say they paid my way, as a veteran—to obtain a degree in political science and economics across the way.

A good place to start, is to say, with Sir William Ivor Jennings, the most eminent British authority on the Constitution, who declaims that the most important part of Parliament is the Opposition. That becomes as right as rain when we realize that the function of Parliament is not to govern but to criticize.

But I submit that the Opposition employs a special type of criticism. Our criticism is not directed toward a fundamental change in government policy because we know that we will not achieve that, but it is directed towards the education of public opinion. I can do no better than to quote a brief word from Professor Corry, who, perhaps, is the most eminent Canadian authority on government, where he says:

As well, there are always two or more sides to a story, and the majority party has not heard all of the other side until the Opposition has had its say. Concession to the arguments of the Opposition follows oftener than is generally believed.

Perhaps he is a little bit enthusiastic here. I think, however, that we should always assume, not only that what we say will be listened to with courtesy, but that it will be weighed with respect. That is the effect that the Opposition wants in Parliament. For those outside Parliament, the Opposition would want loudspeakers to din their message into the ears of every voter.

It is the duty of the Opposition to harass and obstruct the government, and I mean those words in their most healthy sense. The prestige of the Opposition's position is founded upon the fact, of course, that we are Her Majesty's loyal Opposition. We are loyal to the desires and the hopes and common interest of the body politic, while simultaneously we are opposed, in the words of Corry, "To the audacity of a temporary majority."

Now to put us all in the picture, I might say that the private hon. members over to your right, Mr. Speaker, and down in the rump, are here to support the government.

In the two rows over yonder sits the government and their function is to govern.

They are something more than that, however. We all know that in the picking of cabinet Ministers, the leader of government, the hon. Prime Minister, takes into consideration the aspirations of various interests and pressure groups in the community. He has to assure representation geographically, and I suppose there are many other considerations.

Therefore, the men on the Treasury benches are in a sense ambassadors.

The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) is in a true sense an ambassador from northern Ontario; as well as the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr.

Wardrope). The hon. Minister of Transport, I venture to say, is an ambassador from the various ethnic groups in the province. The hon. Minister of Public Welfare (Mr. Cecile) is an ambassador of that large group of French Canadians in our community.

I have been trying to figure out what the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) is an ambassador of, but judging from the impeccable sartorial elegance with which he dresses himself, I assume him to be an ambassador from Disney's.

I wish to say a word about the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, Mr. Speaker, and I regret that he is not in his place in the House tonight to hear what I have to say, but I am going to say it in any event. I never met the hon. Minister of Energy Resources—no, that is not correct: I met him briefly on one occasion when he came over to the University of Toronto to lecture when I was going to law school.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He is a very nice fellow.

Mr. Sopha: He is a very nice fellow and a highly competent fellow.

I have been watching him incessantly since I came into the House. I find it difficult to understand him. I find it difficult to understand why he finds it so difficult to listen. When he spoke, when he defended the Sarnia land deal, I got the impression—it was easy to get—that he demanded complete silence. I made a note in my book on that occasion which I can recite from memory.

The hon. member for York South interrupted him with a question. He abruptly told him that he did not wish to answer any questions during his three and one-half hour long presentation which he was going to make. I put a note in my book and I thought it was a fair résumé of what had happened.

I put down: "The noble lord speaks. He demands complete silence so that lesser men may take note of the wisdom of what he says."

We all respect his ability, yet when the hon. member for Woodbine got up to make his remarks on the Sarnia land deal, the hon. Minister of Energy Resources very demonstratively left his seat and departed from the chamber.

I would say to him, sir—and I hope he reads my remarks tomorrow—that he might take a leaf from the book of the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) who, I am told upon inquiry, is one of the best listeners that this House has ever seen.

Then, sir, when he returned—the hon. Minister of Energy Resources—the tenor of his comments that he addressed to you, sir, and the intimidation which they contained, were, in my humble opinion, a reflection upon the functions, duties, and integrity of each and every hon. member of this House.

I am not taking sides here. The hon. member for Woodbine was replying to the case of the hon. Minister. The hon. Minister's duty, in my conception, demanded him to be in this House, instead of roaming around the corridors or reclining on the sofa in his boudoir on the first floor.

We are all here, sir, practicing the democratic idea. We give up our time to carry out our respective functions because the public does not have the time. The waking hours of the populace are monopolized by such things as earning a living, watching TV, participation in the activities of service clubs, church work or community projects, raising a family, and helping to build a strong and free nation. Government there must be, and it is impossible for the body politic to take an active part in running the country.

So the citizenry collectively take an hour off every few years for the purpose of choosing representatives to make the laws, and they are what we have here.

What I have been talking about is the ideal performance of the role of government and the Opposition. It does not work out that way in practice. I have said that the Opposition, and to a lesser extent this is true of the government side, is talking to two audiences every time one speaks. We are talking across the floor to those who wield the power, and we are talking to the great unseen audience outside.

Now the last major function of the Opposition, and to me this overshadows all others in the scale of importance—this then is the fundamental touchstone of parliamentary democracy—we are here in the Opposition to strive unceasingly, unerringly and without rest to try to see that the Legislature maintains its control over the executive. Nothing brings a point home better than an illustration.

In carrying out this duty we complain, and we complain bitterly, that only Parliament, historically, can levy taxation, and we say that when the liquor control board, part of the executive, levies taxation outside of Parliament, then Parliament's traditional rights are violated. One cannot overemphasize the right of Parliament to control the executive. Parliamentary democracy rests on rights and privileges incomparably of far greater importance than good roads or scientific sewerage. If parliamentary democracy succumbs, then the free mind vanishes with it. There is, therefore, a sacred trusteeship imposed upon this House and I daresay particularly upon us in the Opposition.

Sir Gilbert Campion, whom the clerk of this House like to quote, was long-time clerk of the House of Commons at Westminster. He wrote that party organization and discipline have weakened the status of independence of the individual member, though I might say, parenthetically, that there have been some refreshing illustrations in recent weeks to the contrary in this chamber.

But on the other hand, party organization and discipline impose tremendous burdens upon the Opposition to keep the spirit of parliamentary democracy at a high pitch.

All hon. members know that the concept of the loyal Opposition was born in England. Many may not know that it was in Canada that the position of leader of the Opposition was first accorded statutory recognition. It was in 1905 that a resolution was passed in the House of Commons at Ottawa recommending payment to the occupant of that office.

Sir Wilfrid Laurier said among many other quotable things, Mr. Speaker, about the Opposition:

The leader of the Opposition, under our system, is just as much a part of the constitutional system of government as the Prime Minister himself.

The contribution made by my hon. leader, sir, in opening this debate was a model, and it was delivered in a spirit of critique of the affairs of this province in a very moderate, reasoned, well-balanced approach. It criticized fairly, and I might say—and I do so again respectfully when I say—that it deserved far more than the criticism, or the type of oratory, that the hon. Prime Minister delivered in reply thereto in the first part of his address.

Now, Mr. Speaker, let me turn to another subject that is dear to my heart, and that is our young giant of the north—Sudbury.

On January 1, 1960, Ontario's sixth largest city was born. Fifty square miles hold within the perimeter, more than 75,000 people and mostly young people they are. I say to the hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme) that the elderly may retire to his constituency, but in Sudbury we do not think of retirement. Youth are attracted to moil in the ground for nickel and copper, and that is a young man's task. Young people under 35 comprise two-thirds of Sudbury's population, 6 per cent. more than in Canada as a whole.

What about our nickel and copper mining industry, Mr. Speaker? Reliable figures would assert that, if the total value of mineral production in Ontario is $800 million annually, then Sudbury produces five-eighths of that, or $500 million.

The former mayor of Sudbury, Mr. Speaker, breached our habit of modesty when at one time he said for the edification of the press:

We do not claim to be the mining capital of the world, we merely go about our work quietly to keep the government of Ontario and the city of Toronto in business.

It may be, in breaking our habit of moderation, that the electorate dealt with him in the wrong way last January 1. We became amalgamated on January 1—Sudbury, the township of McKim, and the west half of the township of Neelon. The city of Sudbury in its application very determinedly, as my friend, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) will know, sought to include the town of Copper Cliff and the large mining installation that is situated there.

I am not getting into the question tonight, whether smelters are assessable or taxable under The Assessment Act, and I am not even going to discuss the merits of the order of the municipal board.

But, as I promised my constituents during the election campaign, I am going to say that the grants made to the city of Sudbury, in lieu of their ability to tax mining properties, are wholly inadequate. We are not allowed to tax these installations.

In Sudbury we are a dormitory municipality. We provide the place of residence of the 16,000 to 18,000 people that work in these mines. We provide the services that they require: principally education, roads, and all other matters that are ancillary to municipal government.

In order to support those, we must rely upon the munificence of the Treasury benches over yonder, in taking what they hand out from the mining tax which they themselves collect from those mines operating in that area.

These grants which they give to us, if translated into industrial assessments, bring our industrial assessment up to about 18 per cent. of the total.

I understand, and I think it not extravagant to say, that the healthy figure of proportion of industrial assessment to residential is about 40 per cent. So the long and short of it is that the home owners have to bear the burden of providing the services. Considering the vast wealth that the people of Sudbury produce, the share they get is not equitable, fair or just.

We in Sudbury are interested in the development of secondary industry in our community. Now we must rely almost entirely upon nickel and copper production—a wasting resource. If we are to continue that community after those ore bodies run out, then we must attract to our community a diversity of industry.

To this end, the council of the city of Sudbury hired the well-known Battelle Institute to prepare a research report.

It would seem that the best type of industry that ought to be attracted would include wood and lumber products, hardboard and insulating board, paper products, mining and smelting equipment, machinery and associated hardware.

I merely point that out for the benefit of the hon. gentlemen on the Treasury rows in order to invite their support for the development of this community along these lines.

Mention has been made, sir, that we are commencing a university at Sudbury. Well that will be a long and hard struggle. I am not going to say much about it tonight, except that I can only envisage the tremendous impact that it will make upon the cultural character of our community to have in our midst an institution of higher learning.

On a much lower scale, I want to also mention that we, too, in Sudbury have a hockey team. It has not achieved the fame of the team of my hon. leader, but in any event at this time it leads the eastern professional hockey league.

I want to say to the hon. member for St. Andrew that I saw him at a hockey game when I went with my hon. friend from Nipissing (Mr. Troy) to see—what I dare say, and he would not dare to say—to see the greatest hockey team in the world playing against the Leafs.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): The hon. member still rooted for the wrong team.

Mr. Sopha: I admired his enthusiasm. He is enthusiastic about whatever he does but that night he was particularly enthusiastic. Perhaps it was not him, but it is worth recounting that someone in his vicinity kept jumping to his feet, urging on the Mapleos, and Richard came out on the ice and he said: "Oh, get off the ice, Grandpa!" But within 10 minutes

Richard had scored two goals. I merely state this to point out that, in northern Ontario, we are able to cheer the athletes which we produce ourselves who participate in that sport.

Mr. Speaker, a word about labour, and just a word. All hon. members of the House will have noted the way in which labour in Sudbury last year solved its own problems within its own house. I think it is a very illustrative occasion when the rank and file of the union went to the polls, picked the candidates of their choice, and appeared to set the house of labour in order to their own satisfaction.

That was our experience and, as we stand on the eve of taking a step into the field of labour relations, I would like to urge upon all those who hear me that the safest way to deal with labour is to give labour a maximum of independence to govern its own affairs.

We did not like in Sudbury—and this is the first time that someone has the opportunity in this House to say this to the hon. Minister of Labour—the way in which he handled the strike at International Nickel Company of Canada Limited. That strike began on September 24. At that time the families of some 16,000 workers were affected immediately. Winter was coming on, and winter comes on early in northern Ontario. We did not think that the hon. Minister moved with any admirable promptitude to attempt to bring the parties together.

I will recall that it was reported in the press that he was busy settling a beer strike. Now, a beer strike, of course, is a very dire thing, but if my memory serves me correctly—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member's memory is quite wrong. The beer strike was settled before—

Mr. Sopha: That is not correct, sir, with all due respect, I am telling the hon. Prime Minister that is not correct. The beer strike was not settled until the strike at International Nickel Company was in its second or third week. If I recall correctly, there were only some 1,200 employees involved in that beer strike, and there were 16,000 to 18,000 workers in Sudbury out of work because of an industrial dispute, and it carried on for 84 days—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I may say to my hon. friend that the hon. Minister of Labour and myself endeavoured to settle the strike before it ever happened.

Mr. Sopha: That is true?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Certainly.

Mr. Sopha: Well, it did happen. Perhaps that is why it happened. In any event, it was noted that it was not until the strike had reached its 70th or 75th day that the hon. Minister of Labour really took any insistent steps to bring those two parties together to get their grievances settled.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is quite wrong. That is a very incorrect and prejudiced statement.

Mr. Sopha: Before I continue, let me say that I welcome the assistance I received from the other side in all those comments. I am not able to sort them all out, but I know that they must be helpful.

If I picked on the hon. Minister of Labour, I wish to turn for a moment and pick on the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. Speaker, on October 30, 1959 I had occasion to write this letter to the hon. Prime Minister. But before I read the letter, I want to say that the other day the racing commission was before the committee on government commissions and, toward the end of their interrogation, some hon. member asked the commission what type of offence they dealt with in disciplining licence holders who operated under the racing commission.

In reply, the chairman of the commission read the list of offences they dealt with last year. The first one read this way:

Hotwalker Jones suspended for life for failing to answer a letter written to him by the commission.

Now, Mr. Speaker, if the racing commission had jurisdiction over the Treasury benches I can just contemplate what the result would be in the continuation of their employment.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Was it serious?

Mr. Sopha: Will the hon. members listen carefully? I am reading the letter:

THE HON. LESLIE M. FROST,
Prime Minister of the Province of Ontario,
Parliament Buildings,
Toronto.

Re: Lockerby High School

DEAR MR. PRIME MINISTER:

I have the honour to address you, sir, concerning the matter of grants to the Lockerby composite high school.

During the past month, I have made repeated inquiries from Mr. McIntyre, secretary to the cabinet, regarding an appointment for officials of municipal corporations joined together in the administration of the school. As you are aware, there are a number of local municipalities involved.

It is my understanding that the school board, together with members of council concerned, have been under the impression that this school would receive the benefit of the revision of the scale of grants made effective January 1, 1959, even though approval for the school was given at an earlier date.

Be that as it may, their people have been striving very hard to get an appointment with you in order to discuss matters which, of course, are of high importance and extreme urgency to them. It is because of the lack of success that I have encountered, in making a request through Mr. McIntyre, that I presume to write to you directly.

May I, therefore, urge you, sir, to give an appointment to these officials at the earliest possible time.

As a freshman member of the Legislature, I look forward to the opportunity of meeting you and of having the pleasure of participating in the conduct of the legislative affairs of the province with you.

Yours very truly,

(signed) E. W. SOPHA
MPP Sudbury.

That letter, as I say Mr. Speaker, was sent on October 30, 1959, and I have not had a reply to it yet.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It must have gone astray.

Mr. Grossman: Did the hon. member put a stamp on it?

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Speaker, it is incumbent on me, of course, to tell the hon. members of the House what the background behind that letter is.

During the year 1957, it was realized that the community—and I speak of the community of Sudbury as embracing the whole of the Sudbury basin—needed the new high school, because the existing facilities at that time were entirely inadequate. The people concerned on the school board sat down, and they prepared a very comprehensive and intelligent brief for presentation to the government of this province. They made, as early as March 26, 1957, an appointment with the officials in The Department of Education for the presentation of that brief.

The matter went along in the normal course of affairs—in “the fullness of time” which is a favourite expression around here.

On September 22, 1958, an appointment was secured with the hon. Prime Minister. Now apparently on that date, unfortunately, it was possible to meet with the hon. Prime Minister for only a few minutes, so that this brief was actually presented to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and to the chief director of The Department of Education along with officials from both departments.

These people said—this was in September, 1958—to the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and to Dr. Cannon: “We understand that the scale of grants is going to be revised as of January 1, 1959.

Do not ask me, Mr. Speaker, how they knew that—they knew it.

They were revised on January 1, 1959, so we do not have to labour that point.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Progressive government—always ahead of things.

Mr. Sopha: They say that, at that meeting with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs and with Dr. Cannon, in the absence of the hon. Prime Minister—they said to the people representing the government: “If we will not come under the scale of grants that go into effect on January 1, 1959, we will delay the construction of our high school so that we will.”

The officials are reported to have asked these people at that time: “What will you do with the children? Do you need the school?”

The reply was: “Yes, we need the school, but we can put the students in existing facilities so that the community will benefit from the revision of grants.” The people on the school board say that they were told at that time: “Do not wait, start to build your school now, and we will see that you are not hurt.” They were assured that they would benefit from the new grants that went into force on January 1, 1959. Now that is what they say.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is just the hon. member's version. That is what he says.

Mr. Sopha: That is not my version.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it is.

Mr. Sopha: No, that is not my version, Mr. Speaker, at all. It is the version of the people who were involved. Whenever the hon. Prime Minister will answer this letter, and give them an appointment, they will come and tell him that themselves.

Then the tenders, Mr. Speaker, the tenders for the school were actually let somewhere around—I am not sure about the precise date—but somewhere around December 22, 1958, and school construction started.

Now, mark you, sir, that is important. They started this school only 9 days before the revision of grants went into effect on January 1, 1959. They did so because, as I say, they were assured that they would come under the new grants.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the amount involved—I am not going into the mechanics of it—but the amount involved, payable over a 15-year period, is $310,000 that that school would get if they came under these new grants.

Now, of course, the community was very concerned about whether these grants would be forthcoming. They worried about it, Mr. Speaker.

They worried as the month of June came along in 1959, and strangely enough, Mr. Speaker, as the month of June came along the hon. Prime Minister, incidentally, arrived in the city. I think it was around June 8—a very significant day for him to arrive. I well recall, that my honoured leader, the leader of the Opposition, arrived on the same date—we both had a little meeting there but I shall not go into that.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): It is all coming out now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Go into that. The results speak for themselves.

Mr. Sopha: But, Mr. Speaker, on June 10, 1959—and again this might be mere coincidence—we see in the front page of the Sudbury Star a headline above a two-column story. I will read it slowly, so that all hon. members will grasp the content of what is said:

PERSEVERANCE PAYS
EXTRA $310,000 FOR COLLEGIATE

The Ontario government has announced it will grant an additional $310,000 to the townships of McKim, Neelon-Garson and Falconbridge for construction of the Lockerby composite high school. The highly publicized grants were sought by the high school when it was announced that Lockerby collegiate was not eligible to receive them.

A delegation to Toronto was told by The Ontario Department of Education that the additional $5,000 for classrooms went into effect January 1, while approval for the Lockerby school was in September, 1958.

Gerald Monaghan, MPP Sudbury, told representatives of the 3 townships at the McKim office Tuesday that Premier Leslie Frost sanctioned the additional financial aid during his trip to Sudbury last week.

It continues, Mr. Speaker:

Mr. Frost told Mr. Monaghan and Mr. Belisle, MPP Nickel Belt, "Go back to the committee and tell them they will get an additional $5,000 for classrooms."

Representatives of the 3 townships were overjoyed. One can well appreciate that they would be, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Was the hon. member mad because he would not tell him?

Mr. Sopha: Oh, he would not tell me.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, would he expect him to?

Mr. Sopha: If I may continue, there is just a little more, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I might say to my hon. friend, this is all news to me. It is the biggest fairy tale I have ever heard.

Mr. Sopha: Just wait until the hon. Prime Minister hears the end of it, just wait. I continue:

Reeve Bill Ellis of McKim, Reeve Don Gillis of Neelon-Garson, Reeve John Franklin of Falconbridge and Grant Boyce, chairman of the Nickel district collegiate board, all congratulated Mr. Monaghan for his efforts and asked him to pass on the congratulations to Mr. Belisle, who could not attend the meeting.

When the Lockerby school was approved, government grants allowed $20,000 per classroom. On January 1 of this year, it was increased to $25,000 per room, with additional sums of $25,000 allowed for cafeteria and gymnasium. The Lockerby school has both.

When approval was sought, a government official verbally assured the municipalities they would reserve any additional grants going into effect in January. It was on the strength of this, said Mr. Monaghan, and the fact that final notice of approval was received on December 29, only 2 days before the grant came, that he and Mr. Belisle were able to get the additional money. He said a Capreol school will also be awarded the higher grant. The school bill to taxpayers——is estimated to be $310,000 less than before.

Now, Mr. Speaker, a little event took place on June 11. I do not say that it has anything to do with anything about this. Far from it.

Mr. Whicher: I do, I do.

Mr. Sopha: But as June turned into July, Mr. Speaker, and all our people got their haycrops off, and got things tidied up for the winter, they began to wonder about where this $310,000 was. So July turned into August, and then August turned into September, and they made an inquiry of the government. Now, they were all told in short order that no money would be forthcoming.

Now, you can appreciate, Mr. Speaker, that would send the reporters scurrying around to the authors of these stories. I am going to quote from the edition of the Sudbury Star which relates, far better than I can and, being a great Tory paper as it is, it will give a much higher degree of authenticity to what actually happened.

In this issue of the Sudbury Star, September 4, 1959, the heading goes like this:

PREMIER FROST DOES NOT REMEMBER PROMISING FUNDS AS TOWNSHIP TOLD

Hon. Mr. Frost: I never heard of it.

Mr. Sopha: I continue:

Premier Frost does not remember promising funds as township told by ex-MPP G. J. Monaghan.

The sunshine of June has become the clouds of September for taxpayers for McKim, Neelon-Garson and Falconbridge townships. There will be no extra grants from the provincial government to help pay for the Lockerby composite high school scheduled to open next week.

A grant of $310,000 has been counted on ever since representatives of the 3 townships were told in June it would be forthcoming, but now the Nickel district collegiate board, which operates this school, has been notified through Rheal Belisle, MPP for Nickel Belt, that the provincial Department of Education—

Mr. R. Belisle (Nickel Belt): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon. member what authority he has to quote me. Mr. Speaker, I was never part of any delegation that came down to see the hon. Minister of Education, or the hon. Prime Minister, or the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. Furthermore, I have never heard—

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, the hon. member can reply to me later. But I am not quoting him at all.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. J. F. Edwards (Perth): Hearsay.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, just to make the record absolutely clear, I am merely reading from an issue of the Sudbury Star of September 4, 1959, and I will read that paragraph again:

but now the Nickel district collegiate board, which operates this school, has been notified through Rheal Belisle, MPP for Nickel Belt, that the provincial Department of Education has no extra grants for the Lockerby school. Premier Leslie Frost confirms this.

At a meeting on June 9, G. J. Monaghan told representatives of McKim, Neelon-Garson and Falconbridge that Premier Frost had sanctioned the additional grant. Mr. Monaghan was MPP for Sudbury at the time. He was defeated in the provincial election two days later.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I guess the people did not take that seriously.

Mr. Sopha: The Sudbury Star quotes the hon. Prime Minister:

The Premier told the Sudbury Star today that he had no recollection of a conversation in which he said a grant to the Lockerby school would be increased, nor has he got a file on the subject.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Speaker, it goes on with a direct quotation from him:

"However," he said, "I would be happy if the board got in touch with me so that we could review the situation, and I could be brought up to date on what has happened up there. Certainly I have no recollection of any commitment being made to increase the grant—"

An hon. member: What a poor memory he has.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Prime Minister is caught twice on the same day.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Speaker, just to complete the matter and I may say, parenthetically he said there, "I would be happy if the board got in touch with me."

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I just want to point out—

Mr. Sopha: Well, I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that the board made every effort to get in touch with him, and as my letter of October 30, which I hope I may file without an affidavit, sets out that they are still trying to get in touch with him, and I would be obliged if he would reply to my letter any day. Now I just want to read—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is the hon. member through with that? Oh well, go ahead.

Some Liberal hon. members: Write him a letter, write him a letter.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Speaker, just to clear the matter and make the record complete, here is the last story that comes from the same edition of the Sudbury Star, September 4, 1959. The heading of this one is:

FROST'S MEMORY SHORT, SAYS SUDBURY EX-MPP

Some Liberal hon. members: Oh, Oh, Oh, Oh, he is through, he is through. He has had the course.

Mr. Sopha: I continue with the quote:

Contacted this afternoon at this home, former MPP Jerry Monaghan expressed surprise when told of Premier Frost's statement of not remembering a commitment for additional grants for Lockerby composite school. "All I have to say," said Monaghan, "is that apparently Mr. Frost has a short memory."

When informed that Rheal Belisle, MPP for Nickel Belt, also said he did not remember any conversation on the subject, Monaghan exclaimed: "Could not remember? Why Rheal was sitting in the car when we spoke of it, and so was John Fullerton, MPP for Algoma-Manitoulin."

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): What kind of an outfit do they have over there?

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I continue:

"The Premier also said the Capreol school would get the grant. He told Rheal that. Well, that is a good one—"

Mr. Belisle: On a point of privilege—

Mr. Sopha: In the Sudbury Star report, Mr. Monaghan goes on:

"Belisle was supposed to be with me at the meeting of councils on June 9 when I made the announcement. The only reason he was not there was because he had another commitment.

"Mr. Frost definitely told me the school would get the additional grant, and the statement I made that appeared in the Sudbury Star was true in every shape and form."

When told at McKim township that Reeve Ellis planned to have a delegation go to Toronto and an invitation would be extended to Monaghan, he said he would be very pleased to go. "I was satisfied it was the government's intention to award the money," he continued. "I put a lot of pressure on them for it."

And that is the end of that article in the Sudbury Star.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Amen.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I would say—and I measure my words very carefully in saying it—that at the very least it calls for an explanation.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I just say something—

Some hon. members: No. Order, order.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, but about the explanation—

Mr. Sopha: I say to the hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. Grossman: The hon. member was complaining about the hon. Minister of Energy Resources doing that—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will just put my hand in my pocket.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I say to the hon. Prime Minister that these people from the school boards of the townships concerned are still anxious to meet the hon. Prime Minister. I hope that, within a very short time—now that I have had to raise this matter in the Legislature—he will grant these people an opportunity to meet him.

And I wish to underscore this point—that had I received an answer to that letter of October 30, I would not have raised this matter in the Legislature.

In addition to sending the letter, I went on two or three occasions to Mr. McIntyre's office. In addition to that, I telephoned him to do everything that he reasonably could to get that appointment with the hon. Prime Minister.

But apparently the hon. Prime Minister has not seen fit to see this delegation, and I have felt the responsibility and obligation to those people to raise it with the free voice of Parliament, and to set out all the facts governing it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Would the hon. member like me to make a little explanation now?

Some hon. Liberal members: No, no.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I see that the time draws on, and I just want to conclude with this thought:

During the last half of the hon. Prime Minister's address, when he participated in the debate on the speech from the Throne, I thought that he achieved a very high plane when he spoke as he did in words which I envy him the use of, when he described the mission of this province as we start on the last 4 decades of the century.

Now, I thought at that time, Mr. Speaker, and I say to the hon. Prime Minister, that he left the role of the politician and he achieved the heights of the statesman. I have read those words over many times since.

I merely want to say to you, Mr. Speaker, that I believe that we, all of us in this House, stand on the threshold of this new decade which, in many ways, will determine whether we are to fulfil the challenge that is imposed upon us as we go on toward the end of this century.

As one member, I wish to say that I pledge myself to do my utmost in the conduct of the affairs of this province, to achieve what is the proper destiny of the people of this province.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, perhaps I might be permitted just to say a word at this point, in view of the statements my hon. friend has made. And, to follow what he has said, I measure my words very carefully.

Now, he mentions statements and understandings in which he quotes my friend Mr. Monaghan. Well, I would say to my hon. friend that the results on June 11 would indicate that his people perhaps did not take these too seriously. There I will leave the matter.

Mr. Reaume: That is not enough.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Secondly, as regards himself and his great difficulty, I would say to my hon. friend that I have been around here for the last 4 weeks. Parliament opened 4 weeks ago today, and I have never had the pleasure of having my good friend darken my door to ask me for the $310,000. So all I can say is that I just put it down—as my old friend Mitch Hepburn used to say—as another political speech. That is all.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Oh, shame, shame.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: In moving the adjournment of the House, I remind the hon. members of the fact that the House will meet for a short period at 2 of the clock tomorrow afternoon, and that it will adjourn as soon as certain formalities are met.

The meeting of the conservation committee, scheduled for 2 of the clock tomorrow, will convene as soon as the House rises. The meeting of the public accounts committee, scheduled for 3 of the clock, will convene at that hour, or immediately the House rises, if the House sits beyond 3 p.m.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

House adjourned at 10.50 of the clock, p.m.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome, as guests, pupils from Mount Albert public school, Mount Albert.

Petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. A. Carruthers, from the standing committee on education, present the committee's first report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act to amend The Department of Education Act, 1954.

An Act to amend The Public Libraries Act.

An Act to amend The Teachers' Superannuation Act.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by hon. L. M. Frost, that this House will tomorrow resolve itself into the committee of supply.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by hon. Mr. Frost, that this House will tomorrow resolve itself into the committee on ways and means.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE LABOUR RELATIONS ACT

Hon. C. Daley moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Labour Relations Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: This Act, which is an Act to amend The Labour Relations Act, has been, in anticipation, the subject of comment. Much of the anticipation, of course, has been without any real foundation. The report of the select committee on labour, of course, put before us all many thought-provoking ideas.

No one, however, in this House—no one who sat on the select committee itself—would ever anticipate that the report would be put into effect in its entirety. The report was nonetheless very important, and its deliberations are the basis for many of the matters which are dealt with in this legislation.

This legislation is a combination of the thinking of the committee, of the department, and of the government itself. One of the interesting things to emerge from the deliberations of the committee was the fact that the much-abused and much-discussed Labour Relations Act emerged substantially in the eyes of both labour and management as the finest of its kind in America.

Our efforts have been devoted to keeping it that way. There is the introduction of some new elements, for instance, such as mediation, which is in addition to conciliation and which I shall not spell out at this moment.

The proposed Act itself is not repressive or punitive in any sense to labour or management. It does not depart from the original conception of the legislation of 1950. Some statements have been made in this regard relating to government policy. I, myself, have made some statements about my faith in the present Labour Relations Act. Again, I affirm that the proposed amendments to the Act are in no way repressive or punitive, but they are nonetheless important.

The concept of The Labour Relations Act is to provide ways and means by which labour and management can collectively bargain together and arrive at the solutions of problems concerning both. The Labour Relations Act may be likened to the rules of the road. We could not use our highways in any safety if it were not for such rules.

The Labour Relations Act is built around the principle of collective bargaining, and our purpose has been to provide the rules, and the ways and means, by which solutions can be found without resort, wherever possible, to destructive strikes and lock-outs.

In this legislation these principles have not been departed from.

There is one new item to which I might refer, and that concerns machinery with which to resolve jurisdictional strikes. These are provisions in this Act which, I underline, would become effective only in the event of labour and management and the unions themselves being unable to resolve their difficulties. It may be an over-simplification to give the following example. Nevertheless, it is reasonably illustrative of the problem.

Let us assume that there is a dispute between two unions involving a particular piece of work. It may affect only a handful of workers. This dispute comes to an impasse, with the result that picket lines are set up with the effect that several thousand workers may be thrown out of work because of the dispute of a mere handful who are members of two opposing unions.

In this day and age, solutions to this sort of thing must be found, and that is the purpose of the provisions which will be found in this Act.

Again, I say its use would be dependent entirely upon the failure of labour and management and opposing unions to find a solution. At the present time, I have a committee of labour and management studying these problems. We have been holding meetings. I am sure there is serious purpose. I am optimistic enough to believe that they will evolve machinery which is mutually agreeable upon which legislation can ultimately be based.

In the meantime, however, the provision which is in this Act is advanced. It clearly indicates the intention of the government to legislate in this field if solutions cannot be found by labour and management and by the unions themselves.

I am hopeful that such solutions will be found, arising out of the present discussions, but I take this opportunity to point out that, if solutions are not found, no government can stand by in this day and age, when production is so necessary and the world is becoming so competitive, and permit thousands of men to remain out of work over a dispute involving very few.

The method of settlement proposed in the Act is merely an alternative which never need be resorted to, provided there is reason and common sense on the part of the parties affected. Yet, if it has to be resorted to, I think it will be agreed by this House that it is a very reasonable method of resolving such problems. Otherwise, it would not be advanced.

I am hopeful that this provision in the Act will never need to be used because of the inability of the parties to settle the issues themselves.

In connection with this whole problem, and particularly concerning my statement—that the purpose of this legislation is to provide the ways and means by which labour and management can collectively bargain in an effective way—there are two matters to which at this time I might refer briefly:

1. The voluntary revocable check-off.

This is not included in this Act. I do not think it has any place in this Act. It is a complete misunderstanding of the problem to say that it applies only to a small group of gold producers who have, some assert, quite unreasonably refused to accept it. The fact is that any kind of check-off presently in effect applies only during the lifetime of any agreement.

The introduction, therefore, of any form of check-off by legislation in fact raises the bargaining platform and deprives management of bargaining rights. This is completely unfair. Neither labour or management should be deprived of bargaining rights.

Again, the purpose of this legislation is to provide the ways and means by which labour and industry can collectively bargain.

2. Mass picketing, intimidation, and the use of threats and force.

The labour report quite properly made reference to this matter and certain recommendations were unanimous. It should be pointed out, however, that this subject is clearly one which is dealt with, and very effectively dealt with, by the criminal code of Canada.

Some have thought that reference to this problem should be made in The Labour Relations Act. Consideration of this point, however, inevitably leads to the conclusion that this is a complete misunderstanding of the law. The jurisdiction of the province to legislate in this field, which is covered by criminal law, is not only extremely doubtful to say the least, but any such legislation would probably be a nullity.

The present law of the land is very clear. It is well that both labour and management should understand it. There are many indications that neither understands it at the present time.

I am having distributed a statement first made by the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) on July 30, 1953. This memorandum has been brought up to date in the light of the federal amendments made to the criminal code in the meantime. In the opinion of myself and of my colleagues and the law officers, the law is crystal clear. A consideration of the same will clear up any differences on this point.

The method of considering this Act will be as follows: I am distributing to all hon. members,

1. A copy of the bill in which are the usual explanatory comments which are probably more expanded than is usual.

2. Each hon. member will be given an additional memorandum giving a reasonably full explanation of each section. This will enable not only the hon. members, but the press and the public, to follow intelligently the meaning and the purpose of this Act which obviously involves very intricate legislation.

3. Each hon. member will be given additionally a copy of the report of the committee on labour.

4. The memorandum of the hon. Prime Minister with relation to picketing and related subjects to which I have referred.

I propose that this legislation will be dealt with as follows:

1. Second reading will be proceeded with some time next week. I do not intend to hurry it.

2. I propose that the bill shall be sent to the labour committee where departmental experts, including Mr. Metzler, the Deputy Minister of Labour; Professor Finkelman, the chairman of the labour relations board; Mr. Reed, the vice-chairman; Mr. Fine, the chief conciliation officer, and others, will be prepared to give to the committee the benefit of their very vast experience.

I want to make this plain, however, that some of these gentlemen are serving in a quasi-judicial position, that all are civil servants, and that this Act is not advanced as a product of their own personal opinions. It is government legislation, and they will be glad to give to the members of the committee the benefit of their experience on the points involved.

The work of the committee and its authority, insofar as this Act is concerned, will relate to the Act itself which is government policy. The purpose will be to fully explain the same and to obtain the views of the hon. members.

It is not the purpose to have another public hearing such as was held by the labour committee. However, I would be very glad to consider any representations anyone desires to make. I will consider any suggestions at any time.

The government takes the responsibility for this legislation. If there are changes to be made, they will be introduced in the form of such amendments as the government feels it can recommend.

In the meantime, if there are any viewpoints to be expressed, I would be very glad to consider them. They then can be passed on in whole, or in part, to the labour committee.

The foregoing procedure I think will provide for an orderly and dispassionate consideration of the problems involved in this legislation.

I do not think it is necessary for me to give any further explanation of the Act itself, owing to the fact that very great care has been gone to in providing the House with the material to which I have referred.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Judicature Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, could I revert to the previous order, and ask a question of the hon. Minister of Labour?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I would like to give to the House a short explanation of this bill. It comes following a bill introduced by the hon. Minister of Labour and is in the field of labour disputes. The Judicature Act, section 17, contains provisions for injunctions in relation to labour disputes.

The effect of this bill, if it is passed, will be to provide that, in normal cases where the court is asked to provide or grant an injunction to restrain actions of persons in labour disputes, two days' notice of such application will be given. However, there is the retention of the ex-parte injunction proceedings to deal with certain emergent situations.

Also in relation to the method of service, again, as the hon. Minister of Labour has said, consultations in connection with that point have taken place with very responsible officials who are familiar with labour relations, and we have endeavoured to get provisions for service which we hope will be effective and fair to all persons concerned. If they do not work out, of course they can be looked at again, but we believe we have the best provisions possible under the circumstances.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, might I ask your indulgence to permit the pages to distribute to the House the material which the hon. Minister of Labour referred to? These will, I think, explain in very great detail the legislation which has today been introduced.

Mr. Speaker, I intimated yesterday, when this short session was called, that I did not want to interfere with the meetings of the committees. I said that I thought these proceedings would be over in about 30 minutes, and at this time I would like to move the adjournment of the House so that the committees may proceed with their work without interference.

The House meets tomorrow afternoon at 2.30 of the clock, I remind the hon. members, by reason of motion that was carried yesterday.

Mr. Speaker, before putting the motion, I would like to mention that the committee on conservation will convene as soon as the House rises.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 2.35 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 25, 1960

2.30 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Today we welcome, as guests, students from the following schools: Preston high school, Preston; Winston Churchill collegiate, Scarborough; Danforth technical school, Toronto; Northern secondary school, Toronto, which includes a group from the Greece Olympia school, Rochester, N.Y.; as well as other distinguished visitors whom we have with us today including Mr. Cohn, the Attorney-General from Israel.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports.

Clerk of the House: Mr. H. L. Rowntree, from the standing committee on private bills, presents the committee's fourth report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act respecting the Young Women's Christian Association of Metropolitan Toronto.

An Act respecting the Sarnia board of education and the Sarnia suburban high school district.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

An Act respecting the Kitchener-Waterloo general hospital.

An Act respecting the city of Oshawa.

An Act respecting the city of Ottawa.

An Act respecting the village of Streetsville.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to make the motion in relation to the Friday sittings similar to the one last week, and I would move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it do stand adjourned until 10 of the clock tomorrow morning.

Now sir, in connection with that motion, which I think is satisfactory to the hon. members of the House, I might outline the course of business for tomorrow and on Monday. Now I have done this after consultation with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer).

Today, if any time remains before 6 o'clock, we will proceed with the Throne debate. Tomorrow at 10 o'clock we would proceed with the Estimates of The Department of Insurance; Lieutenant-Governor; Prime Minister, and Provincial Auditor.

If there are any non-contentious bills on the order paper, we would proceed with those, but if any hon. member desires any bill held, we would be very glad to hold it.

Now on Monday, sir, we would proceed with the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity and the Throne debate, together with any items there may be, as I say, of a non-contentious nature on the order paper.

I think the general objective would be this, that perhaps it would be possible to have the Throne debate concluded except for the two concluding speeches, and those can be arranged at a time that would be satisfactory to the hon. members of the House. Sir, I make this motion with that explanation.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I have here two messages from His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor (Mr. Mackay) signed by his own hand.

Mr. Speaker: His Honour the Lieutenant-Governor transmits estimates of certain sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1961, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, February 25, 1960; and the Lieutenant-Governor transmits supplementary estimates of certain additional sums required for the services of the province for the year ending March 31, 1960, and recommends them to the legislative assembly, Toronto, February 25, 1960.

Hon. J. N. Allan moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

BUDGET ADDRESS

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, one year ago today, as I rose to present my first budget, I mentioned that I was delighted to have all former Treasurers of this province, who are now living, in the House. I am pleased to say again that we have the pleasure of having those same 3 Treasurers with us today.

Mr. W. H. Price, a former Treasurer of this province, presented his first budget to this House just 36 years ago this day. We are delighted to have him with us and see him enjoying such splendid health.

We are likewise delighted to have another former Treasurer with us—the hon. Chief Justice Porter. I have been told that, when the hon. Chief Justice Porter was Treasurer, the surplus was so large that it was embarrassing. It can hardly be said that those conditions prevail today.

It is correct to say, however, that our revenues have increased very greatly since that time; likewise it may be said that the various departments of government seem to have made excellent progress in developing the art of disbursing money. So the possibility of complaint that might arise from our surplus being too large is not giving us any great concern.

I am sure every hon. member of this House appreciates the hon. Chief Justice's attendance today, and we hope that he will form the habit of being with us every budget day.

It is hardly necessary to welcome the other former Treasurer of this House because we have him with us always. The hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) is a real veteran. The hon. Prime Minister presented 14 budgets to this House, all without any increase in taxation. I doubt if that record will ever be equalled.

It is a great pleasure, also, to welcome hon. Justice Walsh here this afternoon. It might be said that he is truly interested in the financial affairs of the government of this province, and I believe since 1943 has only missed one budget day. We hope that he will be with us again as well.

Another noted gentleman I would like to welcome this afternoon is our esteemed friend George Dunbar. I am sure that he has been missed by every hon. member of this House and we are delighted that he has been kind enough to visit us this day.

We are pleased to welcome several representatives of the financial community. I might say that they too perform a splendid service for the people of this province, and we appreciate their interest in the statement that will be made today.

Now, in the preparation of this budget I have again followed in a general way the pattern of former Treasurers, with one exception. I have discontinued the use of the highway construction account. This, I may say, was done largely for the reason that my hon. friend from Grey South (Mr. Oliver) has, over the years, objected strenuously to the inclusion of this item in the budget. We on this side of the House are most anxious to contribute to the happiness of the hon. member, and we hope this action will do just that.

An additional reason for discontinuing this item in the budget is that it was our feeling that such action would simplify the task of preparing financial statements of the various years' operation of government.

This budget statement, Mr. Speaker, with the various appendices attached, is again a document that contains a very great deal of information. I would like at this time to express my sincere appreciation to the staff of The Provincial Treasurer's Department and to the staff of The Department of Economics for their exceptionally capable assistance in the preparation of this document.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to go into detail in presenting this budget statement, but I intend rather to outline, in a general way, the financial activities of the government during the present fiscal year and indicate the plan of the government for the coming year.

In my budget of last year, which I brought down just one year ago today, there were greater provisions for education, health, welfare, highways, the development of our resources, and assistance to our municipalities than ever before in our history. I confess the task of finding the money to finance that huge programme impressed me, at that time, as being formidable and the most challenging I had ever undertaken.

I am now able to report to the House that, by sound business-like administration, by economizing and saving at every opportunity, and by reason of the buoyant revenues that have been associated with the business upturn, we have finished the year in a stronger position than was anticipated. This, I think, is reason for gratification.

A year ago, I said that we had weathered the economic blizzard better than most jurisdictions, and were commencing a new year in which the signs of recovery and gathering strength were clearly evident. The confidence I expressed then has proved to have been fully justified.

During the past year, new ground was broken in nearly all major fields of economic activity. New records of population, employment, production, personal incomes and retail sales were established. Births reached a new peak of nearly 161,000—more than double those of just 15 years ago. Population increased by 153,000. Early in October Ontario's population crossed the 6-million mark and today stands at 6,065,000.

The labour force increased by 35,000, but as the number at work rose by 50,000, the average rate of unemployment in 1959 was 20 per cent. lower than in the previous year.

Capital investment again maintained its $3 billion level. A moderate decline in investment in housing, which in 1958 had attained a rate of activity which could not be sustained, was offset by increased outlays for new factories, machinery, equipment and public facilities. Despite the downward trend in housing, the completion of over 54,000 units in 1959 made it the second best year in our history.

Industrial output, particularly in the manufacture of iron and steel products, surged upward. Manufacturing shipments totalled $11.5 billion, 8 per cent. above those in 1958 and 4 per cent. above the previous peak established in 1957. A sharp expansion in sales of uranium, iron ore and nickel carried the value of mineral output to a new peak of $963 million—22 per cent. above the previous year and 5 times our production just 15 years ago. The production of pulp and paper, one of Ontario's leading export commodities, rose by 3 per cent.—another record. Farm cash income established a new peak. Personal incomes rose to over $10.5 billion—up 7 per cent. as were retail sales.

Looking ahead, our prospects for the next year are undiminished. The rapid growth of our domestic market, as well as that of our trading partners, offers unrivalled opportunities. Capital investment is expected to remain at its present high level, with the emphasis on additions to machinery and equipment and overall productive capacity. Despite setbacks which will occur in particular sectors of our economy, the strong underlying forces of growth suggest another year of better-than-average progress.

We must, of course, be on guard against complacency. There will inevitably be dislocations in some sectors of the economy and a need for adjustment. We must endeavour to insure that business costs, including wage costs, do not get out of line with the increase in our productivity and our ability to compete in both domestic and foreign markets. We have seen a heartening increase in manufacturing in our province. We must aim to sustain this and expand it.

We must also have regard for what we can finance from the savings of our own people. If we maintain fiscal integrity and sound methods of financing, business will prosper and expand. We have highly varied industries, comprehensive merchandising and financial services, a skilled labour force, a highly developed system of transportation, ample water, and an abundance of other natural resources. Backed by stable government, we can offer an irresistible combination of sound business environment and attractive community life.

And we have been doing just that. Ten years ago Ontario's population formed 32.6 per cent. of the Canadian total; now we have 34.2 per cent. of the nation's population. That is a very significant change. For the last decade we have been growing more rapidly than the rest of Canada. Despite the spectacular development of other parts of Canada, Ontario still accounts for half the nation's manufacturing output, as well as 40 per cent. of its mineral production, 30 per cent. of its agricultural output, and one-third of its pulp and paper.

Thirty-seven per cent. of Canada's capital investment takes place in this province and 38 per cent. of all retail and consumer sales.

These are striking facts. They help to explain why by far the largest proportion of capital and industries from abroad locate in Ontario, and why over half of all the immigrants to Canada settle in this province.

People like to settle in Ontario where things are happening. Here is an educational system of the highest order. Here are diversified occupations and industries. Here is a secure environment for capital investment. We are the heart of Canada's domestic market, and we border on 8 states with a population in excess of 65 million people. Given proper incentives and sound management, we are assured of continuing growth and expansion.

It is against this background of progressive development and expansion that I wish to outline our budget policy, and then to describe our financial position in the current fiscal year and our forecast of revenue and expenditure for the next fiscal year ending March 31, 1961.

BUDGET POLICY

The preparation of a budget begins at least a year and a half before the end of a fiscal year, and net revenues and expenditures and increases in debt can be only approximations. This, of course, creates great difficulties in achieving accuracy. Changes in the tempo of economic activity in the province may justify moderation or adjustment in spending. An unexpected increase in unemployment may dictate an acceleration of capital spending.

On the other hand, a rise in employment may call for a stretch-out in the programme to a degree that would achieve tangible savings without creating serious disruptions and loss of confidence.

Anyone who is familiar with budgeting knows that it is simply impracticable to slash expenditures willy-nilly or arbitrarily. Many expenditures are uncontrollable.

For instance, interest on the capital debt must be paid and is a significant factor in our budget. Furthermore, about two-fifths of Ontario's budget represents provincial assistance to the municipalities for education, health, welfare, roads and a variety of other local services. The drastic pruning of these expenditures would create a state of chaos in municipal finance.

There are also responsibilities to the suppliers and employees involved in other services provided by the province, for example, the operation of hospitals and the construction and maintenance of highways.

The summary of our operations for the current fiscal year, which I shall now give, shows a more favourable outcome than could have been anticipated a year ago. This has been effected in part by the improvement in business which has produced larger tax revenues.

But the strengthening in our position has also been achieved by the exercise of tighter budgetary control which has produced significant savings. It is my expectation that with the reorganization of the secretariat to the Treasury Board and the establishment of an organization and methods unit even greater efficiency and savings can be realized.

I am, therefore, happy to report that from our surplus on ordinary account, which is the seventeenth consecutive surplus of this government, we have been able to finance from ordinary revenue over half of the province's new construction and capital expenditures. In these years of extraordinary growth and development, that is a notable achievement.

REVIEW OF OUR FINANCIAL POSITION FOR THE FISCAL YEAR 1959-1960

As the pace of the Ontario economy accelerated in 1959, and the tight money situation emerged in the capital markets—a combination of circumstances that raised interest rates to the highest level in more than a quarter of a century—we undertook a re-examination of our spending programme for this current year with a view to paring any outlays, no matter how desirable, which could, for the time being, be deferred.

In consequence of this policy, we were able to reduce our expenditures below appropriations. Our net ordinary expenditure was cut by $12.5 million and our net capital expenditure by $19.5 million, thereby effecting a saving in our appropriations of $32 million. Final figures will probably show that even greater savings have been achieved, but as against these we are proposing to pay out supplementary estimates of $8.2 million.

Our net ordinary expenditure, including $18.1 million for sinking fund and $15 million for highway construction account in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1960, is estimated at $633.1 million. Of this amount $204.1 million, or almost one-third, has been paid out for education; $85.1 million for health; $89.4 million for the maintenance of highways and roads; $45.4 million for public welfare; and various amounts for other departments and for debt interest. More than half our net ordinary expenditure has been devoted to education, health and welfare.

Over and above our expenditure on ordinary account, we have spent $228.7 million for capital purposes, of which an estimated $178.9 million has been for highways. The construction of Ontario Hospitals and other public works—including conservation projects—required $45.9 million, while mining and forest access roads, and the rural power bonus, accounted for the balance of $3.9 million.

The combined net ordinary and capital expenditure of the province in 1959-1960 will therefore total an estimated $861.8 million, $66.7 million over that of 1958-1959; or if appropriations for highway construction account are excluded in both years, the increase in 1959-1960 over that in 1958-1959 is $96.7 million.

As I have indicated, this increase is largely concentrated on additional assistance to municipalities, payments to school boards and universities, and increased expenditure for health, highways and other services that have been associated with the growth in our population and the expansion of industry.

Business expansion and the rise in personal incomes brought about an estimated increase in our revenues in 1959-1960 to $699.7 million, $57.3 million above those in 1958-1959. Our principal sources of revenue have been as follows: Corporations taxation $175 million, up $16.2 million; gasoline and diesel fuel taxes $158.5 million, an increase of $7.1 million; motor vehicle licences $58 million, an increase of $6.5 million; liquor control board profits and fees $76.7 million, up $2 million, and succession duties $34.5 million, up $1 million. Including capital receipts, our revenue in 1959-1960 totalled $702 million, an increase of $54.3 million over that in 1958-1959.

The interim residual surplus of the province is estimated at $632,000, after making provision of $18.1 million for sinking fund, transferring $15 million to highway construction account and financing $66 million of capital construction out of ordinary revenue.

SPECIAL GRANTS AND PAYMENTS

As in the past, I propose at this session to provide a number of special grants and payments for certain educational, health and superannuation purposes. These will include grants of $100,000 to the Ontario Heart Foundation, $100,000 to the Ontario College of Art, $75,000 to the Royal Ontario Museum, $48,100 to the Ontario Society for Crippled Children, and sundry grants to the Canadian Mothercraft Centre, Toronto; Illahee Lodge, Cobourg; and the convalescent children's camp at Burlington.

We are also proposing to appropriate $5 million of this year's revenue to enable special grants to be made to public general hospitals for debt retirement and other capital purposes. A basic grant of $75 per bed will be paid to all approved public general hospitals. In addition, special payments will be made to a limited number of hospitals in accordance with their need.

When the hospital insurance plan came into effect on January 1, 1959, limits were set on the amount of profit that public hospitals could make from semi-private and private accommodation and other special services. As a result, a small number of hospitals carrying relatively large debts have been unable to make adequate provision for repayment of their indebtedness.

Thus, from this $5 million appropriation, which I am asking the House to approve, payments will be made to help to meet this situation and to provide general financial assistance of $75 per bed to all hospitals.

A supplementary estimate of $900,000 will be provided to reimburse the hospital services commission for expenditures relating to the mental health care and treatment of patients in certain hospitals other than provincial institutions. Under the arrangement that has been established, the hospital services commission undertakes to pay these hospitals, where patients are taking treatment for mental illness, at the same rate as treatment would be provided in an Ontario Hospital.

In addition to these amounts, we are proposing again to make special payments of $1 million each to the public service superannuation fund and the teachers' superannuation fund.

Supplementary estimates totalling $8,238,000 will therefore be submitted to permit these grants and payments to be made. A summary follows:

Education:

Ontario College of Art—for capital purposes.....	$ 100,000
Royal Ontario Museum—for capital purposes.....	75,000
Teachers' Superannuation Fund—special contribution.....	1,000,000

Health:

Special Grants to Public Hospitals under the authority of The Public Hospitals Act and the regulations thereunder.....	5,000,000
Reimbursement of the Hospital Services Commission of Ontario for expenditures relating to mental health care.....	900,000
Ontario Heart Foundation.....	100,000
Convalescent Children's Camp, Burlington.....	6,100
Illahee Lodge, Cobourg.....	4,800
Ontario Society for Crippled Children, Convalescent Camps.....	48,100
Canadian Mothercraft Centre, Toronto.....	4,000

Other:

Special contribution to the Public Service Superannuation Fund.....	1,000,000
TOTAL.....	$8,238,000

INVESTMENT IN PHYSICAL ASSETS AND NET CAPITAL DEBT

Few people, I am sure, are aware of the huge accretion of physical capital in this province over the last decade and a half. In this period, the government of Ontario has invested $1.5 billion in physical assets which are recorded in the budget statement and public accounts under the heading of "capital disbursements."

In addition to these capital disbursements, we pay out of our current revenue, under expenditure headings classified as "ordinary", many millions of dollars annually, to meet the province's share of principal repayments on school debentures, and to provide construction grants for public general hospitals and a variety of other physical assets which are adding steadily to the public capital stock of this province.

The cumulative total of these grants and payments over the last 15 years amounts to $400 million, making a total investment of $1.9 billion in the physical stock financed by the province, in this period.

This massive programme has been designed to provide the foundation for our developing economy and for the even greater expansion that lies in the future. In the last decade and a half, we have created more public physical assets than had previously been brought into existence in this province in its entire history. This is no exaggeration. It is a statement of fact.

In money terms, our expenditure on new construction, for the last decade and a half, has dwarfed all that which has gone before, but I am not making comparisons in terms of money but of real facilities and real values. Traverse the progress that has been made in our highways system, the more than doubling of our school and university facilities, the astounding expansion and modernization of our hospitals, water works and sewage systems, and the 4- to 5-fold increase in our electric power generating capacity, the cost of which is not included in the figures to which I have referred, but which has been financed on the province's credit.

These illustrations provide a striking picture of the programme of expansion that has been carried out in this province in so short a period of time.

While, over the last decade and a half, we have been creating physical assets estimated at $1.9 billion, our net capital debt has increased by only $528 million. That means we have financed, out of ordinary revenue, over $1.4 billion—or three-quarters—of our capital facilities, funding only one-quarter. That is no mean accomplishment.

The burden of our net debt is substantially less than it was 10 to 20 years ago. In constant dollars per capita, it is less than half what it was in 1939-1940. In the late 1930's, Ontario's net capital debt was 29 per cent. of the total personal income of the people of Ontario; today it is only 9.5 per cent. In 1939-1940 it would have required 6 years' revenue to retire the then existing debt; now it would take only 1.5 years' revenue.

On the other hand, we recognize our debt has been rising, and I assure hon. members that steps will be taken to keep any increase to manageable dimensions.

I shall return to this subject later in my address. At this point, however, I should add that the net capital debt, as at March 31, 1960, is estimated at $1 billion—an increase of $113.5 million during the past year.

FORECAST OF REVENUE AND EXPENDITURE FOR 1960-1961

In coming now to the forecast of our revenue and expenditure for 1960-1961, I should again make reference to the economic climate in which the budget for next year has been formulated. This economic climate is one of high levels of income and employment and, of course, interest rates which increase the cost of any money we borrow. The relative shortage of investment capital, and the cost of borrowing, have had a serious impact on our position and given rise to misgivings.

Since our rate of population growth and industrial expansion has been nearly double that of the United States, comparisons of capital investment to gross national product in our respective countries may be misleading.

Relatively speaking, we are a young province with but 6 million people in a huge land over 1,000 miles from east to west and 1,000 miles from north to south. It is not surprising that, over the past 15 years, the unprecedented capital requirements of the Ontario economy, including those of the province and municipalities, have imposed strains upon the supply of savings of our people.

As I pointed out earlier in my remarks, the Ontario government since World War II has invested, in the physical assets of this province, a total of $1.9 billion. Ontario Hydro, in the same period, has spent a total of $2 billion on its capital expansion, making a total investment by the province and Ontario Hydro of nearly $4 billion in the last 15 years.

Of this amount, only $450 million or 11 per cent. has been financed by borrowing in the United States. Eighty-nine per cent. has come from the incomes and savings of our own people. Our policy of keeping our credit bright and clean serves us well in these years of "tight money."

Circumstances compel us to proceed with essential works which will help stimulate industrial expansion and meet human needs. Nevertheless, we have made strenuous efforts to contain our expenditures for next year without, at the same time, jeopardizing any essential programme or our assistance to municipalities and their school boards. In fact, our assistance to municipalities and their agencies for the next fiscal year has been increased by $27.8 million.

We estimate that the combined net ordinary and capital expenditures of the province in the fiscal year 1960-1961 will be $896.5 million, an increase of $49.7 million before taking into account the $15 million transferred to highway construction account in 1959-1960, and $34.7 million after taking it into account. This is the smallest rise in the last 6 years.

Net ordinary expenditure, including $17 million for sinking fund, will total $671.2 million, an increase of $53.1 million over the estimated net ordinary expenditure in the current fiscal year, after omitting the transfer to highway construction account, and $38.1 million before omitting it.

Capital disbursements projected for next year total $225.3 million. This is a reduction of $22.9 million from this year's appropriations, and $3.4 million below the amount that has been estimated will be spent in this current fiscal year. We are therefore carrying on approximately the same capital programme as in our current fiscal year.

The inexorable forces of growth are clearly exhibited in the increase in our ordinary expenditure in next year's budget. Half the increase—$26.1 million—will go for education. The Department of Municipal Affairs requires an additional $9.1 million to provide $2.7 million more for unconditional grants to municipalities, $2 million more for grants to mining municipalities, and increased amounts for other functions—including the administration of the community planning branch of The Department of Planning and Development and the Ontario water resources commission, which have been transferred to it.

The Department of Public Welfare requires an additional $3.8 million in consequence of greater numbers of welfare recipients and the higher benefits being paid. The Department of Health is allotted an additional appropriation of $11 million to operate the Ontario Hospitals and to carry out its other functions. The main items in our combined net ordinary and net capital budget for 1960-1961 may be summarized as follows:

Education $230.2 million (up $26.1 million); Health $88.1 million (up $11 million over last year's appropriation); Highways and Roads $251.5 million (down $1.7 million); Lands and Forests $24.4 million (down $1.5 million); Municipal Affairs $42.4 million (up $9.3 million); Public Welfare $49.2 million (up $3.8 million); Public Works $55.6 million (down $1.1 million); Attorney-General $21.3 million (down $1.8 million).

On the net ordinary revenue side, we are anticipating a rise in 1960-1961 of $38 million to a record total of $737.7 million. We are projecting an increase in corporations taxes from $175 million to $190 million. The gasoline tax is expected to rise an additional $7 million to $159 million. Our tax rental agreement will produce $115 million as against $109.6 million in the current fiscal year. The liquor control board profits and fees are estimated to total $79.6 million in 1960-1961, a rise of $2.9 million over this year. Motor vehicle and various other revenues will also be higher.

After providing $17 million for sinking fund, and applying $66 million of current revenue to capital disbursements, I forecast a surplus of $546,000 for 1960-1961. This will be our eighteenth consecutive surplus.

NO NEW TAXATION

There will be no new taxation or increases in tax rates in this budget. There will be certain minor amendments to The Succession Duty Act designed to bring it into conformity with modern conditions. There will also be minor amendments to The Corporations Tax Act, but none of these will be significant or involve any increase in taxation. Very strong representations will be made at the forthcoming conference of the federal and provincial governments in Ottawa this summer for a more realistic division of the main fields of direct taxation. It is to these sources that we must first look for the revenue that we require to finance our expanding services and obligations.

EDUCATION

With the ever-increasing complexities of our modern society, the challenge of future economic progress and spiritual well-being rests now, as never before, on the manner in which our children are prepared for their role in life. In partnership with the local school boards and related authorities, we have recognized this responsibility, and the heavy financial demands which our educational system makes. It continues to be our aim to insure that Ontario provides the best education possible for our young people, and that adequate facilities and teaching are available to all, irrespective of financial circumstance or location.

To attain these objectives, expenditures of The Department of Education—which in 1959-1960 are estimated at $204.1 million—will be increased by $26.1 million to a record level of $230.2 million in 1960-1961. Next year's appropriation for education will be more than twice as great as our outlays for this purpose just 3 years ago. Indeed, it will be greater than our combined expenditures were for all ordinary and capital purposes just a dozen years ago.

Reflecting the very high level of births since 1945, Ontario's school enrolment has been rising in recent years at a rate of about 70,000 a year. In the past decade, school accommodation for more than 600,000 additional pupils has been added. In 1959 alone, an additional 92,000 pupil places were provided at a cost of almost $82 million.

The province has undertaken a vigorous programme to recruit and train qualified teachers in sufficient numbers to meet requirements. And I hope some of the hon. members facing us will listen to these figures and bring theirs up to date. In September, 1959, a total of 5,951 students were enrolled in various courses at teachers' colleges. This represents a record increase of 1,263 over the number enrolled in the previous year.

To help accommodate them, a new building was constructed at the London teachers' college, while in September, 1959, the Lakeshore teachers' college in New Toronto was opened. Next year, an addition to the Hamilton teachers' college is planned, while construction will soon commence on a new teachers' college at the Lakehead, which it is anticipated will be ready for occupancy in 1961.

Meanwhile, courses will begin in temporary quarters next September. Summer courses will also be operated at Queen's University and the University of Western Ontario to train secondary school teachers.

Expanded training facilities, together with improved salaries and working conditions, have done much to enhance the professional status of our teachers. The province's contribution to the teachers' superannuation fund, including the $1 million to be voted as a supplementary estimate, amounts this year to $13.5 million and next year it will be higher. Fifteen years ago it was only $1.3 million and has risen in 15 years from $1.3 million to $13.5 million, and during that time this province has contributed a total of $76.7 million.

As hon. members are aware, a new and improved programme of school grants was announced in 1957, to be effected over a period of 3 years.

The first stage, introduced in 1957-1958, brought about a number of reforms, including an increase in per pupil grants.

The second stage, initiated in 1958-1959, saw the commencement of equalized assessment and the adoption of a growth-need factor designed to give additional assistance to school boards experiencing extraordinary capital and transportation costs arising from rapid expansion.

The third stage, inaugurated in 1959-1960, introduced 5 important improvements which broadened the base upon which grant payments are computed. These comprised the inclusion of the costs of industrial art shops, home economics classrooms, cafeterias, gymnasiums and all-purpose rooms or basements in the base for computing grants.

The province also raised the approved cost for classrooms in secondary schools from $20,000 per classroom to $25,000.

Furthermore, under a formula worked out during the past year, the province has undertaken to pay, effective January 1, 1959, fifty per cent. of the lower of either the equalized assessment or the actual purchase cost of school sites. Several additional refinements and betterments are being introduced this year, one being a revision in the growth-need factor to permit finer graduations.

In consequence of these revisions and the increase in enrolment, our legislative school grants will this year amount to $147 million and next year, 1960-1961, they will be increased by a further $19.5 million to a total of $166.5 million. That represents an increase of $87.4 million, or 111 per cent. increase, in just 4 years.

Besides school grants, the province has provided substantial assistance to a growing family of universities and colleges. Fifteen years ago there were 4 assisted institutions of higher learning; now there are 11 with another, Laurentian University of Sudbury, in the making. In that period our university enrolment has more than doubled, rising from 13,000 to 28,000 and it is expected to double again within the next decade. In the face of this expansion, we have multiplied our grants time and again.

This year, at $24.5 million, they are more than 9 times what they were just a decade and a half ago, and next year we are proposing a further increase of $4.2 million to $28.7 million. Maintenance grants will be increased from $12.7 million to $15.5 million, or by $2.8 million, while grants for capital purposes will be increased by $1.4 million from $11.8 million to $13.2 million.

The following table provides a summary of our maintenance and capital grants to the various universities and colleges. In the grant to the University of Toronto is an appropriation of $250,000 for York University. This is in addition to the $25,000 which has already been paid to meet organizational expenses. I will give the cumulative grants to these institutions:

To encourage able students of limited financial means to continue their education at the university level, the province has established a many-sided programme of student aid. Since the introduction of the bursary system in 1943, funds have been made available to 25,000 students at a cost of $5.8 million. This year marked a major advance in its development. The appropriation for this purpose was more than doubled to $1.2 million, enabling awards to be made to almost 4,000 students, compared with 2,346 students in the previous year.

In addition, a system of Ontario scholarships to grade 13 students attaining a high academic standard was inaugurated. For next year, 1960-1961, we have again placed $1.2 million in the estimates for Ontario scholarships and bursaries, and $3 million for student loans. In accordance with the recommendations of the committee of university heads, awards will also be made from the Queen Elizabeth II scholarship fund.

We have not overlooked the educational requirements of our physically handicapped citizens. Just as increasing enrolments have brought problems of accommodation to the local school boards, so have higher enrolments in the provincially owned and operated school for the deaf and school for the blind made additional buildings necessary. Five new buildings have been completed on the campus of the Ontario school for the deaf at Belleville. These comprise a primary school, a primary residence, a laundry, a staff residence, and a central heating plant.

The educational needs of retarded children are continuing to be met through additions to the special schools sponsored by parents, service clubs and the province. This year we have made grants totalling $680,000; for next year we have increased our appropriation for this purpose to $900,000.

Many new Canadians benefit from the language and citizenship courses held throughout the province. More than 900 classes of this nature, operating under the guidance of the community programmes branch of The Department of Education, and with the full co-operation of local school boards, were attended by some 21,000 persons last year. Next year the number of classes and enrolment will at least equal and perhaps surpass those of 1959.

As a result of these varied functions, The Department of Education's bill next year will total $230.2 million, an increase over the present year of $26.1 million. Thus, our expenditure will have more than doubled in 4 years. It means that the province itself is spending on education, exclusive of our outlays for the Ontario agricultural and veterinary colleges, $40 for every man, woman and child in the province. Never before has the province provided so much for education.

HEALTH

The provision of a high level of health services for the people of Ontario has always been a major objective of government policy. Last year marked a milestone in the history of Ontario's health services with the introduction of the Ontario hospital insurance plan, which has now been operating smoothly and efficiently for a little more than a year. So striking has been the success of this undertaking that 94 per cent. of our population are now enrolled.

The hospital services commission is carrying out extensive studies of hospital usage in the province. These studies are making possible the most efficient planning for the construction of new facilities and the installation of equipment. While the actual construction of hospital facilities remains—with provincial assistance—a community responsibility, the commission will attempt to see that, as community resources are expanded, they fit into the pattern of a balanced and integrated hospital system. It is the aim of this government to fashion an efficient and effective health instrument for the people of Ontario through a modern hospital system—a system that is already one of the best on the continent.

In the past dozen years, more than 21,000 additional beds have been made available in our public, TB and mental hospitals. This is a net increase, and does not take into account the large number of beds which were retired from service because of obsolescence and other reasons. In 1959 alone, almost 2,000 new beds were added to the provincial hospital system. In addition, over 5,000 are in various stages of planning and construction.

As has been provided under the supplementary estimates to be approved at this session, the province will make a payment of $75 per bed to all public general hospitals in the province for retiring debt or for some capital acquisition or improvement. In addition to this, a number of hospitals which have pressing debt problems will receive a special grant-in-aid.

The Beck memorial sanatorium property in London has been purchased by the government as a centre for examining retarded and emotionally disturbed children, and recommending the correct care and treatment for them. Facilities will be provided for both out-patient and in-patient services. At Cedar Springs, the building schedule of the hospital school has been accelerated and it is expected that 600 beds—half of the total planned accommodation—will be available by the autumn of 1960.

In order that the full benefit of our medical services may be made available to curable cases of mental illness, persons who are merely aged or in need of custodial care only, are gradually being removed from active treatment hospitals to cottage-type quarters or infirmaries where they will be comfortable and well cared for in home-like surroundings. Sites for 3 such buildings have been selected in Goderich, Palmerston and Owen Sound. Plans for these facilities are well underway and it is expected building will commence this summer.

Since the last session of the Legislature, 500 beds have been added to alleviate crowded conditions in Ontario Hospitals. For the coming year, the approval of hon. members will be asked for a further acceleration in this building programme to include a 600-bed unit at London and a 500-bed hospital school in northern Ontario.

Ontario's campaign against mental illness involves a general reorganization of medical and treatment services including out-patient, day-care and rehabilitation programmes. New emphasis is being placed upon treatment rather than custodial care, so that the patient may return as soon as possible to his normal environment within the community. Therapeutic treatment has proved so successful that plans are being prepared for an extension of rehabilitation services in the coming year. A site has now been selected for the new psychiatric hospital and psychiatric institute in Toronto.

As a result of investigations carried on in Ontario, we have recently introduced a policy of tuberculin testing to supplement our mass X-ray surveys. Experience in special chest clinics will indicate whether or not this departure will ultimately control and perhaps eradicate tuberculosis in this province.

The province is co-operating with the federal government in providing treatment for less fortunate persons from other countries who suffer from tuberculosis. Ontario will continue to accept at least one-third of any refugee patients admitted to Canada.

Steps are being taken to assess and control radiation. While at present total radiation is far below any health hazard level, measures have been adopted to reduce exposure to a minimum. A start has been made on the construction of a radiation hazard control laboratory.

The province is pursuing a vigorous policy to increase nursing personnel. A pilot two-year course for registered nurses is being introduced. In addition, the certified nursing assistants' course will be further expanded. If enrolment warrants it, 4 new centres will be opened this year.

It is our intention to double the number of graduates of this course from 600 to 1,200 per year. When circumstances permit, training courses will be introduced in all Ontario Hospitals, and public hospitals will also be encouraged to conduct them.

This year the government will introduce a new programme to encourage physical fitness. We recognize that the future of our province lies in the health and physical well-being of our people. No matter to what height of industrial or economic growth we may aspire, we shall never be genuinely prosperous if our people are not healthy and vigorous. Believing that such a programme must be widely based, the co-operation of our schools, athletic organizations and all other interested groups is being sought.

To finance the cost of this varied health programme, the appropriation of The Department of Health is being increased by $11 million to $88.1 million.

WELFARE

Constant attention is being paid to improve our present welfare services. During the past year, several advances have again been made both in the development of new services and in the refinement of existing programmes. A good illustration is the result that has been achieved in creating alternative types of care and maintenance for persons who occupy hospital beds but do not require active hospital treatment.

Much emphasis has been placed on the construction of modern homes for the aged, particularly on the development of bed-care facilities for elderly persons in need of a measure of nursing care.

During the past decade, more than 40 new homes have been constructed, while improvements to the facilities of many others have been completed. In the past 5 years, more than $30 million has been spent on the construction of public and private homes for the aged, while new projects now underway will call for additional outlays of $15 million.

Provincial payments to municipalities and private organizations for the building and maintenance of homes for elderly persons—which in 1959-1960 amounted to $6.9 million—will be increased to $8.2 million in 1960-1961. In total, the province will make $16 million available in 1960-1961 in respect of homes for the aged, old age assistance, and other welfare measures for our senior citizens.

Child welfare is of continuing concern to the government. The new dental care plan for children under 16 of mothers receiving allowances under The Mothers' Allowances Act, which was instituted in January 1959 on an experimental basis, has proved very successful, and will be continued in the coming year. Approximately 20,000 children are eligible for dental treatment under the plan. In the field of adoption, every effort is made to find suitable homes for children placed under the care of children's aid societies in order to give them the security and affection that only a permanent home can supply.

In recent years, provincial services designed to assist the physically and mentally handicapped to become self-sustaining have been greatly expanded. It is gratifying to find that the majority of those who have completed training are now employed in useful occupations.

Under its general welfare assistance programme, the province reimburses the municipalities for 80 per cent. of their outlays on direct relief to unemployed workers in need. Reflecting the improved economic conditions in Ontario, the number of persons on relief rolls has shown an encouraging downward trend, decreasing from 55,625 in October 1958 to 52,731 in October 1959.

Under an agreement concluded with the federal government in 1952, welfare assistance to immigrants was limited to those who became indigent through accident or illness during their first year in Canada. A new agreement entered into in the current fiscal year greatly enlarges the scope of welfare assistance that can be provided for new arrivals. They are now eligible for welfare assistance on the same terms as other citizens.

The programme to serve the Indian population under The General Welfare Assistance Act is now being inaugurated, and should go far towards raising the standards of allowances and services to our Indian citizens.

As a result of population growth, more generous allowances and the expansion of services, our expenditures for welfare will reach the highest level in the province's history. The cost of these services in 1960-1961 will be raised by $3.8 million to $49.2 million.

WINTER WORKS PROGRAMME

Every attempt is being made by the government of Ontario to alleviate the distress caused by unemployment. Although the problem is not so urgent now as it was two years ago or even last year, the programme of winter work begun at that time is being continued. Following the pattern of last year, the federal government will contribute 50 per cent. and the provincial government 25 per cent. of the labour cost of work not normally undertaken between December 1 and April 30.

This programme is intended to provide jobs instead of direct relief during the winter months when unemployment reaches a peak. To the middle of February, 1960, more than 560 projects employing some 8,000 men had been approved by both governments. They will be undertaken in 157 jurisdictions, including municipalities, conservation authorities and counties. An appropriation of $3 million is being made for this purpose.

Another programme of winter construction, covering the period November 1, 1959, to May 31, 1960, has been undertaken by The Departments of Highways and Lands and Forests and the Ontario St. Lawrence development commission in conjunction with the federal government. Under this plan, camp grounds and picnic sites will be built at an estimated cost of $1.4 million. In addition, the roads-to-resources programme—a joint undertaking by the province and the federal government—generates winter employment since, whenever possible, work is carried out during the winter months.

HOUSING

The rate of housing construction in Ontario has slackened somewhat, but the totals of 54,158 housing units started and 54,281 units completed in 1959 were surpassed only in the record year, 1958. Moreover, the initial construction of an exceptionally large number of houses in November resulted in a large carry-over into 1960, which should help to maintain a better-than-average level of activity this year.

During 1959, the provincial government again participated with the federal and municipal governments in providing serviced lots to prospective builders and in erecting low-rental housing projects. By the end of 1959, the federal-provincial-municipal partnership had completed, or had received approval to proceed with, 59 rental housing schemes in 36 municipalities, and 51 land assembly projects. In addition, the partnership holds over 7,000 acres of land which will be used in the development of future projects.

The purchase of the 614-acre Borden farm in Nepean township in 1959 will aid future expansion in the Ottawa area. Last year also saw the start of construction in both the Kingston and London rental housing projects. Demolition is underway in the Windsor redevelopment area, and construction of 298 rental housing units will begin shortly. The new Hamilton and Sarnia housing projects have special units specifically set aside for elderly persons. Some $6.5 million is being placed in the 1960-1961 estimates to cover provincial participation in land assembly and rental housing projects.

HIGHWAYS AND ROADS

Our growing population and industry, combined with rising living standards, have provided the ingredients for an unprecedented rate of increase in both the number of passenger cars and commercial vehicles. The total number of motor vehicles in 1959 reached an estimated 1,975,900—we had thought that was going to be 2 million—an increase of 5.7 per cent. in the last year and 103.8 per cent. in the last 10 years.

Inescapably, there has been a continuing rise in the road space necessary to accommodate all these vehicles. And, since further expansion of population, living standards and industrial production is foreordained, plans must be made for the future.

During 1959-1960 the volume of highway and road construction in Ontario reached a new peak. In addition to the improvement in the King's highways and secondary highways, 334 miles of new highway were brought into operation, 425 miles of roads were reconstructed to modern standards, and 91 structures were completed. Three new sections of highway No. 401 were opened to traffic and, in addition to the 273 miles in operation at the end of 1959, further mileage was completed to the point where it will go into service in 1960.

Substantial progress was made on the trans-Canada highway. The last remaining gap between Agawa River, north of Sault Ste. Marie, and White River is scheduled for opening in the autumn of 1960.

Continued improvement of the Queen Elizabeth Way and the extension of highway No. 400 from Crown Hill, near Barrie, to connect with the trans-Canada highway at Coldwater has provided better access to northern Ontario.

Ontario's total expenditures on highways and roads, in the current fiscal year 1959-1960, amounted to $253.3 million, of which $74.4 million was for maintenance (excluding $15 million appropriated for highway construction account) and $178.9 million was for capital. Provincial road subsidies to the municipalities and unincorporated townships in northern Ontario, which are included in the foregoing, totalled $64.8 million, of which $39.6 million was for new construction.

Taking into account the amounts that the municipalities themselves will spend, the total outlay for highways and roads in the province this year, 1959-1960, is $318 million.

The 1960-1961 budget provides for the continuance of the province's long-term plan for highway improvement and modernization. Following preliminary testing in the current fiscal year, the new programme provides for the commencement of construction on the new high-level bridge over the Welland canal at Homer, near St. Catharines, on the Queen Elizabeth Way, and also for a start on the Chedoke expressway. In addition, work on highway No. 401 will be continued in order to complete this major traffic route by 1963. Work on the highway connecting Fort Frances and Atikokan will be continued, while that of widening the Toronto by-pass—highway No. 401—to 6 lanes from Yonge Street westerly will commence.

To finance the 1960-1961 highway and road programme, we are providing appropriations totalling $251.5 million. This is approximately the same level of expenditure as was made in this current fiscal year 1959-1960. Of this amount, $75.5 million will be for maintenance, including $44.8 million for King's highways and secondary highways, and $25.4 million for transfer to the municipalities for the maintenance of their roads.

A total of $176 million will be spent for new construction or capital purposes, including $126.2 million for King's highways and secondary highways, and $40.8 million for the municipalities to help finance the construction of their roads. The combined maintenance and capital expenditure on provincial highways will be $185.3 million, while that for municipalities will be $66.2 million. Inasmuch as the municipalities will approximately match the province's subsidies to them, the combined provincial and municipal road expenditure in the province, in the coming fiscal year 1960-1961, will total $318 million—about the same as that in the current fiscal year.

NATURAL RESOURCES

For the coming fiscal year, the conservation of our natural resources and the development of the industries based on them will require ordinary and capital expenditures totalling $46.5 million.

Agriculture

Ontario's farmers last year again achieved a new high in farm cash income. Gross value of production was equal to that of the previous year and the second highest on record.

However, the need for expanding our markets, both at home and abroad, continues to be of paramount importance. This has been long recognized by our support of organized marketing plans, and recently by the creation of the agricultural marketing inquiry committee and the formulation of a plan to establish a research foundation at the Ontario agricultural college. This foundation will co-ordinate all research in the province dealing with production and marketing, including merchandising, transportation, packaging, storing, handling, quality control, pricing, family farming and vertical integration.

Approximately half of our farm cash income is channelled through the existing 13 organized marketing plans which have been brought into existence by co-operation between the government and producers.

Brucellosis eradication—essential to our multi-million dollar exports of cattle to the United States—has made substantial progress during the past year. If the present rate of testing is maintained, over 30 counties should have reached the status of a brucellosis-free area by the end of the fiscal year 1960-1961.

A co-ordinated programme for the agricultural development of northern Ontario is planned, involving various government departments. Lands suitable for farming will be made available as demand arises, while unsuitable lands will be gradually diverted to other uses. The government continues to aid northern farmers through assistance for farm water supply, land clearance, veterinary services, and other purposes and by means of a number of special freight subsidies.

The Hydro-Electric Power Commission of Ontario added approximately 1,000 miles of distribution line to its power facilities during the past year. Some 22,900 new customers brought the total number of users in the rural areas of the province to 495,500 (including 142,200 farm customers) an increase of 166 per cent. over that in 1950.

With the assistance of the Ontario telephone authority, further progress was made in the modernization of rural telecommunications. At the end of 1959, 43 dial exchanges were in operation in rural Ontario, of which 10 were located in northern Ontario.

To avoid duplication with the new farm credit corporation of the government of Canada, the Ontario junior farmer loan programme is being discontinued. Although a number of loans are still being processed, no applications for new loans have been accepted since January 12. Since the inception of the Ontario plan in 1952, some 3,900 loans, totalling $29 million, have been made to young Ontario farmers.

As part of the major construction programme proceeding at the Ontario agricultural college and the Ontario veterinary college, 3 large new buildings were opened in 1959, bringing to 11 the number of projects completed in the expansion plan initiated in 1952. In the past 8 years, the government has spent $12.6 million in new construction and equipment for these institutions. Ordinary expenditure next year, for the agricultural colleges and allied institutions, will be increased by $500,000 to $8.5 million.

This brief summary of our agricultural programme is by no means exhaustive. Many new developments are in prospect, including a study into the feasibility of public crop insurance. These, and other plans and activities, demonstrate the government's determination to continue strengthening the position of agriculture, which plays such a vital part in Ontario's expanding economy. The appropriation for agriculture in 1960-1961 will be $16.2 million—an increase of $800,000.

Mining

The spectacular expansion of Ontario's mineral industry since the end of World War II was continued in 1959. Owing largely to an increase in uranium output, the new record value of production of $962.8 million exceeded the previous year's by $173.2 million—the largest increase ever recorded.

New exploration and developments are encouraged and facilitated through the government's geological programme. While a number of field parties are engaged in various surveys, geologists stationed in the main mining areas of the province distribute information regarding prospecting activities, geological conditions, and surface and underground explorations.

In addition, a large airborne geophysical survey, covering an area of 64,000 square miles in mineral-rich northwestern Ontario, is being carried out. Aerial photography, supplemented by field work, has contributed much to the expansion of this industry, and even greater results lie ahead.

Another important programme is the building of access roads into areas where the presence of significant mineral deposits has been established. Well over 200 miles of such roads are now under construction.

During 1959, a special committee was instructed to make a complete review of the laws of Ontario and other jurisdictions governing the use of public lands for mining and other purposes. Hearings have been held throughout the province and briefs presented.

The total amount to be spent on various mining surveys and projects next year is $3.2 million, including $1.5 million for mining and community access roads. In addition, special payments to mining municipalities will total $5.3 million as compared with $3.2 million this year.

Forestry

The output of Ontario's woods operations in 1959 is estimated to be 12 per cent. over that of the previous year. Of our forest-based industries, sawmills recorded a gain of 9 per cent. in their output of sawn lumber in 1959, while the pulp and paper industry reached a new record value of production estimated at $462 million, $12 million higher than in 1958. The volume of 1.5 million tons turned out by the province's newsprint mill represented an all-time high.

The re-survey of our forest resources in association with new inventory and regeneration techniques has been instrumental in promoting growth and improved forest management. Under the provisions of the second 10-year plan, 9 million acres were surveyed in 1959. Regeneration has also been facilitated by the enormous expansion in our nursery operations. Seedling production for 1959-1960 was approximately 53 million trees, and for the coming year an even higher output is envisaged.

Unceasing vigilance in our forest protection organization makes for minimum waste from fire, insect infestation and disease. Loss from forest fires was at an all-time low in 1959. Aerial water-dropping has become standard procedure in extinguishing fires. Research for further improvements and refinements is continuing. Insect surveys and tree disease studies contribute to the maintenance of healthy forest stands.

The intergovernmental roads-to-resources programme will be an important stimulant to the development of forest and mineral resources in northern Ontario. The federal-provincial agreement, which was signed in December, 1959 calls for an expenditure, by March 31, 1967 of $15 million. The federal government will pay 50 per cent. except in some cases where private companies will also share in the costs. The projects which have so far been agreed upon cover a total of about 335 miles, of which the major part is now under construction.

The appropriation for The Department of Lands and Forests next year is $24.4 million, including $8.2 million for forest protection, $7.1 million for timber management and reforestation, $4.4 million for fish and wildlife, and $3.3 million for parks development.

Conservation

During the past year, 1959-1960, three new conservation authorities were established in Ontario, bringing the present total to 27. In addition, the municipalities of the Nottawasaga valley have voted to set up an authority which will come into operation as soon as its boundaries are determined.

The construction of several major flood control projects is awaiting a favourable decision from the federal government to match the Ontario government's 37.5 per cent. contribution to financing. The largest proposal of all, estimated to cost over $34 million, is that of the Metropolitan Toronto and region authority, which has just been approved by the Ontario government.

Work on smaller flood control and water conservation schemes, which has increased markedly since the province 5 years ago raised its participation in such projects from 37.5 per cent. to 50 per cent., continued in 1959. Projects completed last year embraced channel improvements on the Speed river and the Etobicoke creek, flood control measures on the Humber—including the construction of the Albion Hills dam—and erosion control schemes and dam improvements on other rivers. The total investment represented by all construction projects completed, underway or planned, now aggregates $135.5 million.

Over 4,000 acres of land were purchased for authority forests, and over one million trees were planted, with authority assistance, by private landowners last year as part of the reforestation programme. Provincial subsidies and engineering assistance aided in the construction of more than 300 farm ponds.

The development of conservation areas has become an increasingly important aspect of the work of the authorities. These areas may be used for the demonstration of special conservation measures and, where suitable, may be developed as parklands and provided with recreational facilities. In 1959, there was a sharp increase in both the acreage acquired for conservation areas, including parkland, and the number of special conservation projects undertaken on new and established areas.

In the 1960-1961 appropriations of the various departments concerned, the sum of $34 million has been set aside for works and services in connection with conservation projects.

PROVINCIAL PARKS

The growing preference of Ontario's people for outdoor activities underlines the importance of adequate park and recreational facilities. To provide for these needs, the Ontario government initiated the "parks for the people" policy which has already brought about a striking increase and improvement in provincial park areas and facilities.

This year, areas will be designated to be used for the purposes outlined in the wilderness areas legislation passed at the last session of the Legislature. Certain areas of Crown lands—all under 640 acres—will be reserved, under this Act, for their historic, scientific and aesthetic value. At present, about 70 such areas are being examined for this purpose.

After making allowance for the release last year of a number of small parks to The Department of Highways for development as roadside parks, the total number of parks administered by The Department of Lands and Forests stood at 64 at the end of 1959. This year, 10 new parks will be opened, while another 8 properties are being investigated for future development. The 3,350-acre Lake Nipigon park near Geraldton, the 2,300-acre Killbear park at Parry Sound and the 300-acre Darlington park in Durham county, are the 3 largest parks scheduled to be opened in 1960.

In addition, Five Mile Lake park near Chapleau, Turkey Point park and several others will be opened.

Earl Rowe park, which was officially opened a few months ago, will be available for public use this year, while facilities will be improved at the Lake Superior park areas as well as at Wasaga Beach provincial park.

About 8 million visitors, and 500,000 campers, enjoyed the province's park facilities last year. Wilderness camping continues to increase in popularity—a trend particularly evident at Algonquin and Quetico provincial parks. During the past 3 years alone, the number of motor vehicles entering provincial parks has more than doubled. Slight increases in entrance and camping fees have been proposed, in the expectation that this upward revision, together with revenue from concessions, will bring the parks reasonably close to meeting their maintenance expenses.

The Ontario-St. Lawrence development commission's programme of parks and historic sites, along 170 miles of the St. Lawrence River and the Bay of Quinte, made notable progress in 1959. Every attempt is being made to make the full system of 15 parks available for public use in 1961. Last year, 6 new parks were opened, bringing the total now in operation to 9. The Niagara Parks commission is continuing its programme of improved park accommodation. During the coming year, Oak Hall park will be open for public use and additional facilities will be provided at Hogg Island park. Conservation authorities have developed 76 conservation areas embracing over 23,930 acres; 45 of these areas include designated park grounds covering a total of 3,314 acres.

The appropriation for our parks programme in 1960-1961 will amount to $5.1 million.

PROVINCIAL ASSISTANCE FOR WATER AND SEWAGE WORKS

The problems of providing an ample supply of water for Ontario's growing industrial and domestic markets, and the abatement of pollution, continue to be vigorously tackled by the Ontario water resources commission. During 1959, 19 new joint Ontario water resources commission-municipal projects were completed and opened. These comprised 12 water works systems and 7 sewage works.

The estimated cost of these new plants, $5.3 million, raised the total value of all such projects undertaken by the commission, in the short space of only two years, to almost $12 million.

Moreover, since the end of 1959—that is, in the last two months—7 new sewage projects and 3 water works systems, estimated at $8.7 million, have been placed in operation, bringing the total estimated value of plants, now being operated by the Ontario water resources commission, to almost $21 million.

This includes no less than 28 water works systems and 19 sewage works located within 41 municipalities. Still being constructed under Ontario water resources commission-municipal agreements are projects valued at more than $20 million and numerous others are approaching the agreement stage.

The practical results of the commission's activities are becoming increasingly evident and gratifying. The opening of major sewage treatment plants at Port Arthur, Brantford, Kitchener, Brampton, Trenton and Huntsville has already done much to clean up the receiving streams concerned. For instance, Brantford and Kitchener are on the oft-maligned Grand River, where through joint Ontario water resources commission-municipal efforts, excellent progress is being made in abating pollution.

Similarly, the opening of water and sewage projects throughout other sections of the province has provided relief and improved sanitation on a smaller, but nonetheless significant, scale to the residents of the municipalities concerned.

The usefulness of water resources and stream pollution surveys, which the commission continues to conduct on an area basis, has already been proven. Recent releases included reports on water supply and pollution conditions in Essex and Elgin, district surveys on the Lakehead water resources and water pollution in the Kingston area. A water resources survey of Welland county has also been completed, and other studies of similar areas are in progress.

To support the many activities of the commission, the province provided $1.2 million for operating expenses, and $14.5 million for capital purposes in 1959-1960. The appropriations for 1960-1961 will be $1.6 million for operation and $30 for capital construction.

In accordance with the government's desire to bring about co-ordination of municipal policies, the Ontario water resources commission, now under The Department of Public Works, will be placed under The Department of Municipal Affairs.

THE PROVINCIAL-MUNICIPAL PARTNERSHIP

I wish now to say a few words about our provincial-municipal partnership. I think it can be said without contradiction that we have been fully cognizant of the financial impact of growth upon our municipalities, and that—in spite of our own burdens, which have multiplied many times—we have brought into operation in the last decade and a half, a provincial-municipal partnership that has been little short of a revelation.

Commencing in 1945, and in every year throughout the postwar period, the province has steadily expanded its aid to municipalities and associated agencies to assist them in carrying out their important responsibilities. Prior to 1945, the province's contribution to municipalities, school boards and other local agencies amounted to about $21 million a year. In the current fiscal year, we are supporting local services to the extent of $314.9 million, and in the coming fiscal year we will provide a further increase of $27.8 million, raising the level of our assistance to $342.7 million.

This is a 16-fold increase in the last 17 years—one that is made even more notable by the fact that the province's own direct expenditures on services have increased in that period by only 6 times. In other words, we have stepped up our assistance to local services at more than double the rate of increase in the province's disbursements on functions which come under its own direction.

That we have not been unmindful of the needs of our municipalities may be illustrated in another way. In 1943-1944, 19 per cent. of the province's total expenditures were in support of local services. Today, over 38 per cent. of our budget is being allocated for this purpose.

In terms of provincial revenue, the magnitude of our contribution is even more impressive. In 1943-1944, our municipal aid programme absorbed less than 18 per cent. of our revenue; now the proportion is 45 per cent.

Not only has our assistance enable services to be expanded, but it has also strengthened local institutions, and made it possible for them to undertake major developments without having to impose an unreasonable burden of taxation on their residents.

The benefit to ratepayers of the province's contribution to local authorities is made evident in a number of ways. For every $100 that the municipalities raise in taxation, the province is now contributing towards the support of local services $60 as against only $19 in 1943.

Consider this, too: while our assistance for local services has increased 16-fold since 1943, the level of municipal taxation has advanced only 5-fold.

In other words, the ratepayers today are paying a much lower proportion of the cost of local services than they were 17 years ago. At that time, 73 per cent. of combined municipal and school board expenditures for general purposes and debt charges were met out of municipal taxation. Owing to provincial assistance, the proportion of such local services, financed by local taxation, has been reduced to 58 per cent.

These illustrations demonstrate that, despite the rise in local tax levies and debt, the province has assumed a much larger share of the municipal burden than at any previous time.

The increased assistance provided by the province has been especially large in those fields where the demands have been greatest, namely, education and roads. Yet we have made important revisions in various other ways.

In 1950, the Ontario municipal improvement corporation was established to make capital funds available to municipalities. In 1952, legislation was enacted to provide payment to municipalities in lieu of taxes on certain government and public utility properties. In 1954, we pioneered a plan of unconditional grants to all municipalities. In 1956, the Ontario water resources commission was set up to provide water and sewage works. Last year, we introduced a new programme to relieve the municipalities of the burden of hospital deficits and the cost of hospitalized indigents.

Over the years, a completely new system of grants to mining municipalities has also been developed.

All these new methods of assisting the municipalities have been brought into operation without any sacrifice of the established system of conditional grants for education, health, welfare and roads. On the contrary, grants for these purposes have been increased to levels that were undreamed of only a few years ago.

To illustrate: in the field of elementary and secondary education, we have stepped up our legislative grants, and other forms of assistance to school boards, by 20-fold in just over a decade and a half, from $8.4 million in 1943-1944 to $170.4 million in the coming fiscal year.

Our appropriation for next year alone will be $20 million more than we authorized at last year's session. We have accelerated our subsidies to municipalities for the construction and maintenance of roads. Next year our grants will total $66.2 million, some $2.8 million over this year's appropriation and nearly double that provided just 5 years ago.

In addition to increasing its grants, the province has assisted the municipalities by assuming the responsibility for many miles of roads which were formerly under municipal jurisdiction, and by constructing and maintaining major access roads and by-passes of direct benefit to urban municipalities.

Next year, our unconditional grants to municipalities will total $26.7 million, an increase of $2.7 million over the estimated payment of $24 million in 1959-1960. These grants include the unconditional payments introduced last year to compensate municipalities for their greatly reduced responsibilities for hospitalized indigents. In effect, as the result of the introduction of the hospital insurance plan and the new arrangement respecting hospital indigents, the municipalities have been relieved of expenditures formerly amounting to nearly $12 million per annum.

We are again making an important revision in our special payments to mining municipalities, which will raise our grants in the coming fiscal year to nearly $5.3 million, an increase of $2 million over that provided in the current fiscal year.

Despite this unprecedented programme of provincial assistance, municipal taxes and debts have been rising. Contributing to this upward trend has been an increase in municipal spending for ordinary and capital purposes far in excess of anything that has occurred in the past. In the last year or two, the annual increase in the budgets of all Ontario municipalities and school boards, exclusive of capital outlays, has totalled $100 million, well above the growth of revenue from increased real property assessment and provincial assistance. The outcome has been higher local taxes.

It is recognized that the municipalities, as the province, are confronted with heavy demands for education and other services. But the very pressing nature of these requirements suggests caution. We believe that the municipalities should undertake a conscientious examination of all phases of their expenditures, with a view to relating them to the growth in their real property assessment and the provincial assistance programme.

FEDERAL-PROVINCIAL RELATIONS

Our tax-sharing arrangement with the federal government is another matter which continues to occupy a central position in our fiscal and economic planning. Hon. members will recall that, last year, a series of studies was initiated on the subject of federal-provincial relations.

The committee of Treasurers and Ministers of Finance, which was established to direct this series of studies to be carried out by the federal-provincial committee on fiscal and economic matters, held two meetings, one in July and the other in October, 1959. The technical committee on fiscal and economic matters was asked to examine and prepare reports on such subjects as the Canadian tax structure, the division of public expenditure responsibilities, tax-sharing arrangements, fiscal-need formulae, conditional grants and shared-cost programmes, natural resource taxation, regional and national development needs, capital investment requirements and seasonal employment problems.

A number of reports were submitted to the Ministers' conference in October, and others involving long-term studies will be presented at a later date.

There are several of these matters to which I should like to refer. The first relates to federal-provincial conditional grants and shared-cost programmes. These arrangements, under which federal funds are made available on stipulated conditions, are needlessly complex, and create many administrative difficulties for the provinces which are time-consuming and costly. Often there are undue delays in reimbursement, with the result that the provinces are obliged to finance the federal share.

At the October meeting of the committee of Ministers, the report that had been prepared on this subject by Ontario received close attention, and efforts are now being made to work out more simplified arrangements and a formula for interim advances, which will relieve the provinces of financing the federal government's share.

Another matter, on which Ontario made strong representations, was that of the taxation of companies engaged in logging operations. Constitutionally, the forests are the responsibility of the provinces. The provinces provide, at heavy cost to themselves, extensive services for forest conservation, protection and regeneration, yet by far the largest proportion of taxation paid by such companies goes to the federal government. This is an anomaly and an injustice which we have sought to have rectified.

In collaboration with the government of British Columbia, Ontario prepared and submitted to the conference of Treasurers and Finance Ministers, last October, a brief urging the federal government to extend to all companies engaged in logging operations, as compensation for the depletion of resources, a special allowance similar to that granted to companies engaged in metal mining or extracting oil or natural gas.

Such an allowance would give recognition to the fact that, once timber stands are cut, a new crop cannot be harvested for a period of 70 years and, therefore, in effect, forest operations do involve depletion in a very real and practical sense to a government that requires funds to provide for the conservation and regeneration of these resources.

We will continue to work towards a more equitable and satisfactory system of taxation for our forest-based industries.

We also brought to the attention of the conference of Treasurers and Finance Ministers the inconsistencies and anomalies that exist in the application of federal and provincial sales taxes to operations carried on by Crown agencies. The present situation, under which the federal government claims immunity from provincial taxation for its Crown agencies, while Crown agencies of the provinces are subject to federal taxation, is illogical and unfair. The provinces are as supreme within their jurisdiction as is the federal government within its own.

Our position is simply this—if Crown agencies in the right of Canada are to be immune from provincial taxation, then Crown agencies in the right of the provinces should also be extended immunity from federal taxation. On the other hand, if provincial agencies are to be subject to federal taxation, it follows that Crown agencies in the right of Canada should be subject to provincial taxation. There can be no other solution.

Concerning the position of the Ontario government on tax-sharing arrangements, I can assure the hon. members of the House that there has been no change. We do not believe that the present distribution of the two major direct fields of taxation is just and equitable to this province, and we have never failed to stress the need for a revision of the existing arrangements.

No increase in these arrangements was obtained at the conference in October, but the federal government undertook to guarantee that the increase from 10 per cent. to 13 per cent. in the provincial share of the individual income tax obtained in 1958, would be paid in the remaining two years of the current agreements ending in 1962, and that a plenary conference of the Prime Ministers of the provinces and the government of Canada would be held this summer to discuss new arrangements.

Our position is that we are constitutionally entitled to an equal share of the major fields of direct taxation. Under the present fiscal arrangements, the tax abatements represent less than one-fifth of the combined federal-provincial corporation income tax, and less than one-seventh of the individual income tax.

We are not asking for half the revenue from these fields as is our right. However, we do maintain that the present allocation does not adequately reflect the special problems that exist in our rapidly expanding economy. The growth forces that impose such heavy demands upon the province also bear upon our municipalities. Their financial well-being is involved.

Hon. members may therefore be assured that at the forthcoming conference we will assert our claim to a just recognition of our rights and our needs.

In conclusion, Mr. Speaker, I would like to say that, in this budget presentation, I have endeavoured to give an account of our stewardship of the province's affairs, and to outline our proposed programme for the coming fiscal year. We have endeavoured to solve problems of growth and development in a sensible, constructive and progressive way.

In the short space of a decade and a half, we have overcome difficulties such as the doubling of our school and university population and the trebling of our motor vehicle registrations—problems with which no other government has had to deal. We have moved forward vigorously and imaginatively in accordance with the wishes and needs of our people. We have not been content to stand still. We have pioneered many new betterments, such as hospital insurance and unconditional grants to municipalities. Ours has been a policy of reform and expansion predicated on economy and sound management.

Our population continues to grow rapidly. As I pointed out earlier, the number of births in Ontario is now double that at the end of World War II. When the large number of children born during the past 15 years start reaching marriageable age, we may anticipate another period of explosive population growth.

If present trends continue, at the end of 1970 there will be 1.7 million more people, and a half a million more motor vehicle registrations, in Ontario. This spells more schools, universities, hospitals, water works, sewage treatment plants, electric power, highways and roads.

No one can foresee precisely the dimensions of our public capital requirements, but we know they will be formidable. We are strengthening our government departments and various commissions to provide economy and efficiency.

As not the least of our problems will be finding the money to finance our essential undertakings, a sound fiscal system, that will contribute to the development of our province and the well-being of our people, is of paramount importance.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before proceeding with the next order of business, I should like to carry out my undertaking to the House the other day and table a copy of a formal order-in-council in relation to the inquiry into the Sarnia land matter.

Mr. Speaker, after that magnificent speech, we would like to proceed with the matters relating to the betterment and strengthening of the organization of government.

ON GORDON COMMITTEE REPORT

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, yesterday, as we know, was a beautiful day with bright sunshine. I have not been outside today but I am told it is snowy and freezing, a fitting commentary on the budget we have just had presented to us.

Hon. Mr. Frost: A black day for the Opposition.

Mr. Bryden: However, that is a matter for another debate at another time.

I now rise to complete my remarks in the debate on the Gordon committee report. I started these remarks on February 1, so I believe that this was the longest speech that I have ever made.

I would like, in the time available, to consider some aspects of this matter which are only of secondary significance as far as the report itself is concerned.

The Gordon committee, because of its terms of reference, quite naturally concentrated its attention on the organization of the government and the procedures to control activities within the government.

But there is another phase of this problem, and an even more important one, and that is the matter with which I wish to deal at this time.

In introducing my remarks I would like to mention that when the Gordon committee was in session, I had the honour and privilege to present to it a brief on behalf of the Ontario CCF, and in introducing the question that I now wish to discuss, I would like to read some paragraphs from this brief:

The increase in the complexity of government administration in Ontario, as in other jurisdictions, is essentially a reflection of an increase in the complexity of our society as a whole. For that reason, it is idle to condemn the trend as such unless we are prepared to advocate a reversion to a less developed type of society.

At the same time any thinking person, who is interested in the preservation and extension of democratic government, is naturally concerned that the inevitable extension of government activity should not militate against democratic control, protection of the rights of the individual, and administrative efficiency.

In our opinion, the problem is much broader than merely providing specific safeguards against abuse of power or inefficiency in specific areas. These are important, but the ultimate safeguard is full accountability to the public through the Legislature.

It is our contention that the development of the Legislature's machinery of supervision and control in Ontario has not kept pace with the development of government administration. Until that defect is remedied, all the specific safeguards in the world will not solve the essential problems.

This is the subject, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to discuss for a little while. I do not believe that there could possibly be any more important subject. The hon. Prime Minister earlier in this session made reference to the fact that one of the great problems under the British system of government is the tendency to concentrate power in the hands of the executive. Though I believe that the British system of government has advantages over any other system of government, I agree with the hon. Prime Minister that that is a major problem, and one to which we should be giving major attention.

The key, to at least commencing the solution to this problem, is, I believe, to adopt procedures and practices, and build upon those already existing, which give greater opportunities to the private hon. members—and particularly to the private hon. members on the Opposition side of the House—to review and inquire into government activity.

After all, under the British system of government the Opposition has just as important a role to play as the government.

The whole essence of the system is that the government presents programmes, has them adopted and carries them out; but the Opposition inquires into its activities, criticizes them where necessary, proposes alternatives, and does whatever it can by constructive criticism to improve the performance of the government.

I submit that it is impossible for an Opposition to carry out that integral function successfully unless it has adequate facilities at its disposal and adequate sources of information.

That is one of the great problems in this assembly, and I do not say that this assembly is different from most assemblies. It is a problem that all parliamentary assemblies have to face up to.

The hon. Prime Minister suggested that the committee system is the answer to the problem. Well, I certainly believe that it is part of the answer. I am glad to see that there have been some modest reforms in this House's committee system introduced in this session. Committees give hon. members, both on the government side and the Opposition side, an opportunity to acquire information and to specialize in certain subjects.

I believe, myself, that our committees should be smaller in size and perhaps fewer in number, because the whole point—or at least a major point—of committees is to give the member a chance to specialize.

If he has to serve on about a dozen different committees he has not much opportunity for specialization. However, that is a relatively small point.

I would now like to refer in particular to one of the committees which is, in my opinion, one of the key committees in the whole process of establishing accountability, and that is the committee on public accounts.

Now, the hon. Prime Minister informed us in this House not long ago that he was introducing one of his great new reforms. As a matter of fact, I expect at almost any time to hear him say, when he blows his nose, that this is the first time this has ever been done in the history of the world.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Shame, shame.

Mr. Bryden: Well, that is the hon. Prime Minister's normal attitude. He told us on the matter of the committee on public accounts—

Hon. Mr. Frost: What is he talking about now?

Mr. Bryden: I am making some kindly references to some remarks the hon. Prime Minister made earlier in the session. He told us, in proposing a motion to ask the committee on public accounts—or to authorize it to inquire into the accounts of the province—that this was some great new thing. It represented some special generosity, at least as I understood him, on the part of the government which was being extended to the hon. members of the Opposition and other hon. members of the House.

This appears to me to be a most remarkable statement, Mr. Speaker.

It was my impression that this House, in the past number of years, has been peculiar among British parliamentary assemblies in that it did not have a public accounts committee which acted in that manner. I must say that I have not checked procedures in all the parliamentary assemblies there are in the world, or even in many of them. It was always my impression, however, that the role of the public accounts committee was to do the very thing that the hon. Prime Minister told us that our committee this year would be allowed to do by some special indulgence on the part of the government.

I was rather interested, in thumbing through this excellent book Parliamentary Procedure in Ontario the other day, to come across a passage on page 75 which says:

The public accounts of the province, being the printed report of the receipts and expenditures of the government for the immediately past fiscal year, are referred to the committee on public accounts, after being tabled in the House, and any member of the committee is at liberty to have an item in the accounts inquired into by the committee and to have witnesses called for the purpose.

This is a privilege of which the members of the Opposition take most advantage, as it affords an opportunity to turn a searchlight of public inquiry on to the activities of the government.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite clear, from our authoritative work on procedure in Ontario, that the procedure which the hon. Prime Minister was proposing as some special indulgence of the government, is the procedure that should have been carried on all these years. Finally we are getting at least a start this year on doing what should have been done all along.

I really do not believe—although I know this government is desperately searching for credit—in giving them credit for commencing to do something that they should have been doing for the past 15 years but were not.

Hon. Mr. Dymond: How does the hon. member think we have carried on without him all this time?

Mr. Bryden: Well, the hon. Minister of Health will be happy to know that I am here now.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): What is the hon. Minister so touchy about?

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): The hon. Minister is being very impolite because we listened to him with a great deal of attention when he spoke. We would like that same privilege.

Mr. Bryden: However, this dispensation or indulgence which has been granted to us appears to have a very definite limit. We have been told that the government record is an open book for anybody to inquire into, but when we start trying to inquire into it, we find very quickly that stumbling blocks get in our way.

In the specific case of the public accounts committee—and this is a committee that has not met for 15 years—it is rather difficult for it to operate when there is all this long period when there was no satisfactory inquiry. I would not suggest that, because of that, the committee should now try to rectify the errors of the past and try to do 15 years' work in one year. That obviously would be quite unreasonable.

I think it is reasonable, in the main, to suggest to the committee that it should confine its activities to the year to which the accounts relate. That is reasonable as a general rule.

But surely, Mr. Speaker, it is also reasonable to accept the proposition that some matters will come up—especially when the committee has not met for a great many years—which require inquiry back beyond the fiscal year under review. As a matter of fact, I believe that is a proposition that is usually accepted.

Naturally, reasonable discretion has to be exercised in such matters. But surely there are times when it is necessary, if a committee is to do a proper job, that it inquire back beyond the accounts of the current year. If that was not accepted as a principle, then it would follow that any malpractice, if it can escape detection for a year, will escape detection for ever, and I do not think that anybody would subscribe to that proposition.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The only trouble is the hon. member does not listen. It was all made plain to him.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister just wants to keep it hidden.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Not at all.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, we went into the public accounts committee which has started operating this year, and I commend the chairman of the committee. He is not here, but I think he is doing an honest and fair job in a very difficult situation. But we went into the public accounts committee and indicated that, on the specific matter of one agency—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say to the hon. member that the public accounts committee could always have been called on the motion of any Opposition hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister was not here.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is all there was to it.

Mr. Bryden: When the hon. Prime Minister was not here, I called the attention of the Legislature to page 75 of Parliamentary Procedure in Ontario, which does not imply that at all. I would accept that, when the committee was not operating, there was perhaps some responsibility on the part of Opposition hon. members of the day to complain about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure there was.

Mr. Bryden: Let us remember, during the period concerned, the Opposition in most cases was numerically very small. The hon. members had a great deal of matters that they had to deal with, and the fact they did not deal with everything is surely understandable. Even though they had some responsibility—

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): I sat in this House at one time when there were a lot more CCF'ers than there are today, and at that time there was never any request whatsoever, to my knowledge.

Mr. Bryden: Well, let me continue. The fact remains that whatever criticism there may be applied to Opposition groups of the past, the government still cannot escape its responsibility for not having called this committee together. However, that is water under the bridge; I do not care to argue about the past.

I am just pointing out, Mr. Speaker, that there are matters that arise which reasonably require some inquiry beyond the period to which the account relates.

I was trying to state that, in the public accounts committee this year, Opposition hon. members raised a matter relating to a specific agency, namely, the Niagara parks commission, and asked that they be permitted to inquire into activities of that commission prior to the current year. The chairman ruled against them. I am not criticizing his ruling. I am no expert on procedure, but I have no doubt his ruling was technically a sound one and the only one he could make.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What is the hon. member kicking about then?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister will hear.

The chairman ruled that the committee could not assume unto itself such authority. It was bound by the motion referring matters to it.

So he suggested that any hon. member of the committee, or any other hon. member of the Legislature who believed that the committee's terms of references should be expanded in any particular, should bring a motion to this House to get the terms of reference expanded. This was also a reasonable proposition.

In the light of his suggestion, two motions were brought into this House, one by the Liberal hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) and one by the hon. leader of the CCF (Mr. MacDonald), asking that, with respect to this specific agency—not on everything and sundry but just on this specific agency—the terms of reference of the committee should be expanded.

So what happened to the resolutions? They have been buried on the order paper. Goodness knows when they will ever come up again. The committee at this moment is inquiring into this particular agency, and resolutions relating to its terms of reference on this matter lie buried on the order paper.

The government hon. members and any other hon. members have a perfect right to take whatever position they wish on the propriety of a resolution of that kind. They may conscientiously believe that it is not a sound resolution and that it should not be passed. That is their right.

I disagree with them, but they have a right to that view if that indeed is their view. But I do submit that they should be prepared to let the resolution come to a vote in this Legislature, and stand up and be counted for or against it.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear. If hon. members opposite have not anything to hide, do not hide it.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): When is the hon. member going to deal with the Gordon committee report?

Mr. Bryden: I am dealing with it. If the hon. Minister would listen to what I say, I indicated the relationship of this matter to the Gordon report, and I think it is integral to matters raised in the Gordon report.

At any rate, this policy of evasion of issues, Mr. Speaker, is not a proper way to treat this Legislature. When a serious motion on a matter of immediate importance is placed before the Legislature, I think it should be disposed of one way or the other.

There is another phase of the question of the activities of the Opposition and the facilities which they may use to do their job as effectively as they can. That is the matter of questions put by hon. members to the government.

It has always been a recognized procedure that hon. members can place questions on the order paper. In my opinion, it has been a recognized procedure that they can reasonably expect answers to those questions if they are in order.

But when, on February 15, I asked the hon. Prime Minister when we could expect a reply to the 39 questions that were then standing on the order paper, none of which had been answered, he told me, among other things, that, "There is not really any actual obligation to answer them at all."

The hon. Prime Minister went on to say that he would assure me that the government would try to answer them as soon as possible and "certainly before the termination of the session."

Now, I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Prime Minister has no authority, in any of the British parliamentary tradition, for his proposition that there is not really any obligation on the government to answer questions.

I would like to refer again to Parliamentary Procedure in Ontario, which gives in its index on page 363, quite a good outline of questions which do not have to be answered. It says the following:

1. A question must not contain statements which are debatable.

2. A question may not deal with a matter of government policy.

3. The government is not required to answer any questions relating to proceedings which take place in council.

4. The government is not obliged to answer questions which involve a declaration of policy.

That is really just a repeat of No. 2.

It is quite recognized that questions on the subjects indicated there are not appropriate or in order. No hon. member has a right to ask the government to make a statement of government policy until the government is ready to make it, nor has he a right to inquire into what happened in cabinet meetings, nor has he a right to use a question as a way of carrying on a debate. I would agree with those points.

But I submit, Mr. Speaker, that, subject to those limitations, any hon. member has a right to ask questions and to expect that his questions will be answered with all reasonable dispatch. I do not think that it is a proper attitude for the government to say, or the head of the government to say, that, "there is really no obligation on us to answer your questions; if we do so it will merely be a matter of indulgence on our part."

What happens to the whole principle of accountability by the government to the Legislature if the government takes that attitude? Is the government taking the position that it is accountable only on such matters as it sees fit to render an account, and on no other?

Yet the acquiring of information, the provision of information, is basic to the whole concept of accountability. It is impossible to hold the government accountable if the Legislature cannot get information. One of the devices for getting information is to ask questions.

As of right now, as of today's order paper, there are 45 questions standing on the order paper. One or two have been answered in part—not directly, but in statements that hon. Ministers have made in other contexts—but apart from that, not one question placed on the order paper in this session has been answered as yet.

I have not analyzed all these questions in detail, but my impression—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I may say it is snowing tonight, and I have to stay home, and I am going to work hard and see if I cannot get the answers for some of the questions tomorrow.

Mr. MacDonald: Would the hon. Prime Minister give us the ones he has been sitting on?

Mr. Bryden: I have not analyzed all the questions that are on the order paper, but my impression, from looking at them quickly is that all—or almost all—of them are quite in order. None of them violates any of the rules laid down in this book. They are all strictly factual—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: How about the Gordon report?

Mr. Bryden: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: How about the Gordon report?

Mr. MacDonald: This is part of it.

Mr. Bryden: This is a principle dealt with in the Gordon report, the old principle of accountability of the government to the Legislature, and I am dealing with some aspects of that question. I realize the government is not very interested in this basic principle of accountability, but nevertheless, unless you rule me out of order, Mr. Speaker, I plan to talk about it.

And I submit that the asking and answering of questions is basic.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: It is about time the hon. member knew that there has not been a question put on the order paper in sessions gone by, when he, as a defeated candidate was not here, that has not been answered by the government.

Mr. MacDonald: That is wrong, that is wrong.

Mr. Bryden: It is really of very little use, Mr. Speaker, to have a question answered in the dying days of the session. An hon. member wants to get information to guide his course of action while the Legislature is in session and in the dying days, when the point he wants to deal with could not possibly be raised anyway, he gets his answer.

We have questions here—I would like to refer to one. Naturally I am particularly interested in the questions that I put on the order paper myself. I would not have put them there if I had not been particularly interested in them. And here is one. It is

No. 7. I put it on the order paper on January 27, almost a month ago:

Inquiry of the hon. Minister—

1. Was any advertising placed in any foreign-language newspaper or newspapers published in Ontario, by or on behalf of any departments or agencies of the government, in either or both of the periods May 1 to June 15, 1958, and May 1 to June 15, 1959?

2. If so, what were the departments or agencies concerned, and what was the total cost of the advertising placed by or on behalf of each of them in each of the periods indicated?

Now I submit, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is a very fair question and I will try to get the answer.

Mr. Bryden: I am glad the hon. Prime Minister agrees it is a fair question, so that I do not have to prove it. It is like all the others, a very fair question. It merely asks for facts. It does not ask for any statement of government policy, just what has happened.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure.

Mr. Bryden: For over a month I have been waiting for an answer to this very fair and relatively simple question. I am asking for information which the government has within its possession, and as of this date it has failed to divulge that information.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: How about the Gordon report? I want to hear about that.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: He would like to have the government off welfare and everything else just to answer a lot of stupid questions.

Mr. Bryden: I will continue a little further with this question of accountability of the government to the Legislature, which is basic to everything within the Gordon report.

As I indicated, the Gordon report did not deal with that as its major responsibility, because its terms of reference gave it another major responsibility. But it certainly deals with this very basic matter.

I believe that it is a matter that is worthy of some debate in this Legislature.

I have given some indications of methods by which I believe accountability could be increased. I have given indications of limitations that are quite improperly placed by the government on the activities, on the facilities, of private hon. members, which makes it more difficult for them to perform their proper role. These, I believe, are all relevant.

Now I would like to refer to one other matter which was dealt with briefly by my hon. leader along this same line. That is the matter of services and facilities, not within the House but related to the House, for hon. members of the Opposition.

We have just had a budget presented to us which involved the expenditure of upwards of $1 billion. I do not criticize the level of expenditure, but it is quite a sizeable amount of money.

We have an Opposition group of 27 hon. members who are here to scrutinize the government's stewardship of that amount of close to $1 billion. They have behind them, to assist them, very limited services indeed. If one adds it all up, I think it now amounts to maybe $15,000 or $20,000 a year, which is spent on services to assist the Opposition hon. members in carrying out a function which is absolutely integral to the whole British system of government.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Did the hon. member ever look into the amount used or given in Saskatchewan? Would he be interested to know that the Opposition leader in Saskatchewan has an office containing 160 square feet? In this province here—

Mr. Bryden: Is this a question or a speech, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, might I just ask him if he knows that is the case?

Mr. Bryden: I am very familiar with Saskatchewan, and I would be glad to debate the record of the government of Saskatchewan with the hon. Prime Minister at any time, at any place. But, Mr. Speaker, I am now talking about the province of Ontario, not the province of Saskatchewan.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is a change. Mr. Speaker, might I ask the hon. member if he knows this, that when he talks of $15,000 or $20,000 here, does he know that the amount contributed to the Opposition in Saskatchewan is $253 a month? Does he know that?

Mr. Bryden: As I said, Mr. Speaker, I will be happy to talk about the record of Saskatchewan at any time the hon. Prime Minister wishes, but right now I am talking about the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would like the hon. member to discuss it now. That is when I wish he would do it.

Mr. Bryden: I realize the hon. Prime Minister would like any diversion from what I am talking about. But I insist on talking on what I choose to talk about, and that is the present situation in Ontario. I am not making any criticism, I am making a suggestion to the government. I think the government is to be commended for having provided $15,000 to $20,000 for services to Opposition hon. members, but that provides only a limited amount of service, and in relation to a budget of nearly $1 billion, it is a very limited amount indeed.

I have not figured out the percentage, but it is a mighty small percentage. It would be something like .0015 per cent., or something like that, of the total budget.

Now, on the other side of the chamber, the government which already has, of necessity, more hon. members, also has behind it all the resources of the public service. I quite recognize that public servants, as the name implies, are servants of the public, and if Opposition hon. members ask them for information they will likely get it—that is, unless it is a matter of government policy.

I would like to say that, in my relatively short term as a member of this Legislature, I have had occasion to deal with various officers of the public service, and I would like to say that I could not hope to find a better group of people to deal with. I believe they are intelligent, honest and fair-minded people.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is the hon. member referring to us here?

Mr. Bryden: I am referring to the people who suffer under this government.

Mr. MacDonald: They do suffer all right.

Mr. Bryden: But, the fact still remains that the excellent talents of these people are fundamentally available for the government. After all, the government is in charge, it instructs them in their duties. This is quite proper and I do not complain about the system. The government certainly has to have control of the public service if it is to accept responsibility for it, but that puts the government in a peculiarly advantageous position to use the services of this very large staff of trained people.

It seems to me only reasonable to suggest that some substantial amount of service should be also available, at public expense, to assist Opposition hon. members in carrying out their equally important role. When my hon. leader dealt with this question, he suggested some formula should be worked out. I am not particularly wedded to the formula he proposed, as over against any other—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: —and he is not either. He suggested that there should be a formula worked out, as a regular procedure, that an amount of money should be available of, say, $5,000 per Opposition hon. member, available to provide services—research services and that sort of thing—for Opposition hon. members to be spent as they direct, subject, of course, to proper control of expenditure.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): What about our hon. members?

Mr. Bryden: I believe that the hon. gentlemen opposite are not tongue-tied and can speak for themselves. If they believe there are services they should have, I would not speak against them.

Mr. Grossman: Multiply $5,000 by all the hon. members in the House.

Mr. Bryden: But I am talking now about the Opposition, which, I submit—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I ask my hon. friend this? Does he know that, if he were in a comparable position in Saskatchewan to the position he is here, he would get no office accommodation and no allowance whatever? Did he know that? That is the way things are done under a CCF government.

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): We are in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We give him accommodation—

Mr. Grossman: They do not need any accommodation in Saskatchewan. Everything is perfect—

Mr. Bryden: I readily recognize that when the hon. Prime Minister compares the overall record of his government in Ontario with the government in Saskatchewan he feels very ashamed, and therefore, he would want to quibble away about every little thing that is done in Saskatchewan.

I am still talking about the Legislature of Ontario, which is in an entirely different type of province. Saskatchewan is basically an agricultural province with a Legislature which has a much lighter load of business and a much smaller budget. We are talking about two totally different situations. We are now talking here about—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We have been listening to that for 5 years from his hon. leader. And that is a great admission to make.

Mr. MacDonald: And when this government makes any new move they copy them out there, too. Such as their pioneering—

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Prime Minister talks of his pioneering in health insurance. His definition of pioneering is to be 10 years behind somebody else.

An hon. member: His definition is to get the job done and that is what he did.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Why did they all come from Saskatchewan—why do they not go there?

Mr. Bryden: I have no idea what the hon. Minister is talking about, but if he is—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I want to know why the hon. member came from there to Ontario?

Mr. Bryden: Well, I will tell the hon. Minister where I came from. I was born in a county called Victoria, and I came from there.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. Minister not get the facts?

Mr. Bryden: When I left there at about 5 years of age, I believe the hon. member of the Legislature was a gentleman called Mr. Newman, a very fine gentleman.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): A Liberal?

Mr. Bryden: Yes, he was a Liberal. How the county of Victoria has deteriorated since I left it!

Mr. Speaker, I was talking about this question of services to the Opposition, which I submit is a very important matter, and it is in a special category, as compared to services for government hon. members. I am not suggesting they are not entitled to services too, but the Opposition, because of its special role in the British parliamentary system, as a critic of the government, has a particular need for services.

My hon. leader suggested a formula, that $5,000 per member be made available to provide services for the Opposition. He suggested, in the course of his remarks, that, assuming the Opposition to be the largest it could be while we still had a majority government, that formula would involve an expenditure of about $200,000.

Unfortunately, there was a certain amount of confusion about what he said, although I thought his words were quite clear, and I saw a headline in one newspaper that said—"Pay Opposition $200,000 CCF Asks Legislature", which was not what we had in mind. We are not asking that we, as members of the Legislature, should be receiving anything more than we are now getting. We are suggesting that services should be available to us.

Under the formula we propose, in this present Legislature, the actual expenditure of money would be about $135,000 out of a budget of almost $1 billion—

Mr. Grossman: That would not provide any services for us.

Mr. Bryden: I am talking about the Opposition and the special role it has to play.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member does not render the government accountable—

Mr. Bryden: I sometimes feel that hon. members opposite may have channels to the government that we lack, and I have to make my plea in this House. I am suggesting this in regard to services to Opposition hon. members. What other services may be fitting and proper is a matter than can no doubt be discussed but that is not what I am interested in now.

I am talking only about services to Opposition hon. members, and I am pointing out that the proposal that my hon. leader put forward would involve a payment, not to the Opposition hon. members personally, but for services on their behalf, of $135,000 out of a budget of nearly $1 billion. If that is an excessive expenditure for a role that is absolutely vital to parliamentary government, then good heavens, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Does any other province in this Dominion recognize third parties?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, they do not in Saskatchewan.

Mr. Bryden: I did not hear the hon. Minister's question, but if he is talking about other provinces, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I think we are the most generous province.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, in connection with the Opposition allowance, I have discussed this matter with the hon. leader of the Opposition, I have made arrangements that he would get exactly what he asked for.

Now as to accommodation—we have tried to give good accommodation, secretarial assistance and we have given to the hon. leader of the Opposition, as he will tell the hon. member, exactly what he has asked.

In addition to that, we treat the hon. members opposite more generously than any other province does. We give them office and secretarial assistance the year round. Now that is not done in any other place. I point out to my hon. friend, coming here and talking $500,000—

Mr. Bryden: Half a million? I was talking about $135,000.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We have to look at the value we receive for some of those things. That is the way we balance the budget.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we rendered the hon. Prime Minister accountable on a few points he was a little embarrassed about anyway.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, the hon. member does do that without all that money.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I realize that is why the hon. Prime Minister wants to hold back; he does not want us to be any more effective than we are now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Six thousand dollars' entertainment by Niagara parks—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: How would they treat us if they were over here and we were there?

Mr. Bryden: The hon. Minister will find that out after the next election. I can tell him it will be much more generously than they are treating us.

Could I possibly get back to what I was talking about? Every time an hon. member tries to raise any issue in this Legislature, the hon. Prime Minister wants to take him to Saskatchewan, and then on a tour of the country, and then possibly around the world. But we are in Ontario and dealing with Ontario, and what I am proposing is something that may not be done in other provinces, but all I say, Mr. Speaker, is: Why should not Ontario be a pioneer for once, instead of merely claiming it is a pioneer?

I submit that it is a reasonable proposal; it is one that ought to be seriously considered. However, that is up to the government to decide because they have the control of the funds, and if they want to leave us with inadequate facilities, I suppose they will do so.

I want to deal with one last matter, Mr. Speaker, and this applies not only to hon. members of the Opposition but to all private hon. members. The private hon. members on the government side of the House can perhaps deal with this matter for themselves.

I do not purport to speak for them. One of them has already mentioned it. But I would like to raise the question of office accommodation for members of the Legislature.

I do not wish to be interpreted as being critical of the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell). Certainly, when our group made certain representations to him, the hon. Minister did the best he could to get us facilities, and I believe we have come off a good deal better than the private hon. members on the government side.

Mr. Sopha: One room and a pipe.

Mr. Bryden: I do not know why they do not raise a row, but the fact remains that an hon. member of the Legislature needs a private office.

I am not saying a huge office with crocodile topped desks and plush carpets and so on, such as the hon. Ministers of the cabinet have, but an office that is private, that has a desk and a telephone, where the member can talk over matters that people come in to discuss with him—some of which are private—where he can dictate letters without interference, and where he can carry on his work without disturbance.

Surely that is a fair request, and surely it is time the government started to give some thought to making space available, reasonably convenient to this chamber, where members can have offices.

I know there is quite a demand by government departments for all the available office accommodation, and I am not trying to suggest that their demands are not important. Certainly, they need office accommodation, too, and it is important that they carry on their important duties.

But the question is this, Mr. Speaker: Does this Legislature count for anything in the process of governing this province or not? If it counts for something, then I think some priority should be given to providing members of the assembly with adequate facilities for carrying on their work.

My submission has been that, in this whole question of accountability which is one of the matters raised in the Gordon committee report, we have a long way to go in providing better machinery for accountability. I am not suggesting that it is a problem that is peculiar to Ontario, and I am not suggesting that I have all the answers to the problem.

But I have put forth certain criticisms of what happens at present, which in my opinion are entirely valid criticisms, and I have put forward some suggestions, which I submit are constructive suggestions, as to how we might at least make a start on solving this basic problem.

If we do not solve the problem of accountability, democratic government will not survive, so there can be no more important matter to be considered by this or any other assembly.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, I regret very much that the pressures of affairs required the hon. Prime Minister to depart before I could refer him to the fact of how depressed I am that, after listening to the compendious budget statement, it made no mention whatsoever to the $310,000 I asked for the other night. However, I am not going to let that stop me from persevering in the affairs of this assembly.

I move, sir, at the outset to say to the hon. member for Woodbine that he should be the last one to complain about the absence of research facilities. We in this party, I think, in contrast to the Treasury benches, are the only people who have no research facilities available to us whatever. They have departments of government on that side, particularly The Department of Economics which, no doubt, gives a good insight into the whole picture of the affairs of this province. Our hon. friends on our left have the resources of the trade unions at their disposal and all their research facilities.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, go away.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member certainly has some very misleading ideas. He does not know what he is talking about.

Mr. Sopha: Judging, Mr. Speaker, from the very subjects which the hon. member for Woodbine speaks upon, I have no doubt that they make very much use of them.

Mr. Bryden: I do all my own research, every bit of it.

Mr. Sopha: Now, Mr. Speaker, for a moment, and it will be a change, I assure you, sir, we may return to the Gordon report and get away from that far-flung mecca of the socialists, the great province of Saskatchewan.

In opening this debate the hon. Prime Minister said, when he tabled the Gordon committee report—and I am going to quote just one paragraph from page 18 of Hansard, January 27 of this year:

As is well known, I have felt that our parliamentary system was subject to a good deal of betterment. Perhaps one of the faults that has grown up in the parliamentary system is the concentration of power in the hands of the executive with too little opportunity of expression on the part of the membership of Parliament itself.

Now, Mr. Speaker, one could not hope to better those words when he describes the problem which we face, and the problem with which the Gordon committee sought to deal.

With the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren) I am struck with the fact that the Gordon committee does not really pretend—it was not intended to, I suppose—but it does not really pretend to go into the problems of government, the performance of the functions of administration and executive power in any great degree of detail.

That is why, I submit to you, sir, that it is exceedingly important that the hon. Prime Minister follow through in the way which he has indicated he intends to follow through, and that is to set up a select committee to examine this matter very, very intently.

Now, in measuring the hon. Prime Minister's words, it is fair, I think, Mr. Speaker, that one is entitled to see how the government puts into practice some of the things which the Gordon committee sets out.

Now, to refer briefly to the public accounts committee. If I recall correctly, sir—and I have not checked the reference—early in the session, when the hon. Prime Minister moved the motion that set up the various standing committees of the House, he hinted—I do not think he came out directly and said so, but in that charming habit of the hon. Prime Minister he hinted—that he was of a mind that an Opposition hon. member might be chairman of the public accounts committee.

Now, when that committee met and that hint of the hon. Prime Minister was referred to the hon. members then present, there were not among them a majority who were willing to crystallize the hint of the hon. Prime Minister and put it into effect and elect an Opposition hon. member to the chairmanship of that very valuable committee.

It is interesting to note what a writer on the British Constitution has to say about that very thing. I wish to quote you, Mr. Speaker, a paragraph from a book called Government by Committee, an essay on the British Constitution written by K. C. Wheare.

I understand, Mr. Speaker, that this book arrived in our library here, because when the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney) was acting as chairman of the select committee on labour relations, he had heard about it, or had read it, and he recommended that it be made available to the members of that committee.

I hope that gives it some background of respectability.

However, the learned author has this to say about the public accounts committee:

Party is not the only consideration which is taken into account in the choice of chairman. In the case of the public accounts committee, at least, it is understood that, not only should the chairman be a senior member of the Opposition party, but also, if possible, he should have some idea of the way in which government departments work on the financial side.

Often the chairmanship is taken nowadays by a member of the Opposition who held the office of financial secretary to the Treasury when his party was in power, but such a member is, of course, not always available—and I might say that might be underscored—he is not always available among our numbers over here, —nor is a rigid convention established on the point.

However, Mr. Speaker, that serves to delineate the principle which in this case, when the opportunity was at hand, was chosen not to be followed by the majority of that committee, who are, of course, government hon. members. And just let it be said in summary thereto that when it was suggested to those hon. members that they desist from the appointment of the chairman until the hon. Prime Minister could be contacted on the matter, they were disinclined to do so.

Now, to go on to another illustration of how this government puts into effect the principles which have been set out in the Gordon committee report, turn to The Ontario Energy Board Act, Mr. Speaker, which was introduced by the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) and which is now in the committee on energy and is being examined clause by clause.

If hon. members will refer to the provision relating to appeals, then they will see—I shall seek to point out by reference to the Gordon committee report—that a recommendation of the Gordon committee in that regard has been entirely violated.

On page 27 of the Gordon committee report—and I am not going to read it because it is too long a reference—where the learned commissioners are discussing the principles relating to appeals from commissions, they say first that they are disinclined to embrace a principle that would allow an appeal from all boards and commissions, but they say that in certain areas appeals ought to be permitted. One of the areas in which the learned commissioners think there ought to be an appeal is in the cancellation of franchises.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Oh, that is a different thing.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: That is entirely different.

Mr. Sopha: Now that is very significant. They do not say there ought to be an appeal when a board or commission is determining the question of whether a franchise ought to be granted, because public convenience and necessity and a great many other considerations must be taken into account, and no one would suggest that judges of courts of law are any better equipped than the members of boards or commissions to determine if a particular area or a particular person ought to be granted a franchise.

But on the other hand, sir, it is well recognized, in our judicial system and in our jurisprudence which provides the background against which it works, that if one seeks to take away a franchise from a person, then the principles which come into operation are fairly universal, and a court of law is in perhaps that case in a better position than a board or commission to determine if the holder of that franchise has violated his trust, or has acted in an improper manner, so that the franchise may be taken away from him.

Now I wish merely to point this out, and if hon. members will look at page 27 of the report, they will see where the commissioners set forth that principle very clearly. I merely wish to point out that when the hon. Minister of Energy Resources, with his draftsmen, was framing that Act, he did not see fit to put that principle into the statute. And it is only on questions of law, with a procedure for a stated case, that he in his statute, if it passes this House, will permit any redress to be sought in the courts.

Now, I have to turn to another illustration. Mr. Speaker, I merely use these illustrations for the purpose, as I say, of showing why this matter of organization of government should be passed along to a select committee of this House.

I have made no secret of the fact that, at one time, I attended a meeting of the Ontario racing commission and sought entry there to see them when they were dealing with a matter which came under their purview. I merely relate, as I have related here before, that the learned members of the commission did not see fit to grant me the opportunity to view their proceedings.

I pointed out in a committee that it was very interesting—and, I thought, very significant in that regard—that in the session of 1959, although I was not a member of this House, a little research showed me that some hon. member introduced a bill in this House, by way of amendment, to The Ontario Racing Commission Act which clearly set out an amendment to one of the sections which would permit that commission to hold their hearings in camera.

That bill did not pass this House. I am told that it was killed in the committee on legal bills.

I find this very curious. The hon. Provincial Secretary, of course, is the one charged with the responsibility for the racing commission, and the bill I suppose came into this House under his responsibility.

However, the Legislature clearly, in not passing that amendment, did not see fit to grant to that commission explicit power to hold its hearing in camera.

Yet, sir, as late as two weeks ago, we were told by the chairman of that commission that they continue to hold their hearings in secret.

Now, I merely wish to say, as demonstrative of some of the problems of government in this province, that is clearly improper. And I hope—I urged the chairman at the committee meeting, and I use this House as a vehicle to urge him again—in the interests of the forwarding of justice and in the exercise of the quasi-judicial powers which he and his fellow commissioners do exercise—that they will open up their meetings when they are dealing with a person's livelihood, and traditionally as in the development of our Constitution, sir, that they will allow their proceedings to be placed under the vigilance of public scrutiny.

Mr. Speaker, the Gordon committee did not pretend, as I said earlier, to go into any detail with respect to the efficiency that the various boards and commissions and departments of government performed their functions. All they did was send various firms of chartered accountants around to these various boards, who made some sort of survey, no doubt with the utmost co-operation of the people in them, and then those firms of chartered accountants reported back to the Gordon committee.

We were told by the racing commission that a firm of chartered accountants came around for about an hour and looked into their affairs. So therefore, Mr. Gordon and his fellow commissioners would not presume to assert that this report, in any way, seeks to explain their efficiency, or how these boards and commissions perform their work.

In this regard, the racing commission, in another aspect, provides a very interesting field of investigation. I wish to say this, against this background:

It is apparent to us in this party, Mr. Speaker, that the government of this province subsidizes racing. It does not subsidize hockey and it does not subsidize basketball. It does not even subsidize the people who compete in the Olympics, except to the extent that a grant was given to our hockey team. But holus bolus, Mr. Speaker, it is clear—and it will be pointed out, will be delineated during the course of the budget debate—that the government of this province in fact subsidizes racing.

Now I am not one to say whether that is a good thing or a bad thing.

Hon. Mr. Allan: How do they subsidize it?

Mr. Sopha: I am going to tell the hon. Provincial Treasurer. They do it in two ways. The chairman of the racing commission tells us that they exact from the Jockey Club a fee to be put toward the cost of operation of the racing commission, which amounts to $400 for every racing day in Ontario. Now, there are 196 racing days in this province, and a little bit of mathematics shows that they get from the Jockey Club the sum of approximately $76,000.

I looked at page 114 of the estimates which the hon. Provincial Treasurer gave us this afternoon, and I note that the amount estimated by him for the ensuing year for the racing commission is $172,000, or, in other words, the government is paying the cost of the operation of that commission to the tune of $93,400 annually.

Now, I say to you, Mr. Speaker—and I say rhetorically to the hon. Provincial Treasurer—if this racing commission only performs functions in the supervision of horse racing in this province and does nothing else, then is it not meet and just and equitable that the Ontario Jockey Club should pay the cost of its operation? Why not?

The racing commission is the disciplinary arm; it is the regulator, it is the controller; it has exclusive jurisdiction over horse racing. That being the case I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that the people of this province should demand that the Jockey Club, whose returns on their investment are not unenviable, should be forced to bear the whole cost of the operation of horse racing.

Mr. Grossman: What about the returns from the pari-mutuel?

Mr. Sopha: I beg your pardon?

Mr. Grossman: What about the returns from the pari-mutuel? The province gets a big chunk of that.

Mr. Sopha: I always welcome questions from the hon. member for St. Andrew, because I know they are so adroit and to the point, but I do not want to get off what I am going to say in the few moments remaining to me, Mr. Speaker.

Now, on the other hand, Mr. Speaker, the other aspect of this government subsidizing horse racing in this province, and what would be revealed by an intensive investigation by a select committee or some other vehicle, is that in the years 1950 to 1959, the total pari-mutuel handle increased from $32 million, give or take a few dollars, in 1950 to $84 million in 1959.

During this time—and I invite the hon. Provincial Treasurer to take note of these figures—the share of the province increased only by some $800,000. In other words, the total handle was about 2.5 times as great but the province only saw fit, in its wisdom, to exact an additional $800,000 to go into the consolidated revenue fund.

We know that, whereas some years ago—and I am not going to say with any definiteness because I like to be accurate—the tax levied by this province upon pari-mutuels was 12.5 per cent. It has been progressively lessened until now it is 6 per cent., and it will be shown during the course of the budget debate, perhaps by the hon. member for Bruce, that Ontario alone of almost every racing jurisdiction on this continent—of which the most notable and active are the racing jurisdictions of New York and Florida—Ontario levies less tax from pari-mutuel handle than those others.

And we are entitled to say, sir, that horse racing is an activity in which only a very few, or relatively few of our citizenry participate, only a few go to attend the great sport of kings and take part in the turf which is said to be the great leveller.

Is it in the interest of the people of this province that horse racing ought to be treated in that preferred fashion? I say to hon. members, it is treated in a preferred fashion because, during the same period of time when the government of this province saw fit to take less, the share of the Ontario Jockey Club progressively increased, and their total amount, the aggregate amount, during that time that the pari-mutuel handle more than doubled, increased by several million dollars.

I want to say, sir, and I wish to underscore, that the Ontario racing commission, as far as I am concerned, has done a commendable job in the regulation of horse racing in this province. They have taken the lawlessness out of it which was incipient in it 10 or 12 years ago.

Notwithstanding that, I say that a searching scrutiny should be made of the powers and jurisdiction of that commission, the way they perform them, and the whole picture of the horse racing and public revenue should be once again scrutinized.

Now, Mr. Speaker, here is another illustration which helps. I am sorry that the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) is not in his seat. Perhaps he is in talking to the hon. leader of the Opposition, Mr. Speaker, making his move toward joining our party, I do not know.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Oh, no.

Mr. Sopha: We would welcome him, as we would welcome the hon. Minister.

Mr. Grossman: Looking for Tories, eh?

Mr. Sopha: However he is a member of an organization, if I get the name correctly, he is appointed to the board of examiners under The Funeral Directors and Embalmers Act—

Mr. Grossman: "Lay away Fullerton."

Mr. Sopha: —which is set up by statute—and which reports to the hon. Minister of Health.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I had a bit of experience with that board, and the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin was there, so he will be able to either contradict what I say or to corroborate it after he reads my remarks. I acted for a client who was called before that board, told to appear in Toronto on a fixed day, when the board would be assembled.

Now, when we attempted to ascertain just what my client was being called upon to explain, there was extreme reluctance and reticence on the part of the members of that board to say. When we urged upon them, and the solicitor to that board, that it was a well-known principle of jurisprudence that a person ought not to be called upon to answer until he knows what he is charged with, the board absolutely refused to let us see a copy of the complaint that had been made against my client, though they had been asked on a number of occasions.

None of the persons that make up that board, sir, is a lawyer: They employ the services of a lawyer.

Strangely enough, after this matter was over—and he is a very well-known lawyer, too, the person I am speaking of, I will not mention his name, he is a very gracious gentleman—strangely enough, after the matter was concluded and my client has been given a clean bill of health, the board, or somebody, dispensed with the services of that lawyer and they have a new one now.

However, sir, it was urged upon that board, none of them lawyers, that they must make known to the person who came in jeopardy before them, and in jeopardy, sir, of losing his livelihood, because that board is entrusted by statute with the power to take away the licence of a funeral director or embalmer in this province, what the precise complaint was against him. Notwithstanding that, sir, they refused.

I urge the hon. Minister of Health that he might take a look into that board and see if they might not improve their procedures in some regard.

I see the time, Mr. Speaker, approaches the hour when we depart. I just want to read to you, sir, what a very learned jurist had to say about the exercise of judicial or quasi-judicial function by these boards and commissions.

Sir William Mulock, sir, was a judge in this province for a great many years. He said at one time:

I refer to the ever-increasing practice of the Parliament of Canada and our provincial Legislatures of depriving our people of the protection of the law and of the courts by vesting in autocratic bodies the power to arbitrarily deal with matters affecting our liberties and other rights without the intervention of any court.

Many of these boards are not bound by their previous decisions, are free to put their own construction on the common law and the statute law, to revive the Star Chamber method of conducting the proceedings behind closed doors, and to give no reasons for their decision, the wronged suitor being left without redress.

Now, Mr. Speaker, just 3 or 4 illustrations which I beg leave to submit to you, indicate beyond any doubt that we ought not to stop at the point where the Gordon committee has felt it necessary to stop, but that the government of this province should immediately take the necessary steps to either appoint another commission with broad powers, or to set up a select committee of this House, in order to look into all these problems and those related to it.

I say this because Thomas Jefferson said at one time:

If people choose to be ignorant, and choose to be free at one and the same time, then they are seeking to achieve the impossible.

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 26, 1960

10 O'CLOCK A.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I move, Mr. Speaker, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan, that when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof it do stand adjourned until 2 of the clock on Monday afternoon. That is the same as last week.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister whether there will be a night session on Monday night?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, not on Monday.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

THE WARBLE FLY CONTROL ACT, 1952

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Warble Fly Control Act, 1952."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I would think this morning it might seem that, with the weather, perhaps we could repeal the Act entirely. I do not know if the poor old warble fly could dig himself out at all. But actually this amendment will enable a municipal council to repeal a warble fly control by-law that is at least 3 years old upon petition of one-third of the cattle owners of the township.

THE WEED CONTROL ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Weed Control Act, 1960."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Of course, Mr. Speaker, all of these bills will be referred to the agriculture committee.

This is a rewrite of The Weed Control Act, but the main changes in principle have to do with the procedure for negotiating an agreement between a land owner and an inspector to destroy noxious weeds—that is, before ordering compulsory destruction of the weeds. That part is eliminated, and the bill provides for compulsory destruction of noxious weeds after notice, and subject to appeal to the chief inspector.

The bill also clarifies the relationship and division of responsibility among inspectors appointed by the county and the local municipalities of the province.

THE DISPOSAL OF DEAD ANIMALS ACT

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to provide for the disposal of dead animals."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, as the title of the bill would indicate it is rather an unsavory one, so I think this morning I will just point out to the House the purpose of the Act. It is to supervise and control the handling and disposition of the carcasses of animals not used for human consumption.

THE FARM PRODUCTS GRADES AND SALES ACT

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is to consolidate all the grading and inspection of farm products. This is due to a great extent to the reorganization of The Department of Agriculture. All grading and inspection will come under The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act; that is, formerly this inspection grading was under The Farm Products Marketing Act, The Livestock and Livestock Products Act and The Milk Industry Act. It is being brought under The Farm Products Grades and Sales Act.

THE COUNTY JUDGES ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The County Judges Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: I notice that one of the hon. members wants me to say something on this.

I would say that this bill, Mr. Speaker, will have the effect of giving to surrogate court judges—that really means our county and district court judges—approximately at least a maximum of $1,000 a year more in relation to the work they do in the surrogate courts. That is the effect of it.

THE REGULATIONS ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Regulations Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, again responding to a request to explain the bill, I might say that a new subsection, which really constitutes the change in this bill, removes the existing doubt as to whether regulations or by-laws made under The Broker-Dealers Act, The Teaching Profession Act, The Cemeteries Act, The Conservation Authorities Act, The Public Hospitals Act, and The Agricultural Associations Act, are required to be filed under The Regulations Act.

THE MECHANICS' LIEN ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Mechanics' Lien Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Again, Mr. Speaker, if I may, I would say that in this bill there are a certain number of technical amendments proposed.

It will go to the legal bills committee and at that time there will be ample opportunity to give full explanation.

But the effect of it is really to overcome the decision of the supreme court of Canada which held that the master did not have power in the county of York to deal with mechanics' lien actions, that he was, in effect, taking upon himself the responsibility which the Legislature purported to give him authority to do, the duties of a judge, a Supreme Court judge.

The procedure outlined in these amendments will, I think, make regular the situation without really changing the practice in very distinct detail.

THE INSURANCE ACT

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Insurance Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

THE ONTARIO MUNICIPAL BOARD ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Ontario Municipal Board Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: May I say that this bill, and others, will go to the municipal law committee. But briefly I can say this, that one section authorizes members of the board who resign, retire, or are appointed to another position to complete their work with the board and give decisions on matters heard by them within a period limited by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council. This is, of course, in regard to the change of Mr. Cumming from chairmanship of the board to The Department of Municipal Affairs, and there may be other cases turning up soon. So that is to cover that eventuality.

There is another brief amendment which empowers the board to hear and determine disputes between municipalities in relation to agreements entered into by municipalities. We discovered that in a case in Port Arthur and Fort William there was some dispute between the two new municipalities, and there was no way, legally, by which this dispute could be settled. They wanted the board to hear it but it just did not have the legal power. This will empower it so to do.

Then there is another small amendment which makes it clear that, in certain cases where the board approves of a by-law, it is not actually approving of the wording of the by-law but the project or undertaking as set out in the by-law.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I want to say to my hon. friends that I worked till a late hour last night answering these questions. I did a lot of homework.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Nothing else to do?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well the weather was bad and so on, but that is what I did.

Mr. Speaker, I have here and will table the answers to questions 3, 5, 11, 12, 24, 29, 31, 32, 41. That is not bad.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is good.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say that over the years, I have always endeavoured to answer all of the questions asked in a very satisfactory and complete way, and I shall certainly endeavour to continue that policy. I have never taken the intransigent—I think that is the proper word—position of the late Sir James Whitney or the late Mr. Hepburn in that regard. I have always tried to give to my hon. friends opposite the greatest of assistance.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I think I should explain my presence here. The situation, Mr. Speaker, in a nutshell is that I stayed yesterday to hear the budget address and, because of that or because of other reasons, the weather became very stormy immediately afterwards. In any event, I have been unable to get away and presumably will be unable to attend the game at Squaw Valley.

Mr. A. Crossman (St. Andrew): It would have been quite a help if the hon. leader of the Opposition had been there.

Mr. Wintermeyer: That is exactly what I thought and, Mr. Speaker, I will reserve any comments on the outcome of the final series until after the series is over. They are half-way through the series, and things do not look too bright now, but they can change very rapidly, and I assure the hon. Prime Minister—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Go down there and pull us out of the fire, now—

Mr. Wintermeyer: —that the $2,500 is in good safekeeping until such time that I can make delivery.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to bring a little different atmosphere into this.

I have here an article cut from the paper yesterday and the headline comes from Peterborough:

PORT ARTHUR LADIES RINK TRIUMPHS

Port Arthur won the first ladies' provincial curling championship here today, defeating Huntsville 14-6 in a sudden-death play-off game.

Port Arthur was skipped by Mrs. Elsie Forsythe. There was little doubt about the outcome of the play-off after Port Arthur took an early 5-0 lead and enjoyed a 6-2 margin after 6 ends. A 5 count in the seventh and 3 more in the tenth ended the scheduled 12 end game. The champions for Port Arthur qualified to play at Oshawa March 23, 24, and 25.

I might mention that MacDonald Brier is being held in that city commencing March 4, and there is an invitation to my hon. leader and the hon. leader of the Opposition and every hon. member of this House to come up and enjoy the hospitality of those great cities and see how curling really can be played.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Before the orders of the day, in order that the record may be clear, there was a question asked me some days back. This is the first opportunity I think that the hon. member asking the question could have presented it, reaching this point of business. He is not in his seat. I refer to the hon. member for Bracondale (Mr. Gould), and I would like to say that, if I am expected to answer it, I would ask him to renew the question.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What question is that?

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading, upon motions:

Bill No. 21, An Act to amend The Land Titles Act.

Bill No. 22, An Act to amend The Loan and Trust Corporations Act.

Bill No. 26, An Act to amend The Short Forms of Conveyances Act.

Bill No. 28, An Act to amend The Short Forms of Mortgages Act.

Bill No. 41, An Act to amend The Lord's Day (Ontario) Act.

Bill No. Pr15, An Act respecting the Leeds and Grenville health unit of the united counties of Leeds and Grenville.

Bill No. Pr20, An Act respecting the corporation of the presbytery of Ottawa of The Presbyterian Church in Canada.

Bill No. Pr22, An Act respecting the central Canada exhibition association.

Bill No. Pr30, An Act respecting the Windsor board of education and the Windsor suburban high school district.

Bill No. Pr31, An Act respecting l'association Canadienne Française d'Education d'Ontario.

SARNIA BOARD OF EDUCATION, SARNIA SUBURBAN
HIGH SCHOOL DISTRICT

Mr. C. E. Janes moves second reading of Bill No. Pr13, "An Act respecting the Sarnia board of education and the Sarnia suburban high school district."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

KITCHENER-WATERLOO GENERAL HOSPITAL

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer moves second reading of Bill No. Pr14, "An Act respecting the Kitchener-Waterloo general hospital."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF OSHAWA

Mr. T. D. Thomas moves second reading of Bill No. Pr18, "An Act respecting the city of Oshawa."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

MUNICIPALITY OF SHUNIAH

Mr. W. G. Noden moves second reading of Bill No. Pr21, "An Act respecting the municipality of Shuniah."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

MUNICIPALITY OF NEEBING

Mr. Noden moves second reading of Bill No. Pr27, "An Act respecting the municipality of Neebing."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF OTTAWA

Mr. I. Haskett moves second reading of Bill No. Pr29, "An Act respecting the city of Ottawa."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CANADIAN NATIONAL EXHIBITION ASSOCIATION

Mr. A. H. Cowling moves second reading of Bill No. Pr33, "An Act respecting the Canadian National Exhibition Association."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWN OF OAKVILLE AND THE TOWNSHIP OF TRAFALGAR

Mr. S. L. Hall moves second reading of Bill No. Pr34, "An Act respecting the town of Oakville and the township of Trafalgar."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF WINDSOR

Mr. A. J. Reaume moves second reading of Bill No. Pr37, "An Act respecting the city of Windsor."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

VILLAGE OF STREETSVILLE

Mr. W. G. Davis moves second reading of Bill No. Pr39, "An Act respecting the village of Streetsville."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, before we proceed to further orders—on a point of information under the private bills—the Oshawa bill is not reprinted, and yet I remember there were two amendments to the bill yesterday morning.

Clerk of the House: The reprinted copy will be up by the time the—

THE PROFESSIONAL ENGINEERS
ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Mr. Speaker, on the last occasion this was called for second reading, the hon. leader of the Opposition wanted it held. I am prepared to move second reading now and get it to committee, but if there is any question there, it is not government policy necessarily to follow that bill as hon. members know. It is just a matter of getting it rewritten, and there may be one or two things in it that still need to be cleared up.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I do not know exactly what to suggest at this particular stage—as the bill appears now we certainly have some objections, and we would like some clarifications. Now, how the hon. Attorney-General wants to proceed, I do not know. If he wants to call it for second reading we are prepared to debate it now.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If the hon. leader of the Opposition wishes to debate it at the present time, I prefer not to call it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: On the other hand would the hon. leader of the Opposition like the committee—I suppose it is isolated sections of it, is it?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, it would be isolated sections.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, why not let it go on to committee and we will—

Mr. Wintermeyer: I have no objection to that, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 36, "The Professional Engineers Act, 1960."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Speaker, what committee would this go to?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Legal bills. I would say to my hon. friend that the reference to committee was to committee of the whole House, where, if the bill goes there, the widest latitude on debate would be allowed. I think that would be the proper form.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, if it is only to legal bills, I misunderstood the—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, no, no—committee of the whole House.

Mr. MacDonald: This is precisely the point that I want to make. I think that this bill should be referred to one of the standing committees, and without going into any great detail on it the main reason for it is this—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Legal bills is a standing committee.

Mr. MacDonald: No, but just a minute. As I understand the discussion of the last few moments, it was being interpreted as going to the committee of the whole House rather than to legal bills.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Oh, no.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh no, no.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Will interested parties have an opportunity to make representation at the legal bills committee? Will adequate notice be given when it is coming up?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, Mr. Speaker, the usual notice will be given. But I would suggest to the hon. member for Woodbine that, if there are any points he wants taken up, he get in touch with the professional engineers director, because we want all those things smoothed out amongst the people concerned, if possible, before it comes up.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just a minute, Mr. Speaker. This is the point, and I especially draw this to the attention of the government.

One of the puzzling things about this Act is that when a bill emerges from a professional association—and I am not arguing against them having rules and regulations for running their own affairs and discipline—but when it emerges from one of these associations, it was my understanding it was done after some consideration by the membership.

The strange thing, in this instance, was that there was an annual meeting of the association of professional engineers of Ontario no more than a month ago and not a word was breathed about the existence of this bill. For that reason there are very significant groups of the membership of the association of professional engineers of Ontario who want to make representation.

Therefore, it seems to me that there should be an opportunity for groups within the membership of the association of professional engineers of Ontario—I am thinking of the Hydro engineers—as well as groups outside the membership of the Association of professional engineers of Ontario who are going to be affected, to make representation at the legal bills committee.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There is no question about that—we have never in legal bills tried to restrict anybody. Anybody who wants to come there can have a hearing, and the chairman on legal bills is one of these gentlemen who believes in that sort of thing. But, as a matter of fact, Mr. Speaker, there is no desire whatever, no intention on the part of the government of taking any sides in this matter.

This happens to be a year when the consolidation of the statutes is going forward—this bill was presented as a tidying-up bill for the most part and if there is anything new in it, or anything fundamental in it that needs further review, it will get it at the legal bills committee sitting or in the committee of the whole House.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We do not care if—

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Prime Minister does not care, that is fine, but it is more than a tidying-up bill.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I think it is understood now that more than one day's notice would be necessary in order to notify anyone, or for people concerned to be given notice. We should have more than one day's notice of this committee's sitting.

THE REFORMATORIES ACT

Hon. G. C. Wardrope moves second reading of Bill No. 58, "An Act to amend The Reformatories Act."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: The next legal bills committee meeting is on Wednesday, but this will not be called to this one—probably a week from Wednesday.

Mr. MacDonald: Fine, thank you.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Will that give the hon. member time to get the witnesses here?

THE DEPARTMENT OF HIGHWAYS ACT, 1957

Hon. F. M. Cass moves second reading of bill No. 63, "An Act to amend The Department of Highways Act, 1957."

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Well, does the hon. Minister want to make a speech on it? We want to hear it.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): Mr. Speaker, this is not one upon which I can make any impassioned speech for the hon. member for Brant. But I would like to say that this Act is what might be called a tidying-up Act.

The Department of Highways Act sets out specifically certain statutes which are administered by the Minister of Highways and his department. Some two years ago there was a change, as all the hon. members know, whereby The Department of Transport was created out of The Department of Highways and, at that time, functions now exercised by The Department of Transport and the Minister of Transport were not removed from the jurisdiction of the Minister of Highways.

This particular section is to allow that to be tidied up. It will enable certain Acts, including The Public Commercial Vehicles Act and others, which are referred to in The Department of Highways Act, to be placed where they belong in The Department of Transport under The Highway Traffic Act, and the other Acts administered by that Minister.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE STATUTE LABOUR ACT

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 64, "An Act to amend The Statute Labour Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is a bill of considerable interest, I believe, to people living in unorganized territory in northern Ontario and those who are fortunate enough to have summer holdings, or at least holdings occupied in the summer there.

At the present time, the meeting of the people for the election of their road commissioners is called by the posting of 6 notices in the area, and notices at each post office and school house, in the area served by these commissioners. The Ontario municipal association drew to the attention of my officials the fact that this often militated against those, having properties there who lived elsewhere, having a say in the election of the road commissioners and the policy they should follow.

As a result, I have felt that it is desirable that there be alternative ways of giving this notice, so that the section, as it is proposed to amend it—section 14 of The Statute Labour Act—is being repealed and 3 alternative methods of calling these meetings are to be prescribed, as the hon. members will notice from the bill being presented.

First of all, there is the old method of 6 notices, plus those in the post offices and and schools; or a notice can be mailed by registered letter to all landholders in the locality addressed to their residential address; or the notice can be published once a week for at least 3 weeks in the newspaper having general circulation in the locality.

Now, the second section of the bill provides for the repeal of subsection 2 of section 26 of The Statute Labour Act. This is the provision which restricts road commissioners to two days' pay for their work, apart from their statute labour work, with respect to their holdings during the year they serve as road commissioners.

In southern Ontario we have no difficulty in paying township road superintendents who perform a similar work for the work which they do, and as a result we get the services of good people.

In northern Ontario we have found it is increasingly difficult to get good men to serve as road commissioners and overseeing road commissioners, because after they have done their own statute labour work, they can only be paid for two additional days.

It is a feeling of the officials in my department that the road commissioners working and overseeing the roads in statute board areas should be paid without restriction after they have performed, of course, the statute labour requisite with respect to their own holdings.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE HIGHWAY IMPROVEMENT ACT, 1957

Hon. Mr. Cass moves second reading of Bill No. 65, "An Act to amend The Highway Improvement Act, 1957."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this is an amendment which I think is of interest to all hon. members who have counties and county councils and county road committees under their jurisdiction and care.

At the present time, it is possible to have a connecting link agreement under The Highway Improvement Act where King's highways go through incorporated municipalities, and, under the arrangement of connecting links, payments are made with respect to the road designated as a connecting link by The Department of Highways out of provincial funds.

But it has not been possible to extend the same help and assistance and courtesy to the counties where their county roads lie, or form part of, a connecting link for the King's highway. That is particularly true in these rapidly growing and built-up urban areas which really are in effect a city or a town, but actually are not, and they are townships, and the county road system goes through them.

Therefore, this amendment, which we propose, is to place the county in exactly the same position as any other municipality with respect to its roads and connecting links agreements with The Department of Highways. This will mean that the county road systems will receive the same assistance, both financially and engineering-wise, for their roads which would be connecting links to the incorporated municipalities throughout Ontario.

I think this will be welcomed by the county road people and their county engineers.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWNSHIP OF KINGSTON

Mr. J. R. Simonett moves second reading of Bill No. Pr1, "An Act respecting the township of Kingston."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of the whole, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

THE SHORT FORMS OF LEASES ACT

House in committee on Bill No. 27, An Act to amend The Short Forms of Leases Act.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Sections 1 to 6, inclusive, agreed to.

Bill No. 47 reported.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that the committee rise and report certain bills without amendment.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain bills without amendment, moves the adoption of the report, and begs leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

ESTIMATES, OFFICE OF THE PRIME MINISTER

On vote 1501:

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, there is very little I can say about these estimates which I think the hon. members will agree, in view of the magnitude of the operations of the government, are very modest indeed. All I can say about these estimates is that the Office of the Prime Minister is not an administrative department in itself. It is where I endeavour to receive those who want to see me with courtesy, answer my mail and look after things and keep a good atmosphere, so that people who want to see me, or write to me, are taken care of in proper fashion.

Now that, of course, is not the area in which this department operates but I would say that I try to operate the department on an open-door policy, if hon. members understand me—an open-door policy so that people can see me, and so on.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is if they can find the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I am usually around, some place or other.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): May I ask the hon. Prime Minister if he has looked up the copy of the letter from the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) yet?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I have not had time to check. I was so busy answering those questions I did not get around to it.

But I would be very glad to see the hon. gentleman. He has been here now for some 4 weeks and he should not have too much trouble getting in touch with me.

Vote 1501 agreed to.

On vote 1502:

On this vote, sir, these estimates cover the cabinet office, which is the office that relates to the operation of executive council, and provides for the salaries of the present incumbents of the positions of cabinet secretary and assistant cabinet secretary.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Increase in salaries shown, as compared with last year's estimate: Is that due to an increase in staff or does this particular group manage to get a raise in pay, unlike—

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, Mr. Eberlee becomes the assistant, his salary is in there and that makes the difference really. The others are just normal increases.

Vote 1502 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, OFFICE OF PROVINCIAL AUDITOR

On vote 1601:

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Auditor): Mr. Chairman, before we proceed with those estimates, I would like to say a word of appreciation for the services rendered by the Office of Provincial Auditor. It continues to be an exceptionally fine and responsible organization and I think a good deal of that—at least a reasonable share of that—credit goes to the Provincial Auditor, Mr. Harvey Cotnam.

On behalf of the Legislature of this province, he sees that the expenditures of the various departments of government, and the various boards and commissions, are checked carefully.

In addition to the duty of auditing, I am sure he brings the benefit of a great deal of experience of his staff to the accountants and those responsible for the accounts of the various departments.

I would like to compliment him upon the way in which he has controlled expenditures in his department over the years. Having regard to the increase in duties, I think that we would have to say that the increase in expenditures have been most reasonable.

In 1955-1956 the amount voted was $350,000; in 1959-1960 the amount voted was $440,000; and the amount requested this year is $435,000. The duties of auditing the operations of the liquor control board were added to those of the Provincial Auditor in the year 1957, which accounted for quite an increase at that time.

Mr. Nixon: What did it cost to audit the liquor control board by a private firm? Would the hon. Minister know?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Well, I would not know, I am sorry. I have no doubt that we could get that information for the hon. member, and I would be glad to get it and give it to him privately.

Hon. Mr. Frost: If he will put his question on the order paper, too, I will dig up the answer for him.

Mr. Nixon: No, no.

Mr. Reaume: Privately—who wants that?

An hon. member: Everything around here has to be privately.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I think the hon. member knows that the liquor control board is under The Provincial Secretary's Department, not under my department.

Mr. Nixon: Well, just how did the hon. Treasurer come to make the change in policy and have the board audited by the Provincial Auditor, rather than by a private firm? Was there any particular situation that developed?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no.

Mr. Nixon: Was it the saving of money?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Chairman, that leads to the question that I was going to ask, and that is: How many boards and commissions are not under the jurisdiction of Mr. Cotnam?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I think the answer to that, sir, is just that they are all under the jurisdiction of Mr. Cotnam. But what he does is this. Now, I could be wrong about this, but I think this is the correct answer. For instance, there may be a certain commission and he himself arranges with a firm of auditors, now it might be Price Waterhouse, or Clarkson, Gordon, or somebody else to do the job, and they are acting really as his agents. I think that is the answer.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is that right?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Chairman, I believe that the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) wants to ask about Hydro, but I will let him pursue that question. But now my understanding is that with respect to the auditors for Hydro they are not Mr. Cotnam's agents.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right. They are Clarkson, Gordon, appointed by order-in-council, I believe.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Order-in-council?

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Are there any other boards and commissions that are under similar situations?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think so. I will find out from Mr. Cotnam. We are just going to show the hon. leader of the Opposition how we convenience the Opposition people.

Mr. Nixon: There is another means of handing out a plum here and there.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh no, no. Was the question about the liquor control board?

Mr. Wintermeyer: It was the hon. member for Brant who was asking about the liquor control board.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The liquor control board is audited by the Provincial Auditor.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, we know that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Cotnam.

Mr. Nixon: Yes, I was quite aware of that, and I believe the policy of the government was changed in 1957, was it not, or about then?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I could not say.

Mr. Nixon: But, previous to that time, the auditing had been done by a private firm of auditors.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Who were they, does the hon. member know?

Mr. Nixon: I am asking the Treasury bench.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, the hon. member for Brant seems to know a lot about it. Did some of his friends get turned out or what?

Mr. Nixon: Well, I did not expect Mr. Chairman, that I was going to be interrogated on this matter. I want to ask the government if that was a complete change in policy, as to the auditing of the liquor control board. I want to know when it occurred and why it occurred, and how much it costs to audit the liquor control board by an outside agency.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, the change was made in 1957. It was part of a general policy of having the Provincial Auditor audit all boards and commissions—I have a list of the boards and commissions that have been taken on that have become the responsibility of the Provincial Auditor. The liquor control board was one of those boards which just came in under a general policy of being audited by the Provincial Auditor—

Mr. Nixon: Is the Niagara parks commission on that list?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I do not think so.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, Mr. Chairman, that is the significance of my question. Let me put it negatively. What boards are not—rather than use the word jurisdiction—what boards or commissions are not audited by the Office of Provincial Auditor?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mr. Chairman, I would be glad to furnish that list and provide such information.

Mr. Nixon: May I ask how the government determines what boards are to be audited by our Provincial Auditor and what boards are not? Now, it would seem to me if there is any one board that should be audited I agree that the liquor control board, by all means, should be. But the Niagara parks board should surely be audited by the Provincial Auditor. They had tremendous surpluses there. Why, out of water rental alone, they received $843,000 a year, or something to that effect, and I believe we have received over $1 million a year, have we not, from water rentals alone?

Now, we find that in the public accounts committee, Mr. Chairman, it is almost impossible to get any pertinent information. We are held down closely to the one year's report of that particular board and if this government really wants us to do anything, in looking into that board, they have got to extend and enlarge the records by which that committee was sent to the public accounts committee. That is very obvious to me. We are just not getting anywhere there. But I would like to know—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Perhaps my hon. friend does not know where to get it, perhaps that is it.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, there is a lot of information. Why, they would not even permit questions that extended beyond the particular month of the fiscal year which is October 31, and confusing the situation with the provincial fiscal year which ends March 31. But I would like to know if the Treasury does receive into the Treasury of the province any of these surplus funds from the Niagara parks commission.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I had understood that the manager said there was some transfer of monies.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I think perhaps I could explain to my hon. friend where that thought might emanate.

At the inception of the Niagara parks commission, if we go away back into the days of its early history, the Niagara parks commission was, in fact, financed by water rentals which were payable. Actually if we go back far enough, we find that they were paid by private companies who operated on the Niagara River.

Now those were the companies which ultimately were taken over by Hydro. I believe there is still one company that operates down there, but it sells its power under old agreements. I think it goes across the river, and it does supply some local areas down there. However, most of the companies were taken over, but still those water rentals ran to the Niagara parks commission.

Well, subsequently we raised all of the water rentals in the province I think to an average, I am speaking from memory, of $1.35 per horsepower. Some of these old rentals were at the rate of 30 cents and 40 cents. We raised them all to $1.35, plus an escalator related to the value of the dollar. At the present time these water rentals are running at $1.40.

In addition to that, as my hon. friend knows, Niagara was redeveloped. Roughly speaking, owing to the redevelopment, one million additional developed horsepower came from that river.

The result was that, with those raised water rentals and with the greatly increased capacity of those plants, the amounts that would accrue to Niagara parks commission would be quite out of proportion to any of their requirements or needs.

In the meantime, of course, since those days in which water rentals financed the whole show, the Niagara parks commission has gone into very extensive business, and their net profits over there last year were something in the order of $700,000.

Now that is a pretty big business operation. They have gone into various businesses, of which the committee now will have some familiarity, with the result that the water rentals—the original income of that commission—have been augmented by the profit of the parks' operation.

Just as a matter of interest, that was the genesis of our parks policy in Ontario, by which we hoped to operate business and obtain fees and so on, which would enable us to operate the great park system in Ontario on a sound basis, without supplement from the ordinary revenues of the province.

What has been done on Niagara parks, by way of the operation of those parks as a business concern, is really a great example of a public effort. I think that will be seen once this matter is looked into by the committee.

Now what happened was this. In connection with the water rentals, Mr. Cotnam, the Provincial Auditor, and others, worked out the average that Niagara parks received over a number of years and, as a matter of fact, added something to it. My recollection is, that the average ran around about $600,000 a year, in order that the commission should be amply provided for.

Niagara parks is one of our great provincial assets. It is the front door, as it were, to Ontario, and a very important part, and it is one of the outstanding parks in America. We did not want to do anything that, in any way, hampered that commission. Therefore, my recollection is, Mr. Chairman, that about $200,000 was added to the water rentals so that they received this year something in the order of $800,000, and then they get their profits on top of that.

That will enable the parks commission, which now is entirely debt-free, to plow back into the betterment of the parks system, the extension of the parks system and the added facilities, added attractions in that parks system, something in the order of $1.5 million a year. That, I think, is a pretty substantial way to handle that situation.

The balance of the water rentals there, over and above the amount set at $800,000, goes into the consolidated revenue fund, but the monies really are routed in Ontario to the betterment of our parks system.

On the St. Lawrence system, on the basis I have mentioned of $1.40, there would be something of around $1.5 million coming into the St. Lawrence system. That is true of Ottawa and so on. Those monies are not earmarked in the consolidated revenue fund for parks matters. Actually, by reason of the new developments and by reason of the additional amount of water rentals charged and the escalator clause which now brings it up to about $1.40 per horsepower, I think that our parks system will be financed pretty well without contributions from the consolidated revenue fund—I mean over and above these rentals.

Now, it is perfectly true, with the St. Lawrence system, that we have had, and we will have, to advance large amounts of capital. But we are counting on that amount being reimbursed to us in the adjustment of things. We are very anxious, in the whole parks system in Ontario, that it become a paying proposition and that is the purpose, as my hon. friend knows, for the charging of fees for services.

Mr. Crawford's firm, of Niagara Falls, has been auditing there, I suppose for 25 years. I mean it goes back before our day, in any event, so that should abate any suspicions which may linger in the minds—

Interjections by hon. members.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Crawford is a very well-known auditor in Ontario and he submits his reports to the Office of the Provincial Auditor.

Now the policy was simply this. I can assure my hon. friend that there was not anything intended at all in the way of harming, as it were, any persons who did auditing before. As a matter of fact, we felt, in the reorganization of The Provincial Treasurer's Department, going back some 4 or 5 years, that it would be very much better to concentrate much of the auditing under the Provincial Auditor rather than with private firms.

On the other hand there are some cases where that is not desirable.

With Hydro, the Clarkson Gordon and Company firm have done that work now for a great many years; as a matter of fact, I think they have men on staff down there all the time. To maintain that staff ourselves would perhaps not be as efficient an operation as the way it is now and in the end might cost us more money.

In the meantime, the principal advisers I think that we have, from an auditing standpoint, are the Clarkson Gordon and Company firm and Price Waterhouse and Company. Price Waterhouse and Company are doing a considerable amount of work for the government, and doing a considerable amount of work in an advisory way. Now, the Niagara parks firm is Crawford, Smith and Swallow of Niagara Falls. The members are Mr. Lawrence C. Crawford, FCA, Mr. Robert F. Smith, CA, and John C. Swallow, CA.

Mr. Nixon: I distinctly understood the general manager of the Niagara parks to say that certain monies had been transferred to Treasury. Well, I understand that now a part of it is the water rentals—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I suppose it would be the over plus of those water agreements.

Mr. Nixon: Well, can the hon. Prime Minister tell me just how much that over plus amounts to, that would have gone to Niagara parks that comes direct to Treasury?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): We get our $800,000 and that is it, as far as we are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I should imagine it should be $800,000 or something of that—

Hon. Mr. Allan: It is variable, depending on the flow and the amount of power development.

Mr. Nixon: I distinctly remember there was almost a reflection cast by the hon. Prime Minister on a previous government of this province that went out of this office leaving a debt at Niagara parks.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no.

Mr. Nixon: Well, the hon. Prime Minister mentioned it two or three times.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That was not the fault of the other government at all.

Mr. Nixon: Now let me tell the hon. Prime Minister that the wicked old Henry government, when they were hard up for money, went down to the Niagara parks and took every dollar out of the till and brought it into the Provincial Treasury. Not only that, they left us with a lawsuit on our hands which went to the Privy Council while we were in office, and the Privy Council decided against us, which we thought was very unjust. However, there was no place further up that we could go at that time, and that is why this is a very considerable debt.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They had a poor lawyer.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I would not say so. We had Arthur Slatt, but unfortunately the other fellow had arranged for W. M. Kelly before we had a chance at him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Arthur Slatt. Did he have any political background, does the hon. member know?

Mr. Nixon: Not as much as W. M. Kelly had—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. members over there do not know anything about patronage at all.

Mr. Nixon: How did the hon. Prime Minister come to select Joe Sedgewick to be his counsel?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Yes, let us have his explanation on that now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, he is a former—

Mr. Nixon: Well, now that he is raising these issues, I presume that he will pay for a counsel to represent the Opposition.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I never heard of that, but we are most generous people.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I guess I am getting a little bit out of order, but the hon. Treasurer did say that he had a list of boards and commissions whose auditing was done by the Provincial Auditor. I would like very much to have that list on record, in Hansard, if he would read it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I say to my hon. friend, because I always like to agree with him, that if he would take a little of the political atmosphere out of what he says, I would agree with him.

The matter of the debt of the Niagara parks commission was certainly not the fault of the previous government. I doubt that it was the fault of any government, and, as the hon. member said, what happened was this. The governments of those days took over the Old Gorge Route Railway. It was a railway that ran down along the water and they took that over and, actually speaking, I think that anybody of those days felt that it was more or less a pile of junk, and that is what it was.

But in any event, after thinking the matter over, expropriation proceedings were started, with the result that the estimates of perhaps a very modest sum for this defunct railway, when it got to the Privy Council, assumed the huge proportions of nearly $3 million.

Now, very definitely, it was not the fault of the previous government at all. It was just one of those things that happens. I would say to the hon. members that one always wants to look at this as an expropriation. In an expropriation particularly, a government can always be taken to town, or a commission can be taken to town. The hon. member for Brant knows that.

Mr. Nixon: I certainly do.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, that was a case in point. As a matter of fact, the matter of the Old Corge Route Railway could have been settled for a fraction of the sum, but nevertheless the amount looked to be large. I think that is right. The amount that these people looked at appeared to be large, in the light of everything. And I think the government of that time very properly let the matter go to arbitration and the commission was thoroughly taken to town on it because, in the end, the Privy Council, in their judgment and their decision, arrived at a claim of nearly $3 million. That was the amount that this commission had to pay off.

I certainly absolve my hon. friend, or any government that he had to do with—or, as a matter of fact, any former government—in connection with that problem. The government of that day exercised what, in my judgment, was a very fair discretion. But it just did not work out well, that is all.

I would say, sir, that, in regard to the particulars concerning commissions that are audited by other firms, I would be very glad to give them to the hon. member if he does not have them here.

Mr. Nixon: Well, even if he could lay it on the table, it would be of very great assistance.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I will lay it on the table.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, there is another matter I would like to raise with regard to the accounts of the Niagara parks commission.

The auditor's statement that was submitted to us in committee, I would suggest, is not a satisfactory type of statement. It may be quite adequate as a statement that a commercial firm would present to its directors or shareholders. But I do not think it is a satisfactory type of statement for a public body which is raising and spending money in the name of the public, because it is really just a summary of their transactions.

For example, there would be an entry for insurance, $17,000. Under one of the subdivisions, I think there was an item—I do not have the statement here—something like this, "General, $88,000," which is quite a lot of "general."

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out to the hon. member that this is going very far astray in connection with the provincial audit.

Mr. MacDonald: Where was the hon. Prime Minister a moment ago?

Hon. Mr. Frost: But may I point out to the hon. member that, in connection with the item of insurance, the item is in the auditor's report. That committee, as I understand it, is perfectly entitled in its discretion to ask for the particulars of the insurance and who carries the policies and so on.

If the hon. member had asked for that, that is properly within—as I understand it—the ambit of the committee. I do not see where there would be any objection to that. An auditor's report would not cover all those details; however, when the hon. member is given this report, then he can ask: "Here is insurance—which companies have that, and who are the agents?"

Mr. Bryden: I would like to submit, Mr. Chairman, that is not satisfactory for a body of this kind. It is not the way we should get the public accounts. It is not sufficient to say we should ask questions.

As a matter of fact, the specific question the hon. Prime Minister referred to was asked, and one or two others were asked.

For example, there was a question about certain expenses that were paid, and the accountant for the commission stood up and read out some figures. I could not even hear half of them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member does not want to hear them.

Mr. Bryden: I was very anxious to hear them, but my submission is that those details should be in front of us in the accounts presented to us. We should not have to ask about them, item by item.

After the meeting I had, shall we say, a small argument with the chairman because I wanted itemization right through the piece. I can stand up in the committee, item by item, and ask for itemization. Even there, the itemization I will get is not something for which the auditor has taken responsibility.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. member is very optimistic if he thinks he can stand up in that committee and get those answers.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I do not know, but I can stand up, at least.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say to the hon. member he may just be surprised.

Mr. Bryden: As a matter of fact, I have hit upon a procedure, which I think the chairman has agreed upon, that may get me a good deal of detail without taking up the time of the committee. But my only suggestion for the consideration of the government—and I think it is a fair suggestion—is that, in bodies of this kind whose accounts are not audited by the Provincial Auditor or under his direction, we should nevertheless ask the auditor who does the work to give the same sort of detail as is given in the public accounts.

In other words, the statement we had is fine as a summary. But under, say, the item "Insurance $17,000", or whatever it is, there should be listed how much was paid to whom and for what purpose.

Now, I submit that, in a public agency, it is desirable and proper that such detail should be made available. When there is some sort of catch-all classification there, nobody knows what is behind it.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Mr. Chairman, could I ask the hon. member why he keeps belabouring that? The hon. member asked for the list of who held the insurance. It was agreed it would be furnished at the next meeting. Now, why does he have to keep at it?

Mr. Bryden: I took that as an example. The same thing is true of every solitary item in those accounts. There is no detail shown for any of them.

Mr. Chairman: Would the hon. member for Woodbine confine his remarks to the estimates?

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Chairman, do I understand that if some accounts of a public agency of this province are audited by somebody other than the Provincial Auditor, we are not permitted to discuss them anywhere in this House?

Mr. Chairman: I said we are dealing with the estimates of the Office of the Provincial Auditor and I do not think we should discuss anything that does not come within the ambit of that.

Mr. Bryden: Well, we are dealing with things which surely cover the subject of auditing, of the auditing of the accounts of this province, and of its agencies. If I cannot raise this matter here, I do not know where I can raise it. Then we are in the position where—

Mr. Chairman: I suggest that we have given the hon. member quite a bit of latitude, and anything else he has to say about that should be brought up in the public accounts committee. That would be my suggestion.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I point out to the hon. member that, after all, government agencies are operating businesses, and that is what we are doing—

Mr. Bryden: That is not a business.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Of course it is. Why, Niagara parks is a tremendous business.

May I point out to the hon. member that business cannot be placed under a disability. Printing information, and so on, is expensive. These things cost a lot of money.

Actually speaking, within the ambit of last year's report, the hon. Minister says if the hon. member wants information about that, he should ask for it and it will be obtained. The hon. member will receive all those things.

Now, may I point out to the hon. member, so he will understand, that it would be impossible to print every item in the public accounts. This is not every item in the public accounts. If the hon. member will notice—

Mr. Bryden: It says who got the money and for what.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, it does not. If the hon. member looks in the front of the public accounts it says expenditures by departments:

Note: Expenditure statements by departments for the fiscal year ended March 31, 1959, are shown in detail with the exception of the following items which have been summarized: salary payments of less than $4,800 to employees; accounts for merchandise and services under $2,500; travelling expense and payments under $800.

Now, it might be that, in this public account, the hon. member would want some particulars about some item paid to somebody which amounted to only $300. Within these public accounts, that information can be obtained for him. But to publish all of that, with the nature and extent of this government, would require many volumes the size of this, and business cannot be done that way. So I would say the agents above, those agents he mentioned—

Mr. Bryden: But no such items are shown in the Niagara parks commission.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I do not think they need be.

Mr. Bryden: If the policy outlined in the public accounts was followed with the Niagara parks commission accounts I would be satisfied, but it is not. That is my complaint. It includes nothing about that.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Mr. Chairman, I am wondering whether the hon.

member feels that there is any information that he has asked for, in respect of the accounts of the parks commission, which has been refused him.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Chairman, that is not the point I was raising. I have matters I will discuss with the public accounts committee. But I was trying to raise here a matter of the general policy of the presentation of the accounts. Actually, the method we have to follow is a very slow and arduous, and not necessarily reliable, method of getting information. I am just suggesting a method of presenting the accounts following the same procedure as is followed in the public accounts. I would be quite satisfied with the rules adopted in the public accounts.

If that method were adopted, it would be more satisfactory from our point of view, and it would save a lot of time, because there are a lot of things we now ask for that would automatically be shown, that we would not have to ask for.

Mr. Grossman: The hon. member would agree that would be very costly, would it not?

Mr. Bryden: It would not be very costly, and I believe procedures designed to maintain democracy are worth the cost, and accountability is one of those procedures.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Yes. Well, there are just one or two points that I wanted to discuss, Mr. Chairman. One of them, of course, has to do with what the hon. Prime Minister has said with respect to the Niagara parks. I agree that it was quite a good history of the development of the Niagara parks, but I do not agree that it was any argument why the Provincial Auditor should not audit the books of the Niagara parks commission.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, we do not. It is not a general policy and we certainly do not do it.

Mr. Oliver: Yes, but I would say further that I do not know how the government decides who is on this side of the fence and who is on that side of the fence.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They are all on the other side of the fence in the hon. member's game.

Mr. Oliver: Well, the hon. Prime Minister and his government have decided that, regarding some of the boards and commissions created by this Legislature and responsible to it, their books should be audited by the Provincial Auditor. Others are excused and they have their own auditing firm to do the work.

I say to the government, and I suggest to the hon. Prime Minister, irrespective of what was done in the past—I want to make that quite clear, irrespective of what was done in the past—that the time has come when there should not be picking and choosing, as between these boards and commissions, and all of them should be audited by the Provincial Auditor of this province, of this Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Then my hon. friend will say, and he will be justified in the remark, that we would have to increase the staff of the Provincial Auditor.

Mr. Oliver: Well, I do not care about that. My hon. friend knows that the Provincial Auditor is an officer of this Legislature, and as such is responsible to the Legislature. I would say that the books of every board and commission should be audited by the Provincial Auditor no matter whether or not he has to increase his staff to do it.

Now, the other point I want to make is this. The only possible exception that I would make to that would be Hydro. Now, there is some justification, I would say to the hon. Prime Minister, for such a large and complex organization as Hydro having their own auditors.

The other point I want to clear with my hon. friend is this. What is the relationship between the Hydro accounts and the Provincial Auditor? Has he any supervision at all over the accounts of the Hydro? Are they done by an independent firm? Has my hon. friend the Provincial Auditor anything to do with the accounts of Hydro, or just where do we stand in that particular matter?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, Mr. Chairman, may I reply to the hon. member's questions this way.

In reply to the first question, it is the policy of the Provincial Auditor to take over the auditing of the boards and commissions that he has mentioned. That is a very big task because it involves building up organization to do it. There is no doubt that the Niagara parks commission, in due course, will come into that as it can be absorbed. There is no doubt about that.

Now, may I point out that the Provincial Auditor now audits the accounts of the Ontario Northland Railway. That is a comparatively recent move. I do not know the exact date, but we have been absorbing those things and strengthening the Office of the Provincial Auditor to take care of it, so the hon. member may count on that being done.

As far as Hydro is concerned, I would say to the hon. member that Hydro is a particular and peculiar situation which we have to deal with in the light of the history of that development. The course has been that the auditor is appointed by order-in-council, and the Clarkson, Gordon firm have been the auditors there now for a great many years, and they actually have done, in our estimation, a very excellent job.

With regard to the relationship to the Provincial Auditor, I do not think that actually there is a direct relationship to the Provincial Auditor beyond this, that the Provincial Auditor takes their report, and if there are comments in relation to the thing, it would be possible for the Provincial Treasurer or for the government to get his advice in relation to the form of auditing of that firm.

In addition to Clarkson, Gordon, the firm of J. D. Woods & Gordon Company have been the business counsel there, retained for probably 15 years, in connection with that operation. So that we not only have the operations of Clarkson, Gordon from the standpoint of the auditing of the affairs of Hydro, but in addition we have the counselling and advice of the J. D. Woods & Gordon firm in relation to the business operations, the general policies, and so on.

I do not think I can give any further information on that. On the committee on energy, to which I think Hydro has been referred, those questions would be very relevant. I can assure my hon. friend that the fullest of information would be given.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Mr. Chairman, who audits the accounts of the St. Lawrence development commission?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The Provincial Auditor. We are in the clear.

Mr. Manley: Well, I thought it should be the Provincial Auditor, Mr. Chairman, owing to the fact that we are voting the money here for that particular project.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The Provincial Auditor.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I think a good deal has been clarified, but I think there are one or two things that we still can pursue.

As the hon. member for Grey South said, in principle I think we should agree that the Provincial Auditor should be responsible for all auditing with the possible exception of Hydro, and it may be that we can pursue that in the committee on commissions. It would seem to me that some effective liaison is required to be worked out as between the mechanical auditors, if you will, and the Provincial Auditor.

That still leaves, in my opinion, a fundamental question, and it is simply this, Mr. Chairman. However, before I ask my question, I would like to take this opportunity to say that I think every hon. member in this House has the highest respect for Mr. Cotnam. He is doing an exemplary job, and I think we are all proud of the work he is doing.

I have often been concerned, and I suppose this is the only way to get at it, about what right we have as individual members of the Legislature to go to Mr. Cotnam and say—let us forget Niagara parks because I think we confuse the issue by referring to it—"Mr. Cotnam, I am concerned about a certain matter in a certain board or commission. Will you investigate that problem for me? Will you get the information for me before public accounts is made available?"

It is my understanding that he is, if you will, the agent or servant of this Legislature. As such, it would follow automatically as day follows night, it does seem to me, that we should have that type of authority.

I am of the opinion that we would embarrass Mr. Cotnam if we were to go to him with such a request at the present time. I think it is quite legitimate, at this particular juncture of the proceedings, that we clarify that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say to my hon. friend that the answers to his questions are in our procedures here which are common to, I think, any parliamentary government. As a matter of fact, the Provincial Auditor is the servant of the House, as is the auditor at Ottawa. If hon. members read the statutes, they will find that he is appointed and he is responsible to the House.

Now, the great problem is this: If individual members were to do that, I think it would create an impossible situation. We could not get work done. Remember that the work of government is an enormous thing, as was indicated in yesterday's budget. It is an enormous thing. The Treasury men and the auditor's staff are working continuously.

Today the work is in process for next year's budget. As a matter of fact, it has been in process for some months past.

One can see an impossible situation arising if the hon. member, for instance, were to go to the Provincial Auditor and say: "Now, I would like such and such information." Of course, there are 98 members of the House and they all share equally in that right.

In the end, the work of the auditor becomes simply impossible.

I have an appreciation and some sympathy with the viewpoint which the hon. member expresses. The procedure that we are working out here is to give to the hon. members the opportunity of looking at those things.

I would say, to the hon. member for Grey South and the hon. member for Brant—who has been in this House very much longer than anyone else—that never in their experience did they see such steps being taken to make information available to members. I will say quite frankly to hon. members that some of this is by trial and error. It has to be.

It may be, for instance, as the hon. member for Woodbine said, that there might be something to making the accounts of some of these boards—or all of the boards and commissions, as a matter of fact—available in more detail.

In the meantime one has to start somewhere. I would say this to the hon. member, that I think the procedures that we presently have may turn out to be, in the operation of it, too cumbersome, and that we would have to work out some details. I do not know, we will see what happens.

Regarding the items that the hon. member for Woodbine mentions, the details of those items should be, can be, and will be produced. He says that perhaps they should be produced in some form or other for the committee at the time, but whether or not that is practicable I do not know. We will have to discuss that with the Provincial Auditor, with the Treasury officials, to see what would be necessary to get together details of that sort.

I think perhaps if we work along our present lines, we will evolve acceptable methods here. We are doing things that, heretofore, have not been attempted anywhere that I know of, and it is with the idea of providing, for the hon. members more opportunity for scrutiny in connection with detail on the operations than has ever been given before. This is the first year, actually, of an extended operation of that sort. I think we can see, as time goes along, how we work out and what our success in these things is.

We have studied what has been done elsewhere. I think ours is the fullest of any that I have looked at.

Take, for instance, in the United Kingdom, they have—I do not know whether one would call it a public accounts committee which sits all the time, but their hearings are entirely in camera. They are in secret.

I imagine that would not be greeted with very great enthusiasm by our people here, nevertheless that is their system of working things out. They are done in camera, and obviously they are done in camera to enable the departments of government to operate and so on.

Personally, I have never thought of advancing that method here. I think, myself, a method somewhat along the lines we are following is the most satisfactory. However, I would say to you, Mr. Chairman, that, on general principles, we have been making great progress to this end of concentrating all of the auditing under the Provincial Auditor. When that will be completely done, I am unable to say, but in the last 3 or 4 years very great progress has been made.

The Provincial Auditor has men, for instance, permanently at North Bay and other places in connection with the auditing of, say, the Ontario Northland Railway, and so on. Undoubtedly Niagara parks will come into that system as soon as the thing can be assimilated.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, may I just pursue this. Frankly, I do not think it is anything like a waste of time. I think that this is the time to pursue this matter in principle. I am very much concerned about another matter, Mr. Chairman, I have already said that I think Mr. Cotnam has done a wonderful job and I sincerely mean that. But we learn now from the hon. Prime Minister that Mr. Cotnam takes part in the budget preparation. Should he do that?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, no, he does not. He is not on the Treasury board, no.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I know he is not on the Treasury board, but my concept of the Provincial Auditor's position is simply that he is independent, that he does not assist in any way in the formation of government policy.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is quite right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: My understanding is that he is the watch dog, if you will, the independent watch dog. Now, I would ask what part he plays in the preparation of the budget.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Actually, none.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Actually none?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well then, if he plays no part in it, then this great preparation that the hon. Prime Minister speaks of is really not related to his work or his department's work.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, the point is this, that the basis of everything we do is on the basis of our auditor's reports and so on.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, there is no question about that. That is, he produces the information that the hon. Prime Minister might subsequently use. It may be that we are moving in the right direction, I am not going to complain about that. It may be that we are doing more now than we did before. But I am becoming more and more convinced, as we go along that in principle I think we have have to envisage the time, and in the relatively near future, when the position of the Provincial Auditor is in fact, as well as in theory, that of an independent agency.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, of course it is.

Mr. Wintermeyer: It would seem to me, Mr. Chairman, that there is nothing wrong if he be that, and if he is not part and parcel of the government budgetary preparation.

I can see nothing wrong whatsoever with permission being given to the various hon. members to ask Mr. Cotnam questions. I am not thinking of scandals. I am not thinking of going to him and asking: "Who stole 5 cents, when?" Not at all.

What I am thinking of is simply this, and I know from personal experience that Mr. Cotnam, being a very conscientious man, is concerned when someone asks him a particular question. I have always felt very much concerned, and the questions I wanted to ask related to no malfeasance whatsoever. I do not think he should be in any such position. I think we should be perfectly free to ask him any questions we want relating to the audit of the government.

Mr. Oliver: And he be free to answer.

Mr. Wintermeyer: And he be free to answer, exactly. And to assist us. Mr. Chairman, I cannot emphasize this point too much, and I think in principle it is 100 per cent. right, and I think it is a direction in which we should move immediately.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Chairman, there are two points I would like to raise. This one flows out of a comment of the hon. Prime Minister when he compared the traditional role of the Provincial Auditor here with the Auditor-General in Ottawa, and also from some of the comments of the hon. leader of the Opposition.

I have always been a little puzzled as to whether the vigorous scrutiny of the Auditor-General in Ottawa was part of the tradition of the job, or whether it was assumed by the last incumbent in that position. Further, I wonder whether or not that function should not be assumed here in Ontario, or whether it is specifically precluded by tradition, or statute, or regulation.

I am referring to the role that was played particularly by Watson Sellar in scrutinizing the accounts and coming up each year with a list of the kind of questionable practices that creep into the administration.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is done here, I may say.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I will say to the hon. Prime Minister that I do not want to appear to be critical of the reports that come in from the Provincial Auditor. But they are normally routine reports, with the odd suggestion—such as the one that eventually inspired the appointment of the Gordon committee on government organization—but there is not a listing of the questionable practices that may have emerged in various departments.

The reason I raise this, Mr. Chairman, is this: It seems to me that this procedure has a very salutary effect, because from my experience, living pretty close to politics in Ottawa for a number of years, I know from civil servants in various departments that they had no idea when the spotlight was suddenly going to be turned on their department. It is this kind of scrutiny that keeps people on their toes, and forestalls abuses from creeping in that can grow bigger and bigger all the time.

I am wondering whether that role of the Provincial Auditor—if there is any doubt as to whether or not he should do this kind of thing—can be clarified so that, when future reports of the Provincial Auditor are made, we will have our attention drawn to specific cases of practices that have grown up in the department.

In the experience at Ottawa I do not think it reflected on anybody personally, but it did indicate a degree of independence which established the Auditor-General's role under Watson Sellar in a way that confirmed his position in relationship to the House of Commons, apart from the government.

Mr. Sellar's conduct in that position is well to bear in mind for another reason—since we are always bringing politics into it—that there is no doubt as to where Watson Sellar's political feelings and inclinations lay.

I happened to grow up in an area where Watson Sellar grew up himself. He happened to be the son of a man who was picked to launch and edit a paper to establish the voice of Liberalism in southern Quebec back in the year 1868, and he first came into federal politics as the secretary to hon. Mr. Robb, the Finance Minister, back in the 1920's

In other words, Watson Sellar was a man who came out of an unquestionably Liberal background, but the scathing way in which his reports revealed what was going on in some of the departments in the Liberal regime in Ottawa for a period of 20 years, I suggest had a very salutary effect. I am wondering why this thing is not done in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say this concerning Mr. Sellar, that he was a very admirable person, but I point out that he was not an auditor, he was a lawyer, as a matter of fact. He was chosen for that position for some reasons other than his ability in connection with auditing.

There was a fundamental difference—I do not know whether it still exists—between Ottawa and here. It is a pre-audit here. No account is paid, one understands, without the matter having been passed through the auditor. In Ottawa it is a post-audit—that is, the audit takes place after the event, and then there are criticisms directed against certain things. Ours is a pre-audit system, and I think it is superior in that regard.

However, these comments are all very informing. I can assure the hon. members that the desire of all of us is to improve the situation, to improve methods. I said to the press yesterday, before the delivery of the budget, that the whole work of the Treasury board, in these recent years, has been completely transformed.

As a matter of fact, we recognize that, with the enormous growth of business—that business methods have to keep pace with that.

In my first days as Provincial Treasurer, the work of the Provincial Treasurer in relation to these things actually was pretty perfunctory. It had followed a certain plan that existed for years.

But in these days, the work of the Provincial Treasurer and his staff, day by day, is one of almost a continuous—I should not say a continuous meeting of the Treasury board—but in very many ways detail-wise, with the heads of his department and his controls, it is a continuous process.

The Provincial Auditor is kept intentionally as a person quite independent of the Treasury organization. It is his job and his prerogative to be independent and to be tough and, as a matter of fact, in our system the auditing is done prior to the payment of accounts. I think each account has to be audited before it is paid.

My hon. friend from York South can therefore see the difference in the position that exists here and in Ottawa, because in Ottawa naturally the auditor looks at the matter after the event and asks: "Why did you pay so and so?", "Why did you do that and such and such happened?" Our system here is a different system.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I think the hon. Prime Minister has drawn attention to a very pertinent point, but it would seem to me that it does not necessarily preclude doing the kind of thing that is done at Ottawa. I am sure that if one were to have a heart-to-heart talk with the Provincial Auditor, he could point to practices that are tending to grow up in the normal course of events in various departments. This year he may wonder about them, but pass them; but if they get worse next year, or the year after, some time he feels he is going to have to move.

It would seem to me, without reference to any specific account, or any specific individual or department, that he could draw attention to these practices. That may be the different way in which it would have to be treated here, since ours is a pre-audit rather than a post-audit system.

However, Mr. Chairman, there is a second point I want to raise. I want clarification on this so we will not get into any wrangle in the public accounts committee. The rules of this House, as laid down in the Parliamentary Procedures in Ontario by Lewis, have this to say—I think the hon. member for Woodbine quoted—

Hon. Mr. Frost: From what page is the hon. member reading?

Mr. MacDonald: This is on page 75, with regard to the committee on public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is that his commentary, or is it the rule?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, this is the commentary.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I disagree with that commentary myself.

Mr. MacDonald: I would think they would use that in an even more rigid fashion.

What is the significance of the hon. Prime Minister's comment? Let me put the specific case before hon. members here. If we are going to be restricted—as it appears we are going to be restricted—to the one year, despite the fact that the public accounts committee has not met in the last 10 years, fine. There are one or two cases of individuals who played a peculiarly significant role by commenting on the operations of the Niagara parks commission, and I moved yesterday that these two individuals—one of them a former commissioner—should be asked to come and testify with regard to some of the comments that were made. The chairman of the public accounts committee has taken this under advisement.

If this commentary—as the hon. Prime Minister now chooses to describe it—is accurate, there is no doubt in the world of my rights in doing what I did yesterday, because it states that, after being tabled in the House—that is the accounts—and I am quoting now:

Any member of the committee is at liberty to have any item in the accounts inquired into by the committee and to have witnesses called for the purpose.

Now, what more competent witness could one have than the man who had been commissioner with the Niagara parks commission for years, and with a background of having been 8 times the mayor of Niagara Falls? If for any reason—and I am not going to impute any motives for the moment—the decision is made that such a man cannot be called before the public accounts committee—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think there is any such suggestion.

Mr. MacDonald: I think we should have this clarified.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, no, I was not on the committee, I do not know—but my understanding is that there was no rule or finding or determination that Mr. Ingles, one of the former members of the commission, should not be called. As a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, I think that he would be called, that is my understanding of it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I just want to have this made very clear, because it seems to me that if this rule is as clear as it states, when I made a motion, it should have been accepted without question.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say to my hon. friend that the rules of the House are, of course, available for the hon. members of the House to see.

Regarding Mr. Lewis' comments on those rules which are contained in the preamble—in that work there—in some cases frankly I would not agree with his interpretation of the rule.

Hon. members have to remember that, since that work was written, which I think was about 20 years ago, there have been a great many changes here. For instance, Mr. Lewis states in that book, according to my recollection, that no meeting of the public accounts committee should be held until the budget debate is completed. We have completely changed that provision.

It used to be—I say to my hon. friends here for their information, or they can get the information from some of the hon. gentlemen who sit there—the usual procedure in budget debate was to hold the budget debate and it might last for 3 or 4 weeks—3 weeks, say. At the end of that time, the estimates were passed, and the invariable procedure was to pass them all in one night.

I do not know what my hon. friends would think of this, to start sitting at 7 o'clock or 8 o'clock at night and sit throughout the night until all the estimates were passed. That was the method which obtained in other days.

In my early days here, as a matter of fact, we would come here at 8 o'clock at night and we would sit here all night until all the estimates were passed. The Clerk of the House, or the Chairman, would hum-drum through all these things and, if any questions were asked, I can assure hon. members they were frowned on. I think the hon. member for Grey South would agree with that. But we have changed that entirely.

Today however, the budget is introduced and the day after we are on estimates, consequently the fullest inquiry and debate is possible on the items. I think I have answered the question of the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: With great respect to the hon. Prime Minister, in his inimitable way he has talked all around the question and blurred it.

I submit the quotation that I read is basic to the operation of the public accounts committee, namely, that a member can have called any witness able to give testimony on any particular account.

To talk as the hon. Prime Minister has done about many other things, and to suggest—at least, this was the implication of suggestion—that this rule is not correct, leads me to suggest that if the hon. Prime Minister would go and look into “May,” he will find he is attacking the very basis of “May’s” rules with regard to public accounts.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say this, that I think that what Mr. Lewis said was quite correct except this, and this was one of the fundamentals, that first of all there is the reference to the committee itself. No committee acquires any powers unless they are given here. And the second thing is in the discretion to be exercised by the committee itself.

I think the hon. member will find that the discretions will be wide enough and fair enough, and I imagine that at the conclusion of this session he will be passing a vote of thanks to the government for their magnanimity in giving the information that is required.

Mr. Oliver: On this question of the public accounts committee, I just want to say this—I have to get this off my chest. It has to do with the conduct of the public accounts committee, the general over-all conduct.

My hon. friend talked today about the new order of things he is bringing in to these committees, that we are going to have additional avenues of investigation, and all that was not clear would be made clear.

Well, I want to say right now that if the further meetings of the public accounts committee are carried on in the manner that the one was the other day, we will not have more investigations of a remedial nature, but we will have a Donnybrook down there.

The way that was carried on the other day, Mr. Chairman, was this. Nobody was sworn. It was a nice, neighbourly friendly gathering.

An hon. member who sits up in the back over there, a lawyer, took it upon himself to be the commissioned lawyer, and he asked the witness certain questions. When he could not get the question answered from the witness, he turned to someone in the audience and he would ask them what they had to say about it. Finally it got to the place where he was questioning people in the audience as to what they knew about that particular matter.

Now, Mr. Chairman—and I think the hon. Prime Minister will agree with me—if we are going to carry on the public accounts committee in an orderly fashion, the witnesses should be sworn before the committee, and evidence should be taken in a proper way. What kind of an investigation is this we are carrying on? We are not getting anywhere that way.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, Mr. Chairman, I am glad to hear those comments, but I point out that this is entirely out of order. However, perhaps it has been beneficial to have this discussion.

Mr. Grossman: Mr. Chairman, with all due respect—

Mr. Chairman: I would rule that—

Mr. Grossman: Well, as chairman of the committee, certain charges have been made—

Mr. Chairman: Well, I think we will deal with that—

Mr. Grossman: I asked the members if there was anything, in their view, I could do to any hon. member who rose and kept the floor for a considerable period of time. Now, I got no objections and I could not see how there could be. I thought the hon. member carried it on too long, but there was nothing I could do about it. In respect to him questioning members of the committee, the hon. members will recall that I did draw that to his attention and I asked him to please address his remarks to the chair.

Mr. Chairman: I will now return you to vote 1601.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): No, Mr. Chairman, I want to address some questions. I was a little puzzled as to the basis on which depreciation was included in the accounts of the liquor control board.

As I understand it, when we had the chief commissioner of the liquor control board before the committee on commissions, he indicated that the assets of the liquor control board, the liquor stores, were shown in their statement at $163 for all the stores in Ontario.

He further said that if a store costing $100,000 is built this year, or in the current fiscal year, it is immediately depreciated in that year from $100,000 down to $1.

Now, I want to know if this is a standard procedure that carries through all government departments, if this is a standard accounting system of depreciation, and if it is, I want to know the basis on which it is worked out, and, finally, if this only applies to the liquor control board and not to any other department.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I do say to the hon. member that it is a matter which he may very properly discuss in the committee which is presently dealing with that matter. But with the liquor control board this is the situation. Actually there is not, nor should there be, any depreciation. These things are paid for in cash and they are, of course, by that Act actually written off. They are not carried as assets of the commission. It is not necessary that it have a perfect balance sheet as in the ordinary process. These things are paid for and they are done with. Now, that is the situation.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Why is it not necessary to have a balance sheet?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, there could be.

Mr. Whicher: There should be.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There could be a statement of all their assets and their holdings, and I suppose their stock-in-trade. I have not looked at their auditor's report, to be quite frank with hon. members, and therefore I am arguing somewhat in the dark.

But I would say this, that if, for instance, a building is erected at a cost of $100,000, in line with ordinary business usage that amount would be set up, it would be depreciated year by year—perhaps over a period of 5 or 10 years—and that depreciation would be charged against corporation and personal income tax and so on.

In the liquor control board, the procedure has been different, and I do not see why we would vary that or change it. If a store is built, actually the board submits to the Treasury its outline of works for the coming year, and they are simply written off against profit. I think this is a more desirable procedure. There is no reason for entering into a more cumbersome method.

Mr. Whicher: Then why do we not do it with the other departments?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think there is anything to be gained by it, nothing whatever.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, my point in this is, if what the hon. Prime Minister says is reasonable for the liquor control board, it should be reasonable for all departments.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Let me point out to the hon. member that one of the arguments advanced by his hon. leader, and no doubt will be advanced by himself—and with which I do not agree by the way—is that we should pay for all capital commitments in cash.

Well, I would say to the hon. member, the minute one pays for a capital commitment in cash there is no depreciation, it is paid for, and therefore depreciation does not come into the item at all. We are not paying corporation tax and we do not propose to.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes. Well, Mr. Chairman, once again it is a very interesting—

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is irrelevant.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, it may be irrelevant, but may we just spend a moment on this?

I think what the hon. member for York Centre is really concerned about is the practice of this particular commission, in the past, to literally purchase and build stores without permission of the Legislature, if you will. That is the criticism that the hon. member for Brant made last year, and I think we are determined that that should stop.

I will agree that I think a lot of misunderstanding has arisen over this question of depreciation. I am quite prepared to say that there may be differences even among our own hon. members in this respect, but I do not think that this requires any real party solidarity.

Personally, I do not think that public buildings should be depreciated—that is, buildings which the government builds. After all, they are building them day in and day out, and they are going to be building a store this year and next year and the year after. The only thing I am concerned about is that, somewhere in the public accounts, or somewhere in the books of the province these assets should be shown at a real value rather than at $1.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, there might be merit in that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Yes, I think their value should definitely be shown.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I point out to the hon. leader of the Opposition that this discussion would better take place under the items related to it. Actually, it has really nothing to do with this item at all.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, the point is that we are discussing the Provincial Auditor's estimates and the auditor's system, and I think the important point in this whole discussion is that there be a system that applies equally through all departments of government.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It does.

Mr. Singer: It does not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it does.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Certainly it does.

Mr. Whicher: Well, Mr. Chairman, I would like to have the hon. Provincial Treasurer point out how it does. Show me only one other building in The Department of Highways, in the water resources commission, or whatever it may be, where we spent $100,000 in one year and depreciated it to $1 immediately. Show me one building.

Hon. Mr. Allan: There is no depreciation in government.

Mr. Nixon: Well, it is written off.

Mr. Whicher: It is written off.

Mr. Nixon: Show me one of the provincial highways buildings written off to $1.

Now, we read the report of the Gordon committee, and they were evidently struck with the oddity of this particular procedure in the liquor commission. When I tried to ask the chairman about this very question at the last meeting, he said: "I do not know, you will have to ask the auditors."

Well, we are dealing with the auditor now, and the estimates of his department, and if we cannot clear this matter up now, I do not know whether we ever can clear it up.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nixon: If this is the proper system of auditing in the liquor control board, then it is the proper system of writing off capital for Hydro or even for The Department of Highways within the government.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say to my hon. friend that I do not have the auditor's report before me, nor have I looked at it. However, I would say to my hon. friend that I think the statement he wants is in the auditor's report. But, if it is not, I do not have the slightest objection—provided it does not become a matter of accounting practice—I have no objection to showing the value of these assets and buildings. As a matter of fact, it might be a good thing to show our bankers some day. I have no objection to that at all.

I would agree with my hon. friend that the item of depreciation certainly has no relation to this matter. If it did, then—instead of paying cash for the building—we would be carrying it in some type of a deferred account and paying for it over a period of 5 or 10 years, or whatever would be determined, which would only be a complicating factor.

If there is a statement of the undertakings of the business, if one wants to put it this way, I would have no objection to showing them. I think the best way to show them would be to give the cost price and the date of erection, and then the item of depreciation. Not much would be gained by putting an item of depreciation in there, because there would be very oftentimes depreciation because of the growth of communities and change in values and so on.

Those things could be appraised from time to time, but I think I would have no objection to perhaps showing on statements that a store was erected at so-and-so and the size of the lot, and the cost of the property, and the amount of money that was put into it, at a certain time. If that would be helpful, I have no objection to it.

Mr. Singer: Well, Mr. Chairman, my point is that it should be consistent right across the board, and should not make a difference in the liquor control board where perhaps the thought might be not to show so big a surplus—

Mr. Whicher: That is right.

Mr. Singer: —and show it in other places, as the hon. Treasurer was doing yesterday when I think he said we had $1.25 billion in capital investments in the province over the past half-dozen years. If we are going to show it in our costs in one place, we should show it everywhere, including the liquor control board, where the two pictures should be shown in the statement.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, we will have a look at that. There might be some merit in that.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I do not feel like letting the hon. Prime Minister get away with this so easily, because I have been here for some years now and the same thing has come up before, and he has been nodding his head and trying to fool all of us for a long time.

The brutal fact is this, that he is trying to hide the fact that there are more liquor profits in the province of Ontario than meets the eye, more by far.

Mr. Crossman: Why would he want to hide that?

Mr. Whicher: Now, here we have the situation. Here we have the big store down on Front Street, I believe it is, that cost around $7 million. We have other stores built across the province of Ontario that cost in the neighbourhood of $20 million, taken out of liquor profits in this province. Today, according to the liquor control board's statement, they are shown at a value of $163.

Now, how idiotic can we get? It is simply not right, and I think the people of this province have the right to know the true value.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would point out—

Mr. Whicher: Just a minute.

Now, here we have over $20 million that have been taken out of liquor profits over a period of years now depreciated to $163.

Mr. Chairman, I asked the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) what would happen to the very capable way Hydro is being run, as far as depreciation and capital accounts and so forth are looked after—if it were run the same way as the liquor control board.

This is an outstanding example. It is the only example that I have been able to find where we have depreciations of—I do not know what they are, a million per cent.?—but in any event, it goes down from $20 million to $163, and it is ridiculous.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think I can cut to the heart of this for my hon. friend. Suppose the gross liquor profits are X dollars per year, and our costs of buildings amount to Y dollars, the total profits are undoubtedly reduced by that amount. There is no doubt about that. I think I would agree with his premise there.

Now, the point is this: Of course, the profits of the liquor control board, the thing this House is primarily interested in—this is an oversimplification and I do not want people to distort what I am saying—is this, the actual focal point, of course, is the amount of profit. We can call it net profit if we want to—the amount of net profit that comes in to us as a matter of revenue.

The argument is this, that the net profit which is shown this year as $76 million, but if we took those items, the gross profit would then be $85 million or $90 million.

Mr. Whicher: That is the point.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would not object to that argument, beyond saying this, that our tradition here is this.

First of all, in connection with the building of liquor stores, I think people are entitled to service. If we go far astray in those things, of course, we reduce the net profit. I think that the argument from the standpoint that these gentlemen are advancing is this: Are we giving to the people the services they are entitled to? We are trying to do that.

Mr. Whicher: No, that is not true. The point is, is the hon. Prime Minister giving the people the true facts?

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, I will say this: I would not have the slightest objection to giving to this House a statement of the amounts of money that have been invested directly from gross profits, if we put it that way, into assets.

Mr. Whicher: Profits, net profit.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes. Well, no, it is not from net profit, that profit is the amount that is shown in our account. We would show these items with the gross profits. I have not the slightest objection to that, and if that is something that is causing loss of sleep to the hon. members, I would be delighted to do that, and that is not just a promise that is made—I never make promises that I intend to break, I always carry them out.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Of course the hon. Prime Minister does.

Some Liberal hon. members: Oh, oh, oh!

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will consult with the auditors and others, and I will have a look at it. I know that the Treasury board has itself kept a very close control over the investment of profit in these things, because it affects our budgetary position. Now that, I think, is the situation.

I would be very glad to discuss this with the commissioner, and with the auditors, and I do not see any reason why we should not show a statement as to the amount that we actually write off. If that is what is proposed and asked, I have not the slightest objection.

As a matter of fact, if it shows really that the profits of the liquor control board amount to $90 million, and that we invested $15 million back in services for the public, I have no objection to showing it, none whatever.

Mr. MacDonald: That should have been done years ago.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Next year, I think, $1.5 million is budgeted for that purpose, and it will actually assume the value of $1. I can see the hon. members' point of view, that if we take $1.5 million—and that is what we will do next year—into new buildings, it does seem to be an anomaly to show that at the end of the year at $1. I would agree with that.

Mr. Nixon: There is another angle to this, too. The liquor control board has been entirely different, in category situation, than any other board in this province, because the law is so specific that every dollar of net profit must be returned to the Treasury, so that the revenues of this province are directly affected by the policy of the liquor control board.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not know that I would agree with the hon. member on that for this reason, that there is a section in the Act that allows the liquor control board to buy and own land and build. It is under that section. My hon. friend discussed this same matter here last year, and I think that we agreed with him that the board should place before the Legislature a statement of its proposed spending.

Mr. Nixon: Well, that is what I wanted to speak about right now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That will be done.

Mr. Nixon: Now, did the hon. Prime Minister see the statement that the chairman tabled last year?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I did not see it.

Mr. Nixon: Well, it would be interesting to him to take a look at it, because he said he proposed to spend $1 million in building liquor stores, but for obvious reasons he could not tell us where he would be spending it. Well, I asked him in committee the other day what his obvious reasons were, because they were not obvious to me. "Oh, well," he said, "We have not acquired the property yet. We have not completed the detail." Now, do hon. members think that is a satisfactory explanation?

Mr. Grossman: Oh, he gave a more detailed explanation than that.

Mr. Nixon: Well, I do not know that a $350-million agency of this government has to sneak into some little community at night when nobody is watching them and grab a parcel of land.

Mr. Whicher: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nixon: The hon. Minister of Highways—we know 3 years ahead of time where highway No. 401 is going through the riding of Brant.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Remember that on the estimates now.

Mr. Nixon: He has no trouble in getting his land. The Hydro has power of expropriation. They do not have to be pushed around by anybody, and the Hydro, just the same as The Department of Highways, would see to it that the owner of that property, which must be expropriated in the public service, is properly recompensed. So I can see no reason for this secrecy that goes on. In fact, it makes me very suspicious that something improper is going on.

Mr. MacDonald: And there usually is.

Mr. Nixon: And there usually is.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I will tell the hon. member what I will do. I will come down myself to the public accounts committee and I will look at this, and I will see that he gets the fullest of information. I might just do that.

Some Liberal hon. members: That will be a change.

Mr. MacDonald: That will be a change, and we would like it right now.

Mr. Nixon: I say, Mr. Chairman, that these profits of the liquor control board should come up to Treasury.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Exactly.

Mr. Nixon: Now, when they go through the hands of the Provincial Treasurer and the consolidated revenue fund, they are refined, they are purified, nobody knows it is liquor money, they are as pure as the driven snow. If the liquor control board wants to spend $4 million—and that is the policy of this Legislature—in capital expenditure, then the hon. members of this House should know they are going to spend it, and the hon. members of this House should vote that money back to the liquor control board if they are going to do this construction work.

I say there is a question at issue as to whether The Department of Public Works, who should have an adequate organization to build these public buildings, should not do the work, but they are so inefficient and slow that they never get the job done.

Take that case in Sault Ste. Marie. I feel maybe I owe that city an apology. Had any smart organization been doing that job, like Loblaw's or A & P, that building would have been built today and used to do business. But I doubt if The Department of Public Works has even dug a hole yet for the foundation.

These are some of the problems that face hon. members of this Legislature who have a responsibility in these questions and take it seriously.

I agree with the hon. Prime Minister, we want to see the public gets proper services out of these liquor stores, and if the present arrangements are not adequate and satisfactory, and the buildings are a disgrace to the province as they are in some instances, let us build a new one. I am all for that policy.

But I say the hon. members of this House have the right, the obligation, the duty, to know what is going on. I feel very strongly on this issue, that we are entitled to know the details about the money that is going to be expended in the current year, for which we are voting in the other departments.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Prime Minister to elaborate slightly on the fact that the Provincial Auditor gives a pre-audit instead of a post-audit. On any business that I have had anything to do with—well, I would like to know who does the post-audit.

Any auditor I have ever heard about in any business, in any line, in any government, including Ottawa—with the exception of our Ontario government—looks after things after the bills have been passed to see that everything is all right. So I suggest that it is not at all fair to the public in the province of Ontario just to have a running audit.

The hon. Prime Minister said just a few minutes ago that Mr. Cotnam put these bills through, or suggested that he allowed them to be passed, before they were actually paid. Now, I honestly feel that, in a $1 billion business like the province of Ontario, we should have somebody look this situation over after they are paid, for the safety of the public.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, he does too, but after the accounts are processed they are paid. We would not want to depart from that.

Vote 1601 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, OFFICE OF THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR

On vote 1101:

Mr. Nixon: When does the hon. Prime Minister want to make a statement to the House about this new Government House we are going to have? He gave it to the public right after the last election. Why did he not make it before the election so we could discuss it? What is the situation now?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, I do not think that the hon. member should stir me up into making references at this time, on the weekend, about that.

Concerning this old problem, somewhere about 1915, I think $1 million was invested in Chorley Park. I was interested to read in the paper the other day that there is a hole in the roof and that there is a skating rink, I think, in what used to be the halls of that house. It used to be filled with antiques that were collected by this province since the days of Governor Simcoe. As a matter of fact, some of Governor Simcoe's furniture and other things were in that house.

Now, these hon. gentlemen here opposite—there are two of them sitting there—had to do with taking $1 million, and they might as well have thrown it down in the bay.

I have had people from across this province write to me and say: "Mr. Frost, we acquired certain articles from this house. We acquired them for 50 cents or $1 at a sale that was held up there somewhere around the university grounds," and they have offered them back.

I had a letter from a very distinguished Liberal, whose name I will not divulge here today, who offered to give back very useful articles.

I would say that, of all the acts of vandalism ever perpetrated by a government that was supposed to represent the traditions and aspirations of the great old province of Ontario, I have never seen such a thing in my life.

That has been our position. We have been given, by a very great citizen of this province, Dr. Samuel, a very beautiful residence. Now, that will help to repair the damage which these people did to the prestige of this province, and, as a matter of fact, some of the other things. I have not been able yet to cover some of the things that they did in connection with damaging the credit of this old province.

I am delighted that this beautiful residence will be the home of the Lieutenant-Governor.

Some people have already offered antiques and furnishings which came from the old residence which will help to repair the damage which was done by hon. members opposite, and that act of vandalism.

I would say about Dr. Samuel, that grand old citizen, over 90 years of age, that he has been very ill. He is still in the hands of his nurses and his doctor, and I can only wish him, on behalf of all of us—including the hon. gentlemen opposite—our very best wishes for his early recovery.

Mr. Oliver: Mr. Chairman, the complete absurdity that the hon. Prime Minister has just indulged in is revealed by the fact that he came into office in 1943 and it is now 1960, and he did nothing at all about this terrible thing, this terrible inconvenience—

Mr. Nixon: Why did not the hon. Prime Minister fix the roof?

Mr. Oliver: —the travesty, in almost 20 years.

Now the hon. Prime Minister comes back and he says to this House what a great loss it was to the province. Yet, in almost 20 years, he has done nothing whatever to repair that loss. Does the hon. Prime Minister think it was the loss that he proclaimed it to be? And if he does, why did he not do something about it in that 20 years instead of now?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, I would be delighted to explain that. Here is what happened.

These hon. gentlemen opposite took the residence of the then King's representative and now the Queen's representative, and they determined to close it up. They gave it away to the hospital for sick children who found that it was of absolutely no use to them, and they finally gave it to the federal government.

The last federal government let the holes go in the roof, and so on, so there is a skating rink up there at the present time. Now they propose, I think to give it over to the city of Toronto, because they do not know what in the world to do with it.

My hon. friend raises this question, which has some relevance. He says this government has been in office for a number of years, why did we not do something about it?

Here was our problem. If that had been the only problem, it would have been quite simple to deal with it. In this province, the housing conditions for the working people and others in this province were in a deplorable condition. The Liberals had done nothing. I would say that we had to do first things first.

After 9 years of lack of government and foresight, and the vandalisms that they perpetrated, it took us a great period of time to catch up. Moreover, the great growth of this province, stimulated by this government, has kept us busy keeping abreast of the things that are necessary to be done, and I would say this, that I have been looking around for somebody like my great friend Dr. Samuel to come to the rescue of the government.

Mr. Nixon: Did the hon. Prime Minister ever hear the old fable about looking a gift horse in the mouth? What about the hole in the roof?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, strictly as a fable, I follow the words of that fable entirely.

Mr. Nixon: Well, Mr. Chairman, we will at least say this for Mitch Hepburn, that he told the people of the province what he intended to do, and he did it. They knew that he was going to do it when they elected him to office.

The hon. Prime Minister can come back here, years after Mitch is dead, and vilify him all he likes, and call it vandalism, and anything else, but he sat right here in 1937—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I protested it.

Mr. Nixon. The hon. Prime Minister did not. He never opened his mouth. He was as meek as a mouse. He was afraid that Mitch would jump on him.

Immediately after this past election was over, the hon. Prime Minister announced this wonderful gift which he had known of for two years or more. Why did he not announce that before the election? Why did he not come up in Brant and make it the issue against the member for Brant? I will be glad to meet the hon. Prime Minister in Brant any time he wants to come up and debate this business of Government House.

The hon. Prime Minister knows about the chaotic condition of the finances of this province under the Henry government.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, they were terrible.

Mr. Nixon: And there was some place that we had to start to rectify that condition, and we said very frankly to the public, the taxpayers of this province: "We are not going to tax you any longer to maintain a residence for the Lieutenant-Governor in this province."

If the hon. Prime Minister wants to make an issue of that, all right. But what of the years that have passed since then? We have had Lieutenant-Governor after Lieutenant-Governor occupy the position with distinction, and their services have not in any way been curtailed because of the fact that we did not have a white elephant on the hands of the taxpayers in which they could live.

If we had more than two or three visitors there at a time, we had to get some outside caterers to come in to serve those visitors. I do not think the public service has suffered in the least because of the lack of a Government House, and certainly a lot of money has been saved for the taxpayers of this province.

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend is living in the past.

Mr. MacDonald: Is the hon. Prime Minister going to restore the legislative council next?

Mr. Nixon: Now, as a matter of fact, Mr. Chairman, there is already one Government House in the province of Ontario, and the taxpayers of this province pay more than 50 per cent. for that Government House. Certainly it would be nice to have a palace here in Toronto. I know my brother-in-law, the mayor of Hamilton, would like to have a palace there to entertain distinguished visitors when they come, as they do so frequently to his city.

Mr. Whicher: We only have one dictator in Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I do not think we need any palace to entertain.

Mr. Nixon: We have in the city of Toronto the finest hotel in the British Empire, somebody tells me. I have not been in all of them myself. We have the most adequate services there that anybody could desire. One can have complete privacy or one can be the centre of a banquet of 2,000 people, and frankly I cannot see the necessity for going back to this system of the Government House.

I want to know how much it is going to cost a year to maintain that 30-room monstrosity, or whatever one wants to call it.

Mr. Grossman: That is not generous.

Mr. Nixon: Generous?

Mr. Grossman: Well, the man is giving us a home.

Mr. Nixon: All right, all right, so the man is giving us a home.

I want to know, for instance, how much in succession duties this province will lose. I hope the distinguished gentleman will live for many, many years yet. He has been an outstanding citizen of this province.

But here is a 30-room house. Who in heaven would ever want it? What are we going to do with it when we do get it? That house is probably worth $300,000 or $400,000. Now, if that is taken off the estate, I hope it is not for 10 years or 40 years yet, but it will certainly make a tremendous difference to the amount of succession duty that is paid to the province of Ontario and to the Dominion of Canada.

So I would like to know if all the features, the facets of this situation, have been considered by the hon. Prime Minister.

I am not speaking for the Liberal party on this. They can repudiate me if they like on this matter. But I say to you, Mr. Chairman, that I have no apologies, whatever, to make to this House or the citizens of this province over the action that was taken by Mr. Hepburn at that time, and the hon. Prime Minister sat right here. We continued with Government House as long as Dr. Bruce wanted it, and there was not a peep out of the hon. Prime Minister. Why did not the hon. Prime Minister raise his objection at that time, and not years after Mr. Hepburn is dead and gone?

If the hon. Prime Minister had done his duty, he would have seen that the holes in the roof were repaired.

Mr. Reaume: If Hepburn were here now, he would beat the hon. Prime Minister up.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is all right. I would say that my hon. friend from Brant has been here so long that he tends to live very much in the past.

Mr. Nixon: Mr. Chairman, who brings up this past every day, every day?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, Mr. Chairman, might I say this, that first of all my hon. friend asked me why I did not raise this matter before the election. There were two reasons. First of all, Dr. Samuel asked at the time that his gift should be kept from publicity, kept secret at the time, but I will be quite frank with him, another reason was because I did not want to win all the seats.

Mr. Whicher: But he never came into—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I get down to another reason which I think my hon. friend will agree with? The position of Lieutenant-Governor in this province is a very honourable one, which I am sure that all the hon. members of this House feel will persist. As a matter of fact, we have been quite fortunate in the type of men who have accepted this office since Dr. Bruce's time, and have occupied that position with very great dignity, and have done exceedingly fine jobs for the people of Ontario. They are men of wealth and means.

It would be improper for me to elaborate on that, except to say this, that they can afford to acquire very fine residences in this locality which is difficult for somebody else to do. I think that it is a great thing that a man of ordinary means, a poor man as it were, could come in here and occupy the position of similar dignity. There are very many that my hon. friend might name in this province who would make very, very worthy representatives of the Queen, who probably are barred at the present time. It may be some day that the hon. member would make a good Lieutenant-Governor.

Mr. Nixon: I might tell the hon. Prime Minister something that would surprise him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: As a matter of fact, I think that is right. As a matter of fact, my hon. friend was offered the Lieutenant-Governorship at one time. Why did he not take it?

Mr. Nixon: I wanted to be a member of the House.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He could not go down and entertain guests in the station yard. I think it would have been a wonderful thing if the hon. member for Brant had been able to accept the Lieutenant-Governorship. He is a wonderful fellow. We are doing just this for him, to make it possible that, if the turn of the wheel comes around again, he will not have to refuse. I think that is all we have to say on that subject.

Vote 1101 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE

On vote 801:

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Chairman, The Department of Insurance is asking on this occasion for the same amount of money that was voted last year. It was one of those departments that was able to keep within its estimates to the extent of something like $15,000. Therefore this amount, with the normal increments and so forth, is still sufficient for its present needs.

The staff consists of some 64. There are 6 real estate inspectors, 13 credit union examiners, 6 insurance examiners. The department has 6 regional credit union offices established to assist in the work of examining records of unions which, by the way, are also done by the credit union's own auditors from time to time, at Windsor, London, Hamilton, Kitchener, North Bay and Ottawa.

The Department of Insurance administers the following Acts. The Insurance Act, The Loan and Trust Corporations Act, The Real Estate Business Brokers Act, The Credit Unions Act, The Collection Agencies Act, The Prepaid Hospital Medical Services Act, and The Investment Contracts Act.

There will be the filing with the inspector of insurance of certain material under The Labour Relations Act if that particular amendment that was mentioned by the hon. Minister of Labour goes through in that bill.

There is, however, one matter that I want to mention, at this time, in connection with The Department of Insurance. I am not certain at the moment whether or not there would be the need for an additional Act to be administered by The Department of Insurance. But of this much I am certain, and that is that, in the field of finance, if the present method of some finance companies in dealing with second and third mortgages, and the treatment that is handed out to people hard-pressed for money, is allowed to continue in its present state, there will certainly be cases that will either end up with prosecutions for fraud in the criminal field, or there will be obvious need for some control over that type of financial company. If the latter is the procedure followed, it will be by a further Act which would put them under The Department of Insurance.

Let me just assure the House, in connection with this, that there is going on, at the present time, a very extensive study in relation to certain cases that have been brought to my attention. Before this House prorogues, I will make some recommendation to the House in relation to that subject.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Attorney-General something about the minimum fees in connection with real estate—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, might I say that I have no desire to hurry these estimates along at all, and perhaps there are questions that the hon. members might want to ask. Perhaps it would be better to let this item stand over.

Might I say to the hon. member opposite that frankly I had hoped—this perhaps is not the proper place to say it, it should be when Mr. Speaker is in the chair, but perhaps I might be pardoned for mentioning it here—I had hoped, sir, in accordance with the arrangement I arrived at with my hon. friend the other day, to complete the Throne debate down to the point where the two concluding speeches might be given on Monday afternoon.

As the hon. Minister of Labour said, I do not wish to proceed with the labour bill in any hurried way, and I would rather like, as soon as we have the Opposition criticism to the budget, to proceed with that. I would like to get that item out of the way.

In spite of that I did say today—that it would not be necessary to have a night session on Monday night—I think perhaps it would be the part of good business, as much as I do not like night sessions, to clean up The Department of Travel and Publicity estimates and this item, and to clean up the Throne debate if we could on Monday night up to the point where we could have the concluding speeches at some suitable time.

Mr. Thomas: Call a vote on Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Pardon?

Mr. Thomas: Call the vote on Tuesday?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I would not call it on Tuesday, no, because on Tuesday the speech of the financial critic (Mr. Whicher) would be held, and perhaps the speech of the hon. member of the CCF party would follow—the hon. member for Woodbine or whoever it might be.

I think under those circumstances, perhaps hon. members would allow me to alter the arrangement that I made for Monday.

Mr. Chairman, I move that the committee rise and report certain resolutions, and report progress in one resolution.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report that it has come to certain resolutions, made progress on one resolution, moves the adoption of the report and begs leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, in moving the adjournment of the House, the order of business for Monday would be the estimates of The Department of Insurance, and The Department of Travel and Publicity, after which would be the Throne debate, and if it is necessary to hold a night session, we will hold a night session.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 1.10 of the clock, p.m.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

The fourteenth annual report of The Department of Travel and Publicity, Ontario, for the calendar year, 1959.

Mr. J. Gould (Bracondale): Before the orders of the day, may I be permitted a question directed to the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), of which Mr. Speaker has already received notice? This is the question.

Is the hon. Attorney-General aware that, because of the lack of a transcript of evidence, one John Bovey has been in Guelph reformatory for 9 months waiting to have his appeal heard?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Mr. Speaker, I would say that the appeal of Mr. Bovey has been facilitated, and I appreciate my hon. friend bringing that to my attention.

I am pretty proud of the general administration of justice in this province, and if occasionally there develops a situation where there is undue delay I am very glad to have that information brought to my attention, whether it comes from this side of the House or from the other side.

In this particular case, I may say that, as soon as it was drawn to my attention, I took immediate steps to inquire into it. The evidence was lodged with the court of appeal last Thursday or Friday. The chief justice of Ontario was communicated with, and he has assured me that he will see that this case is disposed of as quickly as possible. I believe counsel for the accused has indicated that March 7 is the earliest date that he could be ready to go on with it. Now, may I say, if I may be permitted, sir, that delays of that sort are very exceptional here in this province. Let me illustrate a recent case.

This has been a case that many people have taken a great deal of interest in. The crime itself was committed early in June of last year; the arrest was made within a week of the commission of the crime; the preliminary inquiry was held, the trial before a supreme court judge was held; an appeal to the appeal court of Ontario took place; and application for leave to appeal to the supreme court of Canada was made a few days ago and refused—all within a period of about 8 months from the time of the crime.

It is certainly the desire of all those associated with me in the Attorney-General's Department to give expeditious, but at all times fair, administration.

Mr. I. Haskett (Ottawa South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I pray indulgence to draw to the attention of the House a matter of some moment.

On Friday last, at Squaw Valley, a fellow club-mate of the Ottawa ski club, Miss Anne Heggteit won the Olympic women's slalom, and with it the world's alpine combined title, bringing to Canada its first gold medal in skiing in Olympic winter sports history.

I would hope the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) might find it an occasion to express the pride we all feel, and to extend to our heroine the congratulations of the people of Ontario.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Sir, I am very glad indeed to take this as the occasion of saying something about Miss Heggveit's great accomplishment at Squaw Valley. I watched her by television, and I must admit that it was breathtaking at least to see this young lady go down those slopes and take all the gates, the twists and turns, and finally sail out at the bottom and relatively calm going at that point, as what was to be the obvious winner.

I take this opportunity, sir, of congratulating her, and I would say that, if she and some of the others whom I shall mention find it possible to come to this House, I am sure that we would be very glad to greet them all, as people who have carried high the banner of our country.

Now, sir, I should like to mention some others. I should like to mention Barbara Wagner of Toronto and Bob Paul who also brought a gold medal to Canada—the top award for figure skating.

I should also like to congratulate our favourites, the Kitchener-Waterloo Dutchmen, on a very fine accomplishment on Sunday, and indeed throughout that series. I watched them with interest on Sunday afternoon. I saw with my own eyes, as many did here through the wonders of television, the game that was played by our Canadian representatives.

Now, sir, to win second place in a series such as that is indeed an accomplishment of which they can be proud and we can be proud.

After all, the basis of the Olympic Games, or in fact any sport, really is good sportsmanship. A team or an individual who can be a good loser is an honour to his or her country, as is one who is able to come home with the top award.

I watched a portion of the United States game with the Russian team, and I am sure we would all want to congratulate that United States team which went into that series as a more-or-less pick-up affair. They really won it basically because of the great team spirit they showed, and I think that we all would want to congratulate them.

I would also say this, that many of us here watched the game on Sunday afternoon, and I know that you would want me, Mr. Speaker, to congratulate the Russian team for a very great effort. I think we have to remember this—this is a relatively new game to their players. I was impressed with the skating ability and the stick-handling ability, and above everything else the team spirit, and I think the fact is that great sportsmanship was shown by that team, by the United States team, by our own team and by others.

This is a contribution to understanding in this world during a time when understanding is so greatly needed.

Now, sir, I am very glad to have the opportunity of saying these words.

Might I say that if it could be arranged, these winners—Barbara Wagner, Bob Paul and Anne Heggveit, and I would say Bobby Bauer, would he be the right man—a great fellow, a great player—I think if they would come here, we would be very glad to congratulate them all in person. But if they are unable to come, we use this opportunity for expressing our appreciation and our very best wishes, and also our appreciation of the sportsmanship of all of those who took part in the games at Squaw Valley, for the fine efforts they made on behalf of all their countries and all of their teams.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I may be permitted to join in the words of the hon. member for Ottawa South and the hon. Prime Minister, I can do not better than underscore what the hon. Prime Minister has said.

International athletic competition is one area wherein representatives from various countries can come together in a friendly and competitive spirit. I think that the example that has been set by all representatives of Canada in the Olympic competitions at Squaw Valley is something we can all be proud of.

As the hon. Prime Minister has said, it is not absolutely essential that one win, but certainly that one and all members who participate demonstrate a keen competitive spirit and the essence of good sportsmanship.

One of the competing teams, that is the Dutchmen hockey team, has a favoured spot in my particular instance, of course. But I would add my congratulations to those outstanding athletes, representative of Canada, who did an exemplary job demonstrating, not only good sportsmanship, but very outstanding athletic ability in the skiing and skating competitions.

With respect to the hockey team, Mr. Speaker, I would draw your attention to one simple fact, and that is that they lost by one goal, that is one goal to the United States, a team which, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, demonstrated something that is essential in any competition, and that is the real will to win.

Now I assure hon. members that the Dutchmen had the will to win when they left. I am sure that they had it throughout the series. But, as the result of the particular game wherein they were defeated, they were eliminated from first place. Their demonstration on Saturday however, I am sure, afforded all Canadians the realization that we in Canada can still demonstrate real agility and ability to play this game. What is important, Mr. Speaker, as the hon. Prime Minister has said, maybe we have taught others how to play this very interesting, effective, and I think, clean game—and that may be more important than any other individual contribution that we can make.

Like all hon. members of this House, I want to convey my congratulations and best wishes, and I commend the hon. Prime Minister for his gesture—and I think it is a very exemplary one—to invite the representatives, the winners and representatives of the team to this House so we can, in public fashion, express our great appreciation and thanks to them.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, I am quite sure that we in our group would wish to be associated with the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition. One important thing that the hon. Prime Minister said was—it does not matter whether they won or lost but how they played the game.

We had a personal interest in the “Dutchie” team for the simple reason that there were 4 members of the Whitby team, and two native-born Oshawans in Attersley and Simmons, so we are very, very pleased to know that they played an important part in winning that game yesterday for the Dutchies.

We wish to associate ourselves with the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. leader of the Opposition in congratulating them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day might I say something to the House about the order of business?

Tomorrow we will proceed with the Budget debate, with the address of the Opposition's hon. speaker, as well as other hon. members of the House. Now, sir, we meet at 3 of the clock, and that sometimes give little enough opportunity to deal with these things. I think, sir, tomorrow night, that we should have a night session, and we would devote ourselves entirely to the Budget debate from the time of sitting at 3 o'clock on.

Wednesday, of course, will be a day devoted to committee work.

On Thursday, I think it might be well if we proceeded with the second reading of the labour bill—that is, the bill to amend The Labour Relations Act. I think that if we set aside Thursday for that debate, we will see the state of business tomorrow evening before we make any decision as to whether a night session might be necessary there.

I think that it would be desirable—I mean subject to the wishes of the hon. members of the House—that the labour bill go to the labour committee, where the various sections can be gone over with the greatest of care as was outlined by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) here the other day.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, may I ask the hon. Prime Minister firstly, will there be a night session tonight?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, Mr. Speaker, the second question is this—what about the Throne debate? It will continue this evening, I presume?

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Is it the hon. Prime Minister's intention to wind it up this evening except for the two—

Hon. Mr. Frost: No. Well, I would say this to the hon. leader of the Opposition, that if we can dispose of the debate tonight, other than the two concluding speeches, I think it would be desirable. On the other hand it is not mandatory, but if we could reach that stage, I think it would be a satisfactory object.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, the only thing—and I do not want to emphasize this—is that we have, I believe, 6 speakers. On their behalf, I ask this very directly I would want the assurance that they will have the opportunity to speak on the Throne debate before it is wound up.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I think, sir, that is in line with what I said. I hoped that we would have that objective, and that perhaps we could if the Opposition has 6 speakers, I assumed that there would be 5 today and one concluding speaker, I assumed that would be right.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, I think there is 6 plus one.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That makes 7—we will see what we can do. I will not make the speech I was going to make.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading, upon motions:

Bill No. 27, An Act to amend The Short Forms of Leases Act.

Bill No. 30, An Act to amend The Wages Act.

Bill No. 45, An Act to amend The Department of Education Act, 1954.

Bill No. 46, An Act to amend The Public Libraries Act.

Bill No. 47, An Act to amend The Teachers' Superannuation Act.

THE DEPARTMENT OF LABOUR ACT

Hon. C. Daley moves second reading of Bill No. 67, "An Act to amend The Department of Labour Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this Act has to do with establishing a policy of making regulations in regard to the safety and protection of workers engaged in construction work under compressed air, during construction of tunnels and caisson work, coffer dams, and so forth. This bill would enable the Lieutenant-Governor to make regulations to impose certain charges in connection with this matter, which is getting to be quite a substantial part of the work of inspection in The Department of Labour. I would say that this bill will go through the labour committee, sir.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE BOILERS AND PRESSURE VESSELS ACT, 1950

Hon. Mr. Daley moves second reading of Bill No. 68, "An Act to amend The Boilers and Pressure Vessels Act, 1950."

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill is very similar to Bill No. 67—it has to do with the welding of boilers and pressure vessels and the possible establishment of fees to be charged in connection with that work. This bill should also go to the labour committee.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE EMPLOYMENT AGENCIES ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Daley moves second reading of Bill No. 69, "The Employment Agencies Act, 1960."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in connection with this bill, as I think every hon. member in this House is aware, there has been a great deal of criticism over the years about the activities of what is known as private employment agencies. We always felt that, when the federal government took over and established the employment agencies in the provinces, that was ample, and the provincial government withdrew many years ago from that field.

But, in the meantime, many agencies have sprung up, and there has been great criticism about some of their activities.

Now, it is our feeling that this bill, as a start, will establish the fact that these places and people who operate these agencies must be first licenced, and they must make reports to The Department of Labour as to how they conduct their business, and all information about their activities, so that we can establish who they are, where they are, and what they do. I would like this bill to also go to the labour committee.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

THE WORKMEN'S COMPENSATION ACT

Hon. Mr. Daley moves second reading of Bill No. 66, "An Act to amend The Workmen's Compensation Act."

He said: Well, Mr. Speaker, this bill is something that I think we will all feel very good about. Some time ago, when The Workmen's Compensation Act was amended to establish a new rate for widows of men killed in industry, and the care of their children and orphan children, certain rates were established that indicated a great improvement. But, at that time, it was not considered that it could be made retroactive. This matter was discussed by Mr. Justice Roach, and he wrote his opinion in connection with The Workmen's Compensation Act and its administration.

I might say, I have spent a great deal of time with the workmen's compensation board, and with industry itself, as to how we could overcome what was always, in my opinion, a great injustice, that one widow on one side of the street would be getting $50 and possibly a widow on the other side of the street, whose husband happened to be killed maybe only 3 days later, would get $75 and $25 for her children; and $35 would be paid if the children were orphans, because of his death.

The board and the industry of this province have come into agreement eventually as to how it can be worked out so that no group would be penalized.

The assessment will be over the entire assessment of industry, and that the new rate will apply from, I think, May, 1960, to equalize the payments to all these unfortunate people who have lost their husbands in industrial accidents.

I think it is a great thing, and this can also go to the labour committee. But I hope that this House will agree in principle that that is a desirable thing to do.

Mr. G. T. Gordon (Brantford): Mr. Speaker, in speaking on the second reading of this bill it has been of interest to me for some years, and I have spoken about the situation in the past several years.

I remember quite well, in 1953, when the amendment was brought in increasing the payment to widows on compensation after the 1953 amendment—the $75—here was one particular case affected in Brantford—I think the hon. Minister will remember that—because of the wording of the bill at that time.

This widow's husband was injured before the amendment, and because he died after the amendment she only came into the $50, just because he was injured before the amendment. When he died after the amendment came into force, she only got the $50 a month.

I spoke about that at the time in the House, and the hon. Minister said he would take it under consideration. The following year, the Act was amended so that that widow, along with others who were injured before the amendment and died after the amendment, all received the $75.

Because I spoke on two or three occasions in connection with this matter, I had widows communicate with me from all parts of Ontario. And it was very interesting to hear the situations they were in. I will just mention one.

A man in the city of Brantford working for the Hydro department was killed 25 years ago. Now $50 a month at that time did something for that widow. But presently she is only getting the $50, is suffering from arthritis, and hon. members can just imagine the situation she is placed in. She came to see me personally in connection with this, and I am very happy to see that some of the suggestions that the Opposition make eventually sink into the other side. So we now have these widows receiving this extra amount of $25 a month.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I think in every year since 1953, when this amendment was made, some hon. member of our group has written and pleaded for removal of this inequity. Therefore it is with very great enthusiasm that we welcome the introduction of this bill by the hon. Minister.

However, on every occasion when this has been before the House, the reason advanced by the government for not being able to equalize these payments was that it would strike at the actuarial basis of the fund.

The hon. Minister has now explained how he sat down with industry and worked this out. The one thing I am a little curious about is this: During what period were these negotiations with industry carried out? Was it during the past year for example?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would say in reply, to not only this question, that I have really never cared who got the credit. As long as we were able to accomplish something, I am perfectly happy.

The question raised by the hon. member for Brantford was one that did prompt me to look into that phase, of men who had been injured just previous to that. The suggestion the hon. member made prompted me to go into that, and now the matter is being rectified.

I have always considered, right from the day we passed the Act, that the unfortunate part was that we could not make it retroactive because to capitalize the account would mean involving many, many millions of dollars.

Every year, I have talked with the Canadian manufacturers association, representatives of the Niagara industrial association, the people who pay the money into compensation. I asked them if they could not devise some scheme where we could rectify this injustice. The matter finally culminated not more than 3 months ago, when these representatives of the Canadian manufacturers association came to me about other matters. I again brought up this matter.

In our discussions, we suggested that we forget the capitalizing of the whole account, and that we endeavour—by a very small increase which might be necessary or might even not be necessary—to bring all the widows to the increased amount. Now, from the date that this Act was passed, all widows will be brought up to the $75, $35 and $25. I think it is a great accomplishment. If it gives the hon. members opposite any satisfaction, I will say that, once in a while they do make a suggestion that is worth while. I will let the hon. member take any share of the credit that he wants to, but the government is putting it into effect.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, like other hon. members in the Opposition, I would commend the government for this particular move. There is one area, Mr. Speaker, wherein injustice still exists, and that is in the instance of a workman who is injured, particularly if he is totally incapacitated, and his particular compensation is determined as of the time of the injury.

Years go by and, as we all know, the dollar changes in value, so we have the situation where a man loses an arm or a leg or is otherwise totally incapacitated in 1930, and another man suffers identically the same injury in the year 1960. Both men are required obviously to support themselves wholly from the amount of money that they receive from the board. The one man may receive 3 times what the man who is injured in 1930 receives.

This bill certainly is a step in the right direction, Mr. Speaker, but I feel that, unless we tackle the second problem—which has a lot of mechanical and scientific difficulties about it—we cannot justify our contention that we are really doing something to bring about the solution of a problem that is inequitable and unjust at the present time.

I am not suggesting that the hon. Minister is wholly responsible for this. This is an area wherein we must move forward. This is an area where actuaries and others must be consulted. But I simply say that here is an area wherein mechanics and actuarial determinations may not be the barriers to prevent us from exercising what we all understand to be an injustice and a curtailment of the natural relief and assistance that any workman should have, irrespective of when he suffers his particular injury.

I commend the government for this step. I ask the government to move forward into this next and broader area just as speedily and effectively as possible.

I hope that next year, when we appear in this Legislature, the government will be in a position to advise us that it has taken into its consultative sources this particular suggestion, and bring in a bill that will broaden the opportunity for compensation, irrespective of the date of the injury.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a word or two before we move into committee of the whole. I cannot talk very long on this, as my throat is in rather bad shape, but I understand that the estimates of The Travel and Publicity Department are to be discussed today.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They will be.

Mr. Wren: Well, if that is so—

Hon. Mr. Frost moves that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of the whole.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of the whole, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the committee rise and report certain bills without amendment.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of the whole House begs to report certain bills without amendment, moves the adoption of the report, and begs leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move that you do now leave the chair—

Mr. Wren: Before the hon. Prime Minister presents that motion I would like to say a word or two about the suggestion that the estimates of the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) will come before the House today. In the first place—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member had better wait until the estimates are called.

Mr. Wren: Oh no, and I will tell the hon. Prime Minister the reason why.

In the first place, the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips) has just presented to the House this afternoon the annual report of The Department of Travel and Publicity, and we have had no opportunity to have a look at it.

In the second place, there are a great number of people, especially from northern and northwestern Ontario, who are coming to Toronto within the next few days to visit the standing committee on travel and publicity. Last year, the clear assurance was given those delegates, who came down here at great expense, that these estimates would not be called until after the delegations had had an opportunity to be heard.

Now, last year, following the meetings of the standing committee on travel and publicity, Mr. Chaput, the then member for Nipissing who was chairman of the committee, gave the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association, and others, assurance that these estimates would not be called until after these people had had an opportunity to appear before the committee and outline some of their thinking on travel and publicity problems to the hon. Minister and officials of the department.

So therefore, Mr. Speaker, if it is the intention to carry on this afternoon with these estimates, I would move, seconded by Mr. P. Manley, that the motion now before the House be amended by adding the following words:

Provided that the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity be not presented until a day following the appearance before the standing committee on travel and publicity of the Northern Ontario Outfitters Association and other groups interested in Ontario's tourist industry.

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Speaker, before the motion is put, I would like in reply to say in the first place that an assurance was given to the committee last year, as it was in the previous year, that the committee meeting would not be held until during the week of the Sportsmen's Show. The committee date has been set up as March 17.

However, may I add that, over the past few months, this Department of Travel and Publicity has been in touch with the different associations, those associations have been in and discussed, with our department officials and myself, the many things that are of concern to them.

Indeed, no later than about a week ago, when we had our Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce, many of those members are also members of the Tourist Association—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Just a moment, I have the floor.

Secondly, they expressed their satisfaction with the conduct of The Department of Travel and Publicity.

Thirdly, may I say that we have a joint board of tourist associations. That board is composed of representations from all of the larger tourist associations who are continually in touch with us.

So, insofar as I am concerned, Mr. Speaker, I feel we have the approval of the tourist association to proceed with the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity. And if there is need for any concern, this will be brought to our attention at the committee meeting. May I again emphasize that I recall no assurance that the estimates of this department would be held up until after the committee meeting.

Mr. Wren: Well, Mr. Speaker, there was definitely assurance given to the delegation in this committee—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: By whom?

Mr. Wren: By yourself and by Mr. Chaput, who was then the chairman of that committee.

Furthermore, Mr. Webb, who is president of the Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters Association, would not believe me when I suggested that the estimates might be called this year before these delegations had appeared. The Northern Ontario Tourist Outfitters is one of the most important groups, from northern Ontario at least, that appear before the committee.

I emphasize again, the hon. Provincial Secretary has just tabled the report of this department, and how would an Opposition be expected to critically and constructively examine any department when, only 15 minutes ago, we had the information about the work of the department presented to us?

I say, Mr. Speaker, and I appeal to the hon. Prime Minister, to set these estimates back to some day following the appearance of these delegations.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I may say this, that this is the first intimation I had of this. As a matter of fact, I think I mentioned last Thursday the fact that the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity would be presented today. Now, I could have made some other arrangement. However, I would say that I am most anxious to accommodate people, I am very anxious to hear—

Mr. Wren: These people have spent a lot of money to come down here.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right, I am most anxious to accommodate people and to make it possible for any representations that persons desire to make to be heard. I am anxious to do that.

Now, I think, sir, the best arrangement would be this. Let the matter go ahead, and the hon. Minister can make his statement on the estimates, and then there would be no doubt some other statements in connection with the estimates.

But I would say this, sir, that votes 2202, 2203, 2204 might be held over. I think the photography branch, the historical branch, the theatres branch and the public records and archives branch might be proceeded with.

I suggest that arrangement, and we will hold over the other 3 items pending the coming of the tourist bureau—when is their meeting?

Mr. Wren: I am not sure, sir, I think it is about March 10—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The members of the department inform me the committee meeting is set up for March 17, and now I have a letter on my desk at the moment from Mr. Webb in which he made no reference to the matter the hon. member is talking about.

Mr. Wren: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would appeal to the intelligence of the House, because after all these people are coming down here with delegations at great expense.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, we will hold those 3 estimates, sir—

Mr. Wren: No, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: —hold the estimates with the discussions as arranged, but we will hold those 3 votes until March 17, well I cannot please everybody.

Mr. Wren: Well, Mr. Speaker, with respect, how is the Opposition expected to intelligently criticize the estimates of this department under those circumstances? It cannot be done.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before presenting the motion, I will acknowledge that there was reference made to this particular department a few days ago. But the hon. member for Kenora has brought this to my attention today, and very frankly I think that his argument is irrefutable.

He makes a simple statement and I must admit that I was not at the committee, but there is no reason to doubt that an undertaking was made last year—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Not by me—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I understood that it was, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Wren: It certainly was.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —that an undertaking was made that the estimates would not be presented until after the representations were made before the committee. The very reason for it was that, in effect, when the committee met, their hands were tied to make practical suggestions for the immediate fiscal year. Now that makes good sense to me.

Secondly, as the hon. member for Kenora pointed out, the report of the department has been filed but a few moments ago, and surely no hon. member of the Opposition has had an opportunity to examine it or has had access to it.

So I simply say, Mr. Speaker, that whereas, I will acknowledge, that, this was discussed a few days ago, the hon. member for Kenora is bringing to our attention something that, in his opinion, is important and something that, in my opinion, is very important.

So, although it may cause temporary concern, the fact of the matter is we have so much business to do immediately that we could proceed to Throne speeches, or something of the sort, and accommodate this very important part of our commercial-industry activity in the province.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, Mr. Speaker, I am perfectly glad to accede to the suggestions of my hon. friends, and I suggest that we hold out estimates 2202, 2203, and 2204.

Now, I would say this, with all fairness, that I notified the House on Thursday. The hon. Minister has made all the arrangements to speak, and his remarks no doubt are released to the press and so on. We want to meet that undertaking.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I told myself a moment ago that all undertakings were off. I withdraw that. I will follow my undertaking that those 3 estimates will not be discussed. We will leave it over until March 17, but we will go ahead with the estimates of the department. Now, I said that in a moment of irritation arising from this, as I just do not like to do business that way. I do not do business that way, and I would not expect hon. members opposite to do it.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, I was quite willing to outline my objections to the hon. Prime Minister's suggestion but I was ruled out by the chair. There are many items in those points in the other estimates that these delegations want to talk about. That is the point I am making.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member has sat here long enough to know that he can do what I suggested. The only thing is he does not want to do that.

Mr. Wren: I am not going to see my people spend hundreds of dollars—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I know that the hon. member for Kenora feels strongly about this point.

Mr. Speaker: As many as are in favour of the amendment say "aye."

As many as are opposed say "nay."

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion for the amendment lost.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move that you do now leave the chair and the House resolve itself into committee of supply.

Motion agreed to; House in committee of supply, Mr. D. H. Morrow in the chair.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Chairman, to make this plain, now that we have had this abortive vote, I want to state my arrangement last Friday was this, to complete the estimate of The Department of Insurance, upon which there was some discussion. I do not think there was any reason at all why that might not have been done.

Now, as regards to The Department of Travel and Publicity, sir, I again propose this, that votes 2202, 2203, 2204 and 2205 should not be reported in any event.

Now, as a matter of fact, sir, I am not opposed to any of these items being held over until March 17 to hear what these gentlemen have to say, but we can certainly proceed with business. I gave my undertaking to my hon. friend opposite, he was not prepared to accept that.

I told myself a moment ago that I was through making undertakings but I will not adhere to that. After all, I said that I would hold the 3 votes and I am going to try to conduct the affairs of this House in a decent, understanding way. Now, I propose to do that. I will hold over these estimates until March 17, but we can proceed as far as we can today and at that time it may not involve any deep commitments or very deep considerations. In any event, if anything comes up, it can be considered at that time.

Now, sir, I will call the estimates of The Department of Insurance which we partially considered last Friday.

On vote 801:

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Well now, Mr. Chairman, I do not know. Is there an insurance agent or a broker who handles all of the business of the province?

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): On Friday, when my hon. friend was out of the House, I did outline the Acts under which The Department of Insurance operates. I could give him those once again.

The Department of Insurance administers the following Acts: The Insurance Act, The Loan and Trust Corporations Act, The Real Estate and Business Brokers Act, The Credit Unions Act, The Collection Agencies Act, The Prepaid Hospital and Medical Services Act, and The Investment Contracts Act.

Mr. Reaume: That is all right, fine.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Well, Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Attorney-General tell us if there have been any licences cancelled for real estate men during this past year?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I did not hear the question.

Mr. Thomas: Could the hon. Attorney-General tell us if there have been any licences cancelled this last year for real estate or insurance people, or how many cancellations?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If any licences were cancelled?

Mr. Thomas: Yes.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There have been some. The insurance superintendent says he does not have the exact number, but if the hon. member wishes the number he will get them for him.

Mr. Thomas: I would like them if I may have them.

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, could I ask, if there is any group at all that applied for a charter, as a credit union in the past year, and have been refused because of certain conditions?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Yes, there have been some. I say to the hon. member for Dovercourt it was because the applicants did not satisfy the material requirements of the department, particularly in relation to bond of association.

Mr. Thompson: Is this the only basis, or are there other bases by which we have to qualify? I would like to know what the requirements are—to applying for a charter—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: They are all set out in the Act and the regulations. If the hon. member, after reading them, has any difficulty, I am sure he will get the full information if he called on the superintendent.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister: Is there any minimum commission that real estate agents charge? I have a letter in my hand stating that there was a $3,000 real estate deal and the commission charged by the real estate agent was $500. It seems to me that, on a $3,000 change of property, $500 seems to be a great deal of money. I am wondering if there is any protection to the public for such transactions?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I understand that the Act says that the commission to be charged shall be that amount which may be agreed upon, but if that is not agreed upon, then the rate prevailing in the area will govern. In most areas I think there is a recognized percentage charged.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to hear the explanation of the hon. Attorney-General, but it does seem to me that the amount that is mutually agreed upon with some people is like signing for finance charges and so on, that the people doing the selling do not really understand what they are signing?

Here I have a definite case where a poor person, whom I know personally, was charged $500 for a transaction of $3,000. It seems to me that there should be some protection for the general public against such amounts being charged. This person does not deny that he signed it, of course he signed it, but he did not really understand what he was signing at all. The real estate company came along, and put a sign on his property. As a matter of fact, two or three weeks afterwards, some people came in and really bought the place from the owner. The only thing that the real estate people did was put a sign on the property. The agreement was signed, of course. The bill was $500 and the purchase price was $3,000. I think there should be some protection to the public against such real estate operators.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, of course, I think it can be said for the great bulk of the people in the business that they do adhere to well defined scales of remuneration, by way of commission. We get the odd one who does not, and complaints are registered, and certainly the department could call that person in and discuss the matter with him, and bring the complaint before him.

Then, of course, each question has to be dealt with on its merits, and whether or not some law has been broken. We have no right to become the arbiter in all sorts of conditions. But the department certainly will sit in judgment to some extent on all breaches.

Mr. Whicher: I have been informed of another case by the same firm. I will be glad to take this up with the hon. Attorney-

General privately. But I had another complaint of the same firm where a widow was attempting to sell the farm and she was unsuccessful, the firm was unsuccessful, but of course, she had signed with the real estate firm for a period of one year. So she could not sell it, and about 8 or 9 months afterward, she turned the property over to her son.

I know that legally, of course, she had to pay the commission, which she did, and the price was $500. But it seems to me that this is fleecing the public, Mr. Chairman, in my opinion, for a small transaction. I will be glad to show this privately to the hon. Attorney-General.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am sure if the hon. member will do that, it will be looked into.

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, in a case like this, where an exorbitant fee has been charged, and is investigated, would the department have the right to revoke or cancel the licence of that particular individual? After all, this is something we should try to stop.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Yes, as a matter of fact, we have a very well regulated procedure in relation to complaints, and there is a committee that advises the commissioner.

It depends on which side of the particular fence we are at the moment as to how we approach those things. But the committee was set up to protect all concerned. In case the commissioner's own view might be a little arbitrary, or something of that sort, he resorts to his committee to assist him in balancing whether or not the licence of a broker or a real estate agent, and so on, should be suspended or cancelled on complaints.

So there is machinery there, and if there are any injured parties who bring their complaints to the registrar, why they certainly are looked into.

Mr. Whicher: Would the hon. Attorney-General care—and I certainly am not trying to put him on the spot here—what he feels would be a decent commission on a $3,000 transaction?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, the registrar points out to me that there again it is difficult to give a categorical answer because of the conditions. There are percentages—I have heard of the 3.5 per cent. rule, and I think as high as 5 per cent. Residential is recognized generally as 3.5 per cent., I think, in certain areas at any rate. It is higher for commercial and higher for farms.

One of the hon. Ministers here tells me that 10 per cent. is not unusual, in some cases, with respect to farm property. But the registrar does point out to me that sometimes, where a house or a property will not sell and there is big difficulty in getting a sale that ultimately, the owner, in order to get a sale, is prepared to pay a higher commission to have a greater effort made by the agent. But I am not trying to defend the agent, I am just trying to answer that question within fairly broad bounds.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): Mr. Chairman, usually with residential properties—this is in the Metropolitan Toronto area—there is a 5 per cent. commission. On business or raw land it is 10 per cent. excepting in a written agreement where the seller agrees to pay a stated amount of commission to the real estate broker—

Mr. Whicher: I would say that the sums mentioned here are rather exorbitant—

Mr. Lewis: —but unless there is an unusual condition, where they set out and agreed to before the transaction, it usually runs 5 per cent. for residential, 10 per cent. for vacant land and business properties.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if I might have permission to ask a question of the hon. Attorney-General on the item we were just about to leave?

I would like to ask a question of the office of the hon. Attorney-General with respect to the staff which has recently been employed. I believe there has been an extension of the staff in the real estate department of The Department of Insurance. I believe several members have been engaged to check the books and the trust accounts of real estate brokers in the province.

I would like to know, sir, the qualifications that are required of those inspectors which are travelling the province.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: There have been, I understand, 6 or 7 inspectors appointed over a period of time. They are brought in, I am told by the superintendent, taken out with other inspectors, and tested as to their knowledge and general education, and through contact with the other inspectors, as to their adaptability or otherwise for the work in hand, and are chosen in that way.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, the question I asked was regarding the qualifications—do they require an accounting degree or some such standing in the community as a basic requirement.

The reason I ask the question, sir, these people are going about the country checking the books of real estate brokers and I feel that, in view of the decisions that some of them have been making, there should be some basic requirement.

Now, simply going out with another inspector to check their adaptability in this type of work, to me, would seem not to be sufficient qualification for this type of work.

The question I want to ask is this. Is there any standard required, a minimum standard? How are they employed? Do they pass examinations, or how do they get there?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: They are not required to pass examinations, they, generally speaking, would have junior matriculation or better educational qualifications than that, and they are judged on each application, judgment is made on their capacity.

Now, if there is anything wrong in a particular case or any complaint, it should be made to the superintendent, and he would look into any particular case. But I gather from him, and he is sitting right here, that he considers his staff of inspectors as efficient, and a good staff.

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that in my opinion, they are not efficient if they are not qualified. They are going into business firms in the community, they are telling these people how to conduct their business, how to keep their books, and it seems to me that this type of person should have some qualifications, more than just knowing somebody or in somebody's opinion be satisfactory. It seems to me that if these people are going to be hired as inspectors, they should have some basic requirements.

Vote 801 agreed to.

ESTIMATES, DEPARTMENT OF TRAVEL AND PUBLICITY

Hon. B. L. Cathcart (Minister of Travel and Publicity): Mr. Chairman, I regret very much the difference of opinion that has been expressed here in this House previous to the presentation of my estimates. So, to add to what I have already said, on the matter of when the Northwestern Ontario Associated Chambers of Commerce were here to present their brief, I attended at the office of the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions (Mr.

Wardrope), and there met Mr. Meyer Bergman, Mr. Delemeyer and Mr. Johnston, along with other members of the chamber of commerce.

We had a very full discussion on the matters pertaining to this department, and at no time was it even mentioned, other than that they would be happy if the committee would hold their meeting at the time of the Sportsman's Show to save a second trip down.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Not a single one of them was down—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, before placing the estimates of The Department of Travel and Publicity before this House and asking for its approval, I do want to take advantage of this opportunity to report on some of the results of our past year's activities, and to outline some of our aims and objectives for the ensuing year.

I presume that it is unnecessary for me to repeat and remind the House that the annual report of this department was tabled, about an hour ago by the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips). However, since it does give a comprehensive coverage of our work and the operations of the several branches, I have no intention of dealing with the details.

But I do hope, Mr. Chairman, that you and the hon. members of this House will take the time to peruse it, and that you and they will find it of interest.

Nevertheless, I would like to briefly point to a few of the highlights, and underline a few of the important contemporary facts, regarding the Ontario tourist industry as a whole.

Before doing so, I do wish to express my personal appreciation for the very excellent co-operation that I have received from the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), from the hon. Ministers of other departments, and from the hon. members on both sides of this House.

Certainly my hon. colleagues in the cabinet never failed to stress the value of the tourist industry in their various speaking engagements, and this is most appropriate, since programmes implemented by their departments, and other governments in co-operation with our own, have greatly benefited the tourist business. The departments of my hon. colleagues have given in the past, and will continue to give, great impetus to the department's work in encouraging and promoting not only our circle tours but the travel industry generally.

Mr. Chairman, I would list a few of these to point out what I am saying.

1. The simplified border crossing regulations that came into force last year.

2. The visit last year of Her Majesty, Queen Elizabeth and Prince Philip.

3. The completion of the St. Lawrence seaway and power project.

4. The St. Lawrence parks systems.

5. The various international joint projects for the construction of bridges at border crossings at Johnstown, Cornwall, Middle Falls, Sault Ste. Marie, Rainy River and Fort Frances.

6. The bridge over the Welland canal, presently under construction.

7. The Department of Highway's great roads to resources programme, benefiting such places as Fort Frances, Atikokan, Shebandowan, Timmins, Foleyet, Chapleau and Thessalon.

8. The completion, sometime in September of 1960, of the 1,400-mile Ontario section of the trans-Canada highway, which is of such great interest to the states of Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota, which are our very co-operative associates in the Northern Great Lakes Area Council.

9. The very extensive development of the provincial parks system by The Department of Lands and Forests that, rather than interfering with the tourist operators' revenue, have, in the reverse, been very helpful in the promotion of travel. In fact, it was personally brought to my attention recently—and just very recently by an operator—that he has completely filled his establishment for 1960 with campers from a new park, close by, who liked this particular area and were looking now for satisfactory accommodation other than that provided by camping.

Mr. Chairman, the tourist industry presents an ever changing pattern, and a challenge to our department to be ever alert to keep abreast of or, better still, ahead of the trends. This is what we are endeavouring to do, and I would like to express, at this time, my gratitude to the loyal, capable and enthusiastic group of people who, from the Deputy Minister throughout the department, work so wholeheartedly to maintain Ontario's position as the leader in this field.

Let us look at some of these changes that have occurred since the formation of this department in 1946.

1. In 1946 and for several years following, our tourist business depended for its success primarily on customers from the United States. The average ratio of American to Canadian guests in our resorts was 80 per cent. American to 20 per cent. Canadian. As a consequence, our advertising programme was mostly directed south of the border.

However, in depending to such a great extent on the whims of the people of a foreign country, we can have serious disadvantages. Realizing this, and the need for our own people to form the hard core necessary for a successful and prosperous business from year to year, we began to concentrate more of our efforts on our own people.

We introduced the "Know Ontario Better" programme with such success that the federal government followed suit with the "Know Canada Better" slogan and the United States got on the band wagon with "Visit U.S.A. in 1960."

Today, as a result of our efforts, more and more residents of Canada and Ontario are vacationing with us until the ratio is now 60 per cent. Canadian and 40 per cent. American.

This does not mean that we are lessening our efforts in the United States. On the contrary, the programme is constantly being increased and improved, and the results speak for themselves. This past year, 5.5 million to 6 million pieces of literature were distributed. Ten years ago, in 1949, we received at the office at Queen's park 132,321 inquiries from all sources, whereas in 1959 we serviced 283,206—an increase of over 50 per cent. The great majority of these are from the United States.

2. In 1946, the tourist was on his own once he crossed the border. Today we have 15 reception centres located at international and provincial border crossing points which supplied information and guidance to 662,000 tourists, in 1959. To continue this programme, an inland reception centre will be built close to Barrie on highway No. 400 and will serve all central and northern Ontario.

One has to recognize that, as the people cross the border, many of them have travelled 300, 400, 500 miles and are going on up into the vast regions of this province. So a stop at the reception centre there could be a refresher course for them, and I hope will serve the purpose that we plan to build it for.

3. The rapid increase in accommodation is shown by the fact that 7,066 tourist establishments were inspected and licenced in 1959, all of which were filled to capacity. I might add that last year, from all the reports that I can obtain, was a completely successful tourist year insofar as our operators in this province are concerned. The most striking indication of growth, aside from the new wing of the Royal York Hotel, was the building of 100 new and ultra-modern motels with 900 units of accommodation and the enlargement of 75 motels by 450 additional units.

In total, the private capital invested in new construction in 1959 was $7.27 million which indicates a healthy and growing industry. Just think what this means to the local contractor, furniture, plumbing and electrical manufacturing industries, the wholesalers and retailers as well as in the way of employment for many people of this province.

4. A few years ago, winter activities were very limited with only a few areas providing skiing and other winter sports of any consequence. Today skiing, for example, is one of our fastest growing attractions. Ski hills are being developed throughout the province, and an ever increasing number of people of all ages are flocking to the slopes. We are encouraging this trend to the utmost, and can visualize the day when Ontario is a truly all year vacation playground.

Only a couple of weeks ago, when I was attending the Barrie international winter carnival, it was suggested by some American participants that the very fine facilities that they have in the Barrie area would be an ideal location for the great North American meet for next year, which is indicative to me of the interest generated in our neighbours once they have enjoyed our facilities and hospitality, and have viewed our vast and beautiful natural playgrounds.

I have mentioned some of the changes which have occurred over the years, and which have increased travel into Ontario from foreign countries by 50 per cent., while still enabling this province to retain 60 per cent. of Canada's total travel business.

Now, Mr. Chairman, may I list for the House some of our efforts to continue to hold the position we now enjoy:

1. Two new 16 mm films were produced in 1959. One of these entitled "Ontario's Sun Parlour," centres around a trip along the north shore of Lake Erie. The other, to be known as "Blue Water Holiday," tells the story of a tour along the east shore of Lake Huron. A third film on winter skiing is in production.

Copies of our films were screened 6,271 times in 1959 in the United States, an increase of 800 more showings than were held in 1958. Canadian showings to organizations and associations totalled 4,543 times. In addition, TV stations in the United States screened black and white copies 130 times and Canadian stations 30 times.

2. The Theatres Branch responsible for the censoring and inspection of motion pictures and theatres, is now a part of this department. This office has not only dealt efficiently with many problems throughout the year, but performed a very valuable service to the tourist industry in arranging an agreement between the department and a large United States motion picture company to produce and distribute 35 mm. "wide screen" colour film.

This film, "The Wonders of Ontario" with original music, lyrics and commentary, has already received some approbation. It will be shown for a period of 5 years to theatre audiences totalling hundreds of millions in the United States, Latin America, Europe, Africa, Asia, Australia and across Canada. It will also appear later on national and international TV screens.

3. All major events are given photographic coverage and, from our files, over 30,000 photos were supplied to magazine, newspaper and outdoor writers in the United States, Europe and Canada. Many of these were used by writers who toured Ontario with some of our staff and, as a result, several outstanding articles appeared in major magazines and newspapers. Hon. members will find some of these listed in the annual report.

4. Once again the very successful United States editors' goodwill tour, which was initiated by our own hon. Prime Minister, produced—I think hon. members will agree—good results, when I tell them I have an album containing clippings totalling 4,251 column inches of written material, and 99 photos extolling the virtues of Ontario. And these columns, of course, appeared in at least 30 different papers in 30 different states south of the border. This is equivalent to one full issue of a Toronto paper.

5. The Mississippi River parkway planning commission, of which Ontario is a member, was reactivated with the unveiling of a plaque at the junction of highways 17 and 71 near Kenora just a few years ago. Since that time, much progress has been made towards the completion of a highway system bordering the Mississippi River, from the Gulf of Mexico to our border crossing at Fort Frances and on to Kenora, which is bound to bring thousands of Americans into northwestern Ontario, with its ever expanding system of roads which will let them enjoy that great vacationland.

A short time ago, a conference was held in New Orleans, attended by my Deputy Minister, my colleague the hon. member for Rainy River (Mr. Noden), and representatives of northwestern Ontario. During their presentation, it was drawn to the attention of the state and provincial representatives present at that convention that Ontario had already fulfilled its agreement by having the highway north from Fort Frances designated by placing the Great River Road markers. This event was celebrated by an international ceremony.

At the same time as the presentations were being made, a large map and a number of smaller ones, especially prepared by The Department of Highways, were used to illustrate the extensive network of roads built, or planned, to open up this large section of the province. I understand that many of the members, some of whom had never been to Ontario, were tremendously impressed—in fact, overwhelmed—by the vast expanse of territory, and by what has been accomplished.

6. With the transfer of museums to this department, an active programme was commenced by employing a highly qualified museum's expert, who is giving advice and guidance to curators and historical societies on classifying, preserving, cataloguing and displaying the items in their collection.

Over 100 museums are in operation today, and we feel that our efforts are bringing results, since we have 10 additional ones listed for opening this year of 1960.

In particular, I would like to mention the $100,000 museum in my own county of Lambton, commemorating the first discovery of oil to be used for commercial purposes in all of North America. This museum is being established right on the ground where the first well was struck.

It is located at Oil Springs, and while it is in the county of Lambton I have to be honest and admit that it is located in the riding of my colleague, the hon. member for Lambton East (Mr. Janes). I understand it will be officially opened some time in May; the landscaping and all of the work will be done so we are looking forward to that official opening.

Mr. Chairman, following our survey in 1958 at Lakefield, which I mentioned last year, we carried out two additional surveys this past year—one at Leamington and one at Bracebridge. Our tourist operators, along with ourselves, have long been aware of the value of the tourist industry, but we are not convinced that businessmen in general have realized the benefits they are deriving.

The Bracebridge survey shows:

1. 57 cents of every dollar taken in came from the non-resident.
2. One $7 advertisement returned $150 in trade.
3. Over $458,000 was spent over a 7-week tourist period, which is equivalent to an industry employing 114 people on a year-round basis.

Surely these facts should awaken a responsibility on the part of our businessmen and the people toward the tourist industry. Certainly, we intend to continue these surveys with the hope they will have the desired effect.

Generally speaking our people—in fact by far the most of them—go out of their way to extend a warm welcome to our visitors. But here and there we do meet up with the odd experience of one or two who, by their actions, undo much of the good work of the many. I could recite some experiences I have personally witnessed, and I am sure everyone in the House has experienced similar ones. I hope eventually that we can overcome this, even down to every single individual, and thus make our province known as a completely host province.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I should like to devote a few minutes to the work of our historical branch whose activities will take on a growing importance as we enter upon active preparations for Canada's Centennial. It was the great Joseph Howe who said:

A wise nation preserves its records, gathers up its muniments, decorates the tombs of its illustrious dead, repairs its great public structures, and fosters national pride and love of country, by perpetual reference to the sacrifices and glories of the past.

It is in the spirit of those words that our department has carried on its work—and here I should like to acknowledge the great assistance we have received from the archaeological and historic sites board and its fine chairman, Mr. W. H. Cranston of Midland.

More particularly, I want to acknowledge our debt to the hon. Prime Minister for his inspiration and encouragement. I know of no man in the public life of our country who has a wider knowledge and a deeper appreciation of Canada's history. I have no hesitation in saying that what we have been able to accomplish has been due, in no small measure, to his assistance and guidance.

Just one example of his keen interest in Canada's history is to be seen in the corridors of these buildings where, under his direction, the valuable art collection has been so re-arranged in time sequence that the visitor is able to more readily visualize the story of our political development and the personalities behind it.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): It is certainly wonderful.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I think it can be truly said that the hon. Prime Minister has inspired us to appreciate the achievements of the past, while he has challenged us to strive for a greater future.

If my hon. friend (Mr. Reaume) had been here in those other days, previous to the re-arrangement of those great collections of paintings, he would realize the benefits that the visitors are receiving today.

Mr. Reaume: What is the hon. Minister speaking about, what pictures out there on the wall?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, it is not the picture of the hon. member, anyway.

Mr. Reaume: No, what is the hon. Minister speaking about? Howard Ferguson's picture, is that what he is talking about, George Drew?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, I am sure my hon. friend will agree that is something that has been of great value.

Mr. Reaume: Great value?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Including Howard Ferguson.

Mr. Reaume: Great value?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Mr. Chairman, you and the hon. members of the House will be interested and pleased to know that, in the past few years, no less than 177 plaques have been erected throughout the province in commemoration of historic personalities and events.

Here I should like to point out that the significance of this development lies not so much in the number, as in the fact that in the vast majority, if not all cases, the request for the plaques has come from the local community. This means that our people are becoming more and more interested in the history of their country.

Further evidence of this is to be found in the recent publication of the biographies of Sir John A. Macdonald, George Brown, Mackenzie King, as well as the regular appearance of historical flash-backs in our national magazines.

Mr. Chairman, perhaps I may be permitted to mention just a few of the personalities and events which have been commemorated by the erection of these plaques; and, Mr. Chairman, for the information of the House, we do have a listing of the plaques that have been established. If anyone is interested in reading them, they are available.

In Brant county: To the memory of the Mohawk Indian poetess, E. Pauline Johnson, who was born almost a century ago on the Grand River reserve near Brantford, and whose poetry is being read and admired by a growing number of Canadians.

To the memory of Adelaide Hunter Hoodless—founder of the women's institutes of Canada.

In Durham county: To the memory of Lieutenant-Colonel Charles R. McCullough, founder of the first Canadian club.

In Glengarry: The Bethune-Thompson House at Williamstown, built by Reverend John Bethune, founder of Upper Canada's first Presbyterian church in 1787, and later the residence of David Thompson the world-famous explorer of the Canadian West.

To the memory of Rev. Charles W. Gordon—born in 1860—better known as Ralph Connor, whose novels The Sky Pilot of No Man's Land and The Man from Glengarry, and many others were best sellers a half-century-ago.

Grey county: To the memory of Canada's great World War I pilot, Colonel William Avery Bishop VC (Queen's Park, Owen Sound).

In Hastings county: Commemorating the first gold production in the province near Madoc in 1866 by Marcus Herbert Powell.

In Kent county: Commemorating the convention held at Chatham in May, 1858, by John Brown, the famous American abolitionist, at which it is believed plans were made for Brown's abortive raid at Harper's Ferry, Virginia.

In Leeds: In memory of George Chaffrey, a native of Brockville, engineer and inventor, who was one of the great pioneers in the field of irrigation, and who was largely responsible for the successful development of the fruit industry in Australia.

In Lincoln county: Commemorating the publication of the province's first newspaper

The Upper Canada Gazette and another pioneer journal The Gleaner.

In Middlesex county: To the memory of the great Sir Adam Beck in London.

To the memory of the Tolpuddle martyrs, a group of nineteenth century agricultural labourers who attempted to establish a union in England and were banished to Australia. Some of them later settled in Canada.

In Simcoe county: To the memory of Sir William Mulock, cabinet colleague of Sir Wilfrid Laurier and later Chief Justice of Ontario.

To the memory of Sir William Osler, Canada's most famous physician and teacher who was born at Bond Head in 1849.

In Toronto: As might be expected, there are quite a number of plaques in the city of Toronto, where so much of our country's history was made. Within just a few blocks from where we sit is the home of the great reformer, George Brown of the Globe who, after sharp political differences, put patriotism above party and stood shoulder to shoulder with Sir John A. Macdonald to make Confederation a reality.

In Victoria county: At Purdy's Mills, marking the saw and grist mills built by William Purdy in 1828-1830, which formed the nucleus of what is now the town of Lindsay.

In memory of John Langton, 1808-1894, a pioneer settler of the Otonabee region, whose published correspondence furnishes an invaluable record of the early life of the district. Mr. Langton later became auditor-general of Canada and vice chancellor of the University of Toronto.

In Waterloo county: In memory of Abraham Erb, 1772-1830, one of the county's founders who came from Pennsylvania in 1806, cleared 900 acres of bushland, built a saw and grist mill, and thus laid the foundation for the thriving community now represented by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

Mr. Reaume: How about Essex county? We have no plaques up there at all.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We have a list of 177 plaques in this.

Mr. Reaume: Give us all of them.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Does the hon. member want the whole 177?

Mr. Reaume: Sure, we want to hear them all.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, wait until I tell the hon. member about these.

My hon. friend from York South (Mr. Macdonald) and the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver) will be interested to know that we have received an individual request that the birthplace of that great lady, Agnes McPhail, should be marked by a plaque.

I know this House will agree with me that it is a worthy proposal, particularly those of us who had the privilege of sitting in this House with that very charming personality.

Many of us remember Miss McPhail, who was the first Canadian woman to be elected to the House of Commons, and who was twice elected to this House in which she served until shortly before her death. She was indeed a great citizen of Ontario. If the people of Grey county express such a desire, I assure them they will receive sympathetic consideration.

And now, Mr. Chairman, I want to deal with one particularly significant development in connection with this very important branch of our work.

Last year we erected a plaque at the Mill of Kintail on the Indian River, a few miles from Almonte in Lanark county. This was in memory of Robert Tait MacKenzie, a great Canadian surgeon, teacher and sculptor, who was born in that county in 1867, and who later attained world prominence as an advocate of physical fitness.

The hon. member for Lanark (Mr. Gomme) has already given the House an interesting outline of Tait MacKenzie's life and work. I should like to join with the hon. member in expressing the hope that ways may be found to commemorate Dr. MacKenzie's work in connection with our Ontario programme for physical fitness.

Soon after we erected the plaque, a young Toronto school teacher visited the Mill of Kintail and became so inspired by the MacKenzie story that he proceeded to do further research into his life and work. The result was a script for a magnificent CBC documentary film called "The Man of Kintail," narrated by J. Frank Willis.

So great was the interest in the film that it was repeated on the coast-to-coast network a few weeks ago, and so, a great national TV audience, extending from Bonavista in Newfoundland to Vancouver Island, had the lovely Lanark town of Almonte and the Mill of Kintail brought onto their TV screens. They heard the story of a Canadian youth who gained world-wide fame in the fields of surgery, sculpture and teaching, and whose achievements continue to inspire his countrymen.

Just as the 100-word inscription on the plaque at the Mill of Kintail inspired the young school teacher, so it is our hope that other inscriptions will inspire the writing of many books, articles and scripts for magazines, newspapers, radio and TV, and thus bring the story of our historical heritage into every home.

From what I have said, Mr. Chairman, hon. members will see that this government not only makes history, but—equally important—it helps to make history live again.

Mr. Chairman, I should like to invite the co-operation of all hon. members of the House in the further development of this work. Much remains to be done. There are many important historic sites which should be marked, and there are many distinguished sons and daughters of this great province who deserve recognition. Up to now, we have erected plaques to only two or three provincial Premiers.

In the early part of the session the hon. Prime Minister readily agreed to the proposal of the hon. leader of the Opposition that a plaque should be placed at the birthplace of Mr. Mackenzie King in Waterloo county. May I assure both the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. Prime Minister that such a plaque will be placed. As a matter of fact I could add, because I am sure the hon. leader of the Opposition would like to know this, that the advisory committee met very shortly after the discussion in the House at their regular monthly meeting. I passed the request to them and at that very meeting they went to work and reported back at the end of the day they were wholly in agreement with the hon. leader of the Opposition.

May I now give another undertaking that, at an early date, I would like to place, or approve, a memorial plaque at the site of the home of another very famous man from my own county of Lambton. The honourable Alexander Mackenzie, second Treasurer of Ontario and second Prime Minister of Canada.

But I want to stress again that it is much better if the initiative in such matters comes from local areas and local committees. I very much hope that historical societies, where they exist, and other groups will continue to give us their same active co-operation and that new societies will be established where they do not now exist.

It is my deep conviction that if, through this kind of work, we can develop, especially among our youth, an appreciation of our country's history and of the great things we have achieved since we embarked upon the path of nationhood, we shall thereby help to strengthen national purpose and inspire our people to accept the challenge of the greater future.

I have left the mention of one of our major undertakings to the last, and that is the production of our publications. These are designed to be attractive, intriguing and informative, and we are constantly endeavouring to bring about improvements to better tell the story of this great province.

As an example, I would like to refer to our Lure Book which I had placed on each of the desks in this House the other day. Previous to this year this book had only the centre area map which permitted the names of a limited number of municipalities. We have added in this new book area maps for each of the 6 regions of the province which has permitted the addition of many place names and other information.

I must admit that we are only human and it has been drawn to my attention by my friend, the hon. member for Kenora, that a serious error on the map shows Rainy River where Sioux Lookout should be. I hope we will be forgiven and I am sure that regardless of this, visitors will have little trouble finding Sioux Lookout.

Mr. Chairman, I have covered some of the highlights of the work of my department and hon. members will note that I have pointed up the need for local and area support if we are to continue to make progress. As a matter of fact at this moment we are carrying out a study with the joint board of tourist associations whereby greater guidance and assistance can be provided.

Many years ago, in fact, not too many years ago, many of our people were objecting to the influx of tourists claiming they were wearing out our roads, crowding our stores and demanding costly services. There is no doubt that there has been a change of heart on the part of most of these people and it is now generally conceded that the travel business is everybody's business.

It is an industry that puts money in every pocket and certainly contributes to a major degree to the economy of this province, and so I say to hon. members let everybody be a good host and help everyone to "Know Ontario Better."

Mr. Chairman, I want to thank this House for listening to the story I had to tell and give my assurance that every dollar in those estimates will be expended to bring the greatest return possible and I would like to ask for an approval.

Mr. Chairman: I would draw to the attention of the House that we will leave votes 2201 to 2205, inclusive, until a later date and we will now proceed with vote 2206.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, you are including vote 2201?

Mr. Chairman: Yes, we are including that till later.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Till later?

Mr. Chairman: That one is being held over. Votes 2201 to 2205, inclusive.

On vote 2206:

Mr. A. E. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, in connection with the historical branch, I notice, where the hon. Minister suggests he would appreciate any suggestions, no matter where they came from.

I have often felt that one of the greatest historical backgrounds that we have are the early voyageurs and explorers who have charted Canada through the lakes and through the rivers. I know of a few people who go on canoe trips of these historical routes. They say they are not marked clearly. Many of the sites which Champlain, and some of the early explorers, had used as a base camp are under brush and completely unrecognizable.

I would like to suggest the following, and I say this because I have known, for example, of the Netherlands ambassador who would go on such trips with the executive secretary of the Canadian Club and with the editor of Maclean's magazine. By going on historical canoe trips the ambassador came to love Canada very much and his son actually has become a Canadian citizen. He got a real appreciation of our historical background.

I would suggest that possibly there could be an arrangement made whereby there might be an inducement for editors of ethnic papers and weekly papers in Canada—particularly those of Ontario—to go on such a trip arranged through The Department of Travel and Publicity, then to write about their experiences when they come back.

Also some kind of committee should be made up of competent newspaper men to size up which of the write-ups express most fluently the history and background of Canada and to give appropriate awards. I think this should have a real effect, particularly on many newcomers who are wondering where they can spend their holidays in Canada.

Surely if we could get the editors to acquire this type of experience, and they then related it to other newcomers, I think we would find there would be a lot of new citizens who would decide to spend their holidays in Canada rather than going elsewhere. I would like to see a lot of our history being developed as well as by plaques. Let us also have people actually living their experiences associated with the history of our country.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I would like to just clarify that for a moment, and thank the hon. member for Dovercourt for his suggestion.

The hon. member may have noted in my remarks—they were rather short with respect to that particular item, but many of these were used by writers who toured Ontario with some of our staff and as a result several outstanding articles appeared in major magazines and newspapers.

I want to say to the hon. member that if editors, magazine writers and so on are interested in such a trip if they would get in touch with our department, some of our boys—particularly from the photography branch—would be glad to have one of them go along and help them in their tour.

The hon. member will notice, in our report that is tabled, a number of articles that have appeared in major magazines, and they appear there because somebody from the department went along with some editor to assist him and guide him into the areas that he wanted to visit. As a result, the story has appeared. So ethnic or otherwise, we are very happy to arrange such a tour.

Mr. Thompson: I appreciate the clarification. I am sorry that we have not had a chance to look at the report.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, I understand that. I have mentioned that only in a couple of lines, but we are very cognizant of the fact that these writers do a tremendous job for us.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I want to endorse what the hon. member for Dovercourt has already said in regard to this subject which he brought up. As hon. members know, we in my section of northern Ontario are on the original trans-Canada route, the Lake Nipissing, Mattawa River and the French River route, from the Ottawa.

The earliest explorers came from that route, and also from Mattawa, they went up the Ottawa to the land of the Abitibies, and right through to Hudson Bay. It was the region over which McKenzie and Henry Hudson travelled.

So I suggest, too, that when the hon. Minister is making his map—I note he says “A royal welcome awaits you in Ontario,” so I presume his booklet is directed to people from outside the province—I suggest that he have also, as the hon member has suggested, a map that shows these canoe routes, because one can go all the way from Hudson Bay right out to the Atlantic Ocean.

One can also go from the St. Lawrence right through to the Head of the Lakes and possibly, by short portages, right through to the very heart of the prairie. The school children can see just where these historic places are, and can go on these trips under supervision.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I am afraid I am going to have to bring over some of these publications and spent a little time with each one of the hon. members opposite, or have somebody else do it.

We already have maps over there, called canoe trip maps, that do have the tours indicated on them—up the French River, the French Severn and to Algonquin Park. I would be very glad to see that the hon. members get one of those maps to see if they can offer anything over and above that.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask, in conjunction with item No. 6, museum grants, are they allotted to each individual county, or are they allotted to each individual museum, and what is the extent of each grant? Is it a standard grant to each museum?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: In the first place, the grant is made available only to museums that have been deeded to the municipality.

As I mentioned in my talk, we do have an expert on museums there. He does advise, counsel, and assist any museum that is being sponsored or set up. But when it comes to the particular grants, we pay grants only to those that have been deeded to the municipalities, and in their name. I will have the amount of grant in one moment.

The maximum grant is $1,000. It is based on the sum provided in the previous year by the municipality: $600 for maintenance, and $400 towards the salary of the curator.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Does my county museum qualify for that?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Is it a municipal—

Mr. Whicher: It certainly is, one of the best.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It certainly is qualified.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Chairman, what grant are we on?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: On what item?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Have we passed all the rest? I was trying to follow it.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, they are all passed, with the exception of this one.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Has the hon. Minister gone over the others?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. Minister answer this? Did the Bruce county museum get that $1,000 last year? Because if they did not, I am going to be over there in very short time. Did they get it?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I do not see Bruce county listed on here.

Mr. Whicher: Then the hon. Minister and I will be having a consultation.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Did it just become—

Mr. Whicher: That is right.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Let us get it straight. Does the hon. member know if it has been a municipal Museum, or was it just transferred last year?

Mr. Whicher: No, it has been municipal since about 3 years ago.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Have they made application for it?

Mr. Whicher: It is owned by the county of Bruce.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Where is it located?

Mr. Whicher: In Southampton.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Of course it is located in Southampton. I paid a personal visit there—it is one of the finest museums in the province of Ontario, and has a great curator taking care of it, I can assure the hon. member of that.

Mr. Whicher: The point is, did we get the $1,000?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Yes, sir, $1,000. Not only that, it is in the estimates for $1,000 for this year as well.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Chairman, I would like to deal with a situation in my riding. In the village of Stoney Creek we have the Stoney Creek Battlefield monument and this monument commemorates the turning back of the American forces by the Canadians in 1812.

Mr. Chairman, apparently there is quite a dispute as to who has the responsibility of looking after this site, and who is going to preserve it as a historical site. I raised the question on the same estimate in 1957, and I feel I received a favourable answer both from the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister for Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender)—that they would do everything they could do to see that this situation was looked after.

Now the situation is this: Apparently the monument sits on a piece of land about 100 square feet, just the monument itself. The park, which is owned and looked after by the Stoney Creek women's historical association, is about 15 acres in extent.

Immediately on the west there is an orchard of 17 acres, and this orchard bounds on highway No. 20 and on King Street, which would be the northwest corner of the property.

The person who owns the property wants to dispose of it, and I understand there is a contractor attempting to get the property to subdivide and on which to build homes.

If I remember correctly, I raised the question with the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) at that time, and his feeling was that he would not allow this to become a subdivision because of its access to both the main highways.

Now, there has been quite a running battle on this situation.

Some of the clippings from the papers predict genuine battle to save Battlefield park—the headings read: "Stoney Creek Still Battles for Park"; "Ottawa Acts over Battlefield park"; and "Councillor Currie Denies Ottawa Tends Historic Battlefield park."

Now, there have been charges made that the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs has been contacted, that he has received official correspondence from the council of Stoney Creek which the paper says has not been answered, and I understand that they have tried different times to have the meeting with the hon. Prime Minister.

I think that this has gone on long enough, and that we should have an answer as to whose responsibility it is.

If it is not the responsibility of the provincial government, and if they do not want to act upon it, they should tell these people so. If the government feels that it is the responsibility of the federal government, they should do something, something that is in their power to try to influence the federal government to buy this portion of land so that it will not be taken up by subdivisions and spoil the whole Battlefield Park.

I would like some answer from the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity. Surely, by this time it has been brought to his attention. If I am wrong, and it does not come under his department, then naturally he would know nothing of it. But we are speaking of historical grants in relation to his estimates, and I would think that he, by now, would have heard something of this situation. I would like to know just what the government intends to do about it.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): Mr. Chairman, I would like to say a few words on behalf of the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity because I have been drawn into it more than he.

What the hon. member for Wentworth East says is not quite correct, when he says that they received no answer to letters sent to me. I say this because I had a letter from Brigadier-General Arnold Smith, who is chairman of the citizens committee down in that area; I also had a letter from Mr. Jack Watson, the mayor of Stoney Creek, and after taking this into consideration—

Mr. Gisborn: Well, just at this point I might say that it was the town council from whom the hon. Minister had the correspondence, and it was the town council that says that he has not answered their official correspondence.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Well now, Mr. Chairman, surely the mayor represents the town council. I wrote directly to the mayor and I wrote directly to Brigadier-General Arnold Smith and indicated that it was the feeling of this government that it was not within the competence of the provincial government to get into these historical sites.

The hon. member for Wentworth East raises one other point, that is why do we not get behind these people and help them so far as the federal government is concerned, if it is our feeling that it comes within their competence. That is exactly what we have done.

We have loaned our voice and our weight to representations made in Ottawa, and it is our hope that they will accede to these requests of the people of Stoney Creek because of the historical importance of that place. They will consider not only the capital costs of this piece of land—some 17 acres—but also they considered the maintenance costs in the future. It is our feeling that, with this larger acreage taken into the Battlefield area, it will be much too expensive for the town of Stoney Creek to maintain.

As a matter of fact, to bring the hon. members of the House up to date, there is a meeting being held this week on Wednesday, I believe, in the hon. Prime Minister's office at which I will be present. I have no doubt the hon. Prime Minister will see these people and see in what further way we can help them. That is the latest information I have.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, I would thank the hon. Minister. That is some progress, because up until a few weeks ago, they were pretty concerned. I have not read what was in the press remarks, but—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: They had the letters weeks ago.

Mr. Gisborn: It seems that there was some delay and did expect some action at this time.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Well, Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Mr. Chairman. Let the hon. leader of the Opposition go ahead, I will let him give—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I was interested in the hon. Minister's answer and I would simply ask this, does not his department have legal authority to preclude any subdivision being planned and formulated?

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Problems placed before them.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I know, but surely we would not permit this area to be subdivided before the organization has an opportunity to go ahead and determine whether it can acquire and gain federal assistance.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Mr. Chairman, we are putting this just a little in reverse order, when actually it starts in the other order. That is, and I can give hon. members the whole background of this: a subdivider made an offer to Mr. Harry Smith, the owner of these 17 acres. I think he offered around $86,000 or $88,000 for the area, and that offer was submitted to the Wentworth suburban planning board for consideration.

They, in their wisdom, decided that, because of its historical nature, this tract of land should not be sold for subdivision purposes, with which I agree. The end result was that the offer was withdrawn, that is, the offer of purchase, subject to the certain conditions was withdrawn.

Here was a situation where the farmer, Mr. Smith, had a valuable tract of land of 17 acres which they now hope to zone for agricultural or park purposes; he could not sell it, he could not do anything with it, so, as a matter of justice, it was felt by many people that certainly we should get on with the job and try to get a ruling either one way or the other; that is, is it going to be used for historical purposes and if so, who was going to buy it from him, at what price, or secondly, let the subdivider go ahead and buy the property and subdivide it.

It is my own feeling, as one who was born and who lives in that area, that it would be unfortunate if it were let go for subdivision purposes. As the hon. member from Wentworth East knows, the east side of this Battlefield area is already crowded in with houses, and I think that is most unfortunate, but that is done. We are now trying to save the westerly part to enlarge the memorial area, and I am hoping out of all of these discussions with the hon. Prime Minister and the federal people that some solution, some good solution, for historical reasons will come.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the hon. Minister a question on this.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: If there is anything else I can answer while I am here, I will be—

Mr. Singer: Very adept!

Mr. Gisborn: After three years, it is about time—

Mr. Worton: Mr. Chairman, would the hon. Minister mind explaining this $34,500 of maintenance; and the second question is, what is the value of each of these plaques?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The plaques are purchased here in Ontario, and they cost $350 each.

Mr. Worton: By tenders?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Originally we had trouble locating a manufacturer and we were just a little concerned less we were going to have to go to the other side to get them. I believe that our people, Colonel Crowe was then the Deputy Minister of the Department, and certainly interested in the historical affairs of this Province and Colonel Crowe took the steps to arrange for this company to process them for us.

As a matter of fact, I had a request just a short time ago from another source to ask about the plaques and whether they could process them for us and I wrote back and said that we would be delighted to have a price. We are not tied to any one company, but this cost is very close to what we would have had to pay if we had been buying them in the United States. These are weather resistant plaques and that includes the price of the standard. When I say $350, as I understand it, that provides for the standard as well as the plaque itself.

Mr. Thomas: Are they bronze?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No, they are not bronze, they are aluminum with blue and gold colour. No, the bronze would colour.

Mr. Whicher: Now what about the $34,500?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I see that Colonel Crowe took this up, and several manufacturers were consulted, that's what I said, and we have purchased from this company since on that basis. The $21,000 of that amount is for the cost of the plaques. Cost of installation by Public Works who installed them for us was $5,250.

You will note on the highways where we have established the plaque first of all, usually you will see a similar plaque of blue and gold about a half a mile before you reach it, indicating that half a mile on an historical spot is established, and then another plaque with the arrow to direct you to where the plaque is. Cost of highway approach markers $1,550; books for historical library $700, and then office expenses. We put out the Ontario history folder too under this same Department, at a cost of $4,700.

Mr. Whicher: Did you get the one up for Mackenzie King yet?

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): I am in total agreement with the policy of the Department in erecting those plaques across the province. I wanted to bring it to the attention of the hon. Minister at this time that it is very important, I think, that we restore the history of the province as well, and I was wondering if he would consider at the new town sites in Seaway Valley, namely Long Sioux and Ingleside, to erect a plaque there and to have inscribed on it that those are the villages that are taking the place of the communities that were wiped up with the Seaway development.

Now, it is going to be quite a tourist attraction down there when the park is sufficiently developed and in that part of the province we have to depend a great deal on the tourist trade. I think, if we are going to protect the history of the province, it is very important that we should have plaques of that description erected to more or less bring back to the people in the area the realization that there were people that made sacrifices and that those small communities had a very significant part in those communities at one time, that they have been replaced by new towns. I think it is very worth while to do that.

Mr. Chairman, I might be out of order because this is not on this particular vote, but I have been going through this mass of literature that is being sent out to the schools and across the province today to service clubs and what have you, and I have gone through it quite thoroughly. In the first place I am very much disappointed that there is nothing mentioned about Eastern Ontario at all in any of the literature here. But worse than that, Mr. Chairman, the literature to me is outdated. For instance, here is one here and it is going out saying that the Seaway is going to be opened next year. We are going to welcome Her Highness the Queen and Prince Philip to open the Seaway next year.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Those are old envelopes the hon. member has.

Mr. Manley: Well, I have two envelopes and as I said there are piles of them going out to the schools and to the different service clubs and to individuals in the province. I think that is not right. I think that we should bring those pamphlets up to date. I do not know what it is going to cost the province to put out literature of this kind, but in all sincerity I think that it is embarrassing to be so far behind in our publications. The majority, I notice, are publications in 1958 and, after all, we are living in 1960. I just wanted to make those remarks at this time.

Again, on the vote regarding plaques, I do want to impress upon the hon. members and upon the government that we have an important area in eastern Ontario, and it grieves me and the people of eastern Ontario to think that nothing is mentioned in any of this literature of eastern Ontario at all.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I cannot understand the remarks of the hon. member from Stormont for the life of me. I put a book on the desk here a couple of weeks ago known as our Lure Book, and certainly it is divided into six different regions and there certainly is a region called eastern Ontario, and certainly there are pictures and stories on it. We would not overlook eastern Ontario.

Then the hon. member mentions about the pamphlet on the visit of Her Majesty the Queen, and calls all of the publications obsolete and out-of-date and we are so far behind that there is no possible chance of us catching up. I sometimes wonder whether—well, I will not complete that one . . . it would not be parliamentary.

Mr. Manley: Complete it.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, let me tell the hon. member that in regard to the pamphlet he is speaking about, we came up with that for the visit of Her Majesty. There were some left over and I understand that the department of publicity, or the branch of publicity have been including it because it is going out to schools, and it was felt that, rather than to throw them into the waste-paper basket, let the children have them, and others, as a souvenir of that very wonderful visit of Her Majesty last year.

If you can tell me whether we should just throw them out or whether we should let those kiddies and others have them as a souvenir of last year's visit, would the hon. member please tell me what he thinks we should do right now?

Mr. Edwards: Mr. Chairman, I would like to tell the hon. Minister.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Go ahead and tell him.

Mr. Edwards: Do not order so many in the first place.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I did not even hear what the hon. member said.

Mr. Edwards: I would be glad to repeat it. I said just order what you need in the first place, do not order them two years in advance.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Those were not ordered in advance of the visit.

Mr. Edwards: That makes it worse.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It is nice we have had some clever people move into the House in the last year.

Mr. Manley: Mr. Chairman, I have the very latest edition which was placed on our desks the other day. When I referred to eastern Ontario—sure, there is a section here. Historical St. Lawrence and Ottawa rivers. There is not a picture of any kind beyond Brockville. Not a one. And our hon. Prime Minister on so many occasions has risen here in the House and has said, "Here is the gateway to this great province to the east."

We have a port of entry at the city of Cornwall, a city of over 40,000 population, and yet it is not mentioned anywhere. We have the power developments there, and it is not mentioned in any of this literature whatever. I say to the hon. Minister, it is not fair to the people in that area, and that is why I have brought it up at this time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There is a picture of the dam, is there not?

Mr. Manley: The Iroquois Dam—there was just one small little picture.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: May I say this with all due respect, it would be utterly impossible to get all of the province of Ontario in this Lure Book. Each year we do change the pictures, making that change so that we gradually bring the different parts of the province into this book. But in our publications, we have our "This is Ontario," and there I am sure you will see that every part of the province is covered pretty fully in one or other of the publications.

I think the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley) will agree you could not possibly—we spent hours and this is not just a job of the director of publicity. I bring every director of the department, with the deputy, into my office, and we spend days at different times going over this, studying, hoping that we will not miss a particular area.

As I told you, we made the mistake of Sioux Lookout for Rainy River. The Seaway was given priority in—I have not got a copy of last year's, but they tell me the Seaway was given priority in last year's publication because of the opening in 1959. This is the new one, for 1960.

Mr. Manley: I have them before me on the desk.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Has the hon. member got the 1959 one?

Mr. Manley: I seem to have everything that has been put out recently.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is the 1960, that is the new Lure Book. That is the new one.

Mr. Manley: Well, what is this one?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is last year's, that is 1959. Did not the Seaway get priority there?

Mr. Manley: Not that I can see.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There is a whole page right there, a nice picture of Cornwall right there.

Mr. Manley: Cornwall is there, hon. Prime Minister? Show it to me. The hon. Prime Minister said, "Is there not a picture of a lock down there?" There is—Iroquois Lock. But here is one, a picture of a Gananoque motel. That seemed to be more important and took up far more space than even the lock at Iroquois did. Yet this wonderful development of ours in Cornwall, the power house itself and the development there, did not have a bit of space in any of this literature.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Chairman, may I just say one word—

Mr. Reaume: If it is only one word.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: —in opposition to all these tremendous hordes of opposition speakers who seem to hold the fort all the time. Have the hon. members been through the photography branch estimates yet? If they have not, if they are not going to take these estimates up, I wanted to compliment this branch very highly, I mean the photography branch. Has that been left out of our discussion? Well, I got that much in anyway.

The hon. member for Stormont was speaking about the east being neglected on Ontario maps. I am not using the map he is using. It is a little too small, but you will see what space the great part of northwestern Ontario gets on Ontario maps. It cuts from here, this tiny little piece, and here is the part of Ontario of the hon. member for Stormont (Mr. Manley), clean from there right across this whole page.

Now then, to illustrate that further, here is the highways map of Ontario. Here is Cornwall in great, big capital letters, clean from there right across this whole map, goes as far as Sault Ste. Marie, including Kitchener, Waterloo, Cornwall and all these other places, the whole page.

Then turn over to the other side and look at it over there, and we see that all that part—three-quarters of the page—is eastern Ontario and from here over to here is that great part of northwestern Ontario which includes a third of the whole land mass of this province in a small corner of the map. Now we are not kicking, Mr. Chairman, because we take these maps as they are put out, but we are making the suggestion to the hon. Minister that in the future some changes be made. I want to compliment the hon. Minister very highly on this literature that he has here today.

It is very colourful; it depicts the great things of this province, and I think it is a credit to the department. But I would like to bring to his attention that in the future northwestern Ontario would like to be given the space to which it is entitled both in area and in importance.

Now I would like to say, Mr. Chairman, that I had some remarks to make about some other things, but due to the intensive desire apparently for the Opposition to get it to the ears of the tourist industry, that we might be opposed to them—I see these votes are not coming up today, but I would like to say this, that I did not like that vote today. I have always been a great friend of the tourist industry, which they know, and I have not had any word from any of them that they objected to your estimates coming today in their entirety. And I would think that, as the hon. Minister for that part of Ontario, that I would have been the one advised.

So it does designate to me the fact that today's vote in the House was nothing more or less than a political play and I do not like it. That is for sure, that is for sure, I will repeat it, it was nothing but a political play and when you come—just a moment, I am on my feet, you can talk after—I will talk to you after. Among all those men, Mr. Chairman, across there, how many tourist operators or anybody interested in the tourist business are sitting over there? How many? Absolutely none.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Oh, for goodness sakes, there are more people going to the United States—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I am ashamed of what I saw in the House today, a purely political play which does no good but creates acrimony and dispute.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: That made no difference whatever and the tourist operators will not thank you.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Now, hon Minister, you carry on with your estimates.

Several opposition members: Sit down, sit down.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Kenora has the floor on a point of order.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Well, all right, but he did not show a point of order.

Mr. Wren: Mr. Chairman, on a point of order. My point of order is this, that you ruled earlier that Items 2201, 2202, 2203, 2204, 2205, which includes the main debate on these estimates, would be laid over to another day and we would commence at 2206. That is as I understood it. And I abided by that. Now I am not going to sit here and take any guff from the hon. Minister for Reform Institutions (Mr. Wardrobe) or anyone else. If he wants a debate, I have all the stuff. There are a lot of things going on up there that he does not know about. I will read them to the hon. Minister any time he wants.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, I was living up there when he was not even in the country.

Mr. Chairman: I would rule to the hon. member for Kenora, that it is not a point of order. And I would ask the hon. member for Port Arthur to continue.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, I had no idea of debating these other estimates. All I got up to say is what I thought of the political play, and to compliment the hon. Minister on the way he is answering questions and on the work of the officials of his department.

I have had the greatest courtesy from them, especially the photography branch. They have been very courteous to me, and at any time that I called on them to take pictures of the different associations, one was down on Friday, my curling ladies were here, they came to the hotel, took pictures of them and co-operated in every way and I would just like to say—

Interjections by some hon. members.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, I draw your attention to the fact that I think that one of the rules of this House is that there may be no reflection on a vote after it has been taken. Well, certainly the reflection that has been made by the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions is political in the extreme and is out of order in its entirety.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Mr. Chairman, I want to thank you for your courtesy and the example you show to the Opposition of how things in this House should be run.

Mr. Chairman: The hon. member for Niagara Falls.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Well, thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the opportunity; I only hope that I get a little more attention from the hon. members on the other side of the floor than they give us when we get up to speak. That little man, the hon. Minister himself, said, "How many of you people are interested in tourists?" Have you ever been down to Niagara Falls? We get more people there in one year than you get in ten.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Did I not meet the hon. member there?

Mr. Bukator: Well, that is remarkable, we did meet there one time, and we had quite a good time. I thought he was quite a nice man until I came to this House, but I might say we are all interested in tourists in the whole province.

We do go along with some of the things that were presented here this afternoon, and I might say to you that we are losing thousands of tourists down in our neighbourhood too, simply—well, I tell you what to do—get the report of the Niagara Parks Commission and see how many people come into the park but by-pass many of our municipalities. Are you ready to rap that thing? Am I out of order? I see Mr. Chairman is getting it ready, and I thought I had better quit before he stops me.

Forty thousand people a year less on the south boulevard from the Peace Bridge; can you imagine that in 1957 and 1958 when there were more people in the park? We have the tourists, we have nothing to stop them with.

I think the hon. Minister (Mr. Cathcart) should concentrate a little bit more on where they do come in and stop them for a little while. We need their tourist dollars. Certainly we concentrate on tourists in Niagara Falls.

We are doing a good job, and we want more to come there. That is one of the biggest industries in the Dominion of Canada. I would say that after hearing the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions speak here not too long ago, he apparently got everything for his riding. He got buildings and houses and colleges and Lord knows what.

All I am asking for in the city of Niagara Falls is just a few more tourists so we can get along just as well as you apparently do. Thank you very much, he agrees with me.

Mr. W. Noden (Rainy River): I want first to commend the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity for inserting a picture in the brochure, of one of the first plaques that was put up in this province under the Archaeological Historical Site Act when it was part of the Department of Education, and I might draw to your attention today that the hon. Minister of that department at that time, the hon. member from Eglinton, is sitting to the right of the hon. Minister there today, and we had considerable interest at that time in getting this brought together.

I might say that this plaque is what I would call or what we consider, and it is, as historical facts bear it out, the half-way mark on the great waterway route between eastern and western Canada and is called the Athabaska House, Fort Frances. It is the turning point of the fur trade between Athabaska country and Montreal where the trade was originated from, following the Ottawa, the Nipigon, Georgian Bay, Huron, Lake Superior and the Cam and Pigeon River route and then on through Rainy Lake and Lake of the Woods and through to the Saskatchewan River and to the Mackenzie Delta.

It is significant that it is in the brochure of yours today, and to think that the hon. Minister of Education at that time, was the one who gave support to it, and it is a recognized fact in the Department of Travel and Publicity as being one of the original plaques.

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): I would like to ask where the hon. Minister transferred the $27,000 from the museums from last year; it was not in last year's estimate. Where did he bring it from?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Education.

Mr. Worton: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: From Education.

Mr. Worton: Thank you.

Mr. A. Thompson (Dovercourt): Mr. Chairman, may I ask a question in connection with the staff? I am interested in how you select your staff. Do you publicize the job opportunities? Do you have examinations or is it done without examinations? What kind of qualifications do applicants need?

I was also interested to ask the hon. Minister, in connection with all these publications: is it your purpose that the staff should put out these publications? or is your purpose that you have a minimum staff and that you do this by tender to various advertising and publishing companies? If you do it by tenders to advertising and publishing companies, are these public tenders?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: In the first place, in answer to the hon. members first question, we have had very little in the way of turnover of staff at all in this department. As a matter of fact, I think the percentage would be very large of those who were there when I took over the department, or when I was appointed a Minister and are still there; we have very little.

We do employ some casual staff in addition in the summertime and those are made by application on the part of these people. We certainly do not advertise and tell them that we have two openings for some kind of a position.

Now in reply to the other question on the tenders, we do tender for these publications through the Queen's Printer.

Mr. Thompson: Do you advertise at all for staff in connection with the head office vacancies? You mentioned you have had little turnover. I am interested in the . . .

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Through the Civil Service Commission.

Mr. Thompson: Then you have no staff that you appoint yourself.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: My good friend, I have one right on my desk now, where I approved and recommended an appointment and the Civil Service Commission wrote back and said we do not approve, so you cannot put him on. So I am pretty well governed.

Mr. Thompson: You had none—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The Civil Service Commission said that he was not qualified in their opinion, although he has been with us as a casual for some little time and the department officials felt that he should be made permanent. Civil Service Commission did not think so, so I am pretty well governed there.

Mr. Thompson: Thank you.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We have very little turnover and very little in the way of new appointments.

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2206 and 2207 agreed to.

On vote 2208:

Mr. Thomas: Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the Prime Minister has given some attention to the reduction of the amusement tax. It affects so many people in the small income group. According to the amount of money we spent to collect it, I do not think we are making too much out of it. Do you?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Speak to the treasurer—I am no longer. I am out of that.

Mr. A. Reaume (Essex North): What is this all about? Twelve thousand dollars travelling expense? I do not like that.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): May I ask the hon. Minister a question here?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The photography branch is under the director of photography with a staff who goes out and provides films—8 and 16 mm. motion picture films.

Mr. Newman: Does that include 16 mm.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is right, but the theatres branch has been in operation for 25 years for the purpose of censoring films, for theatres.

Mr. Newman: The commercial films, 35 mm?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is right.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Chairman, I wonder if the hon. Minister could tell us how many films that the censor board refused to O.K. this year?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Those figures are in the annual report. I have not got them right with me, but that is all in the annual report. It was tabled today.

Mr. Singer: Well, if he does not know about it, how can we know about it?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: We are giving him time to read it.

Mr. Singer: Is he? Before this debate or after?

Mr. Newman: Does the theatre branch also label the motion pictures adult entertainment and so forth?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: That is right.

Mr. Singer: Mr. Chairman, could the hon. Minister advise us where this censoring is done? I was under the impression that it was all done here in Toronto.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It is.

Mr. Singer: Well why is there $12,000 in travelling expenses?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, but they also have the inspection of all the theatres throughout this province for fire and other things.

Mr. Reaume: What about the Department of Labour?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The theatres are inspected as well by our—

Mr. Reaume: This branch of the government?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: The theatre's branch.

Mr. Reaume: I think it is about time he smartened up and shortened—

Mr. Chairman: Vote 2208, agreed to.

Mr. J. Chapple (Fort William): This is a new one, I'd like to know something about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, it's been here for several years.

Mr. Chapple: Public records and archives department is in the travel and publicity for the first time according to the comparisons I have in the two years.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: It was transferred last year.

An hon. member: From where?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: From the department of education. Dr. Spragge is the archivist for Ontario and has been—

Mr. Chapple: Why is that?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Well, mostly, I think to endeavour to align all of the work that plays a part towards the promotion of the tourist business. Our lad who is the director of the historical branch is Mr. D. J. MacCuitt, who was the assistant provincial archivist for Ontario, assistant to Dr. Spragge, and he accepted a transfer over to our department when we set up the historical and archaeological branch.

He is continually in touch with Dr. Spragge for information in relation to the research on the plaques that are established, and so on, and we felt, or the government felt, that this work, aligned with each other, would be helpful to us and save going through other departments for information.

Mr. Thompson: May I ask, under this Publications $5,000—what was the $5,000 for, to write the publications, to publish them, and to whom do they go to?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh yes. It was in last year's estimates and we carried it over this year for the purpose of compiling a thesis. In fact, I think Dr. Spragge is very anxious to publish two, three or four theses that he presently has on hand. I believe he did some work on them two or three years ago and it has sat still and we now hope to deal with them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, there are very many cases where University students doing post-graduate work do very valuable, or engage in very valuable, research work.

A case in point is the member for South York (Mr. MacDonald) who, in studying for his M.A. degree at Queen's University, did some very valuable basic work in relation to the city of Kingston and the Cartwright family.

It was felt desirable that the department would publish some of those papers. As a matter of fact, I think arrangements have now been made that papers written that way are all sent to the provincial archivist who looks over them to see if they are of material which should be preserved, with the result that if it is preserved of course, it means that some student or the historical society or people in this province may find the work is of value later on.

That is the purpose of it. It is a very modest and humble way of preserving some of those things.

My hon. friend, the member for South York, wrote, in my estimation, a very valuable piece of work in relation to certain beginnings of the city of Kingston, that is its modern beginnings, and the Cartwright family.

We are also—I do not know whether the vote is here or not—we are also doing work in collaboration with the Champlain society in preserving early records, basic records of this province.

I think four volumes have been published to date. Actually our contributions to those volumes are very small. I think only some $5,000 or $6,000 per volume. They include the Valley of the Trent, the Royal Fort Frontenac. There is presently a work being done in the Windsor area which is an immensely interesting area from the standpoint of history. As a matter of fact, in the Windsor area, very little is known about it, going back, I think, some 50 years before the battle of the Plains of Abraham in some of those early parishes in the Windsor area.

Work is being done in connection with the basic surveys and explorations of the Muskoka area, the area lying between Muskoka and the Ottawa river. These things are being done because of the great interest of historians in those things, and these sums, I can assure you, are very modest sums that are directed to that work.

A work that is presently in contemplation, I should say it is more than in contemplation, it is in relation to the formation of the county battalions and regiments in World War No. 1. Battalions which met very, very heavy casualties and which were formed on a county basis throughout the province.

In collaboration with the department of national defence the archives department is working on that, working on it in a variety of different ways, to get together foundation histories which can be used some day, perhaps 25 or 50 years from now, by students who are interested in that sort of thing.

It is very interesting to find this, but in matters of history, as a matter of fact, there may be very little interest shown in them for 50 or 75 years afterwards, but then they become of immense value in the story of the province. This work being done in the public records and archives branch is along that line. Dr. Spragge is the Deputy Minister.

As the hon. Minister said, the purpose of bringing that into this area was simply this, we found that our efforts were being divided. We were doing work in connection with historic sites and a whole variety of things, and then advertising and publicizing things, and our efforts were divided between the archives branch and the department of education.

We have put it all under one heading and I think there is very substantial progress being made in an area where there is a tremendous amount of work to be done. Only the very most minute fringe of Ontario's history has been touched, and it will be the work, of course, of generations to bring this up to date, to keep it up to date, and to provide the ways and means that the history of this province may be preserved.

It is very interesting to note this. In western Canada, by reason of the archives of the Hudson's Bay Company, the Northwest Company and the French traders, very much more is known of Canada in the early days from Fort William west than it is here in old Ontario itself.

Now these things we hope to remedy. Yet it takes time and infinite patience to do it. It is not the expenditure of large sums of money, it is getting the people who are interested in these things and will dig into them. That is what this branch is doing.

Mr. Thompson: Mr. Chairman, if I could I want to clarify this in my own mind. Is it that in one sense the Ontario government is interested in the same way as the Canada Council, that is, to develop the history of the country, through assisting the study by some society or student which they see is of significance in recording the historical background of the country, that then they give financial aid with respect to such study.

But I notice where the hon. Minister has suggested in this particular item that it was for three theses by Dr. Spragge. Is that correct?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, no, the publication of the thesis that was made possible through the efforts of this—

Mr. MacDonald: One of them?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: One of them, yes, but they would be produced from the work of different students who have made major contributions towards—

Mr. Whicher: I am sorry, could I clarify: is this $5,000 item for the work of the hon. member for York South?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No.

Mr. Thompson: Then who is it for, could the hon. Minister tell me?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: For three university students, I presume.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I explain it in this way. What is being done is that the various theses are collected by the various universities of this history department every year and they are forwarded to the archives department, and the archives department, if they are worthy of publication within the limits of the vote, try to publish them.

On the other hand, I think there are very many theses which are kept on file and indexed so that other students may come along and perhaps use them at later times.

A very great deal of valuable work on the part of students was simply lost because there was no way of preserving it. This is an effort to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Chairman, I am sorry that I was out of the House for an appointment I had to deal with, but if there are any misgivings in the Liberal ranks, the thesis that I had something to do with was with regard to the honourable Richard Cartwright, the founder of the Cartwright family, who gave them some of their most illustrious figures in the history of Liberalism.

Mr. Worton: Nobody is arguing about it. We just thought you were getting your $5,000, that is all.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, no. Mr. Chairman, the reason why I rise at the moment is with regard to the hon. Prime Minister's comments on historical sites. I understand that the hon. Minister indicated that there was a plaque going to be installed to commemorate the memory of Agnes MacPhail.

I wonder if I can presume to draw to the attention of the department another illustrious Canadian who is a native of Ontario. His name was J. S. Woodsworth, who was born in Etobicoke.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We are going a long way today.

Mr. MacDonald: If the hon. Prime Minister will just withhold any political judgment for a moment. Some few years ago a rather remarkable thing happened. A citizens' forum broadcast was held in which there were four panelists. When it was analyzed afterwards it was found that these four panelists were a pretty good cross-section of political parties in Canada.

The question before the panelists that night was, for each of them to name the six outstanding Canadians since Confederation. The remarkable thing was that the panelists were unanimous on four: Sir John A. MacDonald, Sir Wilfrid Laurier, Mackenzie King and J. S. Woodsworth. On the other two, there were some differences of opinion.

Now, I raise this to indicate that I think we have passed the stage of any argument as to the stature and position of J. S. Woodsworth in the history of Canada. Since he was born in Etobicoke, and if there is any doubt on it, his recent biographer, Ken McNaught, who is a member of the history staff at the University of Toronto, will certainly be able to direct one readily, to all of the basic details. It would be good to drive out to Etobicoke and see a plaque honouring the name of J. S. Woodsworth.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: May I just answer for a moment, because I think we are getting off the rails completely on this thing. There is a procedure that the branch or the department has been trying to follow, and that is this: That we prefer the application to come from the local area, from an historical society, women's institute, or some interested group in the area to the department.

In turn then it goes before the advisory committee composed of outstanding historians and professors. After the director, Mr. McHewitt has done the research and provided the information, then the advisory committee deals with it, and if they approve, it comes to me for the Minister's signature.

Now, for us to be accepting requests here, as we are—I did mention Agnes McPhail—but the hon. member will note I ended it by saying I hope that the county of Grey would make the application and if they do, I can assure them it would receive sympathetic consideration. We have in all the 177 plaques established, they have come by way of an application from the local area. We have not gone out as a department and said, "We are going to impose a plaque on that particular community."

Mr. MacDonald: I wonder if the hon. Minister would just consider this: I am not disputing that one of the ways for deciding—

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: Oh, we will certainly include that great name, Miss McPhail, and my friend McKenzie from Lambton county. I will be glad to.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister's friend McKenzie from Lambton county. Who is that?

It seems to me that one source for names for which it will be legitimate to put up plaques is local historical societies, but I must confess I was very struck when the hon. leader of the Opposition earlier this session had to remind the government that they had not put up a plaque to Mackenzie King.

After all, whatever one's political views are, it seems to me that somebody slipped up, that some historical association had not—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I point out to the hon. member that actually to date there have been only about 177 in all Ontario. As a matter of fact, we have made only a very small beginning on a tremendous job. Now, I would like myself to see every community in this province marked as to its beginnings, as to where the name came from and so on.

Those things I think are of immense interest to people, to tourists.

Now in Niagara-on-the-Lake, I say to the hon. member for Niagara Falls (Mr. Bukator), Niagara-on-the-Lake is of course a little outside of his riding, but there are several plaques there. As a matter of fact, there are not enough plaques in Niagara-on-the-Lake really to meet the requirement. Now, it takes time, and as I say, I suppose every one of these plaques costs around $500 by the time they are cast and erected.

The historical part of it is done by a committee here which really acts for nothing, a very distinguished list of names indeed, and I would say to the hon. member that I am hopeful that we will be able to make more progress in this. I think that the history of our province ought to be commemorated everywhere, but again it is going to take time and we just have to be patient about it.

With Mr. Mackenzie King, my hon. friend mentioned his birthplace as being in the city of Kitchener. Actually speaking, we have not had time to get around to it. There are other places in his fine community that we have not had time to get around to, but these things will receive attention and I would say that I think it is a sound beginning to a very great project.

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: I think I could explain, Mr. Chairman, that one reason we had not given consideration to federal Prime Ministers has been that we have been careful that we did not overlap with the federal monument board. And we felt that perhaps they should have that responsibility.

However, we are now going to consider these. I once had a Prime Minister of Canada down in Lambton county, and I hope my people will send a request.

But again I want to say that we hesitate to impose, we like it coming from the local area.

Mr. Troy: Mr. Chairman, may I ask the hon. Minister, is this one of their publications, this "From Wa Wa with the Wild Goose"?

Hon. Mr. Cathcart: No.

Mr. Troy: Thank you very much.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Chairman, with respect to this item, 2208, we were talking about these theses. Now, what I would like to know is this: Is the money that we are allocating to be used for the publication of a particular thesis or does it go to the author himself?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, the printing only.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, does he not think we should do something for these authors and stimulate this type of work?

No, no, I am sorry, Mr. Chairman. I am very innocent about—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We did not want to violate the legislative assembly.

Mr. Wintermeyer: No, I would not want to do that. But it does seem to me that maybe this is the only department that is giving any encouragement to this type of work; then it does seem to me that we are not doing as much as we might consider doing.

My understanding now is that this particular vote is to be used to pay for the mechanical job of reproducing these, but actually the author gets nothing.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He gets a degree out of it.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I suggest, Mr. Chairman, that some thought might well be given to the project to keep encouraging this type of work and the only way we can do that is to give some assistance to the individual authors.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Chairman, that reaches the end of the items it was agreed we should deal with this afternoon. The balance of this Estimate can remain over until the meeting of the tourist outfitters convention on March 17.

Hon. Mr. Frost moves the committee rise and report progress.

Motion agreed to.

The House resumed; Mr. Speaker in the chair.

Mr. Chairman: Mr. Speaker, the committee of supply begs to report it has come to certain resolutions and begs leave to sit again.

Report agreed to.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, before going into the Throne debate order, might I say to the House that I am trying with the co-operation of the hon. leader of the Opposition, whom I have consulted, to avoid any night sittings after tomorrow night for the balance of this week and for all of next week.

Now to do that, I think we will be proposing a resolution to meet at two o'clock in the afternoon on Mondays, Tuesdays and Thursdays during that period, and avoid any night sessions after tomorrow night.

Now, it would be gratuitous for me to give any words of advice to any hon. members of the House other than to say that years ago a very interesting figure sat in this House, Colonel Fraser Hunter, who represented the riding of St. Patrick, now represented by the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts). He was a resident of Grey county. He lived in Durham. I very often heard from him until the time of his death just a few months ago. Fraser also used to say that if you spoke more than 20 minutes you made a mistake. I just leave it at that.

He was a great man for publicity himself. I think the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) will recollect Fraser asserting that at various times. Of course, that is quite impossible on very many occasions, but it is something worthy of consideration, particularly on the part of those who perhaps have several speeches to make during the session.

It is only a matter of history and we have been discussing that here and the comments of a man who was a very interesting personality in this House.

I have no doubt that the proposal that we try to avoid night sessions in that period of some 10 days will be heartily received. I call the next order, the Throne debate.

Mr. Nixon: Twenty minutes for a Minister?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, no, there is no time limit in this House at all, but I just make that suggestion.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, this is my first opportunity to congratulate you on your election to the important office of Speaker of this House. Like many of the hon. members, it has been my privilege to have known you for quite some time now, and I am happy to say that I have always been impressed by your ability to discharge the many duties inherent to the positions of responsibility which you have held in this House. It is a pleasure, therefore, to associate myself with preceding speakers in wishing you godspeed in the execution of your important duties.

I am sure, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. members would expect that in my contribution to the debate I should deal with much of the work of my department. May I say that I intend doing this very thing in the course of the budget debate.

It is the prerogative of any hon. member of the Legislature to speak about matters of particular concern to his riding, and as the elected representative of Cochrane South, I feel I should avail myself of this opportunity to do just that.

However, before I do this, I would like to briefly touch upon some of the work of the Department of Lands and Forests in the broad field of conservation. Here are some examples:

1—The department has now completed an inventory of all of our forests in this province and a re-inventory is planned for every decade so that we will always be up to date with our forest inventory.

2—We have a very scientific annual census of our major wildlife species which we use as a basis for proper management of fish and wildlife resources.

3—We have divided the province into management units so that growth and cut of timber can be balanced.

4—We have zoned the public trapping grounds for the welfare of the trappers.

5—We are preserving areas of unique value as wilderness areas and that, Mr. Speaker, is a first in such legislation in North America.

6—We are designating areas for small harbours.

7—Our department's forest protection branch has developed a unique aerial water-dropping system which is being copied by organizations such as ours throughout the world.

8—Our management of county and municipal forests under an outstanding tree-planting system is paying dividends.

9—Our park policies have been designed to meet the need of our people for camping for the common man and his family.

10—I would also like to mention this, that we have already started on a study of wetlands and public shooting areas.

These are only a few examples from the hundreds of far-reaching plans and policies in resources conservation.

I mention them particularly at this time because Ontario, through its far-sighted policies in resources management, is playing a leading role in the "Resources for Tomorrow" conference now being planned on a Dominion-wide basis. We are taking an active part in planning this conservation conference and will contribute to it our experience and advice in the conservation of our resources. We are co-operating to the fullest extent with the federal government authorities in this regard and with our sister provinces of Canada.

Again I say, Ontario has a conservation of resources programme on all fronts second to none in Canada. Notwithstanding this, we are pressing on with all our efforts to meet the challenge that rising populations place on the use of these resources.

Three years ago, on February 15, 1957, I spoke here on matters pertaining to the riding of Cochrane South.

At that time, an air of uncertainty pervaded our gold mining communities. While pessimism as to the future of Kirkland Lake and Timmins had not taken full command, I must admit that the outlook was vague and that many of the believers had to resort to rose-tinted glasses as they peered ahead.

Today, I would like to report that the crippling forces of uncertainty and indecision have been defeated, and that a refreshing atmosphere of sensible optimism now prevails.

This remarkable transformation has occurred notwithstanding the fact that the gold mining industry—the mainstay of the economy of Cochrane South—still operates with one hand tied behind its back by the pegged price of gold.

Many things have contributed to our new outlook. I would like to point out, first of all, that the people who choose to live in the north have always been animated by a strong and abiding faith that, somehow, the north would never let them down. This, they have demonstrated time and again in the face of adversity.

But faith alone, Mr. Speaker, would not have been enough, and I suggest that to a large degree the implementation of this government's policies to develop the north, is to be thanked.

Without the government's realistic approach to our special problems, discouragement could easily have led to a general exodus of our population. That same realistic approach has encouraged mining developers to renew their quest for minerals in my riding. How well they have succeeded, I will describe shortly.

The improvement of our northern highways, including the projection of strategic new arteries and the construction of roads to resources, more than anything else, have served to kindle the flame of enthusiasm in my riding. With the coming of natural gas in the fall of 1958, we knew that a major obstacle to our industrial expansion—the lack of relatively cheap and abundant fuel—had been removed.

For these and other reasons I will eumerate in the course of my remarks, the people of my riding are now looking to the future with confidence.

This is eloquently attested to by the physical transformation which has taken place in the towns and villages of Cochrane South.

In my home town of Timmins, new residential areas have brightened the physical appearance of that 50-year-old community. In the past 12 to 18 months, building in the Porcupine district has been little short of phenomenal. New homes of modern and attractive architecture, ranging in price from $10,000 to $20,000 each, are being constructed and sold as fast as they are built. Many individuals are building new residences, some with reported values in excess of $50,000 each.

Building permits issued in 1959 by the corporation of the town of Timmins totalled 840 of an estimated value of $3,184,357. In 1958, 692 permits were issued representing an estimated expenditure of $2,145,473. The same story applies in the neighbouring townships of Whitney, Tisdale and Mountjoy.

In this matter of building permits, assessors feel that the estimated value given by prospective builders is much below the actual value of the finished building.

The end result of all this building activity which shows no indication of letting up, is that our communities are taking on an appearance of outward prosperity. It does show that the people feel that they are going to be around for a long time to come.

Startling changes are also taking place in the retail field. The F. W. Woolworth Company have purchased a large and expensive piece of land in the heart of the Timmins business district for the erection of a new store this year. Seven other retail outlets will be moving as a result of this and many new and good-looking places of business are expected to follow. A general move to make all stores more and more attractive is already in evidence. There are also indications that at least two large chain stores are considering the establishment of supermarkets. A large "independent" supermarket was recently opened. Many of the people in the Porcupine district see in the expenditures in the hundreds of thousands of dollars by oil companies for new service stations a further indication of future prosperity for the Porcupine and the north in general.

From the beginning of production, 50 years ago, the gold mines of the Porcupine have produced new wealth valued at $1.36 billion and have paid out in wages and salaries over $5 billion. This is the new wealth that has made the development of much of northern Ontario possible. Wherever one goes, in all the mining provinces of our country, one will find evidence of Porcupine money in the form of great mining enterprises which in turn add immeasurably to the economic welfare of us all.

Each year, now, these same Porcupine gold mines pay out nearly $20 million in wages to a working force of nearly 6,000 men, and they constitute the main source of employment in the northwestern part of my riding.

The unexpected finding of commercial occurrences of copper ore in both the McIntyre and Paymaster mines are considered as big news for the Porcupine camp. Work to date on this most surprising development encourages us to believe that a strong possibility exists for a considerable increase in the production of the camp, and that these copper indications may well be found in some of the adjoining mining properties.

Our economic position in the Porcupine is being enhanced by a veritable flurry of mining developments. The most important of these is located at Kamiscotia Lake, some 20 miles west of Timmins at the Violamac copper mine. This is a new venture in an old setting, and mining production will start this summer. Three hundred men will be employed.

Thirty-two miles south of South Porcupine, a 790-foot shaft has been sunk and underground work is being done at a nickel mine. Another 100 men are expected to be employed on this property if its development meets with success.

This operation has attracted interest in surrounding properties where values in copper and gold have been obtained. Reports would have it that several firms are planning drilling programmes.

Roughly 40 miles to the west of Timmins, Kukatush mining corporation has drilled an iron occurrence which lies conveniently alongside the Canadian National transcontinental line. In the same region, the Johns-Manville exploration crews are continuing their work on an asbestos discovery in Kenogaming township.

The latter organization, as the hon. members are aware, operates Ontario's only asbestos producing mine—it is located some 50 miles east of Timmins, near Matheson. Production there started in 1950 as an open-pit operation. Mining is now being done underground. Several mining prospects are being examined or drilled, east of Timmins.

Much work has been done in the past 20 years on gold prospects between Timmins and the Quebec border along the eastern extension of the Porcupine break. I have no doubt that a great many potential producers would become active overnight in the event Canadian gold ever reached a better price than now obtains.

Prospectors and mining developers have done a remarkable job in the past and they deserve not only our congratulations but our fullest possible co-operation in their risky, time- and capital-consuming pursuit of elusive wealth. It is that type of wealth—and let us always remember it—that opens up the north.

To the south and east of Timmins, Kirkland Lake, with a population of over 17,000 is the second largest community in my riding. It is located east of highway No. 11 on highway No. 66.

The gold industry is also the main economic factor in this sector of Cochrane South, with mines like the Lake Shore, Sylvanite, Teck-Hughes, Wright-Hargraves, Macassa and Kirkland Minerals, employing just over 2,000 men. Production from this world-renowned gold camp is nearing the $700 million mark, and wages and salaries paid to the end of 1959 amount to well over $200 million.

Upper Canada Mines Limited and Kerr-Addison Gold Mines Limited are located to the east of this "Golden Mile" of Kirkland Lake, and they both report excellent development news. Kerr-Addison, as you are probably aware, is one of the great mines of the western hemisphere, employing 1,400 men, many of whom reside at Virginiatown and the town of Larder Lake on the shores of beautiful Larder lake. The Quebec border is located only a few miles east of this latter mine.

Much construction work has been carried out in Kirkland Lake proper last year. One of the most important projects consisted of a large addition to the Kirkland district hospital which I had the honour to officially open. On October 25 last, it was also my pleasure to officially open the new Kirkland Lake school for retarded children. In this connection, Mr. Speaker, I would like to bring to light a fact that is not too well known hereabouts.

It is this: the idea behind the formation of the Ontario association for retarded children began in Kirkland Lake in 1947. It was, therefore, in my riding that this most humanitarian of movements originated. This great organization is now composed of 57 local associations throughout Ontario which provide schooling for nearly 1,600 retarded boys and girls who cannot be enrolled in ordinary schools. I am proud to say, Mr. Speaker, that good causes find good Samaritans in my riding.

A new supermarket will be opened in Kirkland Lake next month. At the beginning of this month, a new medical arts building was completed and members of the profession were occupying the new quarters just made available. A new office building is also under construction and expected to open its doors in a matter of weeks.

Later on in the year, a chip-board plant, utilizing material formerly lost in pulp-making or sawmilling, will be under construction and will be in addition to the present Jamar plywood plant which is a comparatively new industry in Kirkland Lake.

One of the major obstacles in the path of new industrial development in Kirkland Lake has been the lack of suitable housing or accommodation for employees and supervisory staff. This problem is expected to be solved by a land assembly scheme in which the federal and provincial governments along with the municipality, are taking part. I have the assurance that this much-needed development will be brought into operation this year.

Owing to its strategic location in relation to many points of important developments in the north, Kirkland Lake has been rightly termed the "Hub of the North." For that reason, it is the distributing point for 15 wholesale warehouses for all kinds of hardware and electrical equipment. Two wholesale grocers also operate from this point. It stands to reason that improvements in economic conditions in many parts of northern Ontario or the adjoining province of Quebec have a direct bearing on the overall conditions of Kirkland Lake proper.

Gold is by no means the solitary mineral with development potential in the Kirkland-Larder axis. A large deposit of magnetite iron ore in Boston township, a few miles southeast of Kirkland Lake, has been drilled in recent years by Jones and Loughlin—one of the biggest iron ore firms in North America. The results have been satisfactory to the point that recently additional ground has been acquired by a wholly owned Canadian subsidiary—Jalore Mining Company. Work on this property was interrupted at the time of the recent steel strike in the United States. According to information I received this week, I understand that an intensive geological survey will be started early this spring and that additional drilling will follow. Bulk sampling of the ore has proven highly encouraging and eventual production, it is understood, would consist of pelletized concentrates such as are produced by Bethlehem Steel at Marmora, east of Peterborough.

The rock formations for many miles on both sides of highway No. 66 are far from having been completely probed by the minefinders. I am firmly convinced that long before the last ounce of gold has been extracted from the producing mines of Kirkland Lake and Larder Lake, new mines will be pouring out their treasure of new wealth be it gold or silver, iron or copper or any of the long list of economic minerals hidden in the rocky clasp of the north's fabulous treasure chest.

Mr. Speaker, as I remarked earlier, the improvement of our road system in my riding has been one of the most important contributions to the new outlook in Cochrane South. Just as everywhere else in the north, the cry will always be for more and better roads. We realize that the province with its limited purse cannot expect to accomplish everything in one day and we are thankful for the great programme of road and highway building being carried out at the present time. Besides opening up the country and making natural resources accessible to development, these new roads are, in fact, the great magnet that will attract tourists by the tens of thousands to vast areas of the most attractive vacation land in this hemisphere.

In my estimation, the most important of these is highway No. 101 which can now be travelled year-round from Foleyet clear through to the Quebec boundary, where it connects with the sister province's highway system.

The extension of that road southwest to meet with work already in progress from Chapleau is on schedule. Two weeks ago, members of the roads committee of the Porcupine chamber of commerce were able to drive as far as 22 miles west of Foleyet on the road extension and they reported that they were well pleased with what they saw. When the Foleyet-Chapleau link is finally completed, the people of my riding are expecting a large influx of tourists heading their way via the new international bridge to be constructed at Sault Ste. Marie. We are convinced in Cochrane South that this new road is our path to an enriched economy. I am particularly pleased to report that all the chambers of commerce of northeastern Ontario are aggressively working toward improving the attractiveness of this vast section of the province for potential tourists. The Porcupine chamber of commerce alone has already received over 10,000 inquiries stemming from attendance at three United States sportsmen's shows. For that and other reasons, they are looking forward to the biggest year, tourist-wise, in 1960.

Mr. Speaker, I see it is 6 o'clock. I would ask your indulgence to resume after recess.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): Mr. Speaker, the great north-south artery, highway No. 11, save for a few short sections to be rebuilt, is as fine a piece of road as one can expect to find anywhere in North America.

The new by-pass from Matheson northerly is now open to Monteith. Work is presently underway from there on to Porquis Junction, and soon will be brought to full standard right up to Cochrane.

The reconstruction programme now being carried out on highway No. 66, from Kenogami to the Quebec border, is one of the most rewarding programmes in my riding. This has been long needed, and the completion of the work will tend to increase inter-provincial traffic, and bring an end to the legitimate complaints of the people of my riding directly affected by the former bad conditions of this much-travelled highway.

The portion of the highway passing through Kirkland Lake, where it is known as Government Road, is to be completely rebuilt this year. A start was made at the east end of Kirkland last fall, and work has proceeded as far as Allan Avenue. I may point out that Kirkland Lake itself did a great deal of street improvement work in 1959, work that is being carried through this year, and which will considerably improve driving conditions there.

Reports from The Department of Lands and Forests indicate that bush operations this year are ahead of those for the last cutting year. Actually, in the Cochrane district, total cordage to date—417,650 cords—exceeds that of the whole previous fiscal year. Most of this wood is cut in the riding of Cochrane North, but an important mill of the Abitibi complex is located in my riding at Iroquois Falls, and it gives employment to many hundreds of residents of Iroquois Falls, Ansonville, and a dozen or so smaller communities in the area.

Cutting operations naturally attract a large number of farmers and settlers who have a chance to earn much needed hard cash in the spruce forests. Sawmilling operations are also responsible for the employment of large numbers of residents of Cochrane South who have acquired an enviable reputation as dependable, hard-working forestry workers.

Mr. Speaker, I wish I could say that our agricultural industry is flourishing. I know I can say that, thanks to some studies that have been carried out by a committee of The Ontario Department of Agriculture and The Department of Lands and Forests, better things are in store for northern agriculture. I expect to be in a position to be more specific later on in this session.

Mr. Speaker, these are only a few of the highlights of the things about my riding I wished to bring to the attention of this House. Naturally, as elsewhere in our province, these matters that are brought up in the course of this debate refer to physical things like roads and bridges, hydro power and grants, schools and hospitals, and other institutions that are all part and parcel of our organized way of living. To some observers, this seeming repetition may be boring. But I say that it is necessary for the good of the province that these matters be brought up, and that the elected representatives of the people be given an opportunity to know what is going on in the smaller world that is the individual riding.

May I say in closing that I am very proud to represent Cochrane South in this Legislature, and I am ever thankful to the voters of this riding who placed their confidence in me in 1955 and again in 1959. It has been a source of great enjoyment to me to be associated with you, Mr. Speaker, with your hon. predecessor (Mr. Downer), with the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost), and all hon. members of this House in service to my people.

Mr. G. Bukator (Niagara Falls): Mr. Speaker, and hon. gentlemen of this House, I came exceptionally well unprepared and I do not know what I am going to talk about, and I do not know how long I am going to take.

But it seems that the custom here is to compliment you in your position as Speaker. That is not going to be hard to do, because I have found you an exceptionally patient man, and I hope you continue to be so for at least another hour. I would not want to think that you would use your authority at this time in the strictest letter of the law, because I may find myself off base occasionally.

The Deputy Speaker (Mr. Morrow) has filled your position quite well from time to time, and I want to compliment him also for the excellent job he has been doing.

The former hon. Speaker (Mr. Downer)—I am sorry he is not here—has, I understand, set quite a pace for you, and so you have your work cut out for you. I understand he did an exceptionally good job during the many years that he held that position.

Now then, it seems to me the next step in the programme is to compliment the hon. mover (Mr. Davis) and hon. seconder (Mr. Grossman) of the motion of thanks in reply to the speech from the Throne. Hon. members may not be so anxious to do that after I say what I have to say about the “young lad” from Peel (Mr. Davis). He made his first speech, too, that particular day, I understand. In general, he did an exceptionally good job—except for some of his criticism.

I think that from time to time some of the older hon. members on both sides of the House, impose their thinking on younger newcomers, and so they instil into their minds something that should not have been put there in the first place. I think the hon. member for Peel has been slightly brainwashed, especially when he referred to the parks commission under the old government, so to speak. He did not take the matter back quite far enough, because I remember how things were in Ontario before 1934, and I remember why the government changed in 1934, too.

I remember the cars being sold—I did not remember the price of $50 a car—but if that is what he said, and he being an honest young man—indeed, I find him an exceptionally clean-cut young man—then his information must be right.

I doubt very much though, that he was born at that time, someone must have told him.

Mr. Davis: Five years.

An hon. member: That is all right, do not worry about that.

Mr. Bukator: I notice that the hon. member for St. Andrew (Mr. Grossman) is not in his seat. In seconding the motion of thanks, he made some interesting comments. You know, he comes from our part of the country. That hon. member worked in the Clifton Hotel, and he knew conditions there as they were before the good old Liberal party took over, so to speak, and began to revamp things, change things around, and make things beautiful, so to speak.

Now then, it was said that the former government put the Niagara parks terribly in debt. I also find—is that not awful—that the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley), who is also the chairman of the Niagara parks commission, is not here. I want to say a few things about this matter for the records. Hon. members can correct me if I am wrong, but the hon. Minister did say that the former group in Queen's Park—from 1934 to 1943—did quite a good job on the parks in the Niagara area.

I do not know whether I should start to criticize at this particular stage of the game, or wait a little longer. However, hon. members can take this for what it is worth. If we watch our cousins to the south, on the American side, fixing up that park between Buffalo and Niagara-on-the-Lake, it will be noticed that they are building two highways—not one—a service road to the houses and the road for the public to travel on, with curbs and gutters. I think, in relation to the Niagara parks, if the commissioners do not devote a little more time to doing things, they will be taking a second spot in this parks system. They are not devoting enough time to that park from lake to lake.

I was going to speak about civil defence for a short time this evening, but I find also that the hon. Minister of Planning and Development (Mr. Nickle) is not in his seat. I do not want to pick on any hon. Minister who is not here, the hon. Ministers should be here to defend themselves.

I sat on the civil defence committee in the county of Welland, representing the county for some 2.5 years, and I thought we had a good organization except for the fact that the same old chestnut showed up—not enough money. Not enough money from where? Naturally from the provincial government. So how can interested citizens do a decent job without that necessary thing that makes the wheels go around?

I was going to speak on many, many issues, but I thought for the first time out, one should stay close to home. I imagine hon.

members would be tickled to death if I quit now. Well, it is not that bad.

I am going to say something about the park, and I am sincerely sorry that the hon. Minister of Labour is not in his seat. However, I think he can read from Hansard and correct me if I am wrong.

I will start at Fort Erie, where the old fort has been remodelled and rebuilt. It is an exceptionally fine place to entertain tourists, have them stop for a little while, and spend a few of those dollars we all look for from the tourists—naturally.

Then we come down into the town of Fort Erie and we find that the river bank, for the full length of that town, is good for only two purposes. With the exception of the odd spot, which the people themselves cleaned up for swimming purposes, the river bank is only good for raising mosquitoes and wild ducks. I speak of the stretch right in the heart of the town, under the administration of the parks commission.

It appears to me that this area would be a good place to spend a few of those surplus dollars that the hon. chairman himself spoke about not too long ago. I would like to appeal to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) to do something about the Queen Elizabeth Way, but he is not in his seat either.

Mr. G. W. Innes (Oxford): There are not too many of them over there.

Mr. Bukator: They knew I was going to speak so, naturally, why should they be?

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): The hon. member scared them out.

Mr. Bukator: I might say this though, that when hon. members opposite speak about what has been done in Port Arthur or Lincoln county, and about those beautiful highways with the service roads, honestly, it would lead one to believe that the Queen Elizabeth Way, which starts at the Peace Bridge and goes through the county of Welland, did not belong to that particularly well-kept highway system.

Last summer—during the election campaign by the way—I drove on that road, and honestly, motorists were lifting tar onto their tires on a hot day. For quite some time, we did complain about the fact that at the intersection of the Sodom road, which runs into Crystal Beach and the Queen Elizabeth Way—hon. members can find, if they check the records, that many, many accidents have occurred at that particular intersection.

I remember being elected to council some 12 years ago, and Willoughby township suggested to The Department of Highways that they put a traffic light there. But until a few people were maimed and killed, this government did not do too much about it. Subsequently they did put up a traffic light, which did help a little bit.

For the information of the hon. member for Peel, I find that when the Queen Elizabeth Way was started under the old regime, we find that they did the one lane. But the other was not done because there was a change in government 16 or 17 years ago, and they felt that one lane was enough. The incoming government, because the area down there was represented by a Liberal, left things alone. I hope they will not take that attitude now, under similar circumstances.

The matter was left alone until they finally got themselves a member from the Niagara riding who was of their particular political faith, then they did something about the second lane.

I was very much amused by the attitude of the hon. former Minister of Highways (Mr. Allan) when we came up to see him about fixing that particular road. I like him very much as a gentleman, but, with a representation from the county of Welland on the county road system, I came up to Queen's Park here, to talk to the former hon. Minister of Highways about fixing that particular road, and he said that the traffic count did not warrant it.

I do not know how they could get traffic to drive on that particular lane, but that was the way it was figured out in the books. I do not know how people can drive through weeds and pastures and so on, but we had to have something there, yet the traffic count did not warrant it.

Then we have what is known as the Dorchester circle. Just recently I was coming in to Toronto and I saw an accident—a car went through the guard railing and flipped and a man, from Buffalo, was in critical condition, and I do not know if he has recovered yet or not. That is a man trap.

Oh, hon. members can easily say that the Liberals built that thing originally and laid it out. Well, I will tell them it was a figment of some architect's or engineer's imagination that might have looked good on paper, but it is a killer. The hon. Minister of Transport should check the records. He will find that it should be looked into, and if he says the Liberals originally put it in—

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: As a matter of fact, that has been under study very recently.

Mr. Bukator: Wonderful, I appreciate that. But even if this particular circle was laid out, let us say by the Liberal people of that day, the Conservatives maintained it and repaired some of it, and they have put some signs to show the lanes. But two wrongs do not make a right. I know the gentlemen in authority do not want any more accidents than we do, and so, if it is under study, I appreciate it, I will go back to my constituents and tell them so. I will say I talked about it in the House, and that I found out that this particular thing was looked into.

Recently, the hon. Minister did agree to put up a traffic light down in the city area and we appreciate that. I wanted to say to the hon. members most forcibly about that particular part of Queen Elizabeth Way, that it is so odd to drive that last 15 miles into Buffalo, to find so much difference as compared to the way it is in St. Catharines. The department is going to spend quite a lot of money from Toronto to Hamilton—6 lanes, I understand—and we do want those two lanes brushed up a little bit. I think that will make the people happy.

Well, even the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) is not in his seat. I thought at least he would be in his seat to hear the member from Niagara Falls, because a while back he listened to one from his side of the fence.

I would like to say to him that, back in 1953, there were the by-elections. It was rather odd that the former Bill Howes—who hon. members all know was a gentleman and who would be rather hard to follow—well, Bill decided to go to the federal House, and in 1953 we had the by-election, and you know, I just checked the records recently here to find out that a Conservative member came to this House, a clean-cut young man, hon. members know him very well. He was going to make quite a mark here, I thought. But for some unknown reason, he decided to quit, but he won that riding. As hon. members know, Niagara riding was a Conservative riding to start with, and I am going to tell hon. members to pick that riding up again, they can have it if they like. All they have to do is treat the people right. The hon. Prime Minister has said on so many occasions, we treat people right, that is why we are here and you are over there.

I might say that is why I am here and their hon. member is over there. He just did not play the game the way the game should be played. He was elected to a large majority from 84 Conservatives and thought then he would accomplish things, because they had one of their own, and hon. members know he won that election with a plurality of 3,149 votes.

I think I better check my notes on that, and you know, as I look through, 3,149, is the plurality given in the book on page 9. But when I check down a little farther, I find that the plurality happens to be 3,049, there is a discrepancy of 100 votes. Somebody has made a mistake, and those things happen, even in records.

Then back in 1955, when I decided I would like to come into this particular field after being in municipal affairs for 12 years, I took on the job of taking a stab at a higher level of government, and I was beached by 2,078 votes. There happened to be 500 people who changed their minds in that length of time.

Now then, the man was re-elected—he was in the government—he could have produced possibly a lot more than he did, because when the time came about that he decided to go to another field, they picked an exceptionally fine young man from down our riding, an educated boy, teaching mathematics and science. He had the appearance, he is clean cut, of good Irish stock as he put it in his comments when he ran for office. But when the chips were counted, I took the Niagara riding with some 4,345 votes.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Take them all.

Mr. Bukator: That is not to say too much for me. If that is a Conservative riding, and if I, a Liberal, won that riding with such a majority, then there must be something radically wrong, or the people down there are not satisfied. As I said at the beginning of my comments, I am going to show them how to get this riding back again. All they have to do is treat their good Conservative people down there right, and they will vote for the Conservative man again because he was a good man. But they felt that this Liberal disturber of the peace from the village of Chippawa might bring home some of the bacon, and that is what I am here for.

I am going to tell them why—I think they know. Again I am awfully sorry that the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Minister of Labour are not in their seats, because recently I said that down in my riding—the riding that I represent and I am tickled to death to be doing it for those fine people—I can get anything I want from the Conservative government in Queen's Park through the hon. Minister in the government that will not give me something that makes sense if I ask them for it, simply because the hon. Prime Minister himself said we are fair. That is all I want. If they are fair, then they will produce the necessary, and let me show them or ask them a question, if you will.

A Provincial Manual was set up some years ago, is that under The Assessment Act?

Recently they set up a Provincial Manual whereby we can assess counties and townships, and you know the county of Welland, with my very good friend and former warden of the county from Welland riding, we applied this county system of assessment. Do hon. members remember the old bile rolling, they called it, where they used to go out, a few men with an assessment committee, and look over a property and say, "That looks worth almost as much as a home in my town." Then they set down the figures and argued in county council for a week to come up with an assessment, while the good people on the other side of the House, on the right side of the government, decided that there is a right way to do this with the Provincial Manual, and they brought it up as a standard or a basis by which we would assess.

I imagine the hon. members opposite are all quite happy with that thing. I am hoping they are anyhow, because it did an exceptionally good job in the county, and I want to give them some credit. Do they all believe that they did a good job when they brought that into existence? I was hoping they would thump their desks, but they did not. I missed my first shot. I thought I would get some support there.

The Provincial Manual is the best thing that came along, considering the methods they had used before. But the Provincial Manual is used only for the people of the province of Ontario. That method is not used by the province. No, they have grants in lieu of taxes. They give us some money in lieu of taxes because they have taken out of taxation certain portions of land.

Honestly, someone will think I am picking on the chairman of the parks commission. I sat there with him for 6 years. I wanted to say to him he can read this in Hansard if he has the time. There are many things about the commissioner that I did see, and after going out into the field looking for support from the workers, and people who work in those commissions, I found that there were many discrepancies there, and they were not too happy with the administration in the park in some issues only. Nothing serious, but there were things that they were not too pleased with.

So I wanted to say to the hon. Minister that I looked about, and I talked to these people and I found their reasoning made sense. I would like this read into Hansard, so I would mention that the Niagara parks police that you see on these lovely cards—and fine men they are, too—are not parks police according to The Parks Commission Act. They call them guards. They are not really policemen. They are officers and guards and caretakers.

Mind you, they are doing an exceptionally good job, and if hon. members were to go down into their office—they have 10, 12, 13, 14 men working for them—they have quarters there that are deplorable. They should not have to work under those conditions.

Mind you, they did not put me up to this, that was a little research on my own.

I have found many little things that I thought possibly I should talk about, because the hon. Prime Minister himself said to the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha) the other day: "$310,000 for school purposes, I will give you that myself," and he reached in his pocket.

Now, I know that the hon. Prime Minister does not carry $310,000 in his pocket. But he did say the hon. member had been here for 4 consecutive weeks. "He could have come into my office to see me about this particular problem and I would have taken it up with him, I think we could have worked this thing out." I mean, that was the impression that I got.

So I am going to be seeing some of the hon. Ministers in their offices pertaining to problems about which I do not think I should take up the time on the floor, because first of all—if they say that they are fair, and the hon. Prime Minister did say, "and I want to be fair," and these requests that I make are fair, then we will get them. So why bother them with wasting their time asking for petty little things that should have been cleared up quite some time ago?

Recently they purchased—now comes the two hour speech that I did write. I made another notation here on the hon. Minister of Reform Institutions from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope). He impressed me with his speech the other day, and he did talk about the many things that happened up in his riding, and I am glad that he had full co-operation, so to speak, now perhaps it will overflow into other parts of the province.

I heard that the hon. Minister of Labour, the chairman of the parks commission—it is in the book, at least it is in the paper—said that they made some $360,000 net in their concessions in the park, and I am glad to hear that they are doing such a good job.

They purchased this piece of land in Stamford, the original Oakes Estate. It was felt by the Stamford council that it may come out of taxation. You know, there are about 20 acres of land there, a lovely site overlooking the Horseshoe Falls. When it was purchased by the park, Stamford council were quite concerned about it, and rightfully they should be. They felt that they were to lose this $7,200 approximately, a year in taxes.

So, in the paper of April 15, 1959, it says, "Misunderstanding cited by chairman of Niagara parks commission," and I will read hon. members a portion of what was said by the chairman at that time:

Realizing that ordinarily the township of Stamford might suffer some tax losses, it can be said that the commission is considering ways and means of seeing to it that the township suffers no loss for the present rate of taxes.

While it is not within the power of the commission within statutory restrictions to pay taxes on land, in view of the fact that there are fine buildings on the property with potential revenue therefrom, the commission believes that there will be no loss to the township—and he continued on and on.

Stamford township is quite concerned about that piece of land. There are buildings there that are deriving some revenue, I imagine. It will not bring any more. There will not be buildings go on that piece of property of 19 acres. I had a large hotel firm that wanted to buy the whole portion and put up a big hotel, which would have brought lots of employment and taxes to that township, too. But now it has gone out of taxation.

I would like to have the assurance from the chairman, at this stage of the game—rather than go about wondering—whether he would give us that $7,200 of taxes that Stamford feel they are going to lose. However, I will take that matter up with the chairman at his convenience.

I got a letter from the chamber of commerce about the bridge problem. They read in the paper that I was going to bring up the tax question, and in Fort Erie at the Peace Bridge, we will find their grant in lieu of taxes is some $45,000 this year, and they are going to be increased to $62,000 from $60,000.

If any hon. members have been down in that area, and have looked at both locations, I would think they would agree that the bridge at Niagara Falls would be entitled to more than $12,000 grant in lieu of taxes. We might say that there was a little more than $9,000 in grants for 2 or 3 years. I will refer to that later. Instead of getting what they really should have, they have much less in grants.

Again getting back to the chairman of the bridge commission—who is also the chairman of the parks commission—he is going to get himself a bridge built at Lewiston. Goodness knows, it has been a long time coming. Mr. Speaker, I venture to say that, because of his knowledge of the government and its activities, he will not settle for any $12,000 for a new bridge at Lewiston.

I would like this to go on record, that I do not feel that the Rainbow Bridge is paying sufficient for the concessions that they have. It has been mentioned that possibly this year they will not be getting that $9,000 grant they received last year because of some technicality on grants.

I do not care whether it comes from one department of the government or the other, but the least they could do is leave that $9,000 there. They are entitled to it, and I am going to show hon. members why when I get into my records pertaining to taxes in Ontario.

Oh, I was about to tell them how they would get the Niagara riding back to the Conservative government.

I went up and down the streets of Niagara Falls, and I said to every business man there: "Do you know there are concessions in that park that are not paying taxes, that are in direct opposition to you? They sell souvenirs, they sell coffee, they sell sandwiches, they sell dinners, they entertain the tourists, and they made quite a profit because we heard it read off here. But they do not pay any taxes."

Mind you, if the hon. Minister of Labour were here, he would defend himself by saying "we do pay taxes, we pay business taxes." But the figure of money, as I am going to show them very soon now, is much less as compared to what they would pay, if they were paying business tax. As private individuals, they would be paying that much more, too.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Are the prices cut-rate there?

Mr. Bukator: Oh, no, no. As a matter of fact, I would say this for the concessions in the park, they feed exceptionally well. I do not suppose any of the tourists who have eaten in any of these concessions would eat in the cafeteria now at the refectory.

As a matter of fact, I drop in there quite often myself, and in the dining room above, in the summer time, the meals are outstanding. The chairman did say they charge a little more for them, but I do not think so. I think the service, and the food that we get, is well worth every dollar that we pay for it.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): How many months are they open?

Mr. Bukator: Oh, I would say about May or June to September or October, but the cafeteria in that particular building is open all winter. It is open now.

The same thing applies to the Princess Elizabeth Building at the foot of Clifton Hill, where the hon. member for St. Andrew said he worked at the Clifton.

The Oakes Garden theatre is there now, it was taken out of taxation too. After the Clifton burned down, there were no taxes. The Lafayette Hotel was torn down, no taxes. The Queen's Hotel a little farther down, no taxes. The Princess Elizabeth Building or the Prince of Wales dancehall, no taxes. Concession after concession was torn out by the Liberal government.

I am going to draw to the attention of hon. members very soon now—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bukator: But I like talking—as a matter of fact, someone asked me how long I was going to be here, and I said possibly an hour, maybe more, and maybe less.

Even the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) is awake listening, and that is good, because the hon. member for Welland quite often finds himself napping over there. But this evening he is wide awake because he knows this is close to home, and I know he will help me when the time comes, because the hon. members opposite are fair—I heard that from the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. E. P. Morningstar (Welland): Things cannot be too bad, Mr. Speaker. They increased my majority last time.

Mr. Bukator: No, as a matter of fact, we could get into a conversation here that would last an hour or two because of our friendship in the past in county affairs. But that is no way to collect taxes from this government.

If I keep turning these pages as fast as I am doing here now, hon. members are not going to hear much more. I got into the wrong file, that is what happened.

They tell me they have been battling about these taxes since 1907 when Sir Adam Beck—the hon. Minister of Energy Resources (Mr. Macaulay) is not in his seat either, the vice-chairman of Hydro—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: There are not too many here.

Mr. Bukator: It would appear that I have this House all to myself, as far as the departments that I am after are concerned. Somebody must have told them I was going to ask for something.

But Sir Adam Beck built a station away back, and it paid taxes for a few years. I do not know that I want to go into Stamford files or Niagara files at this stage of the game—they both have problems.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Let us have them both.

Mr. Bukator: Well, I promise through you, Mr. Speaker, that the hon. Minister will get them both. They will be well recorded before I get through with them. Grants from Hydro in lieu of taxes, they said the assessment agreed upon in March, 1922—now, I do not know who was in the government then, but they agreed on an assessment of $2.5 million. That was the assessment base of that particular day—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: In 1937.

Mr. Bukator: In 1922—yes, it was originally assessed at that, and they have stuck to it ever since.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bukator: Now then, if they were to use this Provincial Manual that we use, that same assessment would be $4.5 million. They stopped paying taxes, and they paid them grants—$75,000 a year—in lieu of taxes. And then it is plus $9,662.30—I do not want to be wrong on that figure—for a total of $84,662.30.

If they were a private enterprise, as the Canadian Niagara is, the Niagara Mohawk built in Stamford, they would be paying the city of Niagara Falls $245,250. Now, that would be the difference if it were a private enterprise, according to the same manual that is used by Stamford township, which taxes private groups.

You know, it was an odd thing—I do not have the exact figure, but the records can prove it—when they put this thing into existence, it is found that they were charging that particular powerhouse over $100,000 a year taxes too much, by guessing what the property was worth. Those people never complained, they paid it, but it was cut because there was a fair basis of assessment. And they are still paying much more than all of the Hydro system put together. And I will come to that too.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: There was a surplus.

Mr. Bukator: Yes, I know there was a surplus and then last year they returned to the municipalities $2.8 million. That is quite a business.

Again I do not want to pick on the hon. Minister of Energy Resources or vice-chairman of Hydro. They have a 13th bill, you know, I wish I had that in my business. If at the end of the year they find they did not come out too well, they check the records of the municipalities and they say, "We would like that much more money from you because you have it in your coffers," and so they balance it out.

You know that 20-minute peak that we have for Hydro purposes? I sat on this commission for 11 or 12 years—we were just rubber stamps. But, mind you, they were doing a good job, we will not complain about that, except to pay taxes.

So the valuation of the Ontario power property is $21,889,392. Oh, I suppose I had better go on to the bridges again to clear this point that I was telling hon. members about, that I had the figures on. Mind you, remember they took the Clifton Hotel, they took the Lafayette, they took the Queen's Hotel, they took the Prince of Wales Hotel all out of there, at least somebody did, and so if they were paying—

Hon. Mr. Warrender: We did. It must have been a Tory who burned it down.

Mr. Bukator: I suppose. Actually we were sorry we lost that landmark. A lot of people came there and enjoyed that spot.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I suppose the hon. member will blame us for that?

Mr. Bukator: Oh no, I have not blamed anyone yet. No, I felt when I came to this House, I thought I would keep this on a high level, because I remember 4 prayers that we read here when we start out, and we say, "Thy will be done on earth." The government certainly means "on earth," they do not mean in this House, because they do not conduct themselves as people who would apply that prayer from time to time. But I do not point my finger at any particular hon. Minister or hon. member. If the shoe fits, wear it.

When I came to this particular House—and I know a little Scripture, too—I heard an hon. member over here talking about it, and he said: "Wise as a serpent and meek as a dove."

I would be wise as a serpent and I would like to be meek, too. But the hon. members opposite do not understand. In that particular type of operation, one has to get down to this particular level of quibbling over things that are fair, because they do want to be fair.

"Assessment shown on 1959 assessment roll, bridge offices above stores." Now, there are some plush offices above those stores, and the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs would be acquainted with them because he has been there. That assessment is not too high. Those particular offices are assessed at $31,350. Buildings, gardens, immigration, and so forth—hon. members know that fine tower with apartments in it at the bridge there—not too much money. It is assessed at $137,400.

The bridge plaza and gardens—and hon. members opposite know what that is all about, I need not tell them. They have all been down there inspecting those properties—$236,500. This one they can quibble about if they will, but it is there, bridge, span and abutments. As they know, we assess, according to the Provincial Manual, by the cubic foot, so we have an assessment there of $805,000.

Now, we come to the stores below the bridge. According to this particular manual they used to tax, we find that is assessed at $411,600. Miscellaneous lands and buildings add up to $40,840, making a total assessment on that particular area of $1,662,690.

Taxes on assessment of that particular amount of money should be, if it were a private enterprise again, $90,616.60, but they received only $21,058.72 in grants, in lieu of taxes in 1959.

Now, this would be fair, I would say this would be fair and I want to be fair with hon. members, who should be fair with the people of the Niagara riding if they want that riding back. Fort Erie is getting $45,000 and not getting too much, and they will get another $15,000 before 1962, which is $60,000. If hon. members across want to be fair, true these people should be getting their $90,000 instead of $21,000. So the possibility of this government taking away from them $9,000 certainly is not fair. So much for the bridge.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is not what the legal people say.

Mr. Bukator: Well, I never got tangled up with much—and I am glad—with the legal people. I have never known that a man had to go directly to legal people to deal with the people's money. I always dealt with a lot of people, and they were not legal, and we got along very fairly, I thought. But so much for the legal people, we need them, too.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: Well, the hon. member is spending people's money.

Mr. Bukator: I tell you what, I would not mind a little drink of water. If the hon. Minister would like to go on and speak some more maybe he could enlighten me a little bit.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I would be very glad to.

Mr. Bukator: Go ahead.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What subject would he like?

Mr. Bukator: Maybe I can give him another angle or two locally. You know, that hon. gentleman sitting in the front row, I kind of forget his position, but he must be an hon. Minister or he would not be sitting in the front row.

Mr. Reaume: Which one is that?

Mr. Bukator: That hon. gentleman who is doing all the talking. He has been exceptionally quiet up to this particular point, Mr. Speaker. I would like to go on, and I do not know if I care for too much of this sort of thing. Mind you, the only reason I do not is because I could be till 3 o'clock in the morning and there are others who would like to speak after me.

An hon. member: He is the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs.

Mr. Bukator: Municipal Affairs. That is a good department. I have had something to do with them. I think I had better get back to my taxes.

Niagara parks commission. The following grants in lieu of business taxes were received by the city of Niagara Falls in 1959.

Some two or three years ago, representatives from Stamford township came down here asking for taxes for concessions that were doing business in direct opposition to other businesses. After the chairman had—as a matter of fact, I was here with the solicitor from Stamford—you see, we did have to have a legal man here at that time from Stamford. So, after listening to our woes and sorrows—listen to this, this will slay you, I know hon. members would all accept this in their own municipalities and their own constituencies, I bet they would not go home and brag about it.

Princess Elizabeth Building—that is that lovely concession down at the foot of Clifton Hill that is still doing business there winter and summer—business assessment of $7,710, grant in lieu of taxes adjusted to $421. I pay that much for a little bit of a barber shop in Chippawa. Clifton Gate business assessment, mind you, we assess according to some system that they have of their own here in the government $6,378, grants in lieu of taxes, $348.

The refectory, this business that I was telling hon. members about that feeds wonderfully there, with the commissioner's quarters above with the beautiful restaurant and the cafeteria below, they really are set.

Mr. P. Manley (Stormont): Do they have any—

Mr. Bukator: Yes, a lot of the staff stay in those quarters, and they have wonderful quarters, and they do treat their staff exceptionally well. They have a few drinks around too, if one knows where to go for them.

Now, the business assessment on that is $61,806, making a total for that particular building of $3,371, or total taxes on those 4 units of $4,140. Again, I say it is unfair, but honestly this is on paper before me and I wish the chairman had been here. Mind you, if one reads this manual that the folks set up here, what would happen if full taxes were paid on all buildings?

Mind you, I am not asking them to pay taxes on 3,500 acres of land used for park purposes, it would hardly be fair to them. The people would like it, but it is hardly fair to do that. It is the buildings alone I am talking about, buildings where the government is doing business.

The Princess Elizabeth Building should be $25,700. The refectory should be $284,720. The Clifton Gate should be $21,260. Administration Building $69,810. The work shop and lavatories—they have a beautiful work shop there too, by the way—is some $11,400.

One might ask, why the work shop? Well, they repair cars and trucks and their equipment that they otherwise would have to fix up in the local garages and pay that much more. Anyhow, the total assessment on that would be $412,890.

On the basis of the 1959 mill rate, taxes would be—and this is hardly worth hollering about, I should say this very peacefully to hon. members—instead of that $3,000-odd it should be $20,502.50. That is not much, when one shows a profit of $360,000.

Until that money is paid into the coffers for taxes in the city of Niagara Falls, no one can sit on that side of the House and tell me it is fair.

I would like to believe that they are, and I think when the government hon. Ministers see the records as I have them here, and check them through their legal minds, if you will, with the assessors, I am sure they will come across with this if they want the Niagara riding back again.

As a matter of fact, this comes from the city manager, and he says:

I would respectfully suggest that every effort should be made to have Premier Frost continue the grant in lieu of taxes for the stores on River Road, under the bridge plaza.

Now, as I said, as a result of his instructions, we received the grant for 1957, 1958 and 1959, but he has been advised by the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs that the grant will be discontinued. This grant amounts to $9,057.72.

Now, if we discontinue that particular $9,000, I know that as the hon. Minister from Port Arthur says, petty politics are being played. That is the only reason they are going to be cut.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: That is what the hon. member says. Does the city manager give him the reason?

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Speaker, I do not know that I care for his reasons. I have the facts by experts that advise me that this government is not treating us right, and until we get this money they are not treating us right.

Now, I have here a 10- or 12-page brief. I understand that one can have these tabled. Could this be recorded in Hansard, or do I have to read this till 3 o'clock in the morning?

Mr. Speaker: do you want to make a ruling on that? It was a brief presented to the government. Would you like me to read it?

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Read it.

Mr. Bukator: I do not know why I have crossed swords so long with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. There are others there whom I would like to talk to, they are all fine men.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What swords?

Mr. Bukator: Pardon?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: What swords? There was nothing said. Does the hon. member feel it? He is dead.

Mr. Bukator: It is rather odd that when an hon. Minister in the government gets up to speak, he gets such a hand from his own colleagues, but when one who is so inexperienced as I am gets up here to talk, he gets nothing except from the very, very few, although I am glad for that.

Applause by hon. Mr. Warrender.

Mr. Bukator: Thank you. Oh, yes, did they know there were water rentals involved, too, in this particular thing? You see, they not only have the assurance of the money on that bill from Hydro, but they have water rentals paid now from the Hydro on the Canadian Niagara to the parks commission to pay their bills with. So the Canadian Niagara powerhouse in 1954 paying water rentals—I may be wrong on this because I do not know a kilowatt from a horsepower—but for every horsepower generated they got $1.25 paid to the parks commission. In 1954, the Canadian Niagara Power Company paid to the parks commission $136,304.73, and in 1955—I am going to give both figures—the Canadian Niagara Power paid, along with the fact that they pay full taxes although they are a private enterprise, $135,437.40.

Ontario Power Company, that is the Hydro, they paid to the parks commission, $213,564.52, that is in 1954, and in 1955, $205,916.83.

The Toronto Power Company paid $154,589.71 in 1954, in 1955, $134,345.86.

Sir Adam Beck, No. 1 and 2, in 1954 paid $348,776.92, and in the year 1955—because of the addition they paid into the parks commission—$808,550.98.

The total paid in 1954 for water rights to the parks commission to maintain their parks with, $853,235.88 and in the year 1955, $1,284,251.07.

Now then, last year they found that it was much too much money for the parks to be getting into their coffers, and they took $625,000 of that money and put it into the park division, to maintain parks throughout the province, and I say that is fair. Why should all of that go to one area?

But I do say that it is not fair until they pay their taxes to that area. It does not amount to too much money and is a fair request. The trouble, I sometimes think, is that if people ask for big things, they get them that much easier.

But this is big to the people of that area. They are entitled to that break, and mind you, I was only speaking of the city of Niagara Falls. We will take Stamford township and show how much rougher a deal they are getting.

But, to make things a little lighter, this afternoon I heard the hon. Minister speak of a bill that was passed here, and I was going to speak on that question. I refer to the workmen's compensation board paying the widows $75 a month now instead of the usual $50 that they paid before, and I think it was $12.50 per child and now I think it is $25 or $35. That is fair because it puts them all on an even keel. Before that, one widow would walk down, because her husband died a month before or a year before a certain date, and collect $50 for herself, while the other widow, whose husband was killed a few days later, would walk up and get her $75.

When I was appointed as a chairman of a committee by the Ontario municipal association some 5 or 6 years ago, I made that presentation to the hon. Minister of Labour. That particular brief was brought to him and he said: "I know you have a problem, but we do not have the means." Now they have brought that bill in. They are treating them all right, and that is good.

But the other portion of my brief, which I did draft myself, pertained to the people who were maimed away back, when people were earning much less money than they do today, and the people who are maimed today get, I do not know what the percentage is, but they both walk up and get their money. The people who were maimed away back were treated rough even back then. They are being treated rough now and they will be continued to be treated rough until we make that equitable, too.

And the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) knows we were in Sudbury last fall. He made an exceptionally good speech and I have to thank him for it. I quit the municipal association at that time, after being vice-president for 5 years. I am sorry I did not stay a little longer and say I helped get the grant for the widows at least. But we have this other thing to fight for, naturally, and I do believe they will come up with something equitable—I wish I could use that word—equitable; because the hon. members opposite have told me on different occasions that they are fair, and that will be fair when they do that for those people who need that money.

There are 7 or 8 municipalities in the riding that I represent, and if I give each one the same amount of time that I did speaking about the city of Niagara Falls, we will be here a long time. There is an hon. gentleman behind me who has a speech that will take 4 or 5 hours, I understand.

Stamford township, which has a larger population than the city of Niagara Falls, completely surrounds it. When the tax dollar is effected in the township for school purposes, it is also effected in Willoughby township and the village of Chippawa, because they have one school board that takes care of high schools and public schools.

So the more that Stamford collects in taxes, on a percentage basis, naturally the less the municipalities have to pay for that purpose. And so, as far as Stamford is concerned, I think their argument is exceptionally well taken, and I should mention something pertaining to their problem. Somebody has gone off with my notes.

Now, we are talking about Stamford township, and not the city of Niagara Falls, and they have the Table Rock House which is sitting on—I am telling hon. members, I am not asking them to pay taxes for the park, but just for the land that particular building occupies—it sits on 1.5 acres of land. The land is assessed at $4,500, the building at $89,000—I will give it to them in round figures rather than in cents.

Business tax is $31,000, a total of $135,000—that is the Table Rock House—one goes down underneath the Falls into that plaza affair, and it is an exceptionally well-paying proposition, they make an awful lot of money from that because I know, I was on the commission and I checked the records.

And for that purpose, no taxes are paid. The additions to that building, land $1,500, building $88,000, business $21,000, so we have $110,500—with no taxes paid for that.

The Glen Restaurant—a nice little restaurant, down near the gardening school—the land is assessed at $3,000, the building at $18,500, business, $6,000, a total of $27,500.

The golf course—can hon. members imagine this—this is a dandy, the golf course, yet they are assessing them for one acre, although there are 100 acres there. The parks commission maintain this beautiful big golf course by the same Provincial Manual. There is a private golf course in Niagara Falls, called Oak Lodge, I think, that pays taxes on the whole "shebang," the parks commission is making a fair dollar from their golf courses and they only pay grants, business tax of some type on one acre instead of the 99 acres which they direct business to. They should be assessed for $297,000 for land, business $74,000, making it a total of $371,000; the golf club house and the golf course, land $3,000, $24,400 for building, business $6,850, or a total of $34,000, and this is clear. This will really stagger hon. members. Do they know how much Stamford gets in grants in lieu of taxes? Only $2,414.89.

A Liberal hon. member: Terrible, it is a wonder they were elected.

Mr. Reaume: That is what is happening all over the province.

Mr. Bukator: The old hall that they purchased last year, 20 acres of land, $51,000 for land, $88,000 for building, total assessment of $139,000. They were getting $72,000, and this year's question mark—we do not know if we will get it or not. They should be getting a total of $37,406, that is not bad you know, because they are making that kind of money, and a business tax of $7,800, if they paid the full business tax. But they are paying $2,414.

Perhaps hon. members wonder why these figures all come to them. It is because those people elected me, in a township that sometimes elects Conservatives, and the city of Niagara Falls. I said to them, "Why do you not give me the figures, and I will ask for the answers, because as long as I live and breathe, I will come to this government with these questions." They tell me I can sit for hours when the budget comes in, and it will be around these figures.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Would my hon. friend allow a question?

Mr. Speaker, does the record of the parks commission show at any time during his membership that he took such a stand with respect to the commission that they should do thus and so as he now donates—

Mr. Reaume: What difference does it make?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I am just asking a question.

Mr. Bukator: Mr. Speaker, let me spend a little time with hon. members on how I worked on the parks commission.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Well, I am asking a question.

Mr. Bukator: I would like to answer that question indirectly, if you will.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I would rather have a direct answer.

Mr. Bukator: Oh, it will be direct, I can assure the hon. Attorney-General.

Mr. Speaker, in 1951, there was an amendment which said that the county of Welland, Lincoln county and the city of Niagara Falls shall appoint one member to the parks commission, and since the hon. Attorney-General brought the question up and not me, and I try to keep this on the level whereby, as I said before—

Hon. Mr. Roberts: I just want the truth.

Mr. Bukator: It is the truth, I assure him. I am glad the question comes from another branch of government. I enjoy this. So I was appointed to that commission, and I might say that for the first 3 months that I was on that commission, I was not invited to attend. They heard I was too much of a Liberal. When the county of Welland got the notification, then I could attend, and that was an annual appointment by the county of Welland. Incidentally, do hon. members know how the county of Welland appoint their wardens, after that time? Oh, they appointed them according to politics.

Mr. Reaume: Tory trick, that is a Tory—

Mr. Bukator: Oh no, no, it was way back for 15 years, a warden was a Liberal, and all the chairmen of all committees were Conservatives, and so there was a caucus of Liberals and a caucus of Conservatives, similar to what we have here.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: At midnight, we will get an answer to what I asked.

Mr. Bukator: Oh, that is quite all right. I would like to know who is good at passing around their feet, when it comes to answering questions directly? I would like to know who does a lot of skating about like they did in Squaw Valley? Oh, I will be glad to answer in my own time because I am speaking at this particular stage of the game.

An hon. member: That's a boy.

Mr. Bukator: I would be glad to answer the hon. Attorney-General, but I am telling this to you, Mr. Speaker, that I was appointed to that particular committee, to the parks commission, by both Liberals and Conservatives. I had a lot of respect for both of them, and I get as much respect, and as much put over, so to speak, pertaining to these things, as one individual with so many more of the other kind, than I can do in this particular House. We are going to find out how fair this particular House is going to treat me. But at that particular time, I was representing the Liberals of Chippawa.

An hon. member: A very respected service.

Mr. Bukator: Oh, absolutely, and they are prominent and they are smart politicians, every one of them, and doing a good job.

Mr. Bukator: And so I could have hollered until I was blue in the face, I hope my hollering here will get some results, and I played the game as the game should have been played on that particular commission. We left our problems at that chamber, and again, I wish the chairman was here, because he knows that what we discussed were these particular things. Maybe the other commissioners did not see them my way. That could be an indirect answer.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Oh, they were.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): That will have to hold the hon. Attorney-General, he has not got a chance.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: He should have got those—

Mr. Bukator: I am happy for my hon. friend, wherever in heaven's name he comes from. Where does the hon. Minister come from that sits over there? I did not check this particular book. If it was not for him, would not this be a dull meeting.

Hon. Mr. Warrender: I am just trying to live in it up.

Mr. Bukator: That is what I said.

Well anyhow, Mr. Speaker, these particular things I did not have at that time, I could not have presented them either, maybe the people concerned would not give them to me. They did at this particular stage of the game because they are being, as someone put it here today, rooked. They are entitled to a fair shake and they are not getting it, and that is why they have a Liberal member here, and that is why they will always have a Liberal member here, if they do not give them what is coming to them. Yet that riding has a lot of good Conservative people.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: No wonder the Liberals—

Mr. Bukator: Oh, by the way, I would like to take hon. members back to that day, I will get into the brief. Under the former administration, which was the Henry government before 1934, they were getting some $50,000 a year. In 1937, after Howe got in, at least he got them another $25,000 a year.

An hon. member: Because we are fair.

Mr. Bukator: I think that answers that one quite directly, does it not, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Warrender: It does not answer it, because I have been told—

Mr. Bukator: Well, I will tell hon. members opposite, the law makers who are quite prominent and capable of making laws overnight to suit themselves, if they want to be fair, they will pass one to make these things legal. The people are entitled to it.

An hon. member: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bukator: I would like to reveal another figure to hon. members. The Canadian Niagara powerhouse, which is a private enterprise, paying the same kind of water rights, last year paid to Stamford township—get this if you will—$334,885.72. That is being fair. The Canadian Niagara powerhouse have an assessment of $5,987,625 as compared to Hydro's assessment of $25,734,950 and they should be paying $1,191,858.21 —$1,191,000 they should be paying if they paid the same as the Canadian Niagara—and they are paid a grant in lieu of taxes to the tune of $245,906.29. I know the longer these things go on, the less attention one gets, but that is, I agree with them too, there will be many more chances to discuss these problems further. Again, I am sorry that the chairman of the parks commission is not here, because recently they laid off a man for reasons that might have been good, and as yet he has not been replaced.

An hon. member: We laid 200 off the highways.

Mr. Bukator: A man who served the city of Niagara Falls as mayor for 7 or 8 years, a man who served on that parks commission, conscientiously, I thought, for quite a few years, was asked to resign. I went to his defence and I said, "I realize this is a political appointment, reinstate the man, I think he did a good job." What the difference of opinion was, I do not know, and I am not asking for it.

But the appointment should be filled by a person from the city of Niagara Falls or Stamford township. There is still a vacancy there. And I would say that Stamford township is entitled to a representative on that parks commission to fill that vacancy.

An hon. member: I think they need a Liberal there.

Mr. Bukator: You know, Mr. Speaker, I can assure you that I got by a lot better with this thing than I thought I would. I thought I would have a little more trouble. Believe me, before many months are up, hon. members will realize that I like trouble.

I again must emphasize that in Fort Erie they are not getting a fair shake. Let me mention highway No. 3, going into highway No. 401. The hon. Provincial Treasurer lived near these places that I have gone through with the warden. The county of Welland is building better roads today than highway No. 3 is from Fort Erie to Port Colborne. They ought to be ashamed of themselves.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): There will be a nice 4-lane road there now, soon.

Mr. Bukator: We are going to have that? I am glad to hear that, Mr. Speaker, we have accomplished something. I appreciate it, because the test holes were taken during the campaign. I thought—

An hon. member: That is being built after the election.

Mr. Bukator: That will be wonderful. I mention to the hon. Minister of Planning and Development, that when he was out, I suggested that I would give him at least two hours on civil defence, but I have used up a lot of time.

Hon. W. M. Nickle (Minister of Planning and Development): Do not be in any hurry, now.

Mr. Bukator: I might say that I might start with him, as gentleman to gentleman, to discuss this thing intelligently, and if that does not work, I will try it through other sources—

Hon. Mr. Nickle: That I would like to do, fine.

Mr. Bukator: Fort Erie gave me a majority because they were not treated right. They all defeated me way back in 1955. Willoughby township gave me a majority because they were not getting a shake with the Queen Elizabeth Way, a good shake. The city of Niagara Falls gave me a particular majority because they are not getting their fair share of taxes. Stamford township gave me a big majority because they are not getting a fair shake.

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, you will have a Liberal here as long as I breathe, if they do not give us a fair shake in the city of Niagara Falls and the Niagara riding. I thank you, Mr. Speaker, for your patience. You have been quite good to me.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Mr. Speaker, I shall make a mistake and speak longer than 20 minutes.

It is with a profound feeling of humility that I take my seat in this assembly. May I take this opportunity to express my congratulations and sincere best wishes to you. May you execute your duties in that manner of impartiality and restraint that adds dignity to your high office and inspires respect from both sides of this assembly.

Your hon. leader (Mr. Frost) does know where to select his Speakers. He knows that Essex county, the garden gateway to Canada, the sun parlour of Canada, is known for its ability to produce the best of everything. In the 26 Parliaments to date, 4 of the Speakers have come from Essex county: hon. W. D. Balfour, 1894-1896; Major James H. Clark, 1939-1944; Rev. M. C. Davies, 1949-1955, and now you, sir. Your English accent is very appropriate and complements your office as Speaker of this House.

To my predecessor from Windsor-Walkerville and a former Speaker of the House, a person whose shoes I shall attempt to fill, go my best wishes on his retirement from this phase of public life to the other to which he has been elevated. May God give him health to continue serving his fellow-men as ably as he has done in the past.

I cannot help but remind the government that the rebel county of Essex—as it was termed by our own local paper—did send 3 out of 4 hon. members to sit on the Opposition side of this assembly. Reasons are self-evident. Windsor, or the county of Essex, have always pioneered in every phase of public thinking. This is just the spark that will enkindle the flame that will spread throughout the province and bring back responsible government to Ontario.

The Conservative government is a shrewd, cunning and intelligent one; it knows what is good for the province. One can say that again. Evidence of it is that it has assimilated the Liberal platform of the last election. Having listened to the speech from the Throne, I thought I was at a Liberal caucus.

The way the Liberal platform has been taken over reminds me of the small store-keeper situated between two large super stores. Both of these large stores had all types of advertisements and placards telling of the tremendous values and savings that were to be had by shopping in their respective stores.

What was the small shopowner to do? He could not possibly compete in advertising with these financial behemoths.

However, he was not going to allow himself to be outdone by these two giants, and so had a sign painter make him the largest sign that he could possibly put on the face of his building. The sign read: "Entrance Here!"

Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to congratulate the hon. Prime Minister and his government on the victory at the polls on June 11, 1959.

May I, Mr. Speaker, bring to the attention of this government that, of the 1,882,573 votes cast, 1,013,758 people voted disapproval of Old Man Ontario's practices and policies, and only 868,815 saw eye to eye with the hon. Prime Minister?

On further study of the election statistics, I noticed that only 58.89 per cent. of the potential 3,196,801 people even thought enough to exercise that most cherished privilege, the freedom of the ballot. This is the lowest percentage since 1943.

Since 1945 there has been a progressive lessening of interest in provincial affairs—an attitude that does not speak well for our democratic way of life. This is not good—some attention must be given to some method of assuring a greater awareness to the sanctity of the ballot.

Transcribing the gist of an editorial in the Windsor Star:

"There is too much indifference being shown toward this important duty of voting. Thoughts have even been expressed that it be made compulsory. The 79 per cent. turnout at the 1958 federal election, the highest in the past 5 elections, is very good.

"However, in some cities and towns, the number of voters who go to the polls is more often below 50 per cent. than above it. In some district municipalities, the turnout is as low as 25 per cent. A real shame. With rare exceptions, where important issues are at stake, does the turnout surpass 70 per cent.

"On the Continent, that is Europe, it is not uncommon to have more than 80 per cent. of the voters go to the polls. Possibly the reason for this is they realize how sacred and important the vote is. Many have seen their freedom taken away because they took no interest in elections, enabling dictators and the like emerge. They do not wish to have such experiences again.

"'Get out to Vote' campaigns have been widespread, but they have not achieved the desired results. Voters just do not seem to care. This refusal of some of the public to exercise their franchise is very serious. People get out to vote when there is a contentious issue or popular candidate who has wide appeal. Pleading, begging, and cajoling alone will not make them go out and vote.

"Education may be one way of stirring interest. More emphasis could be stressed in the schools that this is an important privilege in our free world. Some schools have already done this.

"The threat of taking away the right to vote may cause voters to rise in wrath and go out for the first time in years.

"A provincial government study might bring out reasons other than apathy as to why people ignore their duty to vote. Steps might be found which will bring out electors in greater numbers, without resorting to compulsory voting."

This ends the editorial.

A following method has been suggested to me. Every person voting, after he had voted, would receive a certificate or proof of having voted. This certificate in turn would be filed by the individual with his income tax, and in turn some tax credit might be given the voter. I do not advocate such a policy but it sounds intriguing.

Mr. Speaker, as the first person of Polish extraction to sit in this House, I would like to pay tribute to the contributions of my ancestors to development of not only our province but also of Canada. Being of Polish-Ukrainian parentage—my father is Polish, my mother Ukrainian—I would like to say, "Ja be chalem movietz tso morzerem po polskie ross maw vyats." "Yabe choteew skazate sho me you pro ook raw in skoo voo ho re te." I have said in the Polish language "I would like to say that I can speak in Polish" and I have said in Ukrainian "I can speak in Ukrainian."

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): I can verify that he does.

Mr. Newman: We of ethnic origin readily realize that to be a "Pole" or "Uke," we must be first a good Canadian.

According to the 1951 census, statistics by country of allegiance and origin list 219,845 Polish people and 395,043 Ukrainians who, combined, form the fourth largest population group or, by discounting those who can trace ancestry to the British Isles or France, they are the second largest group of the ethnic peoples.

Persons granted citizenship certificates in 1957 by country of birth show 10,905 Poles, and those persons granted citizenship certificates by country of former allegiance show another 10,000.

When Wolfe attacked the ramparts of Quebec, Polish engineers assisted him. Lord Selkirk's expedition from Montreal to the Red River colony once again saw Polish soldiers with the De Mewion regiment remaining as settlers assisting in the opening of the west.

By Confederation over 1,000 Poles claimed Canada as their new homeland. I could interject in here that none of us would be here if it were not for the "Poles."

Mr. Speaker, I must, however, pay homage to the memory of the man whom Poles regard as the most distinguished representative of their nation to have settled in Canada—a man whose contribution to the life of this New World deserves notice.

Casimir Stanislas Gzowski was born in Poland in 1813 of an ancient gentry family, not of high aristocracy. After an incomplete education in the technical field, he was drafted into the Russian army at the age of 17. When the uprising of November, 1830, broke out he joined the insurgents and took an active part on the side of his compatriots. When the uprising was crushed, he had to escape, and eventually by 1834 found himself in the United States. Undaunted by the initial difficulties, he studied law and was admitted to the practice of it in 1837. Engineering, however, was his first love, so he reverted to the field of civil engineering. In 1842 he moved to Canada to live, and was made superintendent of public works for what is now western Ontario.

Sir Casimir Gzowski remained in public service until 1848. He was chief engineer of one of the first railways linking Montreal with the United States and also chief engineer for the harbour works of the great St. Lawrence seaport. His firm began the building of the Grand Trunk line from Toronto to Sarnia, and also constructed the International Bridge across the Niagara River. He was, by this time, the top-ranking engineer in the New World.

He, however, did not confine his activity solely to professional duties. He was an ardent supporter of imperial unity, and rendered yeoman service in the field of Canadian defence and in the expansion of the national militia. He was named Lieutenant-Colonel of the forces and, in 1879, was made an honorary adjutant to the Queen. In 1890 he was knighted.

He sat in Senate of the University of Toronto, and was one of the founders of Wycliffe College. He took an active part in the creation of Niagara Falls park and was the first chairman of the parks commission. Shortly before his death, he was asked by Ottawa to serve as administrator for the province of Ontario during the illness of its Lieutenant-Governor, Sir George Kirkpatrick.

Sir Casimir Gzowski's personal qualities, his professional skills, and his devotion to public affairs in the land of his adoption made him one of the foremost citizens of the Dominion in the second half of the 19th century. Contemporary evidence is unanimous in recognition of his services to his day and generation.

The Polish people have contributed to every phase of endeavour in Canada, trade, industry, engineering, arts, culture, and professions, and will continue to do more so in the future. They will be much more active in the life of our province. They are a proud people, proud of their past and more so of the future that lies ahead for them. They are the one of the peoples behind the Iron Curtain for whom the strict dictates of Russian communism and suppression of freedom had to be altered to accommodate.

Mr. Speaker, I say, as the member for the Windsor-Walkerville riding, that mine is the only completely urban riding in Essex county. Roughly it is composed of the former town of Walkerville, and ward 3. I represent 46,187 people.

Geographically Windsor is south of Detroit.

There are 35 religious denominations and likewise a similar number of nationalities. Windsor is proud of its strong ethnic groups, who have contributed immeasurably to the life and blood of this the garden gateway city, the motor city. Ever since the struggle for freedom, as experienced by our neighbours to the south during their Civil War, Windsor has been known as the gateway to freedom, and it still is—as shown by its large number of new Canadians. Windsor's Emancipation Day celebration is unique on the continent. It attracts over 100,000 to its 4-day affair.

More people live within a radius of 25 miles of Windsor than do in all of Canada to the west of it.

It has one of the finest city halls. The Cleary auditorium and convention centre, which will be opened this coming spring by His Excellency the Governor-General of Canada (Mr. Vanier), is the finest centre of its kind for a city of its size on the continent. Its television station CKLW-TV is the most powerful station in the country and services two countries. CKLW, CJSP, CBE are the 3 radio stations that service the area.

Its newspaper—the Windsor Star—is one of the best if not the best newspaper published in the Dominion. Its blending of local, national and international news, plus its excellent sports coverage, leaves nothing to be desired by the reader.

Windsor is not afraid to experiment and pioneer if need be. The Windsor medical services plan for prepaid medical insurance was the first prepaid voluntary medical plan on the continent and has been the study by numerous university groups throughout the United States. The Green Shield prescription plan offered by Prescription Services Incorporated is another of its firsts. Windsor has established a council manager form of municipal administration, and its operations are being looked upon with keen interest by other municipalities.

In 1959, Windsor inaugurated a Freedom Festival in conjunction with its sister city across the international border—namely, Detroit. In one year it has become the major international festival on the continent.

Windsor is also proud of the skills of its athletes. In the 1956 Olympic Games, the only gold medal won by an individual in competition was won by Windsor's marksman Gerald Ouellette. In the 1959 Pan-American Games, half of Canada's total accumulation of gold medals was won by its Ernestine Russell, now Ernestine Russell Carter—Canada's most outstanding woman amateur athlete for the years 1953, 1954, 1955. She is a young lady whom I have had the privilege of introducing into the gymnastic field and coaching.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Newman: I would be more than glad to answer any questions, if any hon. member here would like to say up until possibly 11:20, or if they would like to write their question on the back of a $10 bill I will give them better results.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: I want to know who her coach was.

Mr. Newman: It will take me until after 11 o'clock, if I answer questions.

Windsor is a city of brotherhood. No community in Canada practices these ideals as does it. Hospitality begins there.

Windsor's factories produced in 1957 more than the cities of Regina, Calgary, Brandon, St. Thomas, Cornwall and Kingston combined. Expenditures and productiveness of its industries illustrate the progressiveness of the community. Of its homes, 61 per cent. are owner occupied. The average weekly earnings have always been above the provincial and national average. It has one of the lowest per capita net tax debts of any Canadian city, namely, $94.03, while its tax levy of $102.70 per capita places her near the top of cities for low tax levies. Its financial picture in the words of The Department of Municipal Affairs is excellent.

Windsor is one—ranking fifth—of Canada's great industrial communities. During the past year, there has been a monthly average of 30,125 employed in Windsor area industries. While Windsor is well known for automobile manufacturing including Chrysler, Ford engines and parts, and General Motors engines, it produces many other products such as a wide range of pharmaceuticals and other nationally advertised products, including Anacin, Burrough's Machines, "Windsor Salt," Tums, Toledo Scales, Grape-Nut Flakes, Swans Down Cake Flour, Hiram Walker's "Canadian Club," Champion Spark Plugs and so forth, foods, and many other items.

According to official estimates for 1959, Windsor area industry will spend $28 million for investment for new industrial construction, machinery and equipment. This is an increase of 64 per cent. over actual expenditures of $17.6 million last year.

This area is well served by 5 main railways and one terminal line and a transcontinental air line—the Trans-Canada Air Lines.

Windsor is maintaining its pace with the amazing growth of Canada, and is making plans for its optimistic future. The city has expanded since the end of World War II, under a zoning system, to protect the stability of residential, commercial and industrial properties. The community is developing a programme of progressive capital expenditures for the future.

Windsor has actually embarked upon the first residential project in its redevelopment programme, involving about 20 acres and costing over $6 million.

The motto of our school system—and justly and proudly so—is “Windsor Schools Excel.” We have in the city all the best facilities for education of 29,175 students. We have 42 primary and 8 secondary schools, a technological institute, and a university—Assumption University of Windsor—with Essex, Holy Redeemer, Holy Name, Canterbury and University Colleges as affiliates—and Western Ontario Institute of Technology.

Windsor has 102 churches and 3 synagogues embracing a wide group of religious affiliations.

In the field of medicine and sociology, Windsor has given a generous share of leadership. In 1949, Windsor established the first child guidance clinic in Canada. In 1919, there was established in the Windsor area the first amalgamated health unit in Canada comprising 6 communities. A larger unit for the entire metropolitan area has now been formed. The Windsor cancer clinic, opened in 1935, is one of the original cancer clinics sponsored by the Ontario government. Windsor is one of the first 4 Ontario communities to establish—in 1954—homes for its senior citizens. Windsor’s motto is: “Pride in Progress.”

Windsor’s industry is well balanced with a prosperous agricultural community in Essex county, well known as the “Sun Parlour of Canada,” where there are produced 33 different fruit and vegetable crops. The average winter high is 33 degrees and low 20 degrees; the average summer high is 79 degrees and low 62 degrees. Because of this favourable climate and a long growing season from average 208 days in northern section to 216 days in the south—with average of 165 frost-free days—the country produces fruits and vegetables which reach markets 1 to 5 weeks earlier than any other area in Canada. The fruits include apples, pears, peaches, and cherries; the vegetables include corn, soy beans, wheat, oats, tobacco, sweet potatoes. Farms here have an average per capita production higher than anywhere else in Canada.

Mr. Speaker, may I dwell on education. I am intentionally not discussing this in detail as my hon. colleague from Windsor-Sandwich (Mr. Belanger) has done so. However, as a school teacher in a technical high school, I cannot but help have some opinions.

Throughout the educational discussion, too little emphasis was placed on this technical type of learning. We all admit that we are living in a new world, a technological one, a world of science, of machines, rockets and automation. Yet very little encouragement is given to the technical school.

Adequate and suitable training of skilled and technical manpower is becoming more important each year, both for the benefit of our expanding and changing economy, and for the welfare and future security of young Canadians.

We continue to build schools—academic ones—in a proportion of 5 to 1 as compared to the technical ones. In our present day, one would think that the ratio should be reversed or at least equalized. The percentage dropouts of students attending technical schools is generally considerably lower than that of the academic high schools and for a very good reason. Let us lift the stigma off the technical education—as too often a student is told to go there as his mental abilities are limited.

May I say that, having taught in both types of schools, my experience has shown me that a student attending a technical or vocational school must use both his head and his hands.

The graduates of our technical schools are generally not accepted into our Canadian universities. This puts them at a disadvantage and, as a result, they have no choice but to seek their higher learning in the United States. Consequently, quite a few of these students never return to give Canada the benefit of their skills and abilities.

Courses should be made available in these technical high schools to enable those, who are interested and capable, to qualify for admittance to our Canadian universities.

For those students who do not continue their technical education, a greatly expanded apprenticeship programme should be established in co-operation with government, union and industry.

Mention has been made in the speech from the Throne that the 6 technological institutes have proven their value. We in Windsor agree with this, and are pleased that we have one in our midst. Though the building in which it is housed is not of the latest construction, we believe that the day is not too far distant when it will be housed in a bright, new, modern, shiny building.

Mr. Speaker, allow me to go to The Department of Public Works building policy.

This is another example of municipal discrimination. Pre-election promises were very rosy. But after the storm—oh, what fools we mortals be! The people of the area must have sensed these indiscriminate promises of verbal structural patronage: teachers’ colleges, harbour development, Public Works buildings, completion of highway No. 401, and so forth. What an example for the rest of the province to remember in the next election.

Let us remember that Windsor is the gateway—yes, the garden gateway—to Ontario. Our friends from across the border get their first impression of Ontario from what they see in and near Windsor.

A new provincial public building would certainly enhance downtown Windsor with its beautiful city hall, municipal courts building, auditorium and convention hall, redevelopment, and Riverfront park.

Let us forget its aesthetic value. From a dollars and cents standpoint it is needed—if only to consolidate and centralize governmental offices.

It would be a place to properly house the tourist bureau to take it out of its backyard category. Remember Detroit is completing the spending of over $100 million on its downtown riverfront development. One of the world's largest convention halls, which represents an investment of $50 million, is just one of a series of new projects that will be opened this year.

Detroit is the third largest tourist attraction spot on the North American continent. Some of these visitors will want to take a look at Windsor, at Ontario, at Canada. Let us encourage them. Let us get on with this provincial building.

Mr. Speaker, regarding highway No. 401—I am reading from an editorial in the Windsor Star on January 12, 1960:

HIGHWAY BUILDING

None will deny the necessity of a new high-level bridge over the Welland Canal near St. Catharines. Its 6 traffic lanes will alleviate a traffic bottleneck. It will cost $17 million, and another similar one is planned for farther along the canal, near Queenston.

Hon. Fred M. Cass, Minister of Highways, explains it will facilitate tourists using the New York Thruway, the Queen Elizabeth Way, the Burlington Bay Skyway and highway No. 401. That it should do.

We do wish Mr. Cass would apply the same reasoning to this area as he applies to the Niagara district. More tourists cross the border at Windsor than at Niagara Falls or any other port of entry. Yet all they have is a 30-mile stretch of modern highway to Tilbury.

They must putter along on an obsolete two-lane highway from Tilbury to London. Tourists at Niagara Falls have little distance to travel before getting on long reaches of modern Ontario highways, reaching up into the Muskoka area and far east of Toronto.

People in southwestern Ontario do not complain about highway needs of other parts of the province being met. They only complain, and rightly, that our needs are neglected.

There is also talk of making the Queen Elizabeth Way a 6-laner. This is all right, but let us remember that Windsor is still in the province of Ontario. Let us stop crucifying it. Let us play ball with Windsor. We deserve just as much per capita consideration as does Toronto and its suburbs.

Do we not want our American friends to come over in added numbers?

Do we not want Windsor's industry to be able to road-ship its articles to the east?

Do we not want the farmers in Essex county to be able to transport their produce this way?

Where is all of this equality we talk of? We have just talked about brotherhood and Brotherhood Week among people. Let us have a little of this brotherhood among cities and areas.

We hear talk of racial discrimination in the United States and also in Canada. Is this not municipal discrimination of the worst sort?

Imagine 1963 as a target date for the completion of highway No. 401—17 long years. United States turnpikes of approximately the same length have been constructed in 2 and 3 years.

Is highway No. 401 an example of "Onward Ontario"? Or is the Ontario government so afraid of an armed invasion by our American friends that they are using this as a ways and means of slowing them up 30 miles east of Windsor?

Mr. Speaker, in relation to The Department of Transport, I am reading an article from the Windsor Star dated January 1960, an article headlined, "Wheels," by Ted Douglas:

Windsor may be digging in with a great—and successful—effort to cut its traffic death toll, but the Ontario government isn't lending the help it should.

This week, Inspector Gordon Preston reported that Windsor went from one of the worst records—26 deaths in 1949—to one of the better ones, reducing the toll to 7 in 1959. And now we are after even further improvement.

But in the traffic safety programme there is one big hole not yet plugged, and this deals with driver testing and licencing. In all the major centres of Ontario, with the lone exception of Windsor, the Transport Department has opened new examination centres, and stiffer testing practices have been put in force.

New applicants face written and oral tests, eye examinations, judgment of distance tests, and a road trial, conducted by uniformed, full-time employees of the department. And the centres have the proper equipment for the job! Result is that licences are issued only to those who are properly competent, and who understand traffic laws.

In Queen's Park, Windsor representatives have been repeatedly told a centre is coming for Windsor. During the last session of the Legislature, in March we believe, Transport Minister Yaremko said the Windsor centre would be established as soon as space could be found.

That was almost a year ago. The Minister said the department prefers a shopping plaza location—and some of our shopping centres have vacant space, and have had vacant space before, during, and after the giving of the promise that Windsor would get a centre.

Why the procrastination? You would think that a government department, so vitally interested in highway safety, would respond quickly to a city which had accomplished so much on its own.

Or is it simply that this particular Minister, a Toronto member, has not yet learned that western Ontario does go beyond London?

On February 18, a special notice was issued stating that this problem would be taken care of, yet the space rented, mind you, was not in a shopping plaza location. The space rented was an abandoned bakery in a semi-residential section of the city.

We are very much in favour of this programme but are likewise disappointed in the announcement that there may be some easing up on the point system.

Mr. Speaker, may I say a word on transportation and freight rates.

Freight rates have become increasingly important as a factor in new and existing industrial locations. The fact that manufactured goods originating in Windsor can be shipped only in one direction, to Canadian markets, is a disadvantage unless some of the materials or components come to us from the United States. Goods can be shipped through the United States to western Canadian markets, but there is no saving in the freight costs due to the board of transport commissioner's rulings, which do not recognize Windsor's geographic location in relation to the west.

The board of transport commissioners do, however, recognize our geographic location in relation to the Maritimes market and, as a result, we find ourselves at considerable disadvantage when competing with Toronto and Montreal.

Windsor hopes that the government will remember Windsor's unfavourable position when the Royal commission on transportation meets in Toronto in about two weeks.

Mr. Speaker, on the subject of retarded children, I am going to read excerpts from a letter received by me quite recently. This is what the letter says, and I quote:

In Windsor we consider that we have succeeded, to a point, in meeting some of the needs of the community's retarded. We have not been nearly so successful in improving conditions for those unfortunate youngsters who require institutional care.

My own daughter, aged 6, is living in the Orillia hospital school, and I am well familiar with this institution. Parents like myself have known for some time now that the overcrowding—now reaching 600 beds—constitutes a grave threat to the welfare of the total hospital population. It is common for the very small patients to constantly be plagued with boils because, due to the overcrowding, this infection is uncontrollable.

Every day, 3 new patients are admitted to Orillia, and these admissions are correctly called "political admissions" because they are made in spite of the protests of the superintendent who, as a medical man, recognizes the danger of overcrowding a hospital.

These admissions are forced on the medical administration by MPP's and even federal representatives who believe that they are acting to relieve a constituent's personal problem when, in fact, these concerted actions serve to place the welfare of the whole hospital population in jeopardy because the overcrowding has reached the point of inviting serious epidemic.

In Orillia there are no longer "play-areas". These now are crowded with beds. There is an overburdened and dedicated staff of doctors and nurses working fantastically hard to insure their little patients the minimum of care. You are familiar, I believe, with the programme in Windsor for cerebral palsied children.

You will know that physiotherapy is an important part of this programme. A large proportion of retarded children are also cerebral-palsied. Keeping this in mind, you will be astounded to learn that the Orillia hospital school does not employ one physiotherapist.

In our own city, every single hospital now has a physiotherapy department, and, of course, therapists to carry out the work. The medical profession considers this service essential.

It is unbelievable that an institution with about 3,000 young patients, many of them crippled, has not seen fit to introduce this essential therapeutic service. Orillia could use several physiotherapists, dozens of aides and along with this, therapeutic equipment. In the wards where the severely retarded are cared for, the shortage of staff necessitates that these children be completely confined to their cribs, and be fed in the supine position, which all adds up to further physical and mental deterioration. No attempts are made at even the simplest training because staff is not available.

I would like to emphasise that this sad situation does not exist because of an apathetic staff. Only the highest praise is due to Dr. Hamilton, his assistant Dr. Finlayson, the other doctors and the nursing staff.

The situation exists because of an apathetic governmental and departmental attitude towards the problem. However, the general public is becoming increasingly aware of the needs of the retarded child, and I am hopeful that the wishes of this same public will echo down the halls of Queen's Park eventually.

In the meantime, I would ask you to press upon the government the need for new hospital schools to be constructed in (1) the northern part of our province and (2) the heavily populated Niagara peninsula.

Also needed is an increased budget for improved programmes in the present hospital schools.

Mr. Speaker, regarding Ontario hospital services, allow me to read this article which was in the Windsor Star on Tuesday, January 26, in a "Now" column written by Pat Whealan:

Enter a well-known Windsor man with a beef about the Ontario hospital insurance plan and its failure to cover "out-patients."

A failure which he terms outrageous and silly.

Within the past year, the deponent and his wife both had occasion to use hospital services for minor surgical work and laboratory tests. Neither was serious enough to require a stay in the hospital. Both man and wife had the work done, on separate occasions, and went home to recuperate.

By not staying in the hospital, they figured, they had both freed beds for really sick patients and helped cut the overhead of the hospital insurance plan. The catch came when the bills came in.

Total costs for both man and wife were more than $50. All billed to the individuals, because the hospital plan doesn't cover such out-patient services. Had they stayed overnight in hospital, the plan would have picked up the tab.

Exit the well-known Windsorite, muttering darkly about the "stupidity" of a system which compels him to join the plan, then won't pay for services unless he occupies a hospital bed which he doesn't need.

It is said 94 per cent. now subscribe. Why should not this be completely taken over by the government and every resident in the province be automatically a member? As of today, the unfortunate pensioner, the person living on a fixed income, finds the amount a bit beyond his means. It means he must deprive himself of other needs to pay for this service.

Again another complaint is concerning the "gobbledygook" imprinted on the sieve-like postal card. It is difficult enough for some, including peoples of ethnic origin, to understand English, let alone the hieroglyphics imprinted. Would it not be just as easy to have the card say the date due is April 1, 1960 instead of having it down as four thousand one hundred and sixty?

Mr. Speaker, regarding the price charged for drugs, this article is from the Windsor Star of February 17, and I quote:

Hear ye a LaSalle man's comment on another heat-producing subject, the price of drugs, or, to give them a more familiar name, medicines. He writes:

"I recently obtained a prescription for 16 tablets, which was filled locally at a cost of $4.95. A later prescription from the same doctor, for the same tablets, and for 50 tablets, and I had it filled in Detroit at a cost of $4.21.

"First 16 tablets $4.95, second time, 50 tablets by crossing one mile of water, $4.21.

The tablets were stamped with the manufacturer's trademark in both cases and were identical. I feel that the cost of drugs obtained by prescription is outrageous and something should be done about it."

This article speaks for itself.

There must be something wrong. If the government does not investigate the cost, including drugs for its own institutions, it is doing an injustice to people of the province.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): That is what is wrong over there. That is what is wrong.

Mr. Newman: Mr. Speaker, let us go fishing. But wait. Where? Well, I live in the Windsor-Walkerville riding, so naturally it will be the Detroit River.

So out in our little boat we go. We are on the international boundary line. We are Canadians, we live in Ontario, we can catch only 6 yellow pickerel. Our American friend only a foot or so away from us is allowed to catch 10. Why the discrepancy?

Winter arrives, the waters freeze over. Again we met our friend from over the border, this time fishing through the ice. We must use a handline and bait, we must throw the muskie back in as the season was from June 25 to December 15. But our friend—our American friend—may not only keep any muskie he may catch, but he may even spear it.

We in the county, have a maximum potential—including every man, woman, and child—of 250,000 anglers. The American from the same area has over 5 million. Why the discrimination?

The handline and bait angler is only allowed 6 yellow pickerel, yet the commercial fisherman may haul them in in tons. In fact, all the anglers who wet a line in the Great Lakes could not catch as many fish as one decent sized fishing boat can in the western basin of Lake Erie.

Mr. Speaker, the next subject I wish to refer to is the teachers' college, and I wish to read two paragraphs from an article headed:

CAN'T HANDLE AREA COLLEGE
IN '60 BUDGET

Hon. John Robarts, Minister of Education, confirmed Thursday an earlier announcement that a teachers' college would be built for the city.

Budget priorities, however, would not allow construction to start this year, he said.

Now this seems strange to me that prior to June 11 the steam shovels were ready to move in, and just after election day tight money was given as the excuse.

However, after attending a meeting on commissions, I find that tight money does not seem to interfere with construction of more liquor stores. If there is anything that should be tight, it should be in the liquor game. The big question with the liquor stores is: "How many liquor stores can we build?"

Surely education should come before liquor. The 400 or so Windsor area residents who would be attending this teachers' college, were it constructed in the Windsor district, are now being subjected to the added burden of living away from home in order to obtain their teaching certificates. This is an indirect tax on them—an indirect tax to the extent of over $400,000.

How about the sons and daughters of the unemployed who might have been able to attend a local institution but cannot finance it to go to an out-of-town one?

For the sake of education, let us forget politics and do what is right and just.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I come to the matter of obscene literature, and have here some samples. This is literature. This is art. This is just plain filth—let us get rid of this.

Mr. Speaker, concerning a very important matter, I am going to read from a letter sent to Mr. Clare Mapledoram on February 21, 1958. At that time, Mr. Mapledoram was Minister of Lands and Forests. This letter is from the city-county metropolitan beach committee, seeking financial aid in acquiring frontage on Lake St. Clair for beaches and parks, and I quote:

Honourable Sir:

We beg to submit to you, for your study, a brief containing data in respect to frontage on Lake St. Clair which is regarded as an ideal site to be set up as a metropolitan beach to serve not only the present needs of Windsor and its adjoining municipalities, namely, Riverside, South Windsor, Sandwich West, Sandwich East, Tecumseh, and so forth, but also Essex, Comber and all other municipalities in Essex county.

The committee feels that the proposed beach area has great immediate and future possibilities, and in a reasonable length of time can be made self-sustaining.

In addition to the long stretch of beach to encourage the popular summer sports, swimming, fishing and boating, there is a large wooded area containing fine trees; it is planned to greatly enlarge this area by a careful tree planting programme which would have 3 main objectives; namely, sanctuary for wildlife, soil conservation and family picnic areas.

These two properties are well within 25 miles of the Windsor metropolitan area and other points named above; good roads make it easily accessible, and in cases where the family car is non-existent, the matter of transportation is no problem.

This completes the article.

The present hon. Minister (Mr. Spooner) came into our area back in October. From the picture presented to him, he expressed enthusiasm over this area. The idea was sold. But no sooner had he reached Toronto when the enthusiasm wore off.

I hope for the sake of the northern half of Essex county, for reasons of the government's added interest in physical fitness, and from the point of the tourist industry, his department will reconsider this park.

The location is the last bit of available undeveloped lakeshore property in the county. If the province of Ontario does not take it over, our American friends will firmly implant their Stars and Stripes there.

The Detroit River has been declared unfit for bathing purposes. Give our youth a break.

I could also have mentioned the governmental acquisition of Peche Island but I thought that asking consideration for the Lake St. Clair park would be sufficient.

Mr. Speaker, I want now to deal with unemployment.

One year ago, the A. V. Roe incident was the big news. Some 15,000 people were thrown out to swell the ranks of the unemployed. This year the Elliot Lake episode is attracting the attention of all, and rightly so. Both are incidents that should never have happened, and without which we would be better off.

Listen to this, Mr. Speaker, as I read from an article in the Windsor Star of February 15, 1960, entitled "As We See It", written by W. L. Clark:

EMPLOYED IN AUTO INDUSTRY

More people are employed in the auto industry today than ever before in Canada, says Hon. Michael Starr, Minister of Labour.

Ford men with seniority dating back to the 1940's and no hope of recall will be interested to know what Mr. Starr says.

Here is another item taken from the London Free Press, January of this year, a CP release:

Local national employment service office figures released Saturday showed 12,739 persons registered for work last week compared with 10,560 the previous week.

Windsor has had to live with this for years. Yet when some of this unemployment could have been remedied by forgetting about tight money and constructing a few of the political promises, Windsor's situation was forgotten about—or should I say neglected? Windsor should not be considered the end of the line but the front door to Ontario.

Windsor's unemployed do not want promises or welfare assistance, they want jobs.

The advent of the atomic age and the rocket age has brought with it automation and the displacement of labour. Unemployed people over 45—and hon. members will note that those in the Windsor category, the Ford employees, are with 1940 seniority—find it much too difficult to find employment.

Allow me to read this. This is a United Press dispatch from Washington:

"OVER 45" STILL GOOD EMPLOYEES

A U.S. Labor Department study indicates that the average worker over 45 years old is just as efficient as younger white-collar workers.

Labor Secretary James P. Mitchell said Wednesday that experts compared the work produced by office employees in 21 private companies and 5 government agencies.

"Our studies prove that older workers have lower rates of absenteeism and turnover, are more consistent in their performance, and frequently produce at a faster rate than younger workers," Mr. Mitchell said.

"This indicates that employers are passing up some excellent workers with valuable experience if they place an arbitrary age limit on hiring."

Liberals are well aware of this situation. Their scheme of portable pensions was propounded to assist in alleviating such a condition.

Mr. Speaker, a word now about welfare assistance.

While it may be true that grants to welfare assistance have increased over the past years, yet the total cost of welfare assistance in the city of Windsor has gone up from 727 persons in 1949 to 3,706 in 1959, and from a net cost of $80,000 in 1949—when the province assumed 50 per cent. of the share of relief—to $240,000 in 1959 with the province paying 80 per cent.

This is an increase of over 500 per cent. in the numbers receiving welfare assistance, and over 300 per cent. in the costs to the municipality, in spite of the fact that the city only pays one-fifth and the province pays four-fifths of the total cost.

Assistance, as is provided today, is insufficient to maintain health, and for this reason allowance for food should be increased substantially. The cost of welfare should be taken off the municipality and placed where it belongs—on the shoulders of both federal and provincial governments.

Mr. Speaker, let us take the mask off winter works. The federal government is spending thousands of dollars on newspaper advertising, billboards, pamphlets, radio, television, and so forth, in a big "Do It Now" programme. They have the pamphlets distributed door to door, "Do It Now." If the provincial government postpones some of its programmes because of tight money, where is the poor home owner going to borrow his money to Do It Now?

Allow me to read an item from the Windsor Star, datelined Ottawa, February 5:

FEW JOBS FROM PLAN

The government's winter works programme has provided relatively few jobs in Windsor during the past two years, according to a return tabled in the Commons Thursday by Hon. Michael Starr, Minister of Labour.

During the present winter, up to December 31 last, Windsor participated in two projects under the wage-sharing plan and these gave employment to 41 persons.

Under the winter works programme, Ottawa shares the labour cost on a 50-50 basis with municipalities for approved works' projects.

This programme provided work to .03 per cent., or 3 one-hundredths, of the total unemployed.

I read now from an article from the Windsor Star, dated February 23. It heads, "Stewart Hotter'n Hades Over Winter Work Plan."

I do not know how hot it is in Hades, but if I know mayor Stewart, I know it is darn hot. I quote:

Further criticism of the federal-provincial winter works programme was levelled by Mayor Gordon R. Stewart of Riverside, Monday night.

"It's not worth the powder to blow it to—"

and then there is a little space for a 4-letter word,

—he charged. "The winter works programme is a joke."

He made the comment when Councillor J. J. Lefave asked why Riverside wasn't participating in the programme, after reading in Monday's edition of The Windsor Star that 14 Windsor area municipalities were participating.

The mayor said a public works garage proposed by the town didn't qualify under the scheme. The proposed relief sanitary sewer would qualify, he said, but the senior governments will pay 75 per cent, of labour costs for unemployed persons only until April 30. The project might not be under way until late in April.

In December, Mayor Stewart commented, "To all intents and purposes, the programme isn't any good."

There is no better Tory in Essex county than mayor Stewart. This is what he thinks of hon. members opposite.

Let us call a federal-provincial conference and work out a winter works programme that can be of some benefit to both the municipality and the unemployed.

Mr. Speaker, here is what our Windsor Star has to say in regard to succession duties:

ONTARIO DEATH IMPOST

When the Ontario Legislature is in session, it would be a good time to look into the succession duties and how these penalize estates. If the taxes could even be brought on a par with those of other provinces, it would be an improvement.

Ontario is the most expensive place for anyone to die. The death duties are so heavy, they border on confiscation.

If some relief could be had on these taxes, it is possible quite a number of Americans would come to live in Canada. Many in Detroit would be much closer to their business, if they lived in Windsor than they are now. But, the death duties make them think twice before moving over.

This is just one phase of the results of the extreme penalties imposed in Ontario.

Why should a man and woman work hard all their lives to build an estate, then have the woman left in jeopardy simply because the Ontario government reaches in to snatch such a large portion of the husband's estate?

Mr. Speaker, at this time I would like to change to a different subject, that of physical fitness.

What is physical fitness? If I asked this question of every hon. member in this House, I would probably get 98 different answers, as it means one thing to the young, another to the older, one thing to the sick, another to the well.

Physical fitness can be defined as the ability to function at high level, physically, volitionally, emotionally, intellectually and socially. Physical fitness depends upon the extent to which our physical efficiency potential has been developed, and is affected by the type of body we inherit and the health status we enjoy.

The sedentary person fails to get enough vigorous physical activity to provide the power needed to keep him functioning at a level where over-fatigue and tension can be avoided. Persons living close to the limits of their acquired capacity perform at a low quality level, fatigue prematurely, recuperate slowly, and are tension prone. Needs and demands, which differ considerably from person to person, set the quota each individual requires.

Individuals possessing even an average amount of basic physical efficiency use less energy, tire less easily, recuperate from effort more quickly, and retain a higher energy reserve for the enjoyment of their leisure.

It is often said that the North Americans are "Energy spendthrifts and endurance paupers." Sedentary living challenges us to find new ways to enjoy the wonders of the twentieth century, and to balance them effectively with a supplement designed to keep physical powers at a reasonably high quality level.

Our civilian society is faced with the missile age disaster, and cannot depend on military measures to protect it. Space age warfare is waged on the doorsteps of the civilian populations. Listen to this. Even if civil defence measures proved to be effective, the bulk of the population so affected would not possess the physical strength and endurance needed to endure the privations of improvised living. When disaster strikes, these lacks become apparent.

Surely, the observant and thoughtful can see these same lacks sapping the nation's vigour and wasting the country's human resources in the normal course of current living.

Let us think for a moment about premature aging, psychosomatic diseases of prosperity, increase in cardiovascular deaths in the 40-55 age group, increase in accident proneness, increase in mental illness, education retardation and so forth. The cost of these is fantastic and rapidly mounting. If really constructive action were taken, it is estimated that, within 5 years, the above could be reduced by 30 per cent.

Physical efficiency—the ability to produce power to move and the skill to control it—is assuming new and unsuspected importance. Its significance in respect to hard labour, military training, and athletic competition has long been recognized.

However, its basic relationship to emotional stability, to intellectual acuity, and to volitional control are just beginning to be appreciated. Furthermore, it is reasonable to assume that, if improvement in physical efficiency is basic to therapeutic and rehabilitative treatment, it is equally basic, if not more so, to the preventive measures.

Anyone doubtful of Canada's interest in fitness in Canada should note the number of slenderizing machines that are being sold across the country.

We have one of the highest standards of living in the world, the best of foods, best doctors, latest in drugs, best of health services, a hospital services programme, and yet we are physically illiterate. We have tutors for every subject taken in our schools, teachers for our sick and ill students, yet our children have never been taught to develop their power to mobilize energy. They do not know the right reason for doing the right thing physically. Test after test shows that we suffer from the degenerative diseases of prosperity. Can we afford this?

We do have physical recreation, but not enough physical education. Our physical education programmes should educate to help build vigorous and skilful bodies. We need a programme of research to cut down emotionally instability—which in turn would lessen the necessity for more mental institutions.

Dr. George W. Calver, physician for the supreme court and the United States Congress, outlined 10 commandments for keeping these men fit. He is referring to the members of Congress and the court. Two of these are: "Exercise rationally" and "Play enthusiastically." Dr. Carver counselled: "Give 5 per cent. of your time to keeping well, and you won't have to give 100 per cent. of your time to getting over being sick."

The worth of exercise rests upon the basic principle, "the law of use," and Hippocrates called attention to this many years ago when he said: "That which is used develops, and that which is not used wastes away." Modern medical practice recognizes the law of use. Doctors get patients out of bed and into action as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, are we content to be merely free of sickness, or do we wish to be heartily healthy? When asked "How are you?" do we reply "Not so bad," or would we like to reply enthusiastically "Wonderful" or "Grand!"

We are well acquainted with the toll of sickness; the serious, sometimes tragic, consequence of neglect of physical care; the dreariness of being half well. Would it not be nice to accustom ourselves to the thought and experience of being positively fit?

Business men are among the world's worst practitioners of health habits. They may be able administrators, well informed about company operations, excellent in work systems, and towers of strength in production. But they tend to be careless and thoughtless with regard to their own fitness, and neglectful of their responsibility to see that their families learn to enjoy physical effort.

Mr. Speaker, in relation to the present condition of physical fitness, allow me to read part of Prince Philip's address to the Canadian medical association on June 30, 1959. I will not read the complete text:

According to statistics between 1946 and 1954, admission to public hospitals in Canada increased by 54 per cent, and during the same period bed capacity went up 32 per cent, while the population increase was only 20 per cent. Some 69 per cent. of Canada's 4.5 million children under 15 report some sort of disability, 11 per cent in excess of the average for all ages.

In 1946, there were 13,000 admissions to public mental hospitals, psychiatric units—first admissions and readmissions—by 1954 the number had more than doubled to 29,351, an increase of over 125 per cent. In the same period, Canada's population only went up from 12.5 to 15 million.

One might expect that the brilliant achievements of medical science in recent years and the improved medical and hospital facilities would have made the figures go the other way. The fact is that, in spite of everything it would not be reasonable to assume that the general level of health is improving.

It is true that by paying taxes we support public services which set up health safeguards, but they cannot do everything for us.

Quarantine and isolation and immunization contribute to physical efficiency by protecting us from certain diseases. Surely our ambitious minds can fix upon some better state to work toward.

The art of healthful living is not being carried into action by people in North America today, nor is it being taught effectively to the citizens of tomorrow.

This statement is made on the authority of a report that shocked President Eisenhower into appointing a special committee two years ago. The report was that of Dr. Hans Kraus, of the Institute of Rehabilitation, New York University, and Miss Ruth Prudden, of the Institute for Physical Fitness at White Plains, New York.

Here are the bald facts revealed by Dr. Kraus:

Fifty-eight per cent. of United States children who were tested failed in one or more of 6 tests for muscular strength and flexibility, while only 9 per cent. of the European children who were tested failed.

Forty-four per cent. in the United States failed in the one flexibility test (of back muscles) included in the 6 tests, against only 8 per cent. of the European children.

Dr. F. G. Robertson speaking to the first Commonwealth and Empire Conference on Physical Education, said we must acknowledge that the findings of the study apply with almost equal force to us in Canada.

Is it not a startling conclusion, Dr. Robertson continued:

—that the children of families on this prosperous North American continent, with what we like to boast of as the highest standard of living in the world, with all the material prosperity that surrounds us on every side, measure up so unfavourably on a simple test of minimum muscular efficiency, stamina and endurance, with the children of families in Italy and Austria, countries which have known so much of hardship and deprivation during the past few decades?

What is to blame? What is the cause of this failure of North American children to measure up to the physical health of children in Europe? It is always unpleasant to assign blame, but those who have studied the matter most closely do not hesitate to say that parents and schools are to blame, in that order.

Parents are careful to see that their children are inoculated, vaccinated and given the anti-polio and other treatments as they become available. They accept chlorination, and in some places other treatment, of tap water as normal. But they lose sight of the need for the child's muscular development which in rougher ages resulted from what the child did naturally.

Now, Mr. Speaker, what is to be done? Physical training in our schools needs an overhauling, according to those experienced in physical fitness. A well-planned programme of physical education would include a wide variety of activities and many skills.

Does it pay? A school in a suburb of New York City had a 32 per cent. rate of failure among its students. The physical education teachers added specific exercises to the existing programme of tumbling and gymnastics. Within 5 months, the rate of failure fell to 24 per cent. and in 11 months it had dropped to 13 per cent.

What are the causes of illness? For the first time in Canada's history, we have a statistical statement of the causes of illness by age groups. It is given in a report published by the Dominion bureau of statistics in October, of which the following is a very brief extract:

Children under 15 years of age reported a high incidence of the diseases of the respiratory system, and after those came infective and parasitic diseases. Diseases of the respiratory system dominated in all age groups.

Adolescents, 15 years to 24, were afflicted by diseases of the digestive system, every tenth person having at least one attack.

Young adults, 25 years to 44, followed the same pattern but with more occurrences. Diseases of the bones and organs of movement, which had a rather low rate for persons under 25 years of age, began to show prominence, increasing from 9 to 22 illnesses per 1,000 population.

Middle-aged persons, 45 to 64, showed the increasing prominence of the diseases of the bones and organs of movement, about 42 per 1,000. If the recurring attacks were also counted, the rates would be 80 persons and 105 illnesses per 1,000. Diseases of the circulatory system also began to be important at this age.

Persons 65 and over suffered most frequently from diseases of the circulatory system and diseases of the bones and organs of movement. There were 146 new and recurring attacks of the former and 147 of the latter per 1,000 population.

Mr. Speaker, I will read a letter submitted to me by Dr. Joseph Berkeley, certified in physical medicine. He holds the degrees of MB, CH.B, MD and DPH:

MR. BERNARD NEWMAN,
Windsor, Ont.

DEAR MR. NEWMAN:

I have in recent years noticed very poor posture among school children, and I have the impression that painful back disorder is on the increase in younger age groups, but I have no statistical proof of this.

I noticed one month ago when at Lanspeary ice rink there were a number of children sitting on the railings while the ice was being shovelled and cleared, and in silhouette these 10 to 12 children—ages ranging for 8 to 12—had the posture which we call a C curve, with the back and head bent forward and the shoulders round and drooping.

These youngsters had undoubtedly no indoctrination in proper posture, and were sitting in slumped attitude which is now becoming typical of the present-day sedentary age.

There is no doubt that all of us are living in a sedentary age, with work-saving devices, and passive entertainment activities as part of our daily lives. I am sure that all of us are walking less than our forebears.

Our bodies, however, have not adopted to the change in our living pattern, and unless active exercises of a suitable type are engaged in by all age groups, the incidence of sore backs and joints, a result of postural defect, is going to be very high.

It is my opinion that exercises to improve and maintain good posture in school children should be an essential part of their curriculum.

This letter is signed by Dr. J. Berkeley.

On January 28, 1960, the Toronto Telegram had an editorial concerning the government's programme of physical fitness. The heading reads: "Get Some Muscle in It!" Among other things, the editorial said:

More recent surveys show that the average Canadian in an executive position loses 9 days a year from general poor health. Even more startling is the finding that the average office worker is producing at only 60 per cent. of his or her potential.

Another survey shows firemen are 30 per cent. more susceptible to heart attacks because of long periods of inactivity followed by periods of extreme activity. Postmen, active all day, had a coronary record less than half that of firemen.

The economic loss alone to the country from people working below physical par is immeasurable, to say nothing of the loss in zest for life in the people themselves.

One of the best investments that business and industry can make is to give their wholehearted support to this programme.

Everyone can increase his physical fitness if he will aim at a worthwhile target. Let us shift our emphasis from "freedom from disease" to "the best possible health."

Mr. Speaker, regarding a plan for physical fitness, I wish to call attention to the Canadian Legion plan called "Operation Star Shooter." This plan—to put physical fitness into orbit—is a programme designed to improve the physical fitness of boys and girls from 9 to the late teens. It involves 3 things: physical efficiency testing which measures present fitness levels; progressive exercises which improve each level; and sports skill tests which create a wider interest in athletics—particularly track and field.

The Star Shooter has the following objectives:

1. To measure present fitness levels of our youth.
2. To improve these levels.
3. To educate the public in the need for physical fitness.
4. To encourage greater participation in sports by youngsters.
5. To provide better conditioned athletics for the Canadian Legion's sports training clinic.

To me it seems strange that an individual organization, not a governmental one, has to think of the fitness of the nation to the extent to formulate a plan. Even though the plan may not be ideal, it is a start or the sparks of the programme.

The Canadian Legion in their brochure write:

The Canadian Legion acknowledges with thanks the assistance received from The Department of Health and Welfare [that is Ottawa]; the RCAF; the University of New Brunswick, and the New Brunswick Department of Education.

Nowhere do I find the province of Ontario assisting in the programme—this province that was going to establish a physical fitness programme. The Canadian Legion is to be commended for this forward step, and also their Olympic training plan, even though the track and field phase of athletics is their initial interest.

What are other governments doing?

The March 1955 issue of World Sport, the official publication of the British Olympic Association, gives some figures concerning government assistance to sport in Sweden which gives grave food for thought.

Sweden's Parliament granted the following amount for the promotion of sport and outdoor activities during the budget years July 1-June 30: 1953-1954—$1,565,000; 1954-1955 — $1,612,000; 1955-1956 — $1,897,000—almost $2 million.

The Swedish sports federation and various sports associations obtain annual grants for their administration and general activities to finance the engagement of instructors and the organizing of courses for training leaders, and partly to purchase materials for distribution among clubs. The clubs receive, finally, limited grants for the renting of training premises, and so forth.

Certain amounts are made available for financing participation in the Olympic Games and the promotion of international co-operation generally.

The Swedish government spends 27.5 cents per capita on the operation of national sports programmes and the training of national leaders.

However, Canada spends 1.75 cents, and Ontario plans on spending one-half cent per capita.

In a report made by Great Britain, West Germany and the United States concerning the fitness of the 18- to 20-year-olds called up for national service in 1956, Great Britain heads the list with 90.7 per cent. of the total call up fit for service. What is even more remarkable is that, of 221,000 accepted for service, 76 per cent—167,960—were in the top category.

Western Germany exceeded expectations when 80 per cent. of the total call up qualified.

United States, in the month of October 1956—and this is all roughly the same period—of the 30,000 called up for service only 65.4 per cent. qualified.

How did Great Britain achieve her enviable record? An article appearing This is Britain, March 1956 provides some of the answers. I quote:

Out of more than 200,000 youths 18 years of age, called up for compulsory national service in 1955, in Britain, 76 per cent. were placed in the top fitness category, able to meet immediately the toughest physical demands the navy, army and air force could make upon them.

Physical fitness has become such an important issue in Great Britain that, in 1959, both the Conservative and the Labour parties issued a pre-election policy statement concerning physical efficiency. While their programmes differed in minor details as to the administrative procedures, they agreed on most points. The fact that they advocated immediate expenditures of £7 million to £11 million for the first year, with progressive annual increases, over and above all sums currently being spent on these matters is but one indication of the value and importance placed on physical efficiency in Great Britain.

France has also been showing an unprecedented interest in the physical efficiency of her citizens. Up until 3 or 4 years ago, only a limited programme of action was given support. Today, 14 regional and 3 national training centres are being used to capacity to train coaches, leaders, teachers, and research personnel in the physical activity field in order to provide the essential guidance for a nationwide programme. In 1958, the National government spent $148 million—North American dollars not francs—on their training programme. This sum included the provision for some facilities.

What about Canada?

Canada's action in respect to the physical efficiency of her citizens is conspicuous by reason of its inadequacy. In the 1930's, when the health committee of the League of Nations endeavoured to enlist the co-operation of all countries in exploring ways and means of improving the physical fitness of people generally, Canada failed to signify interest, and accordingly was not represented at the conferences in Geneva.

It is small wonder that Australia, South Africa, New Zealand, Great Britain and many other countries have progressed while Canada has lagged behind.

A depression exercise programme was established when it was found that unemployed vocational trainees aged 16-30, who had mastered the essentials of a job, were unable to hold them because of the lack of stamina. It was the war-time statistics regarding unfitness of applicants for military service that stimulated the passing of an Act.

In 1943, a Physical Fitness Act was passed. However, it was never intended to result in a serious attempt to improve the physical efficiency of the general population. The armed forces were rehabilitated, the blind, the lame, the disabled, the insane were cared for—but the larger group that had to pay the "shot" were ignored.

This 1943 Act applied to both sexes and all ages, but it provided less financial support than did the depression programme.

In 1954, The Fitness Act was repealed because, in the opinion of the federal government, the programme which resulted from this Act was deemed the responsibility of provincial governments. It is now a provincial matter.

Here is what our provinces are doing:

British Columbia: "We do not have a physical fitness programme operating on a provincial scale."

Alberta: "We have no programme under that name, but we do offer extensive assistance to communities in the field of recreation."

Saskatchewan: "In 1953 we had an Act for the purpose of promoting physical fitness, which is being revised this year, and is called, An Act for the purpose of promoting fitness and recreation."

Manitoba: There is no physical fitness programme in operation in this province other than the usual physical education programme operating in the schools.

Quebec: The Under-Secretary of the province did not know..

New Brunswick: They must not have one as they did not answer the correspondence.

Nova Scotia: The Department of Education has a physical fitness branch which supervises the programme in the schools. Physical education is a compulsory subject in the schools but, in many instances, is not well taught, if taught at all by classroom teachers. The students usually are taught for two periods per week, in some cases this may be one period, but seldom is there more than 3.

Provincial grants are available to municipal school boards for gymnasium construction. These grants are equal to the cost of the construction of 4 classrooms.

In addition to working through the schools, the fitness office promotes fitness through other programmes.

Newfoundland: There is no physical fitness programme.

What do we have in Ontario? Let me read it to the hon. members.

The Athletics Control Act, 1947, is a complete misnomer, it is a Boxing and Wrestling Control Act but has nothing to do with athletics. Allow me to read from page 56, under schedule 8, regarding the rules of professional wrestling:

Duties of Wrestlers

4. No wrestler shall:

(d) apply a strangle hold to his opponent in any manner.

(e) tangle or hang the neck, arm, foot or leg of an opponent in the ropes.

(f) kick an opponent with his foot or knee.

(g) do any act to unduly excite the spectators.

Physical fitness indeed!

Incidentally, let us imagine what would happen to professional exhibition wrestling if the rules and regulations as set out by The Athletics Control Act were enforced. Where would all the entertainment value be?

This is the extent of the fitness programme.

Mr. Speaker, the need for an all-round health programme is obvious. I am going to quote what Paul Dudley White, MD, says in his compilation Exercise is Good Preventive Medicine:

Very few middle-aged people in this country today are getting enough exercise—

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): What is he reading from now? Does he want more paper?

Mr. Newman: The sentence I read probably applies to the hon. member who is yapping. I continue:

It was common for our ancestors—just one or two generations back—to take a lot of exercise routinely in their lives. They thought nothing of walking 5 or 10 miles, or of cycling 25 or 50 miles, or of working hard on the farm all day, or of going into the woods and working for hours cutting down trees.

I think that we can take a leaf from some of the habits of our ancestors who knew more about health than about disease. We know a lot about disease but we don't seem to pay much attention to health.

Exercise is important for everybody, whether they've been sick or not.

I doubt if some people have ever had the remarkably pleasant experience of relaxing fatigue after hard exercise, which I think is a very important benefit for one's health. It is time that we recognize the usefulness of that relationship to exercise—not just the exercise for exercise's sake, but the beneficial effects that may come especially to a mental worker. Probably those who are constantly intent mentally need more physical relaxation of that sort than those who have a certain amount of walking to do in their routine work.

There are the immediate physical effects of exercise on the circulation of blood. Good muscle tone in the arms and particularly in the legs, resulting from regular exercise, maintains an improved circulation of blood in the veins.

In addition to its beneficial effect on skeletal muscle tone, exercise also improves the tone of the diaphragm, which results in its better function as the piston of a pump, not only to bring a full supply of oxygen to the lungs with removal of carbon dioxide, but also to suction blood into the heart.

Digestion, when meals follow exercise and do not just precede it, and bowel function are improved by exercise. Sleep is favoured, too; in fact, a brisk long walk in the evening may be more helpful as a hypnotic than any medicine, highball or television show.

Most important of all, there is the beneficial effect of exercise on the nervous system and the psyche.

It matters little, if at all, what kind of exercise it is, provided it suits the strength and liking of the individual concerned. It is well to establish a regular habit and to maintain it through thick and thin. One should regard it as just as essential to good health as eating, sleeping and working.

This is all quoting Dr. White.

Finally, it is my strong belief that all healthy persons, both male and female, should exercise regularly, no matter what their ages. Of course, in advanced age—that, is, past 70—

—and it probably refers to hon. members across the House,

—it is doubtless wise to exercise less strenuously than earlier in life, but no strict rules can be set. Every person must be considered individually according to his condition, habits, preferences as to the kind of exercise and the circumstances of his life.

Mr. Speaker, it is quite common to hear—"I'd like to see government assistance for sports, because it is as important to our country as many other things that get governmental help. I'd like to see more support for our athletes going overseas to British Empire games, Pan-American games, Olympic games, World games tournaments and anything else that attracts world-wide attention. In the foreign countries more people have heard of Barbara Ann Scott, Marilyn Bell, Lucille Wheeler, Anne Heggtviet, Barbara Wagner and Ernestine Russell than have heard of any of our top ambassadors."

We think nothing of training a youth with or without a college education and, after one or two years' training, putting him in complete command of a $1 million or more aircraft. One little error in human judgment and the aircraft may be a total loss, or it may be the beginning of the next world war.

Yet we begrudge Canada's youth who, after years of intensive training to achieve athletic skills or perfection, the opportunity to compete against the world's best, so that they may improve their own and their fellow countrymen's skills.

It is quite all right to subsidize farm products, put protective tariffs on manufactured commodities, but to financially assist Canada's best athletes is wrong. Hon. members will say that the government does assist. That is right. The Canadian hockey squad received a grant of $2,500 but let me read this:

This is a comment by George Gross in his sports column "Cross-Country Specialists," headed:

NO FUNDS FOR OLYMPICS
SKIERS WILL RACE HERE

Several of Canada's top cross-country ski specialists will miss the Olympic Games at Squaw Valley because of lack of funds.

The Canadian Olympic committee had to choose skiers who would participate in both the cross-country and jumping events, while leaving cross-country specialists at home.

I do not begrudge the fact that the hockey squad was given $2,500, it was a very, very minor sum, but the other athletes were completely neglected.

Hon. members will say that the grants are greater for the summer games. That is also true. But all provincial and federal grants do not amount to one-third of the budget, and this budget is such that less than one-third of the athletes that should be given the opportunity of competing do compete. Imagine 2 boxers out of 10, 2 or 3 wrestlers out of 8, 3 gymnasts out of 12 and so forth.

Hon. members will also say that our athletes are not up to world calibre and, as a result, are not ready to compete internationally. May I answer that an athlete is always only as good as his competition. If he is never given the opportunity of international competition, he will never improve sufficiently to achieve that ultimate goal. There is no incentive.

I can illustrate this from practical experience. For the first time, Canada had a men's team in gymnastics in the Pan-American games and, as a result of the opportunity, placed second to the United States, beating Argentina, Mexico and Cuba, teams that have had previous experience.

After all, if we look at this competition solely from the viewpoint of winning, or of bringing home gold medals, then competitions would end up with only 2 or 3 countries entering certain events and the rest of the world refusing to enter.

It is better to have played the game and fought well than never to have played at all. We cannot always win but we can learn by playing.

Here is what British Columbia is doing. This is an article from the Woodstock Sentinel-Review, Tuesday, September 15, 1959. A Canadian Press writer, Jim Peacock, says:

AMATEUR SPORT COUNCIL TO AID
B.C. TRACK, FIELD GROWTH

Over the years, raising funds has proved one of the greatest stumbling blocks to improved achievements in amateur athletics.

It listed a three-point aim:

To stimulate province-wide interest in international competitions; to provide continuing financial support to supplement individual clubs and sports when they had extraordinary expenses; to stimulate British Columbia athletes to raise their performance standard.

These are the 3 points, or 3 aims of this programme.

The provincial government has thrown in financial support, too—to the tune of $10,000, with $4,000 earmarked for the national Pan-American games, committee and the remainder to the British Columbia council fund.

Mr. Speaker, let us stop kidding the people of Ontario. The speech from the Throne mentions, on page 7, "A new physical fitness programme will be inaugurated."

Will hon. members please note: "will be" inaugurated.

Yet, when it comes to the estimates, under vote No. 601, item 33, we have: "Fees and expenses, Ontario physical fitness study committee, $35,000." Is this a programme? This $35,000 is for a study, not a programme.

It is a half-cent per capita. How fit can we make our citizens for a half-cent?

Let us get down in earnest about this. Let us invite the Pan-American games to Ontario, for Canada's centenary in 1967.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, I am listed as one of the speakers tonight, but unless we get more attention from the other side of the House, I refuse to enter into this debate.

I noticed, a few minutes ago, a magazine in front of me, and I saw, I think what was the picture of the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart), and I just forget what the line was, but it said something about courtesy.

I am not accusing the hon Minister of discourtesy, but I certainly am accusing some of the hon. members from the other side of the House of discourtesy.

No matter what one thinks about any hon. member over here, nevertheless, we are here for a very definite purpose. Some hon. members opposite, I suppose, feel they are compelled to come here. But I certainly think it is very discourteous to the hon. members on this side of the House, particularly those of us who are in this chamber for the first time.

Now, conscious of the fact that I am one of the baby members of this House I rise to take part in this debate, and as I do, I must at the outset congratulate you, Mr. Speaker, on your elevation to this very historic office of the Speaker of this House. I hope that you will be able to have some smooth sailing, although I notice that at times there has been heavy water on some sides.

As a former teacher, retired from the active ranks, I must extend my congratulations to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) who was recently elevated to that position. I understand that at one time he was an hon. Minister without Portfolio, and he had something to do with the Ontario water resources commission. I am sure that experience will serve him in good stead because, with all due respect, there is some stagnant water in The Department of Education.

Coupled with my felicitations to the hon. Minister I also must mention the former Minister of Education (Mr. Dunlop), a man whom I have known for many years when I was at the University of Toronto, when he was in the department of extension and then as Minister of Education, and again because I was intimately associated with him on a citizenship committee in one of the veteran's organizations.

I regret very much that illness has caused his retirement because, without doubt—and I am sure every teacher in this province will agree—the former Minister of Education has done much for education in this province. The method or manner in which he had to retire is to be regretted, too, I think. I know that he fell victim to certain regulations in his department and I do not think—at least from reading between the lines—that the hon. former Minister got the support he should have had from a certain quarter where he expected it.

I hope that he is spared long life and will be able to give of his experience to this House, and to The Department of Education, for some years to come.

I recall seeing the picture "The Browning Version" recently, and I remember a line that was spoken there and I think it applies to the hon. former Minister Dr. Dunlop. This line reads: "God looks kindly from afar upon a gentle master"—and I think that applies to the hon. former Minister of Education.

Mr. Speaker, earlier I said that I had retired from the teaching profession. But I am one of those fortunate ones who unconsciously, possibly, prepared myself for this particular position. Dr. Wilbur Penfield, one of the outstanding neurological surgeons in this country and certainly of world renown, had said that men should, in their middle ages—the years of the forties—prepare themselves so that they will have something else to do on retirement.

I think possibly because of my experience as a teacher and in various fields, and also in a couple of world wars, that I have prepared myself possibly for some of the battles that may occur in this House and certainly have prepared myself to serve my riding well.

Fortunately, through the errors of omission and commission of the administration, I am now the member for Nipissing. I crossed the line as my friend the hon. member for Sudbury (Mr. Sopha)—who is quite critical of commissions, particularly of the racing commission, would say—I crossed the line under wraps.

But sometimes I think I am really back to school again, not as a teacher, but as a pupil with the teacher out of the room. There is so much noise here at times and there are—I do not know what to call them—exchanges, but nevertheless it is sometimes exciting and sometimes not.

I may say, Mr. Speaker, that I read with interest, not very long ago in my local newspaper, the North Bay Daily Nugget—one of the outstanding journals in this fair province and in this fair country—an article about a gentleman in my home town, a Mr. French.

According to this article, he is a very interesting personality. The French family has the process of colouring bronze which comes down from the long, long past. But it says in the article that Mr. French had to do with some of the carving and of the metal work on the chair in which Mr. Speaker now sits.

I thought the hon. members of this House might be interested, because it also said he had something to do with decorations on the Sarnia post office and also a certain building in Oshawa.

By the way, speaking about Oshawa, I must bring to the attention of this House that another young man won honour for Canada at the Olympic games.

I thought that the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) might have mentioned it this afternoon but it escaped his memory. Young Jackson of Oshawa won third prize in the figure skating contest, and I am sure hon. members all agree that his name should be included, as well as that of the Dutchmen.

We always have a deep interest in North Bay in these Olympic and world championship teams, and Bobby McKnight—whom I had the honour of coaching one time—was a Dutchman. But I am sure we also honour Mr. Jackson who is an outstanding figure skater, and that is one sport that requires hours and hours of study. If some of the youngsters I have had to teach in other years had as much persistence as a figure skater, they would have done much better.

Now, before I took my place in this House, I was told that I would see in action, in the hon. leader of the government (Mr. Frost), a master craftsman in the art of politics. I had read about him in the press. I had seen him occasionally on TV. I had never, except on one occasion, seen him in person.

I have watched him closely in the past 4 weeks, and I must say that he is a master craftsman—the suave manner, the bantering voice, the warm smiles—but I am sure that behind that face is a cool, calculating mind.

Certainly, as I have seen him on certain occasions, I would say that he has certainly a cool calculating mind, and there is something else in the glove other than just the fist. He is the real “Big Daddy.” One likes to see a professional in action, and I am sure that he is a real pro.

I am honoured, sir, to take my seat as a member of the Liberal party under the leadership of the hon. leader, the member for Waterloo North (Mr. Wintermeyer). He is a cultured gentleman, and I am sure that the hon. members of this House will agree with me that he is such. I am sure, too, that in the not too distant future, he will lead the Liberal party to the heights in Ontario. He has a depth and a sincerity that is refreshing, and my admiration for my hon. leader grows daily.

I have found my brothers in arms here to be a group of happy warriors and, inexperienced in politics as I am, I am deeply grateful to the hon. member for Brant (Mr. Nixon) who is the Nestor of our party and also the Dean of this House—and too, I might say, the crafty, wily Ulysses, the hon. member for Grey South (Mr. Oliver). They have been of great help to me in my work so far.

I take pride also, Mr. Speaker, in following the footsteps of those who have served the district of Nipissing, members of both parties, in the past, and I hope I can emulate, at least, their endeavours.

In the speech from the Throne, I find references made to the development of the rich northern Ontario and its connection through Moosonee.

In fact, reading through the speech from the Throne in 1959, I find this reference to the port at Moosonee. We all know that there are rich iron ore deposits, not only on the Belcher islands, but also on the mainland. Now we have—with the expansion of the Hydro at Otter Rapids, and the other expansions there and with the expansion of the natural gas system through the Northern Ontario Natural Gas—we have ample power, as the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) has pointed out.

So we hope that there will be a development of the rich resources, not only of northern Ontario, but also of the vast reaches beyond in the far north. I hope that this government will ask their friends at Ottawa to expedite matters, particularly about the port at Moosonee.

I understand also that the northeastern Ontario development association is making a survey of the economic possibilities of all that region for the hon. Minister of Planning and Development (Mr. Nickle). I hope that is soon on his desk. And certainly, it is a consummation devoutly to be wished that there will be a port at Moosonee, and that, in addition to that, we will have the development of the resources of the north and development of her secondary industries.

Also, it is envisaged, too, I understand, that there will be a rail connection to Georgian Bay by way of North Bay. And this mention of Georgian Bay brings up the Georgian Bay canal. When I first came to North Bay, some 37 or 38 years ago, even at that time, there was mention of the Georgian Bay canal which was a great dream of the early settlers in that region.

Recently I read that the hon. member for Pontiac in the federal House (hon. Paul Martineau), had mentioned that in his address. He spoke to the federal House about the possibility of linking the St. Lawrence, the Ottawa, the Mattawa, and so on, so that again we have the revival of the Georgian Bay canal project.

Mr. Speaker, I represent the riding of Nipissing, whose history goes back 350 years. My riding borders mainly the Lake Nipissing, the former home of the Nipissing Indian bands. Before the white man came, and long after him, this historic route was the avenue of commerce.

If hon. members will look, as they come into this building by way of the east door, on the relief map of Canada, they will see, graphically illustrated there, just how, the route from the St. Lawrence, the Ottawa, the Mattawa and Lake Nipissing, and French River on to Georgian Bay, goes deep into the heart of the continent. This, Mr. Speaker, was the historic route over which the voyagers, coureurs de bois, the fur traders and those who opened up this country, traversed.

In 1610, Etienne Brûlé who was the advance guard for Champlain, camped on the shores of Lake Nipissing. Five years later Champlain came with his people and stayed at Lake Nipissing for a while, and on down the French to Georgian Bay. Then there followed the Jesuit fathers, Brébeuf and Lallement and all, who later were to fall to the blood lust of the Iroquois. They also passed that way.

Father Issac Jogues who was massacred at Auriesville in the state of New York, also rested at Nipissing, and in his writings he mentions about the salubrious climate of Nipissing. People today find the climate of Nipissing very, very fine, particularly those who suffer from hay fever.

Pardon me, Mr. Speaker, do I continue on? It is now 11 o'clock.

Mr. Speaker: Finish your address.

Mr. Troy: I am certain I do not want to bore some of the hon. members of this House.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Very commendable.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Ten minutes?

Mr. Troy: I have something later to say to the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) for another plaque they can put up some time. I will tell them where. As I say, I represent Nipissing and it is the historic route.

Through the instrumentality of the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity, recently a plaque was unveiled in North Bay in Lee Park to Jean Nicolet, who was also a companion of Champlain. We have also on the La Vasse River, down which Champlain travelled, a cairn. Unfortunately, I do not think there is enough attention given to these historic sites. Markers should indicate there is a historic site nearby.

Over the Mattawa and French River trail passed the wealth of the rich fur country. There was mention here today of the Northwest Company and the Hudson's Bay Company. The hon. Prime Minister of this province had spoken about their records. Their freight canoes also passed through North Bay. It was the great freight route long before there was such a place as Toronto, other than a settlement of the Indian bands.

But when the settlers gradually pushed through, and the capital was established in Niagara-on-the-Lake, and then later in Toronto, and the development of shipping on Lake Ontario, this route of ours became a thing of the past, and for a long time Nipissing was peopled by the Indian bands.

As hon. members know, in the latter part of the nineteenth century, British Columbia became a province, and one of the stipulations—at least one of the conditions of entering the Dominion—was the fact that Canada had to build a transcontinental railway. That brought the Canadian Pacific Railway, it brought settlers to the Nipissing.

Because of the Canadian Pacific Railway, North Bay was born. And because of its strategic position, North Bay has continuously been a great crossroads for all kinds of transportation, both rail, highway, and air, and I hope the hon. Minister from Cochrane South (Mr. Spooner), the hon. member for Cochrane North (Mr. Brunelle) and the hon. member for Temiskaming (Mr. Herbert) will not chide me for saying that this is the gateway city to the North, and with its adjoining townships of Ferris and Widdifield, it is the hub of the riding of Nipissing.

In recent years, North Bay, together with its adjoining townships, as I said, has had a remarkable growth, and quite spectacular, until now, it has a population of more than 40,000 people.

As hon. members know, too, North Bay, because of its strategic position, is becoming a convention centre. I notice too, that it is becoming the fur centre for the North, and recently we have had fur auctions there.

North Bay, too, and Widdifield—that is the township in which the installations have taken a very foremost place in the defence plan of this country. For some time following the war, in the township of Widdifield, we have had the RCAF station with all-weather fighter squadrons and the personnel of that station are on 24-hour alert. They are just as much in the service as they would be if they were flying out of the advanced air fields of France and Belgium 20 years ago.

Also we have at North Bay one of the Bomarc sites. Now construction crews are busily tunneling to prepare for the installations. I do not know anything about the Bomarc, I see confusing stories about it. It seems that the federal hon. Minister of National Defence, who was a very fine soldier in World War I and, like the Sergeant-of-Arms of this House, bears the signs of it on his chest, does seem quite convinced that the Bomarc is all right. I hope that we never have to use such weapons but nevertheless, I pray that we will have a much more effective missile than the one they are working on now.

The town of Sturgeon Falls, Mr. Speaker, is the leading municipality in the western section of my riding. It is, like many sections of my riding, bi-lingual. The district of Nipissing has a large population of very fine citizens of French-Canadian origin.

Sturgeon Falls had a very rough time during the depression, but through the persistence of its citizens and the leadership of the town council, and its chamber of commerce and other organizations, it has now recovered and is rapidly expanding.

Indicative of the growing prosperity of the municipality, Mr. Speaker, I noticed in the local newspapers and Le Droit recently that the new Hydro substation was opened. It is also the centre—and I can say this without fear of contradiction—of French culture in northern Ontario. I noticed too, in the press that Sturgeon Falls may have a TV station. I sincerely hope so, because they are a very fine group of people in that municipality.

At the moment, I think it is apropos to mention what I read in the Hansard of 1958. The passage refers to Sturgeon Falls, and I am sorry to see that the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell) is not here. The former member for Nipissing (Mr. Chaput) who was a supporter of this government was quoted in Hansard, in February 1958, as saying:

In 1954 a new headquarters—and the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests will be interested

—a new headquarters building for the Department of Lands and Forests has been promised for Sturgeon Falls. I have the assurance that this building will be built this year at a cost of approximately $225,000. It will consist of an office—and it goes on to say various other things —and a site has been purchased.

This is what the hon. member for Nipissing said at this time:

I am sure that the citizens of Sturgeon Falls will rejoice when they see the start of that project.

Well, I am sure they will, because it is now 1960 and no building yet.

To provide employment for the unemployed tradesmen, I wrote to the hon. Minister of Public Works last fall asking that he expedite this project which was promised in 1954. In reply he informed me that, because of certain technical difficulties, the work is not being proceeded with at the present time. Promised in 1954—to be built in 1958—then suspended in 1959 because of technical difficulty. I hope the technical difficulty was not something that happened on June 11.

Mattawa, the oldest established municipality in my riding, has joined the ranks of those who are applying for a new police college. When I was home in my riding last weekend, I had a delegation from that town ask me, if I would, to point out to this House the facilities that this little town has, which are ideal facilities for such a college.

Mattawa, as many hon. members know, is the oldest municipality in the riding of Nipissing. It has a beautiful setting. After I had written about Mattawa I noticed that, if I had waited a day or so, I could have read in the Telegram and I would have seen the description of this beautiful little town. It is nestled at the confluence of the Mattawa and the Ottawa Rivers with the Laurentian hills in the background. It was the first municipality.

Up the Mattawa to Nipissing, and up the Ottawa to the Abitibis and beyond, went the early settlers in this country, the lumbermen and the fur traders and so on.

There are, too, a number of parcels of Crown lands in Mattawa, and they would like to get rid of them some way. They are of no use to the town, nobody is making any use of them, and they do not get any taxes, so they wonder what the province is going to do with them.

Speaking of Mattawa reminds me there is a highway, No. 533 which was a former bush road, and it now links Mattawa with the highway to Temiskaming, Quebec. I must point out to the hon. Minister a little later, when he is here in the House, in the estimates for The Department of Highways, that there are a couple of death traps on this highway near Timber Lake, and now it has reached the stage that, because of the dangerous conditions, motorists—instead of going across that highway—prefer to go all the way to North Bay and up to Temiskaming, a distance of 80 miles. If the road was in proper condition, they would cut the distance in half.

Now, further in this connection, I might suggest to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests that he consider linking existing roads in Algonquin Park area so that the northerners may have as easy access to the wonders and the beauties of this area as do the people from the south.

I understand, too, that there is a road that runs northwestward in the Pembroke or Petawawa area—runs in a northwesterly direction through the park—and it would only take a short stretch of new road to connect that with highway No. 17.

The Legislature, I understand too, set up last year in The Department of Lands and Forests a certain sum of $500,000 for provincial parks. But the enabling legislation, I understand, has not been spelled out yet.

I understand that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests mentioned that there was a possibility of certain of these parks adjacent to municipalities to be returned to them. I sincerely hope that the little St. Antoine Park—apparently it does not find favour with the department as it should—does not go to the township. The township of Mattawan, in which this park is, could not possibly administer it—they have not the personnel—and I hope the hon. Minister will continue the control of that park.

Hon. J. W. Spooner (Minister of Lands and Forests): May I ask the hon. member a question?

Mr. Troy: Certainly.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: What is the size of the St. Antoine Park?

Mr. Troy: Well, it is not very big. It is narrow, I know—here is what it says right here though, this is from the department of the hon. Minister.

Regardless of where a park may be located or in what setting, campers and visitors can become bored due to their not having knowledge of the points of interest.

Now it goes on about St. Antoine. It is 4.5 miles east of Mattawa, I think it is along there on highway No. 533. This park is located on the shores of the Ottawa River, it does not give in any way the exact size of it. I know it is somewhat narrow, but the park is along the Ottawa, near LeCave Hydro Development.

Last year—I presume the hon. Minister knows this, too—we had a great number of visitors, and they wanted lights in the park. But now they do not want the lights. They would rather have some attention given to the shore line for swimming.

Hon. Mr. Spooner: I may say to the hon. member that last year there were almost 39,000 visitors in St. Antoine Park, and I know that further development will take place there this year, as well as another park in the riding of the hon. member, the Champlain Park.

Mr. Troy: Oh yes, I know, that is being developed now, but it will be some time before it is finished. I understand that the visitors numbered in the thousands—much more, I think, than even in some of the parks in the Temagami area.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I agree with the hon. member for York-Humber (Mr. Lewis) when he spoke of the decentralization of industry. This is something that we have been talking about in northern Ontario, in fact ever since I got there we have been talking about the development of the north, even in the days when the late hon. E. A. Dunlop was Minister of Northern Development, I think it was. No matter what the political stripe was, we have always talked about the development. Now I think we should have decentralization of industry.

By the way, I notice, too, that last May, when the planning and development committee sat in North Bay, this point was stressed, not only by the chamber of commerce in my own riding, but also by the Timmins representatives. I notice that the members of the chamber of commerce, including the then mayor, stressed the point of inequality of freight rates.

But I am pleased to see now that, as I understand from the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren), the issue of the inequality of freight rates is being wrestled with by this government.

The hon. member for York-Humber and other hon. members have mentioned, too, something that is of interest to all hon. members, particularly those from out of town. They mentioned the fact that it costs us more to stay, and even though I am a recent member to this House, nevertheless I am sure that the people in our party are interested.

In regard to liquor control, once again we find the government a step behind the public. The hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) has proposed certain minor changes to The Liquor Control Act, and these are just practically legalizing practices which people have followed for years. These practices were more honoured in the breach than the observance.

I am glad to see that more attention is to be given to the disease of alcoholism. I note that the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) has been appointed to the liquor commission, and he certainly has a great challenge here. But I know from my brief personal experience, and from what I have heard about him—his service as a Chaplain overseas—that he has the qualities of heart and mind that will enable him to give leadership to this very, very grave problem.

Now, as one who, ever since I was a teenager has been deeply interested in boys and girls, I note that a great number of them are becoming involved with liquor. The hon. Attorney-General said that one of the reasons he was retaining the permit was the fact that it was to be a deterrent to the teenager.

One does not have to have a permit to get a case of beer or ale, one does not have to have a permit to get a gallon of what the hon. member for Kenora calls "goof." One does not need any permit for that. These are alcoholic beverages.

And if one does not need a permit there, well surely I do not think the argument of the hon. Attorney-General holds water in that regard.

I would like to see some sort of—perhaps the hon. member for Dovercourt (Mr. Thompson) might not like this—but I would like to see some kind of a registration form, something even for everybody. Certainly it will not find favour, but there must be some way that we can legislate to keep the youngsters away from easy access to liquor.

Such a form might have some effect, too, against these objectionable films. I notice the ads say, "Restricted to youngsters 18 years of age," but I have gone by a theatre and have seen "adult entertainment" advertised, and the bulk of the persons in the queue are youngsters.

I shall speak about the Liquor Control Act at length later, but I want to register at this moment, on behalf of my fellow hon. members, and fellow veterans of the armed services, strong disapproval of the existing regulations of the liquor control board as they affect veterans' club houses. The board has already listed the number of permits that a branch may have during the year, and then recently they raised the fee from $2 to $15, some 750 per cent. Well, that is usury in the extreme, I should think.

The board also raised the gallonage tax to such a degree that it is almost commensurate now with the tax that the hotels pay. By so doing, they have cut down the profits of our various veterans' organizations, their clubs and their branches to such an extent that they are hard pressed to carry on their community projects.

The hon. Prime Minister of this province is a veteran himself. I remember in Cornwall, where my first experience of seeing him in person occurred. He stood there and said: "We in this government have a veterans' preference. It is strong now, and we are going to make it stronger." Well, if what I heard at a meeting yesterday of veterans is true, I do not think the hon. member for Hastings West (Mr. Sandercock) will agree with his hon. leader, because I was told there that the hon. member said that the war was over a long time ago, and there is no such thing as veterans' preference anyway.

Also, resolutions presented at veterans' conventions that I have been at—particularly as far as the liquor control board is concerned—would cause me to conclude that the commissioners of the liquor board have never heard of such a thing as veterans' preference. But I will have more to say on that later.

And all too frequently we read in this province of highway traffic accidents in which fatalities occur, and sometimes while the victims have not been killed outright, they die because ambulances are not available.

Now the member for Nipissing, last year I believe, presented to this House, a resolution that the chamber of commerce from my own home city of North Bay had adopted, and it was endorsed by the city council of North Bay. This resolution referred to the provision of equipment in provincial police vehicles so they would have these equipped with first aid gear.

Mr. Speaker, I know it is now 11.30. I usually like to have something before I go to bed. I notice the hon. member for Parry Sound (Mr. Johnston) smiling. He and I were old buddies in the services. He knows what I mean. But, Mr. Speaker, I would offer to adjourn this debate on condition that I might be permitted to resume.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Ask Mr. Speaker for his decision.

Mr. Troy: What about you, Mr. Speaker? Thank you very much.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I think it is desirable that another hour be given.

Mr. Troy: Well, all right. I am just a young fellow, though I have retired from the profession. It is not too long ago since I coached and refereed football games, so I can stand it if the hon. members can.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: They are going to be all right, do not worry.

Mr. Troy: Oh yes, I wanted to mention this, and I am glad the hon. Minister is still here, as I notice some of the hon. members have gone.

I must say that I was surprised and disappointed—I repeat—I must say I was very much surprised and disappointed, when the resolution about the Elliot Lake crisis was before this House, that I did not hear the loquacious Minister of Reform Institutions. He did not speak. The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests was in Montreal. I do not know what he would have done, but at that time, the hon. member for Algoma-Manitoulin (Mr. Fullerton) was here. He is the chairman of the mining committee. None of them dropped a word.

Here was the poor little place.

At least one goes to a wake if a person is dead or is dying—at least one goes to the hospital and says: "All the best to you, and get better." One offers a few condolences.

But the hon. members across did not even give them that.

At least I expected these hon. members for northern Ontario, who know that up in various sections, that forest fires have burnt out towns and disasters have come to say something. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle) is also from a mining area, but he said not a word about it at all. That is—

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: They are going to be all right, do not worry.

Mr. Troy: Thanks very much. We pray so.

Well, the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests said today earlier, that one thing characteristic of the people of the north country is that they have faith.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: That is right.

Mr. Troy: And it is certainly going to take faith that will move mountains. I am sure that the people of Elliot Lake will have to have that kind of faith. But faith without the good works from hon. members opposite is not going to be of much help to them.

My friend the hon. member for Windsor-Walkerville (Mr. Newman), spoke about the examination centre at Windsor. I notice that the former member for Nipissing said a lot about things that have not become realistic yet.

I am very happy to learn from the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko), that a transport driver examination centre is definitely contemplated for the vicinity of North Bay. However, the hon. Minister of Transport and I discussed this question and he said that it was not quite that far advanced.

Now the cry, as the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests just said, is for more and more better roads. We, in Nipissing, certainly echo that cry. We need improvements in all types of roads. I shall speak of those at greater length during the budget debate.

I heard the young hon. member for Peel (Mr. Davis) and others speak of the opening of the trans-Canada highway.

Well, every day I have seen truck after truck—great transport trucks go up the north highway—and then I see others coming down from the west via highway No. 11, and I understand they are coming from the west. I do not know what they do when they get up beyond Cochrane. Do they take through the air?

If the hon. members on the other side do not know about it, we have had the trans-Canada route through highway No. 17 to North Bay and up highway No. 11 on to the west, but I have noticed that this postcard announces the trans-Canada highway opening.

The hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity says that the postcard was not issued by his department.

The first time I spoke in this House, I mentioned the "hon. Premier of Ontario." When the transcript came back from Hansard, it was cut out in red ink. I understand that red ink is what the Hansard people put in. My words were "hon. Premier." Well, I do not know. On this card I find these names: "Prime Minister Diefenbaker" and below "Prime Minister Frost." If they were both listed as Prime Ministers it is rather hard to say who is the Prime Minister of Canada.

When I look at this little postcard, depicting the wild goose, I am glad to see exemplified what the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests referred to, the faith and also independence of the north. It is refreshing to know the people of Wawa won out over bureaucracy, and instead of Jamestown it is going to be Wawa, just because of the wild goose. That is an historic name, and that is what they wanted to keep.

I asked the hon. Minister of highways (Mr. Cass) just the other day when the million dollar building was going up. That million dollar building, was to be built in 1960. I asked him about it but he had never heard about it.

"Well," I said, "it was in your party's election campaign." "Oh," he said, "that's just newspaper talk, in an advertisement."

I don't know, they must use mirrors.

Oh, that reminds me, I was a signaller during World War I, and then in World War II, I had experience with radio telephone, and I am very interested in what kind of communication system they use over on their side of the House. Really, they must have a wonderful system, because I notice how—it must be mirrors or something like that—messages pass, people get up and then they sit down without saying a word.

Again on highways, and I also go to Hansard, and I attribute these words to the former member for Nipissing. He says, while on the subject of highways,

I ask my hon. friend, why it is that highway No. 64 which connects highway No. 69 to highway No. 17 and highway No. 11 in 1957, and was taken off in 1957. I do not see it in 1958. And then it was put in again, and it was priority until last September, and then it is off again.

I am not going to bore hon. members, but I could read a letter from the chamber of commerce in Noelville. I will just mention a few things:

Roads in our area are our lifelines. Our nearest railroad is 15 miles away and we have no water transportation.

I know that the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests said the money in that pot is getting less and less, but I hope it is not because of changes in government, changes of parties in the great district of Nipissing that these projects are suspended.

We have two hospitals in North Bay, I shall touch briefly on this. I noticed that there are changes mentioned in the budget. As hon. members know, the federal government apparently has no intention of making any immediate changes, according to the federal hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Monteith). He said that radical changes or modifications of the Hospital Insurance Act should only be made in the light of further experience.

The city of North Bay and the Civic Hospital Commission, are quite concerned because an addition is necessary to the Civic Hospital, one of our general hospitals. They have gone on record as favouring a change in the establishment of per diem hospital rates to include interest on capital debt and depreciation on buildings. I hope that the changes that outlined the address of the hon. Provincial Treasurer will meet their request.

I touch briefly on the question of mental health. I thought that the hon. member for Parkdale (Mr. Trotter) did very well, but apparently he did not find favour with the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond), but this young man has done a great amount of research, and I am not going to speak on that matter except to say that we have a mental hospital in North Bay serving the people of northern Ontario.

The heart of the hospital is the surgical wing. Now, I asked the hon. Minister of Health about this wing, construction of which had been announced on two occasions by hon. Ministers of Health. He said, blame it on The Public Works Department. So, again, that is another mark against them.

The people of my riding will rejoice with parents throughout our province that the administration plans increased services for children who are mentally retarded, which includes expansion of hospital facilities. The hon. Minister of Health has promised that there will be one hospital in northern Ontario.

FEBRUARY 29, 1960

I know that other centres have applied for this hospital but I suggest to the hon. Minister that he could not have a more ideal location than somewhere in the district of Nipissing. I endorse a resolution I received from the Catholic Women's League of Ontario asking that steps be taken to increase the number of hospitals.

Regarding retarded children, I was very happy to hear the hon. Minister of Education say that there are possibilities of bringing them within the purview of The Department of Education. I am sure that the parents of these children will welcome that announcement. They are happy to know that their children will be treated just the same as are the children who are able to attend regular schools.

The hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) is to be commended for the statement that the widows' pension under The Workmen's Compensation Act is to be increased. I am sure that all hon. members of this House will say this action has taken too long.

I urge The Department of Public Welfare to consider changes in The Child Welfare Act to allow for higher education for children under the care of the children's aid society while they are taking higher education.

Under the direction of The Department of Public Welfare a home for the aged is being built at North Bay for the people of Nipissing, while Sturgeon Falls is awaiting the final approval from the municipal board to get a start on theirs.

I want to raise the question that was brought in by the hon. member for Kenora. It has to do with the lumbermen and bushmen who, at this time of the year, are hard pressed to get their logs out, and I hope that officials will show tolerance in that regard, because—at this time of the year—there is a great rush on to get the logs out to the mills.

I suggest, too, that the government enact legislation that would prohibit the truckers from hauling logs unless they have a chain at either end, and then a complete chain around the whole frame. I am sure the possibility of accidents would then be greatly reduced.

Agriculture is another basic industry of my riding, particularly in the dairy industry, and while I shall speak on it on the estimates for The Department of Agriculture, I call to the attention of this House that Miss Dairy Queen for Ontario was Miss Anna Spaul, who is a resident of my riding in the vicinity of Warren.

We in Nipissing congratulate the people of the Algoma and Nickel Belt sections that progress has been made in establishing the Laurentian University. We, at this time, would like to inform this House that we, in northeastern Ontario, plan to have a university also, and a first year Arts course will be offered this year at the North Bay College, which is an institution under the direction of the Fathers of the Resurrection who operate the St. Jerome's College at Kitchener. We envisage, too, at least a junior college and are laying plans for a university later on.

I touch for a moment on fluoridation. I notice that the hon. Minister of Health says he will not push a committee. Well, I must say that I do not know when that committee started, but I must call to the attention of hon. members the resolution of the northern Ontario dental association which asks the reason for the delay.

I am sorry again that the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips) is not here, because I believe he made certain remarks about the attitude of this government on fluoridation, and if I recall rightly he said that this government would never legislate for fluoridation.

I shall not speak on physical fitness at this time, although I do know a little about it. I will leave that for some other time.

The tourist industry is most important in my riding. Here again is reason to stress the need for better roads. I shall defer my remarks on this industry until the estimates are presented.

The hon. member for Durham (Mr. Caruthers) was wrong when he mentioned my name in his speech. He was not certain but he thought I had said, in an education committee meeting, that this government has no programme on education. I do not want to say that. I know it has a policy and a programme, but we feel in my party that we can improve that policy broadly and objectively.

I was not making any carping criticism because I feel that I certainly have a stake in this country. I feel, as a veteran of two wars, that I have a big stake in this country, and it is my aim—and I think it is the aim of every hon. member in this House—to see to it that we have the best programme of education we possibly can have, and that is why I may criticize. But I certainly did not make those remarks.

I have much to say on education, but I think I shall postpone—I would rather continue with it but it is going to take a little time.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: Oh, go on. We can take it.

Mr. Troy: All right. Thank you very much. Well, I hope the hon. members can. I shall shorten it as much as I can.

This complex society certainly needs trained and educated brains, and that is the job of our schools and universities. To achieve that, we must have scholars as teachers and no matter what we do, scholarship is the basis, and we must insist on that. True, this government says that there are enough teachers in training, but unless they have the scholarship the programme will not be suitable.

It was refreshing to read recently, in the metropolitan press, that the president of York University, Dr. Ross, has brought out the fact that his university is going to strive for liberal education with particular emphasis on the great ideals and the movements of the last 100 years. May I quote him?

The nuclear physicist—

he says,

We are reminded ad nauseum that this is the age of the specialist.

But to have the specialist only, and nothing else, we would only be half educated. He says:

The nuclear physicist, the social psychologist, the bank economist, the cultural anthropologist, each burrows deeper and deeper into his own hole in the ground. The further he gets in, using his special digging tools, the harder he finds it to turn around and come up for air to meet the other specialists under the common sky.

I think that is quite refreshing. One of the favourite myths of ours, apparently, is that the Russian universities have a great amount of specialization and scientific education. I understand from Dr. Ross, who knows something about it, that they have 2.5 years of general education before they specialize.

In September, 1951, following the Hope commission report, the Canadian research committee on practical education was organized, and it published the results of a 4-year survey. I will just summarize this part and will bring it out more thoroughly later.

My great concern is with the "drop-outs." We have two—the matriculation streams on to university, and then the second, the school diploma stream. However, I notice the figures show that in 1954, if I remember correctly, possibly 55,000 enrolled in grade 9. Four years later in grade 12, it had dropped down to 26,000. There were 26,000 enrolled in grade 10 of that year, that is, from 55,000 it had dwindled down to 26,000—and then entering grade 13 of that group there were 12,000.

So there is a big drop-out.

There are two ways of meeting this situation: let them quit school or lower the standards.

Now, we do not want to lower the standards, so I think then we should have another stream. We should have trade courses in this province somewhat similar to the trades course that we have now down on Jarvis Street in Toronto, and the building of these schools should be expanded greatly.

I will give hon. members some figures just to show them what is happening in the city of Toronto at the present time. These are quite illuminating, and there must be a reason.

In the day classes of the city of Toronto in the technical schools now, the 4 technical schools have 6,387 enrolled. In the night classes of those 4 technical schools, there are 9,906. Altogether, including Metro, there are 8,242 day students enrolled in the technical schools of the city of Toronto proper under the Toronto board and then under the Metro board. In the night schools of this area, the Metro area including the city of Toronto, there are 15,000 enrolled.

Now, if hon. members consider this number that are actually in day schools, and then the number attending night schools, they will agree there must be a reason for this situation. The reason is that many of those who are in the night schools now—I am addressing this to the hon. Minister of Education and to you, Mr. Speaker—is that these night school pupils must be ones who were in technical schools, but dropped out at an early age, and went into industry. Now they are back attending the technical schools because all they are getting there is the particular technical subject they want to work on, together with that amount of academic education related to that particular trade. And so I certainly think, Mr. Speaker, we should have this third group.

In fact, I know that a committee, of which I was a member, prepared a brief for the Canadian conference on education in 1958, and we strongly urged that that third stream be put in, for those who need a general education of an elementary to intermediate standard in preparation for citizenship, or unskilled or semi-skilled labour for citizenship.

In general, the delegates at that particular conference were in agreement that the planning and the testing and guidance for those streams should begin under trained personnel. So a resolution was presented, which I believe has gone to The Department of Education through the director of education.

Hon. Mr. Robarts (Minister of Education): Would the hon. member permit a question?

Mr. Troy: Yes, certainly.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: I wonder if the hon. member is suggesting that these people who are attending night school would continue their formal education—if I might put it that way—on a full-time basis if some facilities were made available to them which are not presently available? Is that the point of the hon. member?

Mr. Troy: Yes, if there was a special course of study for those—you see, so many drop out because there is no challenge for them, because they have not the ability to take the regular secondary school technical course, nor the academic. They just drop out of school when they are 16, and, as time goes on, the working force is going to be flooded with young men who have very little training.

When I think of trades, I mean all those trades like shoemaking, barbering, bricklaying—maybe that is skilled trade, but general bench work and trade of that nature.

I think we should have some sort of trade school. I notice that it said in the northern Ontario eastern development association bulletin that this government had announced an institute of technology—I noticed the hon. member for Ottawa South (Mr. Haskett) had mentioned about the technological institutes. I agree with him that we should expand, that we need technicians. But also we need to do something for this vast number of youngsters, boys and girls, who have not the intellectual ability to take these other courses, because the technical course now is designed for youngsters of fair ability; and certainly the academic course is.

Now, it is said in this bulletin from the association that a provincial trades school will be opened in Kirkland Lake. We have a trade school here on Nassau Street, I believe it is, but to enter that school one must be an apprentice, and he must come from industry. But what I want to see is an expansion of the trade schools. Even in our existing installations we could perhaps have a couple of rooms set aside. Definitely there should be a third stream set up by The Department of Education.

But the point is that if we are going to have those trade schools, the students should be permitted to enrol in the trade schools direct from school, without having to go through the procedures as laid down in the school of trades here in Toronto, such as being an apprentice and so on.

There is no doubt about it. We have adequate legislation to establish those courses on practical education. I understand that Mr. J. B. Seath, who was the superintendent of education here years ago—in 1911 I believe—put out a report, Mr. Speaker, on practical education. Then, later on, so did Mr. Robertson, also on practical education.

I have this recent clipping from one of the newspapers, which says:

Eleven high school teachers last night asked Burlington board of education to provide junior clerical and industrial courses for students of low-learning ability.

This statement was attributed to the principal of Nelson high school.

A study of student repeaters facing exclusion from school showed 90 grade 8 and grade 9 pupils should be transferred to such courses. Now, that is the type of school that I think we should have, that other stream.

We have the legislation to establish the courses. But, without the active leadership of the hon. Minister—with all due respect—and his department, we will not take advantage of the legislation we have.

Now, I think we should take a leaf out of the book of Quebec. Quebec is using federal funds for education, but it is not under The Department of Education. It is under that department which the late hon. Paul Sauve headed, who was later Premier of Quebec. He was the Minister of Youth and Welfare and it is under that department.

During the war years, they saw the value of trades courses, and I understand that their technical schools and their trades courses are very well advanced. I hope, before this year is over, to go to Quebec and see how they operate. There the schools are administered, not by The Department of Education, but by The Department of Youth and Welfare.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We do not have such a department.

Mr. Troy: I know that. They are using federal funds.

Hon. Mr. Robarts: So, where else would the hon. member put it?

Mr. Troy: That is right. But they are using federal funds, and by having it under The Department of Youth and Welfare they are preserving their autonomy in the field of education. They are jealous of their integrity and autonomy as far as education is concerned, and they are using these funds in The Department of Youth and Welfare.

But the point is—

Hon. Mr. Robarts: We will take anything that the federal government will give us for education.

Mr. Troy: I know, sir. Therefore I hope that at the federal-provincial conference which the hon. Prime Minister of this province will attend very shortly, he will see to it that there is more money coming from the federal government for education. I do not say for a moment that the government will not take the money, and take all they can get, I am just saying that the province of Quebec has done very well in developing the type of trade schools I am talking about.

Now, it is just about midnight and the witching hour, as they say, but before I conclude my remarks, I must heartily endorse the splendid presentation of my hon. friend and fellow veteran, the hon. member from Kenora, on education, particularly as it referred to Catholic schools or separate schools.

I do so not as a member of that faith, but as a Canadian, and one who has served his country in the military services, both active and reserve, from 1916 until last June.

This government must realize that one of the basic problems of the separate schools is an ever-mounting enrolment without a commensurate increase reflected in the assessment. The burden, I reiterate, is so unrealistic and so unfair that, at long last, this government should take action in spite of the opposition that will come from at least one quarter.

It is high time too, I believe, that the supporters of the separate schools should throw off their cloaks of timidity and say they are no longer satisfied with a grant here and a grant there. A bold step forward must be taken so that we can truly boast in this province of an equal opportunity for education for each child, regardless of his or her ability to pay.

I subscribe also to the views of my hon. leader and my hon. colleagues that the burden of the cost of education must be removed from the municipalities as far as possible. I feel, though, that to give autonomy in this field to the municipalities, and to maintain interest and participation in education, that they should share a portion of the cost.

As I said, Mr. Speaker, there are other aspects of this great problem of education on which I could expand, but I shall postpone my discussion until later in this session.

Mr. Speaker, I hope your enjoyment of this session has been as refreshing and as revitalizing as mine so far. I thank the hon. members and the hon. Ministers who are here for their attention. I just regret though, that most of the "big brass" are not here.

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 12 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1960

3 O'CLOCK P.M.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome, as guests, students from the following schools: Campbellford high school, Campbellford; Blessed Sacrament separate school, Hamilton; Brown public school, Toronto; and John Wanless public school, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Clerk of the House: Mr. H. L. Rowntree from the standing committee on private bills presents the committee's fifth report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act respecting the city of Barrie.

An Act respecting the University of Sudbury.

An Act to incorporate the University of Lalemant College.

An Act to incorporate Laurentien University of Sudbury.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

An Act respecting the city of Fort William.

An Act respecting the city of Toronto.

An Act to incorporate Huntington University.

An Act respecting the township of Toronto.

Your committee would recommend that the fees less the penalties and the actual cost of printing be remitted on:

An Act to incorporate Huntington University.

An Act respecting the University of Sudbury.

An Act to incorporate the University of Lalemant College.

An Act to incorporate Laurentien University of Sudbury.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I beg to move the motion in relation to the sittings of the House which I mentioned yesterday. The effect is this—for this week and next week there will be no sessions on Wednesdays in order to permit the meetings of the committees. On Thursday of this week, and Monday and Tuesday and Thursday of next week, we will meet at 2 o'clock, and on Friday of this week and Friday of next week, we will meet at 10 o'clock, with no night sessions other than tonight.

Now I move, seconded by hon. J. N. Allan that, notwithstanding the previous orders and provisions of rule No. 2 of the assembly, when this House adjourns the present sitting thereof, it shall stand adjourned until 2 of the clock on Thursday afternoon, and when it adjourns its sitting on Tuesday, March 8, it will stand adjourned until 2 of the clock on Thursday, March 10.

Also, that this House will meet at 10 of the clock in the forenoon on Friday, March 4, and Friday, March 11, and at 2 of the clock in the afternoon of Monday, March 7, and Tuesday, March 8.

That is rather a complicated formula, but it accomplishes what I suggested.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Introduction of bills.

TERRITORIAL DIVISION ACT

Hon. W. K. Warrender moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Territorial Division Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, since 1954 there have been many changes in the status of municipalities, and this bill is to make clear that these changes are now in the Act.

THE FARM PRODUCTS MARKETING ACT

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Farm Products Marketing Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, The general principles underlying these changes in The Farm Products Marketing Act this year are for the protection of the producer, and to insure that the financial dealings in respect to farmers' products are in the best interests of the producer.

Since the inception of marketing legislation in Ontario, the primary purpose has been to give the farmer an opportunity to market his product to the best advantage in an orderly manner.

In most cases, producers' boards have succeeded in carrying out this principle, but experience indicates that some supervisory power should be exercised to assure the producer that his marketing board is adhering strictly to the principles laid down in the legislation.

It is the feeling of the government that the operations of any marketing board or agency must be on a sound business basis, just as is the case in commerce and industry. There is also a responsibility to insure that service charges to the farmer are not excessive, and that unrealistic reserves are not built up at the expense of the producer.

The amending legislation will give the Ontario farm products marketing board more complete information as to the operation of the various marketing plans. It will also provide for more uniformity in the operation of all marketing plans in the province.

Amendments to the Act are mainly to assure that, if a marketing agency type of marketing is voted out by the producers, regulations may be made to take over the assets of the marketing agency and carry out any phases of marketing deemed advisable.

The second purpose of the bill is to give the Ontario farm products marketing board additional supervisory powers over the operations of marketing plans.

The third purpose of the bill is to make it possible for local boards to take over the functions of marketing which, up until now, have been exclusively for marketing agencies.

For various reasons, a marketing agency may cease to carry on business. This may occur, for example, if a plan is voted out by producers, or it becomes desirable that a local board use its own powers of marketing, or a new plan is established for purposes not requiring a marketing agency.

When this happens, it is important that the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council have the necessary authority to place the assets and marketing powers in either the farm products marketing board, the local board, or a trustee, and arrange for the carrying on of the marketing for such time as may be considered necessary to work out another plan of marketing or to arrange for the marketing to pass through a normal transition period.

Section 2 of the bill makes it possible for a delegation to a local board power to require processors, dealers, and so on, to deduct licence fees and pay them over to the local board or marketing agency.

Also, it makes it possible for the Ontario farm products marketing board to supervise the making of grants by a local board or marketing agency, and require that grants not be made without approval of the board.

It also makes it possible for the board to revoke the appointment of a marketing agency without first getting a recommendation from the local board.

Section 3 of the bill deals exclusively with operations of marketing agencies. At present, service charges payable by producers for marketing their products are set by the local board and levied by the marketing agency. The bill provides that the farm products marketing board must give its approval before a local board fixes the levy, and may from time to time require the local board to furnish the necessary information on the full operations of the marketing agency and the local board.

The board will, in the future, receive particulars of any proposed change in the system of marketing and be given supervisory powers over any change.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): I want to ask, Mr. Speaker, if this bill is to go to the agricultural committee.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it will.

THE TOURIST ESTABLISHMENTS ACT

Hon. B. L. Cathcart moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Tourist Establishments Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: This bill is composed of two sections. In section 1, subsection (i) of the bill, the definition of tourist establishment is re-enacted in order to include the establishments heretofore known as tourist outfitters' camps. Regarding subsection (ii), the amendment repeals the definition of tourist outfitters' camp, which is no longer required because it is already referred in subsection (i).

In section 2, subsection (i), the purpose of the amendment is to authorize the present permit system and the clause is not otherwise changed in substance. Regarding subsection (ii), this new provision authorizes the adoption by reference of all or any part of the national building code in regulations respecting the construction, and so on, of tourist establishments.

THE PAROLE ACT

Hon. G. C. Wardrope moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Parole Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill to amend The Parole Act has been debated by my advisory council on which sit Mr. Common and Mr. Macaulay, two of the architects of a very commendable report. It has been passed unanimously by them, and it was also recommended by the select committee on reform institutions to me, and in my opinion is an advancement on the present Parole Act.

Section 2 of The Parole Act presently designates that the board of parole shall be composed of not more than 9 persons. With the exception of the chairman which position is presently vacant, these members are on a part-time basis only.

That is not quite satisfactory, Mr. Speaker, because, although they are dedicated people who are doing a real job, they cannot give the full time that full-time members could give, so the amendment will reduce the composition of the board to not more than 5 persons, 3 of whom will be full-time members.

With most of the members being on a full-time basis, the board will be able to devote more time to investigation and consideration of those prisoners eligible for parole.

It is a surprising fact that the number of prisoners being given indefinite parole sentences by the courts is almost 50 per cent. greater today than 5 years ago, resulting in greater demands on the parole board. With the establishment of the national parole board by the federal government, the Ontario board is receiving increasing requests for assistance in the way of opinions, recommendations, investigations, supervision, and so on, and it is expected these requests for assistance will tend to constantly increase.

In order that we may have effective liaison with the national board, it is advisable that the provincial parole board have full-time members. The appointment of full-time members to the board will enable it to operate with fewer members, hence the amendment to reduce the number to a maximum of 5.

Section 5 of the Act provides for the chairman of the board, the secretary, and parole and rehabilitation officers to be paid salaries and necessary travelling expenses with other members of the board being paid per diem allowances for attendance at meetings plus travelling expenses.

This section is to be repealed, and substituted to provide authority for the full-time members of the board to be paid salaries plus expenses, and the other members to be paid allowances and expenses for attendance at meetings, and so on.

Several sections of the Act have reference to parole and rehabilitation officers by specific designations. Rehabilitation officers, as some of us know, are entirely under the jurisdiction of the Attorney-General, and they should not be under my Department of Reform Institutions, but that was in the Act years ago, and so we are asking to have that changed now.

These sections are to be amended to delete reference to parole and rehabilitation officers, and substitute such other officers and employees as may be determined by the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council. This will allow for department reorganization and correlation of some aspects of the work tending to promote efficiency and prevent duplication and overlapping, particularly in reference to territories covered by these officials and others.

FINANCIAL ASSISTANCE TO MUNICIPALITIES IN ESTABLISHMENT OF PARKS

Hon. W. M. Nickle moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to provide for financial assistance to municipalities in the establishment of parks."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill will be known as "An Act to provide for financial assistance to municipalities in the establishment of parks." It is the intention of the government that every municipality and/or municipalities shall have the right to make an application to the parks integration board to establish a municipal park, the government to contribute 50 per cent. or $50,000, whichever is the lesser amount, towards the acquiring and clearing of the land.

The park will be maintained by the municipality, they will set whatever fees may be necessary to pay for the administration costs and the supervision. The municipality and/or corporations that may be in partnership in such a programme may pass by-laws to this effect, the application for the establishing of the municipal park shall be made to the parks integration board, and there will be regulations prepared governing the terms and conditions as to how the park is to be regulated or supervised.

In the event of a grant being made by the government, in relation to a municipal park, there is a reservation that, in the event of the park being abandoned by a corporation, then it can only be sold with the approval of the government, and we shall be reimbursed having regard to the amount of our contribution.

I might say, Mr. Speaker, that there are a number of regulations or conditions that will have to be fulfilled by a corporation making application for such a grant, and I do not think I shall waste the time of the House reading them now. I think the sensible thing to do would be to refer this bill to the municipal committee, in detail.

I have some extra copies, and I will send one to the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) and one to the head of the CCF group (Mr. MacDonald) so they may peruse it this afternoon.

THE CONSERVATION AUTHORITIES ACT

Hon. Mr. Nickle moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Conservation Authorities Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, this bill includes the authority for the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council in relation to a conservation authority, to appoint to that authority 3 members, and the said 3 members may, in the opinion of the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council, be members of the executive committee that operates and makes the rules and regulations in connection with the conservation park.

There is a further amendment to this effect: Under The Conservation Authorities Act, the parks are referred to as recreation areas, and I am striking out those words and substituting therefor the word "park."

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw your attention, sir, to the fact that today, being March 1, is St. David's Day, the day when all Welsh men and women pay homage to their patron saint, St. David.

With the retirement of Rev. M. C. Davies from the political scene, today I feel rather lonely, because I believe I am the only native-born Welshman in this assembly.

But I am very proud to pay tribute to a great little country, for Welsh men and women have made a great contribution to our way of life.

Last year, Mr. Speaker, the Welsh people of Canada held their singing festival, or what we call in Welsh the Cymanfa Ganu. At that convention there were over 3,000 men and women from all parts of this continent gathered together, singing the songs and hymns that have made Wales renowned throughout the world.

The hon. Prime Minister was invited on that occasion, and I regret very much that he could not attend. But he sent along a very nice gentleman in the person of the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts), and I am quite sure that he enjoyed himself. It was understandable, of course, because he is of Irish descent, and there is a great deal of common ground between the Irish and the Welsh.

In fact, legend has it that in the year AD 600, St. Patrick—who was a Welshman—journeyed across the channel as a missionary to try to convert the Irish, and I think, Mr. Speaker, you will agree with me that he did a very good job.

Mr. H. J. Price (St. David): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to join in the remarks of the hon. member for Oshawa, as it is my privilege and honour to represent the riding which is called after the patron saint of Wales. There have been over the years many people come to Canada and Ontario from Wales, and who settled here, not the least of whom was Mr. David Thompson, whom the hon. Minister of Travel and Publicity (Mr. Cathcart) mentioned yesterday in his remarks.

I might remind the hon. members of the House that he was a renowned fur trader and explorer, geographer and map maker, who really made his mark in Canadian history.

We hope that, in the future, many more people will come from Wales and make their home here in Canada, and particularly in Ontario, as they have contributed much in the past to our history and I know they will do the same in the future.

Mr. G. E. Gomme (Lanark): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to draw the attention of this House to the picture which is on the front page of today's Toronto Telegram, that of a fine old citizen of Lanark county. This article almost reads like a fairy story:

Mr. Henry Marshall of Carleton Place was found to be the only heir of his brother William who left many years ago to make a fortune in the United States. And today Mr. Marshall was found to be the heir and he is coming into $500,000.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The annual report of the teachers' superannation commission for the year ending October 31, 1959.

2. The annual report of the Ontario College of Arts for the fiscal year ending May 31, 1959.

3. Report of the board of governors of the Lakehead College of Arts, Science, and Technology for the period June 1, 1958 to August 1, 1959.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would beg your indulgence to draw to the attention of the House some very distinguished guests who are with us today in the gallery. These are a group of Toronto women who meet on Tuesday of each week to assist, directly and indirectly, the party that I have the honour of leading in the province of Ontario.

On this particular occasion, Mr. Speaker, they have honoured us in several respects—firstly, by their attendance at this particular session; and secondly, Mr. Speaker, they have been very kind to the Liberal hon. members of the House today by providing each one of us with a red carnation. As a result of their generosity, we are bedecked as we are today. We are grateful to them and I am sure the House welcomes them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Might I say that my hon. friend ought to put his carnation on and show—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, I wanted him to know exactly the reason for this.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, we would like to see the hon. leader of the Opposition with it on.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Let the hon. Prime Minister worry about his own affairs over there.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They are coming in here without their buttonholes on.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

BUDGET DEBATE

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Speaker, in rising to lead off in the budget debate for the Opposition, may I say what a personal honour I consider it to be. I feel honoured personally by my own hon. leader (Mr. Wintermeyer), in my own caucus, by the confidence they have placed in me, and I hope that I will not let them down in any way.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Hurdled.

Mr. Whicher: Secondly, I feel honoured in the fact that to some degree I am the first representative of the majority of those people in the province who do not agree with the financial policy of this government.

Mr. Speaker, as a member of Her Majesty's loyal Opposition, it will be my duty this afternoon to oppose, not for the sake of opposing, but on the other hand, because I conscientiously and sincerely believe that many mistakes have been made in the financing of this province. My keen desire, however, is to emphasize that the criticisms I will make have nothing personal about them.

In my Throne speech, I reminded this House of the many friends that I have made here in the past 5 years, including representatives from all parties, from all creeds, and from all parts of Ontario. Therefore, I remind my hon. friends in the government that the words that will be hurled in their direction this afternoon, are the words of a representative of the Liberal party, who believes that he is right, just as they believe they are right, even though most assuredly they are wrong.

Mr. Speaker, we are going to be over there, and they are going to be over here, and I am going to give them a real good shove this afternoon. In fact, so sure am I of this that I am amazed at the hierarchy of the Tory party, as they jockey for position for the leadership. In passing, I earnestly suggest to the aspirants that, when they have their luncheons, cocktail parties, and social events—

Hon. Mr. Frost: We never have such things.

Mr. Whicher: —that they send the Liberals an invitation, because we know many Tories in our ridings and will be glad to put in a word for them.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is where we get most of our recruits from.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, may I give my sincere compliments to a fine hon. Minister, a jovial fellow and, above all, a gentleman. I refer to the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan). He brings a dignity and respect to his high office, and he is held in high esteem by all hon. members of the House and, most assuredly, by myself. You see, Mr. Speaker, we have something in common. We are both in the dairy business.

Most respectfully, I remind him of a fact of which he is well aware. If he ran his dairy business in Dunnville, financially, in the same way that he runs the province of Ontario, he would go broke in a few hours. Of course, to his credit, all of us know that he does not have the same interference in Dunnville that he has in Toronto. I say this because well we know that, while the words last Thursday were spoken by the hon. Provincial Treasurer, the architect of the whole budget was the hon. Prime Minister of this province.

And while mentioning the hon. Prime Minister, I wish to pay my respects to him now. He is the only member of this House, who has been Provincial Treasurer of this province before, as he was for many years. As I have said before, we wish him the best of physical health for many years to come.

In fact, unlike several of his colleagues sitting in the government benches, we do not wish him to retire. He has proven himself to be the New York Yankees of Canadian politics. Everyone likes to beat the Yankees, and we are going to do it next time.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what the hon. member said the last time.

Mr. Whicher: I did not say it. I, Mr. Speaker, did not say it the last time, but I said it right now.

Before getting into the actual budget, I wish to pay my compliments to the former financial critic of the Liberal party, my hon. leader. If any new hon. members of the House have not read his speeches, then I suggest that they do. For me to be as successful, this afternoon, will be an impossibility. All that I can hope for is a partial degree of success. And now for the budget.

After reading it carefully many times, and with the greatest respect for the integrity of the hon. Provincial Treasurer and the hon. Prime Minister, I find this budget to be a complete and absolute distortion and misrepresentation of facts and figures.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): The people seem to like it.

Mr. Whicher: It is a similar budget to those of the past number of years, a pattern created by the hon. Prime Minister of this province since he assumed that office in 1949. It represents the fiscal thinking of this tired government and I make reference to the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) when I say this tired government, financially, has used again this motto: "Never do today what you can put off until tomorrow." In short, they say: "Do not pay for things today, we will make the Liberals do that when they assume office."

The hon. Prime Minister has used this policy of claiming a surplus for many years for his own political advantage which may be good politics, but very poor financing.

What is the budget of the province of Ontario? It is simply like the lady of a house keeping her housekeeping account, only on a much larger scale. So much money or income is taken in, and so much is spent or goes out. As any housekeeper or businessman knows, if one spends more than one takes in, then money must be borrowed. If one has to borrow, then that money has ultimately to be paid back. This government has now reached the gigantic net debt figure of over $1 billion.

My first question to the hon. Provincial Treasurer is simply this: When and how does he intend to pay this money back? What are his plans for the future? As he and I well know, in the dairy business, or for that matter in any business, when we borrow money from a bank, the manager wants to know when are we going to pay it back, what are our plans?

Once again, Mr. Speaker, I ask the hon. Provincial Treasurer, what are his plans? When is he going to pay the money back, or are the people of Ontario going to have to wait for a Liberal Treasurer and a Liberal Prime Minister before they get a satisfactory answer to this very businesslike question? When is he going to pay it back?

Hon. Mr. Frost: It will be a very considerable time.

Mr. Whicher: The facts are as follows, backed by their own budget statements, by the Provincial Auditor and by public accounts: Since 1949, the year that the hon. Prime Minister took over the leadership of this province the debt has increased every year; this is shown by their own budget statements, and certainly by what the hon. Provincial Treasurer said last Thursday.

These are Ontario's most prosperous years. Ordinary citizens are better off. Business is making more money. Everyone is doing better financially except the government of this province. The only big business that has not prospered is the government. Only the government is losing money.

It is true that governments are not in the business of making money. On the other hand, there should be at least planning. Many economists and political men of foresight claim that governments should go into debt in what is commonly known as "hard times." If this is true, then it is equally certain that government should have a surplus in good times. Most governments, particularly governments here in Canada, are run this way.

But this Tory government in Ontario, in the province's most prosperous years, has still had unbalanced budgets. Perhaps this government has reached the stage where it cannot afford to be prosperous any more. It is so prosperous that it keeps going into debt. Last year it went into debt at the rate of $13,000 per hour, every hour, 24 hours a day, every day, Mr. Speaker, I say, some prosperity!

It reminds me of the young housewife who was being besieged by an energetic salesman trying to sell her a deep freeze unit. He explained that she could pay for it by the month, only a few dollars each month, and that, in reality, she and her husband would save money by being able to buy food in quantity.

Her answer was as follows: "We bought this house on monthly payments to save on rent, we bought our car in the same way to save transportation costs, we bought an automatic washer to save on laundry costs, and it has just got to the point where we can't afford to save any more money."

Mr. Speaker, I suggest that this government has financially reached the point where it cannot afford to be prosperous.

In spite of the increase in debt each year, the government insists that it has 17 consecutive surpluses. This is calculated misrepresentation. It is a synthetic fabrication arrived at for political expediency at the whim of the hon. Prime Minister of this province, for everyone knows, in spite of the fact that the hon. Provincial Treasurer delivered the budget last Thursday, the words were those of the hon. Tory Prime Minister of this province.

Let us once again go back to 1949. The hon. Prime Minister was then also the Provincial Treasurer of this province. And he announced a surplus of $9.213 million, and yet in the public accounts we find the debts have increased by $16.646 million.

Mr. Speaker, in my hand I have the statements for the years from 1948 up until the present time, including the forecast of the budget for 1961. I find, for example, in 1950 that there is an ordinary surplus announced of over $8 million, and at the same time the debt increased by $25 million.

I can skip along here—in 1954, the ordinary surplus announced was $993,000 and yet the increase in debt from the previous year was over $25 million. I see in 1957 there was an ordinary surplus of $1.8 million, yet the debt increased by over $52 million. In 1959, there was a surplus of $304,000, and yet the debt increased by over $81 million.

This year, we find that in spite of a surplus announced by the hon. Provincial Treasurer the other afternoon, of $632,000, there is an increase in debt and these are "whoppers" as the years go by, of over $113 million in one year, and next year, Mr. Speaker, we find that this government is budgeting for a surplus of $546,000, yet the debt is going to increase by over $140 million to a total of $1.154 billion.

So this year, Mr. Speaker, to get back to the budget of last week, we wind up with a net debt of over $1 billion in spite of 17 consecutive Tory surpluses. It is some surplus, and it is some government, and it is some debt—and Mr. Speaker, it is some fairy story.

The excuse given by this government is that, each year, there are capital structures of various types built in this province. The government on numerous occasions, over the past number of years, has claimed that it pays a certain percentage of its capital costs out of this ordinary account.

Mr. W. B. Lewis (York-Humber): That's good.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I want to get this straight now—this is better than the hon. member—

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I want to get this straight now. When the hon. Prime Minister says this is better than I did, I remind him that I was not even born in the days that he is talking about. That will give hon. members an idea of how old they are getting to be now.

I have read a lot of things and I have heard how brave the hon. Prime Minister is, and we will see how brave he is this afternoon as he sits over there, the boss of this place.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Frost.

Mr. Whicher: I was reading the other day some of the speeches of the gentleman who the hon. Prime Minister condemned at every opportunity now that he is dead, Mr. Mitch Hepburn, and I say, Mr. Speaker, that when he and the hon. Prime Minister were in this House the hon. Prime Minister was so meek and mild that he did not even bother with him.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): He made a mistake, didn't he?

Mr. Whicher: To continue, Mr. Speaker, in other words there are two accounts in this province, ordinary and capital.

May I remind this House, Mr. Speaker, that the federal government only has one account. It pays all of its capital accounts out of the current revenue, and even the Tory government in Ottawa is at least fair in financial reports to the people by giving them a true picture of its finances each year when the budget is brought down.

In other words, when a debt goes up, which is rather hard to get away from under any Tory government, the federal government at Ottawa announces truthfully that they have a deficit, completely unlike the Great White Tory Chief in Toronto.

Mr. Lewis: Hurray for Ottawa.

Mr. Whicher: Let us look at another province, our sister province of Quebec, as an example. Here we have a province which is also prosperous. Their population is also increasing. Their industries are expanding. Their people are demanding and getting the same social services that the people of Ontario are getting—

Mr. Grossman: Oh, no.

Mr. Whicher: —but what is their financial picture?

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Whicher: I assure you that they are, Mr. Speaker. It is all very well for these howls to come from the other side but, as a matter of fact, if I could talk French, and looking at the debt of this province, I would not mind moving down there to Quebec.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Well, they have better liquor there.

Mr. Grossman: Bigger bottles.

Mr. Whicher: But what is their financial picture? Mr. Speaker, not only does the province of Quebec pay for all its capital structures out of ordinary accounts, but they balance their budget. They actually have a true surplus each year.

Last year it was $374,000 after paying all of the capital structure directed in Quebec last year of over $98 million. More than that, they are reducing their debt instead of increasing it. This is a steady pattern of the only province that can really be compared to our own.

Are not the Tories proud of themselves? If the public knew what they were doing they would be the only ones who are proud.

Hon. J. N. Allan (Provincial Treasurer): Tell them what we do.

Mr. Whicher: However, let us accept for this government's sake the fact that it makes no pretence of paying all of its capital obligations in any one year, but only a certain percentage, as has been claimed by this government in years gone by. Yes, I will give them every break, every consideration, because I am right and they are wrong—

Mr. Lewis: That is only the hon. member's opinion.

Mr. Whicher: —and when I finish with them, their claim of a surplus each year will be spiked again and again, and any fairminded person, even a Tory, will admit that there is no surplus, no planning, only a manipulation of figures

Mr. Grossman: Who is the Whip over there?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, when the hon. Dana Porter was Provincial Treasurer, he claimed in his exuberance that this province paid two-thirds of its capital budget out of ordinary account.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: This is a completely fictitious figure.

However, in order to document these facts, I wish to say what was given by the hon. Dana Porter, Provincial Treasurer, on April 1, 1957, in Hansard, page 1866:

We can borrow readily in the volume that we need, and the reason is that we do pay two-thirds of the cost to capital expenditure out of revenue.

That is what the Provincial Treasurer said then.

Mr. Lewis: That is good.

Mr. Whicher: This is a completely fictitious figure. This government has no set percentage. The percentage used is the one that fits the budget of each particular year, so that a surplus may be claimed.

As an example, let us look at their own statement given last Thursday. On page 4 of the budget, and I quote the exact words of the hon. Provincial Treasurer:

I am therefore happy to report that from our surplus on ordinary account, which is the seventeenth consecutive surplus of this government, we have been able to finance from ordinary revenue.

Applause by Progressive-Conservative hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: Now get this:

We have been able to finance from ordinary revenue over half of the province's new construction and capital expenditures.

Mr. Grossman: His speech is getting better.

Mr. Lewis: Oh, I don't know.

Mr. Whicher: They will not clap so much when I am through with them here, Mr. Speaker. I continue to read:

In these years of extraordinary growth and development, that is a notable achievement.

What are the facts? On page 5, I quote:

Over and above our expenditure on ordinary account, we have spent $228.7 million for capital purposes.

On page 6, and this is the point I wish to press, the hon. Provincial Treasurer says as follows:

The interim residual surplus of the province is estimated at $632,000 after . . . financing $66 million of capital construction out of ordinary revenue.

In other words, they finance $66 million out of a total capital outlay of $228.7 million, or 34.5 per cent. of the total capital cost. This is a long way from the 50 per cent. as claimed by the hon. Provincial Treasurer. Had they done as they claimed, and paid 50 per cent. of the $228 million, they would have had a deficit on ordinary account of 50 per cent. of the $228 million, or $114 million minus this $66 million that they did pay, or a deficit on ordinary account of $48 million—

Applause by Liberal hon. members.

Mr. Whicher: We may well bang our desks, because that is the truth.

I will say this much for the hon. Provincial Treasurer—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member has got mixed up, that is all.

Mr. Whicher: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Frost: He got mixed up, that is all.

Mr. Whicher: I am not mixed up. These are the hon. Prime Minister's figures. I do not know whether they are his or not, but they are the hon. Provincial Treasurer's over there.

I will say this much for the hon. Provincial Treasurer. When he makes mistakes he makes big ones. These are facts taken from his own budget.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Mistakes?

Mr. Whicher: But what would have happened if the government had paid two-thirds of the capital cost out of current revenue as claimed in the past by the hon. Prime Minister and other responsible Tories? Then this government would have paid two-thirds of the actual $228 million expenditures, or $152 million, instead of the $66 million actually paid. In other words, there would have been a deficit on ordinary account of over $85 million. That is what the Tories call balancing the budget.

The evidence is overwhelming that this government has no set percentage of paying capital projects out of ordinary revenue. They simply pay as much out of ordinary accounts as will still allow them to show a surplus. This manipulation of figures has gone on for years, but for the last 3 or 4 years the flagrant disregard of the accounting rules has been more totally promoted by this government.

Mr. Speaker, I say this after due consideration.

If financial houses manipulated figures to clients the way this government does with the taxpayers, the heads of the financial houses would go to jail.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Stick to the facts. That is too strong.

Mr. Whicher: I do not care how strong it is. If I could say it in an unparliamentary way, I would make it still stronger.

Mr. Grossman: Watch your language there, boy.

Mr. Whicher: There are no rules, Mr. Speaker. The total effort is put forth to show a fictitious surplus.

Hon. Mr. Allan: No—

Mr. Whicher: As if this system of concealing deficits were not enough, this government has one further way. Besides having an ordinary account and a capital account, it also has a sinking fund. It is another way to confuse the public. For example—

Hon. Mr. Allan: No—

Mr. Whicher: Well, I will prove it to the hon. Provincial Treasurer. If he believes he is right, he is the only one. For example, last year this government provided $18.1 million for a sinking account. Does the hon. Provincial Treasurer agree with that, Mr. Speaker?

Anyone who can add, forgetting the capital account entirely for a moment, knows that if $20 million had been put in the sinking fund out of ordinary account, instead of the $18 million, there would have been a deficit of approximately $1.5 million on ordinary accounts. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Provincial Treasurer agrees with that.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Sure.

Mr. Whicher: He does agree with that. We are getting somewhere. My question to the hon. Provincial Treasurer is this. Why did they put $18 million in the sinking fund, instead more or less? Why did they put $18 million in the sinking fund, instead of more or less?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, $18 million is more than less—is it not?

Mr. Whicher: The answer, Mr. Speaker, of course, is obvious. Had they put more in, they would have shown a deficit. There is no question of this, it is a fact. They put in the $18 million instead of $20 or $30 million strictly for political expediency, to once again confuse the people—

Hon. Mr. Allan: He said that about—

Mr. Whicher: —and I respectfully suggest, the newspapers of this province.

Mr. Speaker, what is the hon. Provincial Treasurer's policy as far as sinking funds in this province are concerned?

Mr. Crossman: We are waiting with bated breath.

Mr. Whicher: There is no policy other than guess work, confusion and straight politics, to try to keep the Tory regime in office.

Let us look at the payments made to the sinking fund during the past few years. Mr. Speaker, I have in my hand the provision for the sinking fund since 1950 including the forecast for the 1961 budget and we find this.

In the year 1950, when I remind the House that the debt was not anywhere near what it is today, this government put into the sinking fund over $20 million. In 1951, they put in $21 million, in 1952 they put $34 million in. In 1953 they put $30 million, in 1954 they put $29 million, and so on and so forth.

In 1957 this government put $40.729 million into the sinking fund of this province. In 1958 they dropped down to $17 million, in 1959 it was $17 million, in 1960 it is $18 million, and the forecast for 1961 is $16.954 million.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the government this question. Why did they put $18 million into the sinking fund last year?

The answer, Mr. Speaker, is completely obvious to anybody who can add whatsoever, that the reason this was done was strictly to try to confuse the taxpayers of this province and show a fictitious surplus.

Let us get back to this complete misrepresentation of facts and figures—the budget of last Thursday. Surely by now even the most hardened Tory will agree that there was no actual surplus. Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the hon. Provincial Treasurer really feels yet that there was an actual surplus.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure, a great big one.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Cannot the hon. Provincial Treasurer speak for himself?

Mr. Whicher: But there are others—well, we will have a few other questions here yet.

Interjection by hon. Mr. Frost.

Mr. Whicher: If I do not have the hon. Prime Minister up off his feet before I am through it will be because he has weak knees.

But there are other interesting figures in this budget. On page 4 of the budget the hon. Provincial Treasurer said:

We undertook a re-examination of our spending programme for this current year with a view to paring any outlays, no matter how desirable, which could, for the time being, be deferred.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Can he agree with that?

Mr. Whicher: I continue with the quotation:

In consequence of this policy, we were able to reduce our expenditures below appropriations. Our net ordinary expenditure was cut by $12.5 million, and our net capital expenditure by $19.5 million, thereby effecting a saving in our appropriations of $32 million. Final figures will probably show that even greater savings have been achieved—

Applause by hon. Mr. Frost.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Provincial Treasurer said further:

—but as against these we are proposing to pay out supplementary estimates of $8.2 million.

In other words, after $8 million had been spent in supplementary estimates, they saved out of the appropriations of this Legislature about $24 million.

My question is this, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. Provincial Treasurer. What roads in this province did they not build because of this saving? What roads in the province were neglected because they would not spend the money that was authorized by this Legislature and as such should have been spent by the government?

I assure you, Mr. Speaker, that we as Liberals do not mind them spending the money that is authorized, it is the millions spent that are not authorized that bother us. But in any event they claim that they saved $24 million. I have a further question.

Did they use the money that they hold in their hand to not pay the civil service when they had a legitimate claim to higher salaries?

Hon. Mr. Frost: We gave them a very square deal.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Prime Minister will be up on his feet, do not worry. He may as well get up now, because there is plenty to get him there.

Or did they save the money, Mr. Speaker, did they save the money by not building a new modern hospital in place of the one at Orillia when they had the money? What hospitals did they not build?

Hon. Mr. Frost: How could we have the money if we—

Mr. Whicher: I do not like this mumbling. If the hon. Prime Minister has something to say, let him stand up like a man. This House, and the public at large, will look forward with eagerness to his answers, but he does not have any, if indeed he had any.

The truth is that, before the election in June, they had this extra $24 million in the kitty. They used it to make promises for roads, public buildings and hospitals, promises that they have no intention of keeping.

Now they come to us saying that, instead of spending it for the good of the people of the province of Ontario, they put it in the bank.

Hon. Mr. Frost: How could we spend a deficit? Please tell me.

Mr. Whicher: They had the $24 million. I have just been told that they saved it. How did they save it when they did not have anything to save, Mr. Speaker? You know, I have used the phrase in this Legislature before, "Hayfork Centre," but all of us are not from there, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Frost: From where, did he say?

Mr. Whicher: Hayfork Centre.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): That is up in Victoria county.

Mr. Nixon: Victoria county.

Mr. Whicher: The people of this province, in certain areas where they need roads and hospitals, will certainly appreciate their generosity by not spending the money that was authorized by this Legislature to spend.

Mr. Speaker, I wish to say something now about the supplementary estimates that are given each year by the hon. Provincial Treasurer and which we passed the other day.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We have not passed them yet.

Mr. Whicher: I beg your pardon, which we will be passing any day now.

Mr. Speaker, I notice this year, because of the fact that we have no highway appropriation in supplementary estimates under the highway construction account, that the supplementary estimates will only be in the neighbourhood of $8.238 million, whereas in years gone by—for example, last year—they were $37 million; the year before $57 million and they are all much larger figures than the figures used this year.

Mr. Speaker, these are the questions that I would like to ask.

Each year the education supplementary estimates include $1 million to the teachers' superannuation fund. This $1 million has been incorporated in supplementary estimates in each and every year since 1954. Why cannot this item be included in the regular estimates at the commencement of each year? I think that is a fair question.

Hon. Mr. Allan: We wait until we see how much surplus we have.

Mr. Whicher: In other words they would not give the teachers' superannuation fund anything unless they borrowed enough money to provide the surplus.

Mr. Singer: That is government policy, eh?

Mr. Whicher: This year, in our supplementary estimates, there are only 3 items that are involved—Education, Health and the Treasury. I would like to ask now about the Treasury.

This $1 million item indicated in the Treasury estimate, has been the same item in every year since 1954, and is a special payment to the public service superannuation fund. Why cannot this amount be paid annually in the regular estimates? Why must it be added at the end of the year?

Mr. Speaker, I most respectfully suggest that the hon. Provincial Treasurer take this into consideration; and next year, when the budget is being prepared, I would hope and trust that these matters could be put in the ordinary budget, because it does nothing but confuse us who are on the other side—

Mr. Crossman: That does not take too much.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is very easily done.

Mr. Whicher: —which, of course, is the reason they have it there.

Mr. Speaker, there is another matter that I would like to speak about now, in connection with the actual budget itself, and that is in regard to Treasury board orders and special warrants. The reason I refer to these matters is because it was taken up in the Gordon committee report on pages 31 and 32.

Mr. Speaker, I would tell the hon. members of this House that, as I understand it, a special warrant is a sum of money. Now these monies are not put through this Legislature, they are put through by the government of this province, and they and I—as members of the Legislature—have nothing to say about the matter whatsoever.

A special warrant is a sum of money approved by the provision made in estimates, considered of unusual nature, part of an emergency. The Treasury board passes on special warrants, but has no authority over them. Only the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council can grant a special warrant.

As far as Treasury board orders are concerned, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, $7.6 million were approved.

Special warrants were issued in the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959, totalling $1.9 million, and these are shown in the Provincial Auditor's report for 1959 on pages 58 and 59.

Monies approved in Treasury board orders and special warrants are not voted in the succeeding estimates. The orders and warrants are set out in the Provincial Auditor's report and public accounts, and that is all that we know about it as members of this legislative assembly. We have no say about the authorization of that money whatsoever.

The Gordon committee on pages 31 and 32 points out the following:

The practice followed at the federal level in Canada—namely, the use of supplementary estimates—would, under present circumstances in Ontario, be of limited practical value.

In Ottawa, with longer parliamentary sessions, it will generally be possible for the federal departments and such agencies as are required to do so, to obtain parliamentary authorization where the need for supplementary funds becomes apparent.

In Ontario, with the relatively short sessions taking place toward—and extending over—the end of the fiscal year, only such cases as suited this timing could be handled in this way.

Supplementary estimates have been presented to the Legislature in Ontario on occasion, but these have usually consisted of items upon which decisions have been withheld until the amount of provincial revenues for the year have been determined.

The Ontario Financial Administration Act, 1954, is patterned closely on the federal Act bearing the same name originally enacted in 1951.

The federal statute, with somewhat differing terminology, provides for the issuance of special warrants, signed by the Governor-General, authorizing such payments as may be "urgently required for the public good when Parliament is not in session and there is no other appropriation pursuant to which the payment may be made."

The Act requires that such warrants be published in the Canada Gazette within 30 days of their issuance, and that "the amounts thereof shall be laid by the Minister before the House of Commons within 15 days after the commencement of the next ensuing session of Parliament."

We wish to direct particular attention to subsection (4) of the federal Act, as amended in 1958, as follows:

"(4) Where a special warrant has been issued pursuant to this section, the amounts appropriated thereby shall be deemed to be included in, and not in addition to, the amounts appropriated by the Acts of Parliament enacted next thereafter for granting to Her Majesty sums of money to defray expenses of the public service for a fiscal year."

By including amounts appropriated in this way in the next ensuing budget, the federal statute insures that such items will be subject to parliamentary review.

This seems to us a desirable means by which control by the Ontario Legislature in this sphere might be strengthened, and we recommend that The Provincial Financial Administration Act be amended to accomplish the same purpose.

Mr. Speaker, we most certainly agree with this statement by the Gordon report.

We do feel, regarding monies that are expended by this government, that the people of Ontario have the right, through us, the voted representatives of the people of this province, to closely scrutinize and criticize the government on expenditures they make. I do not think it at all right that last year approximately $10 million was expended by this government without being under the scrutiny of this legislative assembly.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to advise you that, not only has the budget, as a whole, been mishandled and mismanaged, by a government that has been bluffing its way along for years, but in many instances there are departments of government whose chief claim to fame are the huge figures that they give to the newspapers.

One of the finest hon. Ministers of the government—and I regret to say that he is not in his seat this afternoon—is a gentleman who is certainly doing his best, and I may add successfully, though always having the stigma of this bungling Tory government over his head. I refer to the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass).

Let us look at the way that the hon. Prime Minister and the hon. Provincial Treasurer look after his finances.

Looking at last year's figures makes me sick, so let us look at next year's for this particular department.

On page A-11 of the budget address is the forecast of ordinary revenue for the fiscal year from April 1, 1960 to March 31, 1961. The main monies taken in from our highways are as follows: $68.5 million from Transport, which includes licences, permits, and so forth; $159 million from the gasoline tax; and $7 million from the motor vehicles fuel tax or diesel tax. This totals $234.5 million, paid for by the motorists of this province for the upkeep of the roads and highways of the province.

This can certainly be called ordinary revenue. In fact, it is so described by the hon. Provincial Treasurer.

One would naturally expect that ordinary revenue such as this would be spent as ordinary expenditure for the purposes of the car owners of the province who paid it, namely, for the maintenance and addition to the roads and highways of this province. But let us look at how the champions of mismanagement handle it.

Of this $234.5 million, taken in as ordinary receipts, only $75.5 million are to be spent for our roads as ordinary expenses, leaving $159 million to go into the general coffers of the Treasury. It is ironical that this $159 million is the exact amount of the estimated gasoline tax for next year.

To the hon. members I say this: The next time they purchase gasoline for their car, take particular note that not one nickel of their tax money is going into the ordinary maintenance and capital costs of the roads. How ridiculous can you get, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is what they will say about the hon. member, with that statement.

Mr. Whicher: I beg your pardon?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say I am just wondering about the hon. member with that statement. How ridiculous can he get?

Mr. Whicher: I would like to answer the hon. Prime Minister by saying all I am doing is taking his figures. He shows $234.5 million coming in in ordinary revenue, and in his budget he shows $75.5 million going out in ordinary expenditures. So I suggest, if there is anything ridiculous around here, the hon. Prime Minister should look at himself tomorrow when he is shaving.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I use an electric razor.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, all I am doing is taking these figures exactly. When the people of this province catch up to them as they most assuredly will in the next 3 years, they will murder them at the polls, and I hope that the hon. Prime Minister is there as leader to take his trimming.

We are going over there and he is coming over here.

Yes, Mr. Speaker, the rest of the money to be spent on highways next year is to be all capital, all borrowed, $176 million as shown on page A-14 of the budget, in spite of the fact that this government had $159 million left over in ordinary highway revenues.

Sir John A. Macdonald pulled a good one out of his bag of tricks in Owen Sound at one time. He was feeling sick at his stomach and plainly showed it. His crack was that, "these Grits make me feel so sick."

Mr. Grossman: Now, do not attack the dead.

Mr. Whicher: I wish to advise this House now, that I have the same feeling when I look at this Tory budget.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Better hurry outside, do not get that way around here.

Mr. Whicher: When one looks at the various departments of government listed in the budget, and appreciates the insane boastfulness of this government, patting itself on the back, it is enough to make anyone sick.

Let us look for a moment at the winter works programme. This year this government has made an appropriation of $3 million for this purpose, for the unemployed of the province. Two years ago we had a frightful row in this House, when I had the privilege of telling the hon. Prime Minister that his plan was as phony as his government.

Do the hon. members of this House realize, in order to qualify for the pittance to the unemployed of the province, that the municipalities must hire people who are unemployed and unable to qualify for unemployment insurance? Do the hon. members realize that not one nickel's worth of material is paid for by the hard-hearted Tories of Toronto and Ottawa? The project concerned must be one not normally to be undertaken at the present time.

Two years ago the hon. Prime Minister rose in his magic seat, spread out his hands, and delivered his normal line of nonsense. He blew his own government up to the sky, told us what a wonderful plan it was.

"All of the municipalities are for it," he said,

"If they need more money, we will get it for them. The $5 million we are appropriating now will do until the end of March. Then we will give them some more."

He gave such a wonderful speech that he convinced every Tory in the House that he was right. It was not a hard job, I might say. And when he finished, the hon. member for Welland (Mr. Morningstar) almost put his big fist through the desk because he pounded so hard—on orders of the party Whip, of course. Even I was almost convinced, but not quite.

Imagine my surprise, on reading the Provincial Auditor's report for 1958-1959—the last one—on page 13, that not one nickel of the $5 million authorized was spent in that year. The amount authorized was $5 million, the amount under expenditure was $5 million, the amount the municipalities got for winter works programme was no dollars, and the amount the unemployed got in that year from this Tory government was no dollars.

Mr. Speaker, I will say no more about it, but wait until the estimates come along. My fondest hope is that this year this programme will be more successful than in the winter of 1957-1958.

Mr. Speaker, it is not my intention to say too much about agriculture today. I covered that reasonably well a week or so ago. May I point out, however, that first sentence in the budget under the heading of agriculture, and I quote:

Ottario's farmers last year again achieved a new high in farm cash income.

Mr. Speaker, this statement is typical of this government. They insinuate that they are responsible for a new high in farm cash income. I tell hon. members this, Mr. Speaker, that the only new high for the farmers of this province at the present time are higher taxes, higher debts, and a lower standard of living. And this government, with their Tory brethren in Ottawa is responsible.

Where are the promises now to the agricultural people of this province for a fair share of the national income? Where are the promises now when they were dealing with our farmer union friends for parity prices? Down the drain is where they are, down the same drain that the farmers of this province will put them at the next election.

Mr. Speaker, I would remind the hon. members that things have changed greatly since the last election, unfortunately.

Mr. Speaker, since I last spoke in this House on the agricultural situation, a serious matter has arisen dealing with the same.

A senior civil servant in The Department of Agriculture has publicly, and sincerely, taken sides in the proposed hog marketing vote that is to take place this year. He definitely stated that the heads of the hog marketing board held a big stick over the hog producers of the province and furthermore instilled fear in them. This was not so bad, but then, in answer to a question, the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) rose in this House and endorsed the views issued by the senior civil servant.

Mr. Speaker, in my 5 years in this Legislature I have never seen a more flagrant disregard of democracy than in this matter. It is true that The Department of Agriculture has always been against the hog marketing board since the last vote on the question.

But they have never stated publicly their complete disregard for it as the hon. Minister did the other day. By his actions, the hon. Minister has suggested that there is "a weasel in the woodpile," and that the voters should turn out the hog marketing board at the next vote.

Where are the grandiose statements of the hon. Minister now, when he proclaims, on more than one occasion, that the hog producers should be allowed to run their own show?

Did the hon. Minister ever think that the hog producers should be able to pick out their own officials in a free vote without government interference? That is how he is elected to the legislative assembly, by a free vote of the people. Is this really democracy at work in free Ontario? People say it cannot happen here, but it can and is happening under the dictatorship of The Department of Agriculture. Let us hope that this government never attempts to dictate our votes at a general election, as they are attempting to do by their insinuations to members of the hog marketing board.

It is not my intention, Mr. Speaker, to go into too many of the various government departments this afternoon. Certainly not as many as the hon. Provincial Treasurer.

One very amazing heading in the budget, true for the moment but completely erroneous in the main, is the statement; "No new taxation." How brazen can this government get, Mr. Speaker? How stupid do they think we are?

Mr. Grossman: Shall we tell the hon. member? That is a fair question.

Mr. Whicher: Was there any additional tax put on beer in the last 12 months, and now let us hear them laugh. Was there any additional tax put on beer in the last 12 months? Let us hear them pound the tables over there now.

Mr. Nixon: The poor man's drink.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, in the Toronto Telegram of July 31, 1959, we have a heading:

PRICE HIKES, GLASS 5 CENTS,
BOTTLE 2 CENTS

The article says this:

Starting in September, a glass of beer will sell for 15 cents—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Too much.

Mr. Whicher: I continue with the quote:

In the midst of a sweltering heat wave, the news is all bad for beer drinkers. Beverage rooms will up the price of a bottle of beer from 26 cents to 28 cents, starting tomorrow. And although you still pay the same for 12 bottles of beer in the retail store, you get 5 cents less when you return the bottles. The new prices—and listen to this, Mr. Speaker, —the new prices, along with higher taxes on breweries and licenced premises, have been announced by the liquor licence board.

And they have the unmitigated gall to say there is no increase in taxes.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Taylor wanted to buy a new horse.

Mr. MacDonald: That was after the election.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member for Beaches (Mr. Collings), the liquor commissioner for the province of Ontario, in our report, said that the brewers will gain about $4 million in revenue; licenced outlets about $6 million; and the government about $4 million. Is that too small for them, or do they not call that new taxes? I do, Mr. Speaker. I simply cannot understand—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Where are the new taxes in the budget?

Mr. Whicher: Never mind where the new taxes are in the budget, the reason they did not put them there was for this reason: They only sit here for two months trying to do a $1 billion business, and the chances are that, as soon as we leave, there will be more additional taxes. That is the answer.

Mr. Speaker, this was also announced. Also hit were banquet permits, formerly $2 per wedding reception, now $10. Other permits were also increased—do they still say that there are no new taxes?

An hon. member: Shame. Same old stuff.

Mr. Whicher: Private clubs holding beer licences, including veterans and labour clubs, formerly paid the government a flat $25 a year licence fee, but now they are paying a tax of 8 cents a gallon up to 10,000 gallons a year, and graduated upwards to a maximum of 13 cents a gallon for sales in excess of 40,000 gallons. Are there still no new taxes?

The liquor commissioner said in his report that the move to tax these clubs was made because they presented severe competition to commercial outlets and paid very little in taxes. But the point is—

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Over the authority of Parliament, too. A king lost his head for that about 300 years ago. We do not have any more kings.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member had better watch his.

Mr. Sopha: I will watch mine.

Hon. Mr. Frost: His will be next.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, now that I have finished the quotation, I ask this question of the hon. Provincial Treasurer. Was there an additional tax put on beer in the past 12 months, or was there not?

Mr. Reaume: He does not know.

Mr. Whicher: If there was, did he get the money? Of course, there was. Of course, there are additional taxes, he cannot figure his way out of that. It is an obvious fact that there were. He is telling us a fairy story.

Hon. Mr. Allan: I was presenting a budget.

Mr. Whicher: He is worse than Cinderella.

Mr. Speaker, I ask him this, have banquet permits not been increased in price? Mr. Speaker, has there not been an increase in some automobile licences in this province in the past 12 months? Yet the hon. Provincial Treasurer still sits there, with a smile on his face, and says that there is no increase in taxes in this province.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Oh no, no.

Mr. Whicher: Who is he trying to fool, anyway? Has there not been an increase in various licences and permits across the province in the past year?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Sure. That is right.

Mr. Whicher: No new taxation?

Hon. Mr. Allan: That is right.

Mr. Whicher: Balderdash.

Naturally there is no new taxation during this Legislature sitting, because we only sit for 2 months out of 12, while attempting to do a $1 billion business. What will happen when we go home, Mr. Speaker? The government may increase any tax without notification to the Legislature—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Oh no, no.

Mr. Whicher: —or without ratification of the same. Yes, Mr. Speaker, this is dictatorship de luxe.

An hon. member: If E. P. Taylor wants some more money, he will get it.

Mr. Whicher: Another heading in this masterpiece of selfpraise and adoration is "provincial assistance for water and sewage work."

An hon. member: If that is right—

Mr. Whicher: It is not any more right than the fact that they did not raise any taxes out of the official income tax last time. In this paragraph, this government claims that, during the past year, they vigorously tackled the problems of finding an ample water supply for Ontario's growing industrial and domestic markets.

An hon. member: He is right, there.

Mr. Whicher: They go on to say that, in the past year, these comprised 12 water works systems and 7 sewage works, and the estimated cost of these plants is $5.3 million, raising the total value of the work done in the past two years to $12 million.

However, the budget hastens to add that, during the past two months, 7 new sewage projects and 3 water works systems, estimated at $8.7 million, have been placed in operation, making the total value of the plants now operated by the Ontario water resources commission, to almost $21 million.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer has the audacity—

Hon. Mr. Allan: We want to keep him informed.

Mr. Whicher: —not to claim, but to at least insinuate, that this province is putting up the money for these projects without the municipality doing any financing at all.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, now. We did not say any such thing.

Mr. Reaume: The hon. Prime Minister does not say anything at all.

Mr. Whicher: The truth is—

An hon. member: No, no, we put up some money. Where is the money coming from? From us.

Mr. Whicher: They are putting up quite a bit of bluff. They are putting up taxes pretty well.

The truth is, of course, that the municipalities have to pay back every cent that is loaned to them by the Ontario water resources commission, including the going interest rate that the province pays.

Mr. Reaume: With interest higher, higher.

Mr. Whicher: Plus one-half of one per cent.

While I would not for one moment underestimate the technical assistance that is given the municipalities by the commission, nevertheless, I would not be doing my duty if I did not take some of the glitter from the hon. Provincial Treasurer's words, and point out that, for services rendered, the municipalities have to pay every dollar back, and there are no grants given by this government to the municipalities concerned. Not one nickel.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): How could they finance it without that help?

An hon. member: What does he know about it, anyway?

Mr. Whicher: How would they finance it? How does one finance without any money? One borrows it, and they could do the same thing.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Yes, but they cannot borrow it.

Mr. Whicher: Why can they not borrow it?

Hon. Mr. Roberts: Because they cannot.

Mr. Whicher: Because they have not performed their duty.

Hon. Mr. Roberts: If they could borrow it for a better rate, they would.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I would like to say a few words regarding estimates of The Department of Health, and I find, from the year 1951, until this year, 1960, that the estimates have increased from $33 million to $81 million. I make no criticism of the estimates, at the present time, of The Department of Health whatsoever. I pointed this out, for the following reason:

Some of the newer hon. members of this House may not know that, 3 years ago, we had great arguments in this House about a proposed Ontario hospital insurance plan. We had great arguments for this reason, and I wish to be very fair to my hon. friends on the left. I think that they will agree with me, certainly, as far as we were concerned in this House, and as far as they are concerned, that we did everything in our power to try to get this government to move and have an Ontario hospital insurance plan.

Mr. MacDonald: They wanted coverage which they were plugging personally—

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): We asked the hon. Prime Minister—

Mr. MacDonald: They were doing the same thing as the hon. Minister from London North (Mr. Roberts). They wanted 50 steps along the way to co-insurance.

Mr. Thomas: Co-insurance, now is that not right?

Mr. Grossman: Well, what about the next point?

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the reason why I bring this matter up because, when we were arguing this matter some years ago, the hon. Prime Minister of this province gave us his excuse as to why it could not be entered into immediately. He said it was because it was going to cost such a huge sum of money and if the figures, as I remember, that it was going to cost approximately for this whole plan, approximately $210 million, and out of that $210 million, the federal government were going to put up a third or $70 million, the province was going to put up a third or $70 million—this was his excuse—and the taxpayers, or the people who paid the premium were going to put up the other $70 million.

One thing that I do know is that now we do have the Ontario hospital insurance plan, and that it has been successful.

But with this, I do not agree—time after time, hon. members of this government have the audacity to rise and take credit for this great plan. The only reason, Mr. Speaker, why this plan ever went into effect was because of the prodding of the Opposition and the public demand by the taxpayers of the province of Ontario.

Mr. MacDonald: There is a 13-year-old example in Saskatchewan, that is why.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, the reason this government gave as to why it was not able to have this plan immediately, was because they simply did not have the money. They were going to have to get $70 million out of the taxpayers of this province and they could not afford it. That was the answer.

Mr. Speaker, because the hon. Ministers on the government benches take undue credit for introducing this plan, I want to ask them this question: How much money is this government putting into the Ontario hospital insurance plan at the present time? How much money?

Now, Mr. Speaker, I am going to tell you.

In 1959, when this plan started, the budget for the health estimates for this province was $73 million. The year before, it was $60 million, and I suggest that this is a natural increase of health costs in this province.

I say this much, that the government of this province, this hon. Prime Minister, who has the audacity to say that he is the father of this plan, did not put in one single 5-cent piece. Once again, Mr. Speaker, he has used the methods of which he is the complete champion, he has taken credit for what he considers to be something good. But when something bad comes along, of which there is much in his government, he forgets all about it.

Such things as hospital insurance plans take a long time to come about.

Mr. MacDonald: The Liberal government—

Mr. Whicher: Never mind about the Liberal administration in the past. There are millions of people in this country who wish that it was still there.

When I hear this brigade around here start clapping for the hon. Prime Minister when he takes credit for this hospital insurance scheme, and when I think of a gentleman down in Windsor, Ontario, who was really the father, not only of the Ontario hospital plan—

Mr. Nixon: Hurrah for Paul.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He took office before we could do anything.

Mr. Grossman: He might have been the father but he did not feed his child.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, when I was a very young boy, we had quite a number of hens where my father lived. Their cackle reminds me a great deal of the Tory hon. members. The hens did not bother me and neither do they.

And now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to say something about the provincial-municipal partnership as outlined in the budget, and I quote from the budget:

I think it can be said without contradiction that we have been fully cognizant of the financial impact of growth upon our municipalities, and that—in spite of our own burdens, which have multiplied many times—we have brought into operation in the last decade and a half, a provincial-municipal partnership that has been little short of a revelation.

Mr. Speaker, I say “some revelation.” The answer, of course, is very simple. The other day the chairman of the committee on private bills pointed out that the municipalities are creatures of the province, and that it was up to the committee to see that municipalities allowed them only the proper legislation. I suggest that we also owe them the right not to allow them to strangle themselves, in the financial mess that this government has forced them into.

It is all very well to say that grants to municipalities have increased from $24 million in 1944 to $342 million in 1960-1961. But the answer is that municipal taxes have increased from $107 million in 1944 to $465 million in 1958, the last figures that I have, while their debt has increased from $252 million in 1944 to $1.169 billion in 1958. Some revelation, Mr. Speaker.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: What is the population increase?

Mr. Whicher: On top of this, and I quote from the budget:

In the last year or two, the annual increase in the budgets of all Ontario municipalities and school boards, exclusive of capital outlays, has totalled $100 million, well above the growth of revenue from increased real property assessment and provincial assistance. The outcome has been higher local taxes.

Higher taxes, I suggest, from only one main source—namely, real estate. The government suggests caution; how can there be caution when a municipality has to provide sewers, watermains, and schools for all of the children that we talk about? These expenditures must be made. I suggest that the whole provincial approach to the municipalities is phony.

There must be a federal-provincial and a provincial-municipal conference to change the taxing powers and money sources that each government will be responsible for. There can be no other alternative. Otherwise, some of our municipalities are going to be driven into bankruptcy. This province, paying half of the tax burden of the whole of Canada, must take the lead, and not ask for but demand such conferences.

Another way that this government, along with their Tory government in Ottawa, have handicapped the municipalities, is by the well-known phrase "tight money." They have done it in two ways; firstly, by deficit financing, a policy with which this government is the champion of all time. Secondly, they have done it by consequently drying up the money market, and forcing borrowers to pay a much higher rate of interest. If such was their desire, how successful they have been!

How well I remember the chastising that the Liberal government in Ottawa got from the Tories sitting in the government benches when the hon. Walter Harris first started talking about tight money. How they screamed when the interest rates for their borrowing went a little higher, and consequently the municipalities had to pay more.

One thing that they did not kick about was the fact that the then Liberal government were taking all of the monies from the banks and financial institutions. Of course, they did not take any, they did not need to borrow, they balanced their budget.

Mr. Speaker, when it comes to tight money, hon. Walter Harris was an amateur. The Tory government, either in Toronto or Ottawa, can step to the head of the class, they are the undisputed champions.

Mr. Speaker, let me explain in a very short time how their deficit financing has created tight money across the whole of Canada.

Commercial banks make loans using money placed in the bank by depositors and money earned from its investments. To a bank a deposit is a liability, a loan their asset. The commercial banks create deposits by making loans. For example, if one deposits $1,000 in a bank, the bank is required, by statute, to hold $80 in reserve, leaving $920 available with which to make loans. Suppose a bank makes a loan of $920 and the borrower deposits it in the same bank. The bank is then required to hold in reserve 8 per cent. of the deposit, or $73.60. The bank now has $920 minus the $73.60 or $846.40 available to borrow.

This process can be repeated until the required reserve builds up to a total of $1,000. This end point is reached, for practical purposes, when the bank has extended about $12,500 worth of credit.

Thus the banking system in total can create $12,500 worth of credit from a $1,000 deposit and the money said to be in circulation is the same $12,500.

Thus, if this government borrows $100 million, which they did in the last year, from the bank and the people of this province, they have in reality taken away 12.5 times of that amount of credit from the little people of this province. The federal government is doing the same thing on a larger scale—drying up the money market.

This is the cause of tight money and this, speaking generally, is the main reason why the little business men in Ontario cannot borrow the money that they require.

The Tories are taking, not all there is, but far more than their share. By their policy of deficit financing, along with their Tory friends in Ottawa, they have dried up a great deal of the necessary money on the market, and consequently have driven the interest costs of municipal borrowing sky high.

For example, in 1949 the interest costs for Toronto were 2.62 per cent. In 1959, for Metropolitan Toronto 6.46 per cent. The city of Ottawa paid as low as 2.72 per cent. in 1949, and in 1959 it cost them 5.69 per cent. to borrow money. The city of Barrie paid 2.95 per cent. in 1949, and last year borrowed money cost them 6.6 per cent.

Mr. Speaker, need I say anything more to emphasize the critical financial position that this government and their friends in Ottawa have placed the municipalities of this province? Yet how the Tories used to scream in 1957, Mr. Speaker, when the phrase tight money was synonymous with the name of the hon. Walter Harris. They screamed that the municipalities simply could not finance their capital expenditures because the interest rate was too high.

Mr. Nixon: Ruinous, they called it.

Mr. Whicher: Look at the interest rate now, Mr. Speaker. Are not the Tories proud of themselves?

Mr. Singer: They are very quiet over there now.

Mr. Whicher: In the budget they stated that, in the capital expansion in Ontario Hydro and the government in the past 15 years, they have borrowed nearly $4 billion, and of this amount only $450 million, or 11 per cent. has been financed by borrowing in the United States.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Is that not good?

Mr. Whicher: What they have forgotten is the fact that, by drying up the Canadian money market, they have forced large municipalities such as Metropolitan Toronto to go to New York on various occasions to borrow their money.

This is a dangerous thing to have to do, because it is impossible for us to know what the exchange rate on American money will be at the time of repayment—and if, by chance the Canadian dollar were at a large discount, it could place any municipality under great financial strain at the time of repayment. By borrowing in New York, they are gambling with taxpayers' money themselves, and forcing the municipalities to do likewise.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would like to deal with a paragraph in the budget under federal-provincial relations. In that paragraph, or in that page, they told us of their troubles in Ottawa. It is all very well to tell us about their troubles with Ottawa. Personally I do not feel the least bit sorry for them.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Oh, shame on him.

Mr. Lewis: The Liberals put them there.

Mr. Whicher: Let me take hon. members back to the session of this House in the year 1957. The phrase $100 million was the one most used all during that session. Do hon. members remember the great Tory meeting in Massey Hall in April 1957? Do they remember when Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker promised to look after Ontario? Do they remember that our Ontario hon. Prime Minister promised that, if Rt. hon. Mr. Diefenbaker were elected, the people of Ontario would be looked after?

Mr. Speaker, my question is very simple, given sincerely and as a taxpayer of this province. I ask the hon. Prime Minister where the $100 million is.

Mr. Reaume: They do not know.

Mr. Whicher: And, Mr. Speaker, even if they did get what they asked for, they would not get $100 million anyway.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Oh yes, we did get—

Mr. Whicher: No, I am not wrong, I am not the least bit wrong.

Hon. Mr. Allan: Sure he is wrong.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, they are asking for 15 per cent. of personal income tax, instead of 13 per cent.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): That is right.

Mr. Whicher: Fifteen per cent. of corporation taxes instead of the 11 per cent. that they now collect; and 50 per cent. of succession duties as at present.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Right.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Prime Minister did get all of this, according to the hon. Provincial Treasurer's own budget figures, the addition would only be some $80 million.

Hon. Mr. Allan: The hon. member is comparing it to 13 per cent. Ten, start at ten.

Mr. Whicher: Well, surely he would not—

Hon. Mr. Allan: Oh, I will help him figure that out. Sure I will help him figure it out.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. Provincial Treasurer will have to get some of those mathematicians at the side to help him out. They did all his figuring in the budget, anyway.

Mr. Speaker, surely he would not suggest that if the Provincial Treasurer got 15 per cent. corporation tax from Ottawa that he would not relieve the corporations of that 2 per cent. that they now charge them more than any other corporation in the Dominion of Canada, would he?

Hon. Mr. Allan: Ask about the income tax.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, ask him if he still will accept the 15, 15, 15 formula.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, in any event they are not going to get that much because the federal government does not have that much. May I remind hon. members that hon. Mr. Fleming has said that there will possibly be no change until 1962.

Hon. Mr. Allan: He did not say that.

Mr. Singer: He certainly did say it.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, threatening Ottawa is no use.

Once again I say, where is the $100 million? Perhaps I can tell hon. members where it is going to come from. The hon. Prime Minister does not make many political mistakes. His sins up to the moment have been reasonably well hidden.

Last Thursday, budget day, the hon. Prime Minister had a press conference. At that press conference he did two things. He whispered softly, he wanted $100 million from Ottawa, whispered so as not to embarrass his Tory crony. But he roared like a lion when he hinted directly at the possibility of a provincial sales tax for Ontario next year.

Mr. Reaume: They had better not.

Mr. Whicher: When I read this, Mr. Speaker, I thought that I needed a new pair of glasses, but I quickly changed my mind. What I needed was a new brain. Of course, that is the answer.

Hon. Mr. Allan: He is right there.

Mr. Whicher: I emphasize it, Mr. Speaker. I did not know what was going on, I needed a new brain.

Hon. Mr. Allan: That is right.

Mr. Whicher: Of course, that is the answer. That is where the $100 million is coming from, and maybe more than that amount.

I checked with some of his economists and mathematicians in his own government and I am informed that, speaking generally, a one per cent. sales tax in the province would be good for $50 million. Two per cent., $100 million—that magic figure. And of course, 3 per cent. would be $150 million.

"Oh," I thought to myself, "as the financial critic of the Liberal party, you have been 'a bust.' That sly old fox, the hon. Prime Minister of this province, has fooled you and incidentally everyone else." The story unfolds.

The Ottawa government at the conference in July will in all probability say: "We have only this much money to do our job. How can we give you any more?" And the answer: "Old Man Ontario is finally caught in his own trap and a sales tax for the people of the province of Ontario—"

Mr. Reaume: They had better not.

Mr. Whicher: "—what a tragic ending for a very fine fellow who made only one serious mistake, he believed the Tories in Ottawa." Mr. Speaker, that is a mistake I will never make.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is where the hon. member made his mistake to date, because he did not believe them. That is one of the reasons why he is over there.

Mr. Whicher: Mr. Speaker, I near the end. What is the alternative to these Tory critical financial times?

Mr. Speaker, in my opening remarks I said that the government never did today what could be put off until tomorrow. That is the answer. We are living in the past, as far as the taxation laws of this country are concerned.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member sure is, that is where he is.

Mr. Whicher: Well, I do not know where the hon. Prime Minister is, he is living at least 20 years ago.

Mr. Reaume: He is half dead.

Mr. Whicher: There must be a federal-provincial and a provincial-municipal conference to give each form of government a firm base for its taxing rights for the next 50 years.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Hear, hear.

Mr. Whicher: Municipalities cannot carry on under the present financial set-up.

Mr. Speaker, this government of Ontario cannot continually keep going into debt. It is time that the provinces and the federal government sat down around conference tables and, remembering the spirit of the fathers of Confederation, forget that they are politicians and become statesmen. That is the way these problems will be settled.

This government must forget its boastfulness, of telling all who will listen how much they give away. Instead they should humbly remember that never have they given so much away, because never in history has there been so much money extracted from the Ontario taxpayers' pockets. And, in spite of this, they have no money.

Tory times, Mr. Speaker, are hard times. For this reason, Mr. Speaker, we of the Liberal Opposition cannot support their motion, and therefore I move, seconded by Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant), that the motion that Mr. Speaker do now leave the chair and that the House resolve itself into committee of supply be amended by adding thereto the following words:

But this House regrets that the budget:

1. Fails to present a true picture of the province's financial position by claiming the seventeenth consecutive surplus when, in fact, net debt is increasing at the fastest rate in history;

2. Has failed to show the proper leadership in agriculture with the result that chaos and consternation are rampant amongst Ontario farmers;

3. Fails to deal with the problems of responsibilities and revenues in provincial-municipal relations and makes no provision for the holding of a provincial-municipal conference at which a solution for municipal financial and jurisdictional problems could be sought;

4. Does not make provision for the institution of a province-wide comprehensive medical and drug plan and that not enough emphasis has been given to preventive and rehabilitative services for our population;

5. Shows that this government has failed to make any satisfactory financial arrangements with the federal Conservative government in the field of Dominion-provincial relations;

6. Makes no provision for loans to the tourist industry and for small business.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Notice that it should be the "Progressive Conservative Government" at Ottawa.

Mr. Reaume: With a small "c".

Mr. C. S. MacNaughton (Huron): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege on behalf of this group.

Mr. Speaker: State your point of privilege.

Mr. MacDonald: Speaking to the question of privilege which I raised, let me say it was the understanding of our Whip until about an hour ago, and I believe it was indicated yesterday by the hon. Prime Minister, that in the budget debate we would hear the Opposition speech from the financial critic of the Liberal party and then from "the other group," and he waved in our direction.

But within the past hour, the order has been switched and the government spokesman is going to be put in.

Mr. Speaker, I want to put this in a broader context. I have been going to rise on a number of occasions during this session of the Legislature and draw attention to the fact that the government has persisted throughout this session in trying to ignore the fact that the CCF party exists in this House.

I would draw the attention of the hon. Prime Minister to the fact that in Ottawa, and in Westminster at London, third parties are acknowledged in general party arrangements and have been for years. No man ever added to his own stature, and likewise no party ever added to its own stature, by denying the basic rights of any other man or group. This is what has been attempted all during this session.

Mr. Speaker, if I am being—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker—

Mr. MacDonald: Let me finish my point, Mr. Speaker, before the hon. Prime Minister interrupts.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have no objection to—I think I can clear this up for the hon. member.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, the hon. Prime Minister concurs in it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I can clear it up.

Mr. MacDonald: Just let me conclude my point, and then if it can be cleared up, that is fine, because it became very clouded in the past hour.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, if the hon. member talks too much we will not clear it up.

Mr. MacDonald: I would draw your attention, Mr. Speaker, to the fact that in the budget debate of last year, the sequence of speakers was Mr. Frost, Mr. Wintermeyer and myself, each of us being the Opposition critic, the critic for the Opposition parties.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Not last year. I did not speak first, surely.

Mr. MacDonald: This is the year 1958.

In the year 1957, the sequence of speakers was Mr. Porter, Mr. Wintermeyer and Mr. MacDonald.

Now, I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that we regain the traditions of Parliament instead of violating them once again, and give the Opposition parties an opportunity to make their criticism of the budget before you bring in all the government speakers.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I thought that last year the Opposition critic went ahead and was followed by a government speaker. I think the hon. member will find that is what occurred last year. Am I not right about that?

Mr. MacDonald: I do not know. I have the records for the last couple of years.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, here is the situation: I have discussed the matter with the Whip, I have sent a message to the hon. member for Huron. We have no objection to the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden) proceeding at the present time. As a matter of fact, the reverse. But I point out to the hon. member that this is by no means a precedent.

The official Opposition is the group led by the hon. leader of the Opposition, and hon. members of the CCF must fall in line in the ordinary course. As a matter of fact, there are not two Opposition speakers in sequence. Actually, the government has every right to interpose speakers.

This was not a matter referred to me, it was a matter that was worked out with the Whips—

Mr. MacDonald: It was not worked out with the Whips—

Hon. Mr. Frost: —and I understood, when the matter was referred to me by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) a few moments ago, that this arrangement was satisfactory.

Now, at that time I was quite prepared to reverse it, but I thought that the hon. member for Huron would speak about 30 minutes, which would take up the balance of this time, and then the hon. member for Woodbine would proceed.

But I have no intention of making a mountain out of a mole-hill, and I would say that, if the hon. member for Woodbine desires to proceed now, I think we would be very happy to acquiesce. There was nothing prearranged. The only thing I point out is that it is not a matter of right at all. The matter of right is this, that in such a case, the hon. leader of the Opposition, or his nominee, speaks and is followed by a government speaker and then is followed in the ordinary course by one from the other group.

Mr. MacDonald: In 1957 and 1958—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I think the hon. member will find that he did not hunt hard enough in 1959. My recollection in 1959 is that the reverse plan was followed. I am perfectly prepared to let the hon. member for Woodbine go ahead, it is quite satisfactory from our standpoint. As a matter of fact, it seemed to me that it was a matter that might convenience him because of the time. However, let him go ahead.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): I might say, as Whip for our group, that the plan changes by the hour. Now, this morning it was the hon. member for Russell (Mr. Lavergne) who was to be the speaker after our hon. member, and then it was changed to the hon. member for York East (Mr. Beckett) who was to be the speaker. Now it has been changed to the hon. member for Huron. It just changes by the hour.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What is wrong with that?

Mr. A. H. Cowling (High Park): May I just say a word, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Tell them about the agreement the hon. member and I had.

Mr. Cowling: The hon. member is pretty mouthy, too. If he would just sit and listen for a while, he would learn a few things.

Mr. Sopha: I will listen, but we do not come to listen—

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): We cannot learn from the hon. member—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Let us go on with the debate.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member for High Park has a right to speak.

Mr. Sopha: But, Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Cowling: Just shut up over there for a second. Can I go on now, Mr. Speaker? Thank you very much.

The hon. member for York South mentioned about the Whip, and he was insinuating that we were endeavouring to, I think he said, "push our group around."

Well, I would like to say this, that, as far as the Whips are concerned, I think we have co-operated very well. In ratio to the hon. members in the House, I think that the CCF group, Mr. Speaker, have had the advantage, there have been far fewer government hon. members speak than there have been hon. members of the CCF party.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): We have not spoken on this budget yet.

Mr. Cowling: Well, the hon. member is going to have his chance right now. I just wanted to point that out. He will get nothing but co-operation.

Mr. Nixon: Oh, sit down. Let us go on with the debate.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, is the hon. member for York South pleased with that arrangement?

Mr. MacDonald: Yes.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to point out and say, on behalf of all the members of the House, that I know it is extremely difficult to keep the speakers in the order in which it is first arranged, and strictly stay with it. Members have changes in plans, some members speak for two or three hours, other members for half an hour, and I know it has always been the custom in the House to make rearrangements. I am quite sure that the Whips can continue to do that.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, it would appear that this speech will be born out of a certain amount of minor turmoil. I am afraid I cannot give the undertaking that the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) was giving on behalf of the hon. member for Huron (Mr. MacNaughton), that I will complete my remarks within half an hour, because I doubt very much if I will.

I believe—and I am going on at this point because I believe this—that a separate group with a separate point of view should have an opportunity to present its position on the budget immediately after the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) has presented his.

I take it the hon. Prime Minister does not necessarily accept that proposition, and he is not accepting my going on as any precedent. But I believe it is a sound principle, and that is a major reason why I wish to go on now.

In commencing my remarks in this debate, Mr. Speaker, I would like first of all to join with the hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) in congratulating the hon. Provincial Treasurer on his budget presentation. It was his duty to express government policy in terms of dollars and cents.

When one realizes how little he had to work on, I think we should recognize in all fairness that his achievement was quite remarkable. It is true he did not succeed in concealing the total inadequacy of government policy in relation to the conditions of the 1960's, but one cannot expect the impossible. At least he did succeed in conveying clearly and lucidly the government's lack of policy.

Budget time is usually an exciting time. My reading of British constitutional history leads me to believe that it has almost always been regarded as an exciting time. The public waits expectantly for the government to present its financial plans for the coming year. Those plans often have quite profound effects on individuals and on the community as a whole.

Therefore, the day after the present budget was presented, I looked very carefully in the newspapers to find signs of excitement. Naturally I looked first at the Toronto Globe and Mail, not merely because it comes out first, but also because its editors can almost always be relied upon to work themselves up into a lather over almost anything.

And there was, I admit, a certain degree of excitement in the Globe and Mail's editorial, about the same degree as one would expect to find at a chess match.

The Toronto Telegram could not even muster that much enthusiasm. This fine old Tory lady of Melinda Street said, in its headline "A stand-pat budget"—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Prosperity.

Mr. Bryden: —and then it went on to express considerable maternal concern over the obvious complacency of the government.

When I listened to the hon. Provincial Treasurer in his very fluent presentation, I could not help but think of a group of scholars who are at present, I understand, compiling a dictionary of Canadian usage. These men claim—and I have no doubt they are right—that there are a great many expressions used in Canada in a way in which they are not used in any other country in the world.

I believe that this government has a great many definitions to contribute to this dictionary. I will not go into them all, but I will mention a couple.

There is one I mentioned in an earlier debate and that is the word "pioneering." This government defines that word to mean "doing that which others did long ago."

Another word that they use in a special sense, which would be worthy of inclusion in the dictionary I am talking about, is the word "leadership." The government defines that word to mean "looking on amiably while those we are leading leave us far behind."

I think that leadership in that sense is the keynote of the present budget. Essentially, it is a spectator budget. I am not now talking about the Hamilton Spectator, either. This is a spectator budget. The government observes what is going on around it, nods approvingly, tries to claim credit and then goes back to sleep.

Take, for example, the case of housing. The hon. Provincial Treasurer noted that somewhat more than 50,000 houses—almost 55,000, I believe—50,000 to 55,000 houses were built in Ontario last year. This total—as he pointed out himself—is less than in the previous year. It certainly is a great deal less than sufficient to meet requirements for housing in the province, and the amount the government contributed to even this inadequate total is so little that it really is not worthy of mention.

But the hon. Provincial Treasurer, I am afraid, had so little to talk about that he mentioned it nevertheless.

The same is true of development. One can read the budget and other policy statements very carefully, and I defy anyone to find any indication, in any government statement of policy of any real plans to stimulate development, to encourage it, and certainly none to guide it in socially desirable directions.

However, the people of this province are active. They are doing things, they are taking advantage of the tremendous resources with which nature has blessed us.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Prosperity by this government.

Mr. Bryden: The development taking place has nothing to do with the government, but development is taking place. It is very significant, however, that a great deal of this development is taking highly undesirable forms. It is producing vast urban sprawls, concrete jungles filled with fumes and noise, traffic snarls, architectural dullness, and without any true social communities with which individuals can identify themselves.

I am going to talk a little bit about mental illness later, but I might indicate here that, in my opinion, this is a big factor in the increase in mental illness. The development which is taking place, without any planning at all is not necessarily good, although admittedly much of it is. But undoubtedly, it is taking place.

So the government scrambles to provide, usually on a very inadequate basis, the services which development requires. The development takes place and the government scrambles around, since there is an emergency, to provide some services, and then it proclaims proudly: "Look at the development we have created."

I would also like, in these preliminary remarks, to refer to human betterment as the hon. Prime Minister loves to call it. I believe that expression is an invention of his, perhaps it should be included in the dictionary of Canadian usage, too. In my opinion, it is a very patronizing term. I do not like it, but I will use it here, because I have no doubt the government will understand it, since it is their favourite expression.

I will attempt to demonstrate later, Mr. Speaker, that current efforts in such fields as mental health or penal reform—those are only two examples but they are two I will deal with later—are less than enough to compensate for the neglect of the past.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is when the Liberals were still in power.

An hon. member: Oh, not that far back.

Mr. Bryden: It includes that period, Mr. Speaker. When I am referring to the past in these fields, I am referring to the past as far back as the hon. members want to go, starting from this year, and it has essentially been a period of neglect.

What the government is doing, and I certainly do not claim that they are doing nothing, but what they are doing, I submit, is not enough to compensate for the neglect of the past. However, the government is so overwhelmed with the fact that it is doing anything at all in this field, that we have an almost endless series of boastful utterances about what they are doing.

As I said, I plan to deal with some of these matters later. But before I proceed with my analysis of the budget and some of the comments I have to make on it, I would like to make one or two friendly references to the analysis of the budget made by the hon. member for Bruce. It was quite an interesting analysis and I listened to it with great interest. And what it boils down to, Mr. Speaker, is this.

First, he berated the government for not balancing the budget. Second, he berated the government for not spending enough. Third, he berated the government for raising taxes. Now, I will be frank with you, Mr. Speaker, and I will admit quite freely, that I have not read Alice in Wonderland carefully enough to know how you can harmonize those 3 things.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right. And then he berated us for spending money that he said that we did not have.

Mr. Bryden: He did not give any indication—and I listened as carefully as I could—he did not give any indication as to how he thinks revenue should be increased, and I, therefore, do not see how he can ask the government: (a) to balance its budget; and (b) increase spending.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): They have not done it for 3 years.

An hon. member: We did not ask them to balance the budget.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, he did not ask it. He criticized them for not balancing the budget, but apparently, did not ask them to do so. I must say that I should have read Through the Looking Glass as well as Alice in Wonderland.

Mr. Singer: I will talk about the budget, I have been talking about it all along.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): They wanted the tax taken off whisky.

Mr. Bryden: I plan to engage in some analysis of the budget, too. I have no doubt that the government and other hon. gentlemen may disagree with what I have to say. But at least I plan to make some constructive suggestions as to what the government may be able to do. They may not think they are valid. I do not know. But I plan to do that sort of thing.

Now, I want to make it clear that, when I make this criticism, I am not in any sense directing any personal criticism at the hon. member for Bruce. I believe, hon. members will be able to judge for themselves later, but I believe that I will be able to make a more constructive presentation than he has, but that does not involve any comparison of him and me.

You see, I have a big advantage over him in this matter, because I represent a party that has a basically different philosophy and programme from the government opposition.

Mr. Singer: When is that new party going to tell us what they believe?

Mr. Bryden: I am talking about the CCF.

Mr. Singer: Well, what has happened in Saskatchewan?

Mr. Bryden: Well, what has happened in Saskatchewan? I may say that I do not know how it is that hon. members are so preoccupied with Saskatchewan. I have never myself raised the question of Saskatchewan in this House, but hon. members always ask me about it.

So, I would say what has happened in Saskatchewan, if the hon. member wants to know, is that the government, within the terms that are possible in a provincial economy and within the constitutional limits of a province, has been putting into effect the type of philosophy the CCF stands for.

One manifestation—I do not wish to get diverted in a discussion of Saskatchewan because there are many more important matters to talk about here—but one of the manifestations of the application of the philosophy was that that province had a hospital insurance plan, better than the plan in effect in this province, 12 years before the plan came in here. That is one manifestation. There are other manifestations, but I will not go into them.

However, as I was saying, I have this advantage, I can make fundamental criticisms of the budget, whereas the hon. member for Bruce is pretty well confined to quibbling about a few entries here and there. I approach it with a different philosophy, and I will hope in time—

Mr. Singer: What is the philosophy?

Mr. Bryden: I approach it—the hon. member will see some of it later.

Mr. Grossman: He is after the leadership of the party, but he dumped those policies in.

Mr. Bryden: I will express it. Wait, and maybe he will agree with it.

Mr. Grossman: Did the voters of Woodbine vote for his philosophy?

Mr. Bryden: I believe so.

Mr. Grossman: He knows they did not.

Mr. Bryden: I believe they did. I have run for election twice. I was defeated once and I was elected once. On both occasions, I was very frank in telling people exactly what I stood for, because I would not want to be elected except on the basis of what I stand for. And I plan to express, as well as I can, what I stand for in this House?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Is the hon. member for St. Andrew not really glad he won?

Mr. Grossman: Of course not.

Mr. MacDonald: He would be awfully embarrassed now if he had not.

Mr. Bryden: That is another matter that I will not discuss.

However, I was just trying to point out that I really approach this matter from a somewhat different point of view than does the hon. Provincial Treasurer, so therefore I suppose it is inevitable that we will have differences of opinion. There would not be much life to democracy if we had no difference of opinion.

Before I get into some of my basic contentions about the budget, I do want to undertake a very brief review of one or two points. In doing that, I would like to refer to what a man said to me the day after the budget was presented.

I was quoted that day in the press, quite accurately I may say—I do not always admit that I am quoted accurately in the press, but this time I was quoted quite accurately—as saying the budget was unimaginative.

A man who is an expert on matter of public finance told me that I was quite wrong in that assertion. He pointed out to me—and I have to admit that he was right—that it takes a very high order of imagination indeed to contrive to find a surplus year after year when, in actual fact, there is a deficit.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is running up that blind alley, too.

Mr. Bryden: I did not criticize that. As a matter of fact, the hon. member for Bruce belaboured this point at great length, and I do not want to belabour it too much, but certainly I concur with him entirely that there is no surplus in this budget.

I disagree with some of his conclusions, but there is certainly no surplus in this budget, nor has there been for a number of years.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer's forecast, on the basis of actual and estimated receipts and expenditures, is that there will be a surplus of something over $600,000 in the current fiscal year.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that the process by which this alleged surplus was arrived at is a masterpiece of organized confusion.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): How does that compare with Saskatchewan?

Mr. Bryden: Well, as a matter of fact, if the hon. Minister wants to know—I am not volunteering this information, but for his edification—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Keep it hidden.

Mr. Bryden: —I will tell him this, that the budget presented by the Treasurer of Saskatchewan recently shows a balanced budget with a slight surplus—and a true one, not the kind we have here, but a true one.

Mr. Grossman: That is a matter of opinion.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, no. The surplus was arrived at after charging capital expenditures that should properly be charged up; at any rate, charging far more than is charged here, whether the hon. member calls it true or not. He showed a balanced budget again, and furthermore, in the past 15 years, the net debt of the province of Saskatchewan has decreased from $150 million to $18 million. I cite that only for the edification of the hon. Minister since he asked about it. I attach no supreme significance to it.

I hope to have a few words to say about budget deficits and surpluses, and I do not attach nearly the importance to them that the hon. member for Bruce apparently does, but I mention it only because the hon. Minister asked, and I would hate to conceal important information that he is anxious to get.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Are there many people left there?

Mr. Bryden: Furthermore, if he wants to raise the question of population, we might as well in these dying moments before supper time clear up a lot of these misconceptions. In the 10 years before the CCF government came into office in Saskatchewan—he can check this if he wants to check the population figures—in the 10 years before it went into office, the population in Saskatchewan declined drastically. When the CCF government took office, the population curve levelled off within about 3 years and started moving up slowly.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is going down of late, though, I see.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not.

Mr. Bryden: Those are just estimates the hon. Prime Minister is talking about, so how does he know?

I would like to point out that it is quite false to say that the decline in population in Saskatchewan, before the CCF government took office, had anything to do with the Liberal government of that day. I would not be so dishonest as to criticize them for it. The population trends in that province, as in most provinces, have very little to do with the government in office.

Hon. Mr. Frost: It has a lot to do with it around here.

Mr. Bryden: If the hon. Prime Minister is talking about population movements, as referred to me, all I can say is that I am an émigré from Victoria.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member is not, he is an émigré from Saskatchewan.

Mr. MacDonald: He is not, he was born in the hon. Prime Minister's county.

Hon. Mr. Frost: He gave up a good job out there to come back here.

Mr. Bryden: I will explain that point for the hon. Prime Minister. I was brought up a Presbyterian, and we were always led to believe that the acme of human conduct is missionary work. So, as the hon. Prime Minister said, for a matter of a few years I did have a job that I enjoyed very much.

Mr. Singer: I thought they did not need missionaries out there, that they had seen the light.

Mr. Bryden: Well, that is why I came down here, you see. They did not need them out there, so I came back here. I did have a job that I enjoyed very much out there, but I thought that perhaps I would come back to my native province. Since my efforts were not very badly needed out there, I decided to come back to my native province.

Hon. Mr. Frost: How did he backslide from a good old Liberal family, anyway?

Mr. Bryden: I do not know if there is such a thing, but I can assure the hon. Prime Minister that my family was hardly a good old Liberal family.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is the way I always rated them, that is the way I met them on the voters' list.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I had mentioned the fact that the hon. Provincial Treasurer was trying to tell us that he had a surplus of something like $600,000, or will have in the current fiscal year. Actually, if one accepted his definition of ordinary expenditures and deducted them, along with the debt charges and sinking fund instalments, from the ordinary revenues, one would find that he had a surplus, or will have in this year, of somewhat more than $81 million.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure, that is right.

Mr. Bryden: Well, why does the hon. Provincial Treasurer not declare it if he thinks that is the surplus? It is because he fears that, if he declared such a surplus, the municipalities and old age pensioners and underpaid civil servants and various other people might jump to the conclusion that he has lots of money. I suspect that is the reason why he did not declare his surplus as $81 million.

Mr. Grossman: Oh, the hon. member has heard of Parkinson's second law.

Mr. Bryden: But I think that is the reason, and actually I would agree with the hon. Provincial Treasurer. He certainly does not have lots of money, and it would be a very serious tactical error on his part to declare anything like a surplus of anything like $81 million because he has not got it; but on his system of accounting, it seems to me that that is what he should have declared.

However, he apparently thought that was too much, so he took $15 million out of revenues and put them into this strange animal called the highway construction account. Now, why he put it in there I do not know, because he almost immediately took it out. He not only took out the $15 million he put in there, he took out an additional $25 million that was already in there.

I realize, Mr. Speaker, that last year was an election year, and I have no doubt that the hon. Provincial Treasurer said to himself: "Now is the time for all good highway construction accounts to come to the aid of the party."

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member got his education out in Saskatchewan. We do not do that around here.

Mr. Bryden: At any rate, he cleaned it out, and he announces that the account is to be discontinued, and I am happy to know that. I could never see any purpose in that account, except to contribute to confusion, and I am glad to see that it is to be discontinued.

But anyway, through that account he put $15 million of current revenues into capital, and then he took another $66 million out of current revenues and put it into what he called capital expenditures, selected absolutely arbitrarily.

Now, I defy anyone to show me any basis on which this $81 million worth of expenditure was selected as properly chargeable to revenue, as over against other capital expenditures—other than such things as loans and advances, which I quite agree are not chargeable to revenue.

This figure, as far as anyone can see, was selected for no other reason than to get the millions out of the hon. Provincial Treasurer's surplus and to leave only the thousands.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I thought the hon. member said we did not have a surplus.

Mr. Bryden: Well, we will come to that.

Mr. MacDonald: He is right, the hon. Prime Minister cannot add.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I point out an inaccuracy on the part of the hon. member for York South. May I say that I have looked up the budget arrangements for last year, and the hon. leader of the Opposition was the financial critic, and on March 3, 1959, he presented his budget criticisms, which were ended up on page 731 of Hansard, with his castigation of the government in the form of an amendment which was not quite as severe as that one we heard today.

He was immediately followed by the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney), and the debate was adjourned by the hon. member for Oshawa (Mr. Thomas) and the hon. member for York South followed.

Mr. MacDonald: Did the hon. Prime Minister look at the two previous years?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The method to which my hon. friend objected so strenuously was followed out last year.

Mr. MacDonald: Look at the two previous ones.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I say to the hon. member that what is being done this afternoon—we are so anxious to hear the hon. member for Woodbine in this address, we cannot wait until we hear him, but this is not to be taken as a precedent.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Prime Minister is getting his first real criticism from him.

It being 6 of the clock, p.m., the House took recess.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

TUESDAY, MARCH 1, 1960

8 O'CLOCK P.M.

The House resumed.

ON THE BUDGET

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, when we broke off for the supper hour, I was talking about the alleged surplus the government has declared, and which, I think, both Opposition groups are in agreement is not really a surplus but a deficit.

The hon. member for Bruce (Mr. Whicher) dealt with this particular point at some length this afternoon, and I will not belabour it, except to say this, that surely it is proper and reasonable to charge all non-realizable, non-revenue producing assets to revenue. They have to be paid for somehow, and since they do not pay for themselves, then they can be paid for only out of revenue.

Futhermore, if they recur year after year, as capital expenditures on highways, public works, buildings, and so on as they appear to be doing, then it seems to me that the simple and sensible way to handle the problem is to charge capital expenditures of that type, which are incurred in any year, to the revenues of that year.

I will not go into that in detail, but it seems to me that is a sound principle, and one that should be recognized. If we do that with regard to this year's accounts, last year's accounts, or next year's estimates, then there certainly is no surplus, there is a quite substantial deficit—I would say $100 million or more. I am not too interested in the exact arithmetic, but certainly it is a very substantial deficit.

Now, I would like to make clear, Mr. Speaker, that I do not attach nearly as much importance to this deficit, which I think truly exists, as does apparently the hon. member for Bruce and the official Opposition generally. If the official Opposition is of the opinion that the budget of a large province like this is in the same category as a housewife's housekeeping accounts, I would submit to you, sir, that they have a very limited concept of the role of public finance. I do not think those Gladstonian ideas about public finance have any applicability in this day and age.

The only argument that I heard from the hon. member from Bruce, that seems to me to have any merit at all, was his suggestion that deficit financing is perhaps not a good idea in an inflationary period. Even there, I feel that, when there is no coherent fiscal policy at the national level—and I certainly fail to see any—then it is quite a lot to expect a provincial government to engage in what is known as counter-cyclical financing. I just do not see that that sort of concept is relevant to the budget we have before us.

Now, having said that in trying to make my own position clear, I would at the same time like to suggest that the recurring deficits we are now suffering in the province of Ontario should be matters of some concern.

It struck me—I could be wrong—but it struck me, that the hon. Provincial Treasurer (Mr. Allan) had a tendency to dismiss them in a very cavalier fashion, in fact, to refuse even to admit that they exist. I believe that is a mistake. I am not crying havoc about the deficits of the province, but I do think that they should be receiving serious consideration.

I think, first of all, that everything possible should be done—this is always important but it is more important when we are suffering deficits—to insure very careful control over expenditures. I believe in addition—and this is much more important—that we should be actively seeking new revenues.

Now, if I could just spend one moment on the question of controlling expenditures, the Gordon committee recommended some procedures in this regard, and apparently some of its recommendations are going to be implemented. This is good, but I would like to assert the proposition that real control over expenditure should start with the budget.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer announced that, in the current fiscal year, expenditures on a variety of items will be $32 million less than the amounts voted. He claims that this is evidence of economy in operation.

This argument might be valid if this sort of thing occurred only once, but when it happens time after time, as it has in this province, I submit that it is evidence of something else, and that is chronic overestimating. The government consistently overestimates its requirements and the effect is that every year it has a cushion in its budget. The only possible result of this cushion is administrative laxity and sloppiness.

If we are going to have really strict control over expenditures, such as we need at all times—and particularly at this time—then overestimating should not be tolerated. It used to be held that overspending was the cardinal sin, but I, myself, am of the opinion that overestimating is a much more serious sin. It allows all sorts of unnecessary spending without any real pressure to eliminate it.

I suggest this is a matter the government should give consideration to. In the interests of real economy, its estimates should be much more carefully drawn up. However, that is a minor point.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Of course it is.

Mr. Bryden: It is a minor point but it is significant. A much more important matter is the question of new sources of revenue. If we are, as I submit we clearly are, suffering a deficit of something in the vicinity of $100 million, we should be considering ways and means of closing that gap.

One could probably carry the argument further than that. There are many expenditures that it would be desirable to make, that are not being undertaken. If we could eliminate the present deficit, maybe we could go on to some other expenditures.

Now, I have a number of suggestions to make as to possible new sources of revenue. I will point out right now—I am going to make 3 that I consider of particular importance—all 3 of them have been advocated in this House by my hon. leader (Mr. MacDonald) at various times in the past few years.

Unfortunately, it seems to take the government rather a long time to grasp new ideas. So, I find myself in the position where I have to repeat all of these suggestions. But the importance of getting new revenue makes it necessary to repeat ideas, if there is reasonable hope, as there certainly is, that those ideas can produce new revenues.

My first suggestion is this, that the government should greatly increase the pittance that is now received from exploitation of mineral and forest resources. These resources belong to the people of the province. They are leased out to private interests for exploitation, with the government acting as steward for the people.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): How much more money are we going to get there?

Mr. Bryden: Well, we will see.

Mr. Singer: It is a pity he could not see on the eve of the last election.

Mr. Bryden: Oh yes, I could.

The government's stewardship to date—and this refers not only to the present government but to those that preceded—its stewardship to date has been undistinguished, to put it mildly.

For example, in the case of the forest industry, the amount that the government receives from this industry, for the natural resources that belong to the people of the province, is little if any more—in fact, I think it is somewhat less—than the amount it spends on services of benefit to the industry. So the forests belonging to the people are being exploited by private interests for their own gain, and the net payment the government is exacting for these resources is approximately zero.

Now, in his budget statement, the hon. Provincial Treasurer complained that Ottawa is hogging the revenues from the forest industry. These are his exact words:

The provinces provide, at heavy cost to themselves, extensive services for forest conservation, protection and regeneration, yet by far the largest proportion of taxation paid by such companies goes to the federal government. This is an anomaly and an injustice which we have sought to have rectified.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer also pointed out that once timber stands are cut, a new crop cannot be harvested for a period of 70 years, and therefore, timber operations involve a genuine depletion of resources.

I would be inclined to go along with this argument of the hon. Provincial Treasurer, and I was inclined to go along with it, until I discovered the remedy he had in mind. His proposal is that the federal government should grant to companies engaged in logging operations the same sort of depletion allowances for income tax purposes as are now enjoyed by mining companies.

In other words, his suggestion is that the revenues, which the federal government is now receiving from Ontario's forest industry should go, not to the people of this province whose forests are being depleted, but to the companies which are depleting them. That is all that will be involved in giving these companies higher depletion allowances, or giving them depletion allowances similar to those in mining.

This is a very touching form of solicitude for the pulp and paper companies, Mr. Speaker, but I suggest that it would be more appropriate if it were directed to the people of the province.

We have much the same situation, perhaps to an even greater degree, in the case of mining. The budget statement indicated that in the year 1959 the value of mineral production in Ontario was just under $1 billion—$960 million plus. Out of this value the province, acting on behalf of the people, will receive revenues of roughly $12 million.

I submit that there is a great deal of scope for getting revenues from the resources of the province for the benefit of the people who own the resources.

The government at the present time is merely playing with mineral taxations. Private companies, many of them controlled by foreign interests, have made killings out of irreplaceable minerals belonging to the people.

An hon. member: Gold mines?

Mr. Bryden: There are some mining companies that are not making killings, but there are some that are making killings, and the gold mines made killings in their day when the hon. member's party was in power, and we got even less then than we are getting now. Unfortunately, it is too late to do anything about that now, but I submit that we should remedy the present situation.

Mr. Singer: How much are we going to get out of it?

Mr. Bryden: I submit we should remedy this now, we should get some true—

Mr. Singer: How much are we going to get out of it?

Mr. Bryden: We should get some true representation of the value of the resources that are being used.

Mr. Singer: How many dollars? Hundreds? Thousands? Millions?

Mr. Bryden: Several million dollars, but I am not presenting the estimates. A good many million dollars could be—

Mr. Singer: His hon. leader could not say it in the last election either.

Mr. Bryden: So what has that got to do with it? Is the case sound or not? It is sound.

Mr. Singer: Well, it is only sound if he can spell it out.

Mr. Bryden: I have spelled it out, that what we are getting is most inadequate. I submit that we should get a substantial amount more. There should be some realistic taxation policy more concerned about the welfare of the people and less concerned about the profits some companies get.

Now there is another area where I submit more money can be raised, and that is in the field of liquor. I face the fact—

Mr. Singer: They already said we should lower the taxes on beer.

Mr. Bryden: I have noted that the profits the liquor control board turned over, or will turn over, to the government in the current fiscal year, are about $76 million, which is a very tidy sum and no doubt very much welcomed by the hon. Provincial Treasurer. I still submit that it is far less than it ought to be, when one considers the handsome profits being made in this industry—both in manufacturing and in licenced premises.

Now, I want to make it very clear, since this is a matter on which some hon. members seem to get confused very easily, that I am not advocating any increase in the price of beer. In fact, for reasons I will not take time to go into here, I am quite opposed to any increase. They are not purely any personal reasons, Mr. Speaker, but I think—

Mr. Grossman: Political.

Mr. Bryden: No, they are not political. I think that the relative cheapness of the less strong beverages is an important consideration in any overall liquor policy.

Mr. Grossman: Remember, a king lost his head over it.

Mr. Bryden: But I submit that the government can get substantially increased revenues from this industry without any increase in consumer prices at all. The government controls prices in the industry, or can control them—how much control it is exercising at the present time is very difficult to determine—but it has the power to control prices of alcoholic beverages at every stage from the manufacture right through to the prices paid by the consumer.

If it exercised this power with less concern for the profits of the industry, it could squeeze a great deal more revenue out of this industry, without increasing consumer prices.

Mr. Singer: How much?

Mr. Bryden: And without producing unduly low profits.

Mr. Singer: How much?

Mr. Bryden: A good many million dollars.

It could do this, and I would say this, Mr. Speaker, that I see no reason why we should feel that it is necessary to make production of alcoholic beverages a particularly attractive investment, as it is at the present time.

I certainly agree that we have to make it attractive enough that people will produce beverages, since there is a demand for them.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Would the hon. member nationalize the production business?

Mr. Bryden: I would not particularly. But if that was necessary, I certainly would not shy away from it.

Mr. Singer: What is his policy?

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): We listened all afternoon, and did not hear the policy of the hon. member for York Centre.

Mr. Bryden: I am telling the hon. member my policy. That was my second point. Now, my third suggestion as to sources—

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton): What was his first one?

Mr. Bryden: New revenue is corporation profits.

An hon. member: That is a good one.

Mr. Bryden: I know that there are many hon. gentlemen here to my right and across the way who are very, very concerned about our very hard pressed corporations, who, we are told, are already paying a tax on their profits of 50 per cent.

Mr. Grossman: How high is he going to put corporation taxes?

Mr. Bryden: It is not entirely true, that they are paying 50 per cent., but that is not the point I am trying to make. My point is that the 1950's saw record high levels of corporation profits after taxes, and there is every reason to believe that this trend will continue in the 1960's. Certainly, if we accept the forecasts of the hon. Provincial Treasurer on which presumably he based his budget, it will certainly continue and profits will become even higher.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): How high is the hon. member going to put the tax?

Mr. Bryden: If one needs money, and certainly in my opinion the government of Ontario needs it, it is a good idea to look for it where it is. The corporations are the people who have it and that is the place to look for it. At the present time, Ontario levies an 11 per cent. corporation tax, but 9 per cent. of this 11 per cent. is offset against the federal tax, so that actually the net increase the corporations have to pay, as a result of the Ontario tax, is 2 per cent.

An hon. member: Where else do they have to pay any more than Ontario?

Mr. Singer: How high can we put it without driving the companies out? His hon. leader could not answer that—

Mr. Bryden: I have been engaged in many forms of endeavour relating to government activity for a long time, and it does not matter what one proposes to do—whether it is to establish a minimum wage or put limitations on hours of work, or get proper revenues, or whatever it is—always the cry is raised: "You are going to drive the poor corporations out. They are going to run away from you to some other place." We are not going to drive any corporations out by putting a reasonable tax on them.

Mr. MacDonald: They are coming in great numbers.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask the hon member for Woodbine what a 1 per cent. corporation tax would produce in Ontario.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if we increase the tax by 1 per cent., making the net they pay 3 per cent. rather than 2 per cent., we would get about $16 or $17 million out of that 1 per cent. If we made it 3 per cent., we would get about $50 million. That would be 5 per cent. over and above what they would have to pay if there were no corporation tax in this province. That would get us $50 million, which I think is pretty good money.

Mr. Wintermeyer: What per cent. increase—3 per cent.?

Mr. Bryden: It is not my function to submit detailed estimates, and I do not have the facilities to prepare them. But, taking the hon. Provincial Treasurer's own estimates of the revenues he expects to get next year from the current corporation tax, I am saying that if we tack 3 per cent. on to it, we would get another $50 million.

I think we need the $50 million, and furthermore, I think they can pay it and they will not leave the province as a result. In fact, a very substantial proportion of the expenditures the government is forced to undertake are caused by the activities of corporations, and are for their benefit. I would just like to—

Mr. M. Belanger (Windsor-Sandwich): What about the state of Michigan?

Mr. Bryden: Surely the hon. member is not trying to give me all that guff that the Republicans are spreading about the state of Michigan.

Mr. Whicher: This is no guff. I am incorporated and I cannot afford that extra 3 per cent.

Mr. Bryden: There is a basic exemption, so the hon. member does not need to worry about it.

Now, I just want to give one example of the sort of thing that corporations do that impose substantial burdens on the people of this province. This is the example of the Ford Motor Company of Canada, which, a few years ago, decided to move a substantial part of its operations from Windsor to Oakville. It did this without consulting or advising anybody, yet its action had profound consequences for the public at large and for the government in particular.

To take one phase—tremendous congestion created on the Queen Elizabeth Way in the vicinity of the 9th line of Trafalgar, so the government was forced to undertake—it had no option but to undertake—heavy capital expenditures to relieve this congestion.

The Ford Motor Company, one of the poor, oppressed outfits that some other hon. members seem to be concerned about, regularly makes a net profit, after taxes, of about $20 million a year.

Mr. Whicher: And how much is invested?

Mr. Bryden: A good part of its investment has come out of the exorbitant profits it has been able to keep and plow back. It is not new investment at all. The company makes about $20 million a year after taxes, and I submit that it, along with other corporations, should be assessed to help pay more of the costs that, to an important degree they are helping to create, and to pay for general services of the province.

Mr. Grossman: What a philosophy.

Mr. Bryden: I am not suggesting that we should not give them roads. I would like to see us provide more roads. The hon. Provincial Treasurer has adopted, as I understand it, a hold-the-line policy on highway expenditure. I regret that he has found it necessary to do so, although I would agree that, until he finds new sources of revenue, he does not have much option. So he has to find new sources of revenue. I have suggested 3, and I submit that a very substantial amount of money can be obtained from them. If other hon. members have better ideas—well, let us hear them, but we have not heard one suggestion.

As far as I can make out, from reading the budget statement, the government is pinning its hope on getting more money out of the federal government. Now I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we should face facts. The finances of the federal government are in a mess, and we are not likely to get any significant amount of additional money from the federal government in the foreseeable future. Therefore we must—

Mr. Whicher: Tory times are hard times.

Mr. Bryden: —we must develop our own sources of revenue. In this province, blessed as it is with tremendous natural resources, we have great sources of revenue that have not been tapped as yet, or have not been tapped to their limit.

Mr. Singer: Does the hon. member remember what his hon. leader told the Toronto Daily Star when he was interviewed on the eve of the last election?

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Does the hon. member for York Centre remember what his told them?

Mr. MacDonald: Go ahead and read it. He is completely irresponsible and he does not want to—

Mr. Bryden: I said a moment ago that it is not my responsibility, nor it is even possible for me, to submit detailed estimates. But I submit to hon. members that, if the 3 sources I have suggested were properly exploited, the hon. Provincial Treasurer could cover all of his current deficit and quite possibly have money left over for expansion of services.

I suggest that it is time we faced up to this problem in a realistic way. If the hon. Provincial Treasurer is not willing to accept these sources, then he should find some other sources. It is not good enough to sit back and say: "Well, we are suffering a deficit, but the people do not know about it, and as long as revenues are buoyant, it is not going to bother us very much, so we will just not worry about it."

I submit that is not a sound approach. It may work for this year, but I believe that no budget can ever be regarded exclusively in and for itself. It is part of an overall budget policy, and this budget should be forecasting new directions in policy, which it does not do, and certainly not on this basic matter of revenues.

I would now like to turn from revenues to expenditures. I must say that this is an area where one could go on at great lengths, and I will try to avoid doing so. There are a great many things I would like to talk about.

I would like to talk, for example, about municipal problems, which I have mentioned to some degree already in this House. I would also like to talk about pensions, housing, health insurance and so on. However, I am restraining myself.

The CCF programme on those matters is already very well known. It is so well known that even the Liberals have heard about it, and are starting to take over some of it. So it is reasonably well known at least to hon. members in this House.

But I would like—since I am dealing with the budget rather than general matters of policy—to turn my attention to one or two items which I think have particular relevance to the budget, apart altogether from their worthiness in themselves.

I think that some of the types of expenditures—this may sound a little paradoxical at first but I will try to explain it—I think some of the expenditures that I am here going to propose would, in time, help to solve the problem of balancing the budget.

There are types of expenditures which may, in a particular year, represent a net increase in cost, but which, over a period of time, can have the effect of either decreasing expenditures or increasing revenues or both.

I think there is a particular need at this time to consider some of those expenditures. There are a good many that could be mentioned. I happen to have a particular interest in one or two of them, and I am going to deal with those.

The two items in which I am most interested are mental health services and penal reform.

I doubt if it is necessary for me to deal at great length with the serious problems created by mental illness in a modern, North American civilization. It is undoubtedly one of the great cripplers of our time, and its effects are much greater than merely what we see in committals to mental institutions. Those are the extreme cases, but general mental ill health has a crippling effect in many other ways—in decreasing efficiency, in contributing to other disabilities including such disabilities as alcoholism, and—I would submit—in contributing to crime.

If we can do something in the mental health field—and just in case the hon. Minister might get a little worried, I am not suggesting nothing is done—but let me put it this way, everything we can do in the mental health field can be an economy for us in the long run, because when somebody is committed to a mental hospital—or for that matter to a jail—the community suffers a double cost.

First, there is the direct cost of maintaining that person in the institution; and second, there is the much greater indirect cost occasioned by the loss of his contribution to economic production. When our economic production suffers, sooner or later it reflects back on the hon. Provincial Treasurer, because his capacity to raise revenues is thereby reduced.

This may be a matter on which we could legitimately ask for assistance from the federal government because, if production suffers, the federal government suffers, too. Its capacity to raise revenues will suffer. Anything we can do to solve this problem will be an economy to us if, in the long run, it will assist in the preparation of future budgets. I state this quite apart from the obvious humanitarian aspects involved.

The budget envisages an increase of $11 million in expenditures on health services, and some of this is for mental health services. I will say quite frankly that the government is to be commended on this increase. I think it is in the right direction. But I submit that it is far less than is necessary, and it is far less than we should be undertaking.

I quite agree that this is a matter of opinion—and the hon. Provincial Treasurer has his problems and he has to try to strike a balance, in consultation with his colleagues, as best he can—but I submit, apart altogether from the humanitarian aspects and considering only the economic aspects, there is a powerful argument in favour of a very substantial increase in this type of expenditure.

I believe that mental health should be a top priority item in the budget, not merely to build institutions—though these are certainly needed—but even more, to build up preventive services in the community and, even more important than that, to expand research.

As various people know, I happened to be up in Orillia two or three months ago, and I had a number of very interesting discussions with the staff there.

I think one point that everyone made to me, and they were talking quite independently of each other, was that they had tremendous material for research in their institution but no time to do anything about it. That is a tragic situation. I do not know if it is duplicated in other institutions, but I suspect it probably is. And it is a tragic situation.

There is no easy answer to the problems of mental health. Research is most necessary, and as research develops, we will be in a better position to build up better services. But even now, I submit, there are many areas for improvement of services.

I would like to take just one example. I am particularly concerned about this since it applies to young people, because they are at the turning point where they can become productive citizens in the community or they can end up in mental institutions or in jails.

Take the case of the youngster who is so disturbed that he cannot really be kept in a foster home, and yet he is such a serious case that he could appropriately go to a mental hospital. What happens to him? What might possibly happen to him and sometimes does happen to him, is that he goes to jail, or to what we call a reform institution, even though he has committed no crime.

Now, even if we do nothing more than to develop some sort of treatment centres—some of which would have to be residential but small—where these children could get some of the things they have lacked in life, as far as it is possible for trained staff to give to them—some sense of belonging, some love that they have lacked before—then we will not only have done a great thing from the humanitarian point of view, but we will have helped to solve the problems of Provincial Treasurers in the future.

I say this because these people, instead of becoming charges on the community as there is a real danger they may be now, will be contributing to the production of the community.

Very similar considerations apply in the area of penal reform. It is very difficult to know exactly what the government is doing in this field at the present time. A few years ago, my hon. leader exposed the very undesirable conditions existing in some of the reform institutions of this province, and since then, the government has announced some important changes in policy.

I must say, however, that I have the uncomfortable feeling that these announcements, or some of them, are very like many other government announcements. They catch headlines but they do not reflect any significant action. It is possible I am wrong in that, but I doubt it.

In fact, I have come to the conclusion—watching this government operate over the years—that it has worked out some sort of a formula to the effect that the utility of an announcement is in inverse ratio to the action taken. In other words, if they do not do anything, they can make the same announcements year after year and catch the same headline year after year, and I am afraid—

Mr. Grossman: Is that what the CCF does? That is what the hon. member's party does.

Mr. Bryden: I am very much afraid that may be the case in penal reform.

Mr. Grossman: Those fellows are very adept at that.

Mr. Bryden: Whether or not my suspicions in this regard are well founded, it is certainly beyond dispute—and I would challenge anyone to dispute it—that the reform institutions of this province are a long way from being the therapeutic communities which were set forth as the ideal at the congress of corrections held at Vancouver last year.

Mr. Grossman: That is a pretty safe remark—

Mr. Bryden: I agree it is a very safe remark. I doubt if it can be challenged. But I think it is time something was done. I think it is time our penal institutions ceased to be punitive, and ceased to have any punitive aspects, and became wholly curative in their atmosphere and their objectives.

Mr. Grossman: That is a great dream, that is.

Mr. Bryden: They should be regarded as hospitals, similar in many ways to mental hospitals—

Mr. Grossman: Private?

Mr. Bryden: —where an earnest effort is made to cure disturbed and hostile individuals.

Mr. MacDonald: I thought the hon. member for St. Andrew was on the right side.

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Bryden: Now, Mr. Speaker, I heard somebody say that these are fairly tales I am telling. Well, maybe I am telling fairy tales, but I am relying on people who are much better qualified in this field than the hon. Provincial Secretary (Mr. Phillips).

I would refer in particular to some articles which appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail last August, by Dr. Howard Jones, a very distinguished student of penology who, for a year, was a visiting lecturer in the school of social work at the University of Toronto, and this is the sort of thing that he sets forth.

Mr. Grossman: Oh well, we know that he was qualified.

Mr. Bryden: Now, this is like any reform. Whenever a person advocates that something should be done to make the situation better, one can always count on the dead weight of Toryism to say it is impossible, it is an impractical dream. That one can always count on. Then, when finally the circumstances become inescapable and the Tories start moving in the direction that has been advocated—

Mr. MacDonald: The pioneers!

Mr. Bryden: —they start to claim they are pioneering and they say: "Look at what a fine job we are doing."

Mr. Grossman: Well, why are not the CCF in power to do it?

Mr. Bryden: But this sort of thing is already happening in Canada, not in perfection at all but certainly as far as direction of action is concerned.

I boasted before the supper adjournment this evening that I had never, of my own initiative, raised the matter of Saskatchewan in this House. I am afraid I am going to have to break my rule this time. It is Dr. Jones who forces me to do it.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): What paper is that?

Mr. Bryden: I would like to read a couple of extracts from one of his articles.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Where did these articles appear?

Mr. MacDonald: The Globe and Mail, the hon. Prime Minister's Bible.

Mr. Bryden: In the Globe and Mail.

I would be very glad to let the hon. Prime Minister see these articles if he did not notice them at the time. I think he will find them very interesting.

I will quote a couple of extracts from one of the articles of Dr. Jones. This is an expert from England who has, I am sure, no axe to grind as far as this country is concerned. I think his judgment is about as objective as anyone's could be. He says:

But after all is said and done, it has been left for the sparsely populated and none too opulent province of Saskatchewan to blaze a path for the rest of Canada to follow. It is in the two Saskatchewan jails at Regina and Prince Albert that pioneering work has most nearly resulted in the creation of true correctional institutions.

Mr. MacDonald: Look at Ontario.

Mr. Grossman: I told hon. members he would say that.

Mr. Bryden: He goes on to say a little later;

The Saskatchewan jails have old and unsatisfactory buildings. Their inmate populations are mixed; there is little scope for classification—

Mr. Grossman: Shame, shame.

Mr. Bryden: He does not give any clean bill of health as one can see. I continue:

—but the attitudes of the staff are forward looking and the administration is willing to experiment.

As a result, these institutions are veritable penological laboratories.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: I continue the quote:

They are working not only through the traditional methods of social work, but—in their group counselling work for instance—they are expanding these methods. They are even carrying out, in collaboration with the pioneering Dr. Osmond of Weyburn mental hospital, daring experiments in drug therapy.

If Oakalla can be said to have carried into effect most of the ideas of contemporary penology, Regina and Prince Albert can claim to be working out the penology of the future.

Mr. Grossman: I always said Saskatchewan was the place for convicts.

Mr. Bryden: I think, Mr. Speaker, it is the penology of the future that we have to be concerned with—particularly when we are concerned with budget matters—because it is the penology of the future that is going to save us a great deal of money.

I heard the hon. member for St. Andrew say something about convicts. I regret he made that reference. I believe he is fundamentally a very strong believer in human rights. I am myself convinced—and I probably do not have to convince anyone in this House—that the question of the treatment of people who have been committed to jail is a very important phase of human rights, and one that is too often neglected.

It is very easy and very comforting to say of people who end up in jail: "Thank God I am not as other men are," but I submit, Mr. Speaker, that we would be a lot more honest if we said: "There, but for the grace of God, go I."

Mr. H. Worton (Wellington South): At Guelph they said "What a friend we have in Jesus" and then went off and—

Mr. Bryden: Unfortunately, we find it necessary, in our present stage of social development, to lock people up either in mental hospitals or in jail. That we have to do. I do not see how we can escape it sometimes. But I think we should face up to the fact that the act of incarceration—every time it takes place—represents a failure of society, and since we are part of society we cannot escape our individual responsibility.

Mr. MacDonald: Read the Toronto Daily Star's editorial today.

Mr. Grossman: That is an old one.

Mr. Bryden: Who are we to pass judgment on human beings who, unloved and rejected, revolt against the society which rejected them? I believe, Mr. Speaker, that this is one of the major problems of our day. It is a major problem from a humanitarian point of view, and it is a major problem from a budget point of view.

I would like to add that the term penal reform, as I use it, includes more than merely the penal institution. In fact, in a way, I think the institution is the least important part. I think it is important that institutions should be improved as much as possible, but really it would be much better if we could find ways to keep people out of the institutions altogether.

This brings up two questions. I will deal with them one at a time.

First is the question of probation services, which—in this province—comes under The Attorney-General's Department and for which an amount of $1.15 million is proposed in the estimates for the coming fiscal year.

I do not see any need to exaggerate any point I want to make, and I agree that that is a significant expenditure of money and a very worthwhile expenditure of money.

But I submit that, in a province of this size, it is far from being adequate, and that our probation services should be greatly increased.

I regret to say I have forgotten what the average case load of probation officers is—the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) would undoubtedly be able to give it to us—but, according to my recollection, it certainly is far greater than human beings can be expected to carry.

Hon. A. K. Roberts (Attorney-General): Would my hon. friend allow me just to say there, Mr. Speaker, for a moment, that those figures, of course, are the provincial figures, but that there is a lot of money spent beyond that. Municipalities—take Metro itself, which is spending $500,000—

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Attorney-General has done nothing about it.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, I will concede all that. I am still suggesting that, although it is a significant amount of money, it is not enough for the problem, and the problem is a very important one. Getting back to the point that I am basically interested in, which is to consider the economy of some of these expenditures, I would like to refer back to Dr. Jones' article.

In that article he states that the cost of keeping a man in prison is somewhere between $1,500 and $2,500 per year, depending I suppose to some extent on the quality of the prison and the degree of security exercised there.

He then quotes Mr. Coughlan as estimating that first-class probationary supervision can be provided for about $250 a year.

So I submit that, when I am asking for, or suggesting, an increase in funds spent on probation services, I am proposing something that is going to save us money—if not this year, certainly in the very near future.

Furthermore, there is the other end of the scale, the rehabilitation of the prisoner. Sooner or later he gets out of jail, fortunately. It is a major problem in the case of the person released from an institution—an institution which, to an important degree, is punitive has certainly fallen far short of reforming him—of helping him adjust to the society with which he has been in conflict. So, when he comes back into society, the problem of rehabilitation is acute, and I think every hon. member will recognize it.

What do we do about it? Well, we leave rehabilitation mainly in the hands of private agencies, very fine private agencies—the John Howard society, and the Elizabeth Fry society in the main.

What do we as a province contribute to this rehabilitation work? Well, unless I am reading next year's estimates incorrectly, we are proposing, according to the item headed "prisoners' rehabilitation expenses", the pitiful figure of $25,000. This, I am satisfied, includes the total grants made to both the John Howard society and the Elizabeth Fry society combined, and I am not sure that it does not include something else besides. Now, Mr. Speaker, this just is not connected with reality.

I am not criticizing the government's policy of leaving rehabilitation, to an important degree, in the hands of these very fine voluntary societies. But I submit that the grants paid to them should exceed the amount proposed for next year by many, many times.

I am not going to tell hon. members exactly how many times, but I think it should exceed it by a great many times.

So those are two areas of expenditure which I think are particularly important from a budgetary point of view, apart altogether from the humanitarian implications. I think they are sound economics and they will help to solve budget problems in the future.

And there is one other item of expenditure, and this is the only other item of expenditure I am going to talk about, where I think it is possible to achieve economies in the long run by spending now. That item relates to the public service of this province.

All hon. members received a few days ago the same documents that I received, which consisted of a brief presented by the civil service association—or a memorandum they call it—to the government in January of this year, a brief they submitted containing specific proposals for amendment of The Public Service Act, and a covering letter.

In their brief, they deal with a great many matters. I am not going to go into them all.

They all appear reasonable to me, but I must confess that I am not familiar with all of the facts of some of them.

They cover such matters as a personnel survey—I believe it is a sort of job classification survey they have in mind—the very important question of casual employees on which surely some action is long overdue, the 40-hour week, group welfare plans, payment for overtime, suggestion award plans, some of the problems related to superannuation plans, and so on. These are all matters dealt in the brief presented to the government.

In the covering letter, dated February 24, which was sent to all hon. members of the legislative assembly of Ontario, we find these highly significant sentences:

You will find, on reading the memorandum, that the subjects contained therein are for the most part continuing ones, and we are a little concerned at the lack of action, particularly in such areas as casual employees, group welfare plans, payment for overtime and The Public Service Act.

We feel, with some justification, that these matters have been deserving of immediate attention, and we would appreciate your support when the matters come before you.

Now, I think that is a very tragic—if I may use that word—sort of letter for the public servants of this province to have to write to the hon. members of the Legislature. They say the matters they are bringing to our attention are continuing ones. They have been bringing them up time after time, and yet they still have to bring them up over and over again. Surely the public servant is entitled to action on the matters outlined here.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that it is a false economy to chisel from the public service, to make them the victims of the Diefenbaker "hold-the-line" policy.

Once again I am raising an issue which has other important implications, but I am particularly interested in it from a budget point of view. The economies the government is effecting at the expense of the public servant are false economies, and this province and the government of the province will pay for those economies in the long run.

The basic problem they complain of is lack of action on a great many matters, and I believe they are justified in this complaint. I may say they also complain about this matter of political patronage, but I will not deal with that because that seems to be a rather sensitive matter.

Mr. Grossman: Yes sir, he has browned off that one.

Mr. Bryden: I will deal with it on some other occasion. Let the hon. members not think they have heard the last from me on it.

Mr. Grossman: Searching your files first?

Mr. MacDonald: You would be surprised.

Mr. Bryden: But I submit that the basic problem is the failure of the government to act on the eminently reasonable request of the civil service association of this province for collective bargaining rights. If there were a recognized procedure for the association, representing the public servants of the province, to sit down and negotiate written agreements with this government, then a great many of these problems would be solved.

I am not saying that public servants would get everything they are asking for, for it is very rarely that any employee group gets everything it asks for. But they would have a proper procedure for dealing with these matters, and for getting proper action on them.

At the present time, the government has created a group of second-class citizens in this province consisting of public servants and some municipal employees—

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Oh, come off it.

Mr. MacDonald: The government is denying them their basic rights.

Some hon. members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Bryden: It states, as a matter of public policy, that employers should bargain collectively with organizations representing their employees. It should be setting an example for private employers, yet it is not willing to implement the same policy itself. It has put these people into the position of second-class citizens.

The very reasonable request contained in the proposed amendments to The Public Service Act relating to collective bargaining—that, at least, should be dealt with at this session of the Legislature. I believe that all of these requests should be considered, but that one cannot wait any longer.

Mr. G. F. Laverne (Russell): They are back in bed with you now.

Mr. Bryden: I would like to say that I do not speak without experience in this matter.

There are people apparently who are still living in the 19th century who feel somehow that these basic human liberties should be denied to public servants and that, if they are granted to them, some terrible consequence will follow.

Well, as I said, I speak with some personal knowledge of this subject because, as has been pointed out many times in this House, for a period of 5 years—including the pioneering years—I was associated with a government which granted full collective bargaining rights to its civil servants.

I regret to say it is the only government in Canada that has granted such bargaining rights, but for 15 years that government has consistently negotiated collective agreements, entered into written agreements, and signed them, with associations representing not only the employees of Crown corporations—they certainly are covered—but also with the civil service association of the province representing the employees in the public service. For 15 years it has done that.

In fact, when we brought into effect an Act governing labour relations and collective bargaining, we provided in that Act that it would apply to the Crown in the right of the province.

Mr. W. E. Johnston: How many civil servants are there?

Mr. Bryden: What has that got to do with it? There are as many civil servants as are needed and no more, and they have regularly negotiated collective agreements, and I will say to this government that has been of benefit to the government as well as to the civil servants.

I will also agree—and I was in on many of these matters—that there were times when those of us who were on the employer side of the fence wondered what we had got ourselves into. Sometimes, things looked pretty tough, and we were having trouble getting agreements, but that is just part of the process of democratic bargaining. Certainly, there is no guarantee that there is going to be agreement on everything.

All I am proposing is that the two parties—the employer, in this case the Crown as represented by the government, and the employees, the civil servants—should be prepared to sit down and hammer out their differences. Let us get over this business of saying: “Well, we disagree with you, so therefore you are out of luck.” Let us get to the true democratic basis of settling differences by negotiations.

I submit that this will improve morale in the civil service, it will be of benefit to the government—and therefore, to the people of the province—and it will be an economy in the long run. It may cost us some money in some instances in the present, but in the long run it will be money well spent.

I have suggested 3 specific policies whereby we can increase revenues. I have also suggested 3 items of expenditure which I submit will also help to increase revenues in time, or at any rate to decrease expenditures and thereby improve our position.

Mr. Grossman: How will the last one increase revenue?

Mr. Bryden: We will have a more enthusiastic civil service with better morale, and we will avoid the very serious risk we are running now of losing top grade personnel because we are not giving conditions which top grade personnel would care to work under. If we do not watch out, we will end up by getting the least efficient employees in the labour market, whereas we should be getting the most efficient.

Mr. MacDonald: Tory paternalism.

Mr. Bryden: Now, Mr. Speaker, I have made a number of concrete suggestions which I think, if adopted, would improve the budget we have before us. Perhaps the government will not see fit to adopt them. They may say the suggestions are no good. That is fine, but why do they not come forward with something of their own? They are certainly not facing up to the problems appearing in their own budget.

I have made suggestions for improving the budget, but I would not like to sit down leaving the impression that I believe this budget, if it were patched up even in some major respects—and I believe that the changes I have suggested are pretty major—would be satisfactory. As far as I am concerned, it would be unsatisfactory even with some substantial revision, because I personally do not agree with the fundamental assumptions on which the budget is based.

In my concluding remarks, I want to analyze those fundamental assumptions briefly and try to give some indication of why I do not agree with them. This budget is essentially an expression of 19th century laissez-faire Liberalism, modified as such Liberalism has been modified by events. It is modified but essentially the underlying philosophy is that of laissez-faire Liberalism which is—

Mr. Grossman: Don't call us Liberals.

Mr. Belanger: They are not Liberals; we are.

Mr. Bryden: Well, if it is an honour to be called a laissez-faire Liberal, I will leave the honour entirely in the possession of the hon. member. I am not calling the hon. gentlemen anything, but I am saying their budget is an expression of that philosophy, modified as inevitably it has to be in this modern age.

That philosophy is based—and therefore this budget is really based—on the assumption that greed is a virtue, that the greatest thing in the world is to get more money for yourself. That is the fundamental philosophy of laissez-faire Liberalism, and it is the fundamental philosophy expressed in this budget.

A concomitant of that is that the most important thing in the world is private expenditure, that hardly anything is more important than to get a new car, even though the car one already has is quite adequate, that material expenditure is the important thing of life, and so—

Mr. Grossman: Well, it is a pretty good speech, do not try to expound socialism.

Mr. Bryden: Well, the hon. member can use his own words but I am just expounding some common sense. I think it is time—in this year of our Lord 1960—that we recognize the total inadequacy of the social philosophy which is predominant in many aspects of our community. In our economy as now organized, we cannot find ways of keeping the wheels of production going except by further and further stimulation of private expenditure.

A whole industry has grown up to hammer and hammer at people that they must buy, buy, buy. Then strangely enough, when the working man, seeing this on television and in the newspapers and everywhere else, accepts it, and says “Well, by gosh, maybe I should buy, buy, buy and I would like a little money to do some of the buying with,” then the finger of editorial scorn is pointed at him. He is undermining our foreign markets, he is destroying our whole economy.

We cannot have it both ways. We cannot say one must buy, and then say that one cannot have the means for buying. That is the contradiction in which we are involved at the present time. However, that is a phase of the matter I will not elaborate on at this time.

I would like to consider this false philosophy as it affects the very type of document which the hon. Provincial Treasurer submitted to us last Thursday, the budget of the province. With this false, distorted philosophy, with its emphasis on private expenditure, the result is that public services are constantly starved.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer, I am sure, would like to do all sorts of things in his budget that he has not been able to do, but he is always up against this worship of the false god of private expenditure. He cannot find ways, or he feels he cannot find ways, to raise the money to undertake the type of services he would like to provide.

This is a ridiculous contradiction, and it is time we started to face up to it. Let me give hon. members one example.

The hon. Provincial Treasurer, as I stated before and I believe correctly, has reached the point where he is holding the line—I think that would be the right expression, holding the line—on highway expenditures; but nobody has made any decision to hold the line on turning out cars from the assembly lines, day after day, week after week.

Look at the ridiculous contradiction involved here. A car is totally useless unless one has a road to drive it on, and a car loses a great deal of its utility if it finally is driven on roads that are so clogged up that one cannot get any enjoyment from pleasure-driving or any efficient use of the roads for business purposes.

The public expenditure is absolutely vital in order to give utility to the private expenditure, and yet, we are in the position where public services in all directions are starved. Our streams are polluted, and then we rush and scramble around and try to cure this, instead of taking action to prevent it from happening in the first place. Private profit, private expenditure, is so vital that nobody ever thinks about that until the private enterprise is in danger of strangling itself. Then we do something about pollution of streams, when it costs more.

We allow communities to grow up without any real planning even of their physical aspects, much less of the much more important social phases of community life. We are already building slums of the future on the outskirts of Toronto, and some day we will face the problem at a tremendous cost. But we are unwilling now, in this distorted social philosophy under which we operate, to give due regard to the importance of public expenditure.

I would submit, Mr. Speaker, that this is a problem of world significance. I am not suggesting that the hon. Provincial Treasurer, in his budget, can solve the problems of the universe, but this is a problem of world significance and I do not think we can afford in 1960 to ignore some of the broad implications of our disregard for some values that are a little more important than merely material values.

For example, I have been very interested in articles I have been getting from Mr. Duncan, the chairman of Hydro, with regard to China. It is very interesting to note that two people with such diverse backgrounds and points of view as Mr. Duncan and Mr. E. B. Jolliffe have both been to China in the past two or three years, and report very much the same things about that country. I think we should be concerned about some of the things that are happening there.

I am not going to quote from either Mr. Jolliffe or Mr. Duncan. I am going to quote from still another authority, Father Gerald McKernan who, for many years, was a missionary in China and who on October 25, 1959, delivered a radio broadcast over CJBC in the World of Religion Series. This broadcast so impressed me that I asked for a copy of it, and the Catholic Information Centre was kind enough to go to considerable trouble to get a copy and to send it to me.

I would like to quote a few paragraphs from Father McKernan's statement. He speaks out of many years of experience of life in China and with all the knowledge of the terrible persecution that takes place there, and he certainly is not understating it in any way. I would like to read what he has to say about some phases of the Chinese experiment:

China gave itself an ideal, drafted its own reforms, callous and ruthless as they may be. China levelled off society, introduced some progress. Above all, China put the little man in prominence, fostered the cult of the common good, the personal spirit of sacrifice. Everyone is urged or driven to dedicate himself to something bigger than himself. To the—

Mr. Grossman: Driven?

Mr. Bryden: Yes, driven, quite true. I continue:

To the people of the smaller Asian nations, China is a big brother of awe-inspiring grandeur.

And I think we should bear that in mind. Now, continuing with Father McKernan:

Compare this messianic ideology in its Asian context with the sickening trash they receive from western radio. What do they think of our approach? They listen to our earthy materialism with never a thought, never an indication of anything more inspiring than backyard swimming pools, juke-boxes, or supermarkets. Whenever will we wise up that, in talking so, we are literally stuffing "communism" down everybody's throat, goading everyone into a well-nurtured hatred of the impossible North American way of life?

And then, continuing a little later, Father McKernan asks:

How long will our individualistic concepts hold out? What impact can they have on the masses? How can they stand up in the face of Red insistence that man must learn to sublimate his ego to the common good? Left in the lurch, with a veneer of theology, we will see the nations of the East arise, inspired by a mystic elan, to practice the gospel on the basis of atheism.

These are the trends and stresses rarely discussed in western circles. We groan over the miseries, calamities, privation of freedom, the frightening upheavals that have befallen China. We are fearful too that something similar may well overtake the other "uncommitted Asian nations." We neglect to consider the inspirations behind the upheaval, the spirit of self-sacrifice for the common good.

Such an ideal is Christian. And here we are sitting idly by, while the communists steal our line. Is it too far-fetched to suspect that some cosmic stress and strain afflicts the world—that the West, softened or hardened by its materialism, greed, individualism, is faced with a lesson that few discern? Certainly we are besprinkled with Christian touches here and there, but we are not definitely inspired altogether by Christian ideals. In the world today, it appears as if "an idealism, a mystic ideal of self-sacrifice, is arising from the atheism of the East," and a "creeping materialism threatens to smother every vestige of idealism in the Christian West."

Somebody said I was reading a sermon. Well, I think this is a sermon and I think that perhaps sermons—

Mr. Grossman: What is the hon. member's suggestion, what should we do about it?

Mr. Bryden: I think perhaps that sermons are of value, and in this world we live in today, we cannot isolate ourselves from the great forces that are operating in countries like China, terrifying as they are. They are there, and we cannot isolate ourselves from them. We must offer something better, and with the crass materialism which is so prominent a part of the society we live in, as Father McKernan pointed out, we have not too much to offer.

I am not suggesting that the hon. Provincial Treasurer can solve the problems of the universe. I am not suggesting that he can necessarily, in one budget, solve even a great many problems in our own province.

I do suggest, however, that we have been living in a fool's paradise too long, and it is time that we started to consider some of these basic problems, some of the problems of the motivation and objective of our society. Is the purpose of our society merely, or primarily, the satisfaction of some material fancy?

This sort of problem, I submit, is dealt with quite appropriately in a budget address. It goes beyond the scope of the budget, as the hon. member for St. Andrew has been so anxious to point out to me, but I believe that no budget means anything except in terms of the philosophy on which it is based. I believe that the philosophy on which this budget is based is an antiquated, outmoded philosophy which has no survival value in the year 1960.

We cannot solve the problems of the universe, but we can do our part to contribute to some new ideal, some greater ideals than those that are inspiring our society at the present time. We can do our part in that direction, and I want now to get back to a point I was making a little while ago, that some new and realistic consideration of the role of public expenditure, as opposed to merely private expenditure, would be an important new step in that direction.

It may be unpopular, I do not know, but certainly we should start to give consideration to that type of problem. If we did, Mr. Speaker, some of the budgetary problems which the hon. Provincial Treasurer is now faced with would be much less acute in the future.

But with the antiquated modes of thought that we have now accepted, we are going to intensify our budget problems in the future in this province. What is even worse, we are going to be part of a declining civilization that will be replaced by new philosophies, very undesirable and brutal philosophies, but nevertheless vital philosophies. They will take the place of the philosophy that is expressed in such documents as this budget.

Unless we can inspire a new vitality and a new virility in our society—I believe we have everything needed to do that—there will be a much more important issue at stake than merely whether or not the Ontario budget for this year is satisfactory. It will be the issue of survival itself.

Mr. R. J. Boyer (Muskoka): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

SPEECH FROM THE THRONE

Mr. J. P. Spence (Kent East): Mr. Speaker, in my speech to represent the riding of Kent East I want to pay my compliments to you, sir, on your election to this traditionally honoured post as Speaker of this assembly. I well realize your task is no easy one, and I can assure you of my co-operation in making your duties as effective and impartial as you desire them to be.

You follow a very distinguished figure who, in the last 4 years, held the respect of every hon. member in this House for his distinguished service. I know I share the feelings of all the hon. members who served under the hon. member for Dufferin-Simcoe (Mr. Downer) when I say thanks for a job well done.

Mr. Speaker, I want to congratulate the hon. member for Ottawa West (Mr. Morrow) who will take on new responsibilities as the chairman of the committee of the whole House. He too has finally earned a deserved recognition of his abilities after a long service in this House.

To the new hon. members I can only say welcome, knowing well how I felt when I first entered this assembly, seeking to become familiar with the rules and procedures, looking about for comfort when I rose to speak.

I just want to say that it will not be long before they will feel at home. They will find here all good people, just as I know all the new hon. members are in the eyes of those people who endorsed them in their respective ridings.

I feel greatly honoured again to represent the riding of Kent East in this twenty-sixth Ontario Legislature. It is with great satisfaction that I look about me and see every one of my Liberal hon. colleagues re-elected on June 11, along with an equal number of new hon. colleagues who helped to double our representation.

Mr. Speaker, having become familiar with my new hon. colleagues' abilities in caucus, I know they will contribute greatly to work in this House.

In our leader, the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), we have found an inspiration which has led our Liberal party to a new level. He has proved to be a man of great ability, capable of the type of guidance to his followers that is necessary if we as a province are to move forward.

Certainly I, as a farmer, know that my hon. leader has always shown interest and grasp of the problems of the Ontario farmers. My hon. colleagues tell me that he is equally devoted to the problems of labour, industrial development and humanities. Each man must find his mark, and we have found a man who has found his. The next logical step will be his election as Prime Minister of the province.

Kent East is a distinctive part of the province of Ontario, enjoying a moderate climate which produces a rich and diversified agricultural economy. We have no large urban areas, but we have many friendly towns and villages containing businesses and small industries which are vital to our development. Commercial fishing is carried on on the shores of Lake Erie.

Also, we have one of the finest parks in the province of Ontario—the Rondeau provincial park. I have been informed that last year this park had one of its busiest seasons, catering to people both from Ontario and the United States. It creates important business for our towns and villages, and it is a vital medium of advertising in that area. The hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) has indicated that more improvements will be made at Rondeau provincial park.

At the moment, in passing, I would like to say to the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests that he has demonstrated a real natural ability in filling that ministerial post. He is imaginative, and I want to thank him for the interest in Rondeau provincial park.

Many of our young men are attending the western Ontario agricultural school at Ridgetown, working and making use of the facilities and experimental farm there. Through this farm, great opportunities are available to our young farmers in south-western Ontario who take advantage of the training and experience gained there.

This year, new improvements have taken place including a new livestock building. A bull testing barn was officially opened. We appreciate the fact that the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) ordered these new improvements. The building will add greatly to the effectiveness of this farm.

Mr. W. A. Stewart (Middlesex North): He is not such a bad fellow.

Mr. Spence: I cannot avoid some comments, Mr. Speaker, about one of the foundations of the farm policy in the province of Ontario. For the life of me, I cannot understand why this government ran away from the responsibility of the junior farmers' loans. The junior farmers' loan board has assisted many young men in this province to get started into agriculture.

The Frost government, in their appeal to the people last June, had this to say, Mr. Speaker. I am quoting from his official speakers' handbook here, faced with the picture that is known across this province as that of the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario. It said first, on page 2, of this historic document:

Agriculture is still Ontario's No. 1 industry.

On page 3 of this New York produced document, it says: "How to Keep Them Down on the Farm", then goes on to say:

The Progressive-Conservative party has long been aware of the need of keeping young people on the farms, offering them loans to become established on their own.

Accordingly it says:

It operates a junior farm establishment loan corporation having as its object the making of loans, assisting qualified young farmers to be established development operators of their own farms.

This is what this propaganda had to say, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): What is that, Mad magazine?

Mr. Spence: Because the handbook was bordered on the front page by the picture of the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario, young people interested in agriculture believed this to be true, because in their praise and the integrity of human beings, they could not believe that a party could spend so many hundreds of thousands of dollars to print this beautiful magazine unless they really meant it.

It is, Mr. Speaker, the time-honoured responsibility of the province to undertake the keeping of our young people, we cannot ridicule the great contribution of our agricultural college and school in my riding towards preparing young people for their place in the agriculture industry.

Mr. Speaker, in this very book I have here, it says "still Ontario's No. 1 industry." In the period between the election and the session, the hon. Minister of Agriculture has abandoned his jurisdiction over the junior farmers' loans in Ontario. He said that, regardless of study of possible junior farmer talent in Ontario and our own opportunity to assess these young people, we are transferring to Ottawa the sole right to decide what shall be done with our greatest asset, our farm youth, and the determination, what they call, last June, Ontario's No. 1 industry.

The hon. Minister did not say anything about the Ontario burley tobacco farmers last week. He should have said: "I will do all I can to help the burley tobacco growers find a market for their surplus burley tobacco in the province of Ontario."

Now, I want to turn to agriculture in the county of Kent East. The people in this industry are not very happy with the trend of that day. During the last federal election, we in the farming industry were promised attention to our problems. Changes in principle from price support to deficiency payments thrust the small producer to disaster. There is a Conservative programme underway to drive the small farmer out of business with bad prices. By creating a shortage, prices will be upgraded; through vertical integration, corporate farming will move in. The end is less than 10 years away if we do not give realistic valuation of the problem.

From official speeches and comments in Ottawa, Mr. Speaker, we are told there are too many misfits in farming, and on looking up misfits in the Oxford Concise Dictionary, I found the word, the meaning of the word to be garment. It does not fit the person for whom it is meant. I say to you, Mr. Speaker, that this attitude to smear among the farmers has caused more trouble than the mismanaged hog vote a short time ago.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): He is speaking of those across the aisle.

Mr. Spence: Farmer is looking at farmer to try to decide who are the misfits, and which farmer should get out and abandon his farm to meet the philosophy of the New York advertising people, voiced by the Progressive-Conservative party at Ottawa, and echoed right here, Mr. Speaker, by the Progressive-Conservative party in Queen's Park.

Ontario farmers do not deserve this kind of treatment. It is one thing to be neglected all these years, it is another thing now to be insulted by the elected government.

Who is the farmer and who wears the farmer's garment which does not fit? Name him. Do not smear the whole industry. Tell us if it is the man with the 50-acre farm, the 100-acre farm or the 200-acre farm. Tell us if they want to chase out the egg producer, the hog producer or the corn producer, but do not continue going around telling the people that a lot of farmers are misfits. Farmers fed the people for years, they still continue to feed them.

I know the hon. Minister of Agriculture of this province cannot say very much, because the hon. Prime Minister of this province is the boss. But I wonder why they search for misfits in agriculture, when we might look here in the government.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Look at them over there. Look at them over there.

Mr. Spence: These misfits are suffering from staggering increases in imports from the United States by Ottawa. Reading Hansard, dated March 20, 1957, I found the hon. member for Wellington-Dufferin (Mr. Root) had the following to say about the last Liberal government in Ottawa. I quote from page 1411:

Mr. Wren: The honourable Mr. Root. Root-te-toot.

Mr. Spence: This is what he had to say:

I feel that the federal government has failed to discharge their responsibility to our farmers. They have lost many of our export markets. They do nothing about the spread between what the producer receives and what the consumer pays.

He also quotes, right on the same page, a statement of policy of the hon. Minister of Finance that there had been a deliberate policy of allowing goods into the country to restrain the rise in the price of the Canadian goods.

It then goes on to say that we in Canada—

Exported $24,000 worth of mutton and lamb, and in the same period imported $1,699,421.

He says the same is true about poultry and turkeys. Then he goes on to say looking at beef:

Our beef producers are faced with great difficulty in finding markets for their products. The government in Ottawa has allowed the importation to this country, in the first 10 months of 1956—

he says,

—of $6,341,000 worth of beef and beef products because hon. Mr. Harris wishes to keep goods available and restrain the advances in prices.

I think, when one considers these figures, that it will be realized why, in spite of the best efforts of this government—he says—the farmers are in a critical condition.

“As the hon. Mr. Harris says,” he quotes, let me repeat:

Heavy imports, particularly from the United States, helped to restrain the rising

Canadian prices by making more goods available.

In looking at the Dominion bureau statistics for 1959, and for 9 months with a Conservative government in Ottawa, over $49 million worth of meats of all kinds was imported to Canada, in 10 months of 1959—

Some Liberal hon. members: Shame, shame.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): The hon. Minister will have to make another speech now.

Mr. Spence: My hon. friend was complaining when they imported $1,699,421 in 10 months in 1956 of lamb and mutton. Now, under Conservative government in 1959, they imported $15,943,500.99.

Some hon. members: Oh, shame, shame.

Mr. Reaume: Is his face red!

Mr. Spence: Also the hon. Minister from Wellington-Dufferin was critical of Ottawa for importing $6,341,000 worth of beef products, in 1956 in 10 months. I certainly Mr. Speaker, do not want to frighten him, but the government that he worked so hard to elect, in 1957, imported over $25 million.

Mr. Whicher: Another speech.

Mr. Spence: I suggest he go to Ottawa and talk to the government he worked so hard to elect.

Mr. Whicher: He could not get in the door.

Mr. Spence: Our Ottawa government is searching its soul for ways and means to cater to the American producer at the expense of our own. I repeat there is a drive on to sell the Ontario farmer down the river.

Some hon. members: Shame, shame.

Mr. Spence: Speaking in Calgary, the hon. Minister of Agriculture for Canada (Mr. Harkness) is reported in the press as saying that, in 1948 and in 1950, 1 hour of wages would purchase 6.8 loaves of bread; and in 1958, 10 years later, Mr. Speaker, it bought 7.5 loaves of bread.

I might say the same wage earner could purchase in 1948, 1.7 dozen eggs with 1 hour of work, but 10 years later he could purchase 2.9 dozen eggs. In 1948, 1 hour of work bought 1.9 pounds of beef. In 1958, it bought 2.3 pounds of beef. He also boasted that Canadian consumers paid a smaller percentage of their wages for food than any other country in the United Nations.

This, of course, is borne out by the Royal commission on the agriculture price spread, which confirmed that farm prices were no higher today than they were in 1949. The increase of import had been passed on to the consumer.

But, in the remarks of the Canadian Minister of Agriculture in Calgary, there is a direct appeal to the labour unions, and the consumer groups to help him and his government smash the farmer.

Speaking to the association of rural municipalities in Toronto recently, the hon. Ontario Minister of Agriculture goes right along with the tune. Neither Tory Minister ever takes time out to tell the people the real facts, simply that the real farm problem is not production, it is marketing. They do not tell us—the misfits—that they would rather import American foreign foods, already processed, packaged and for sale, than exercise their own imagination or acknowledge the lack of it.

In Ontario nothing has been done to deal with the food surpluses. Even while we have Maritime and Maine potatoes going into northern Ontario, Kent East potatoes are hard to sell. Nothing has been done in Ontario to streamline marketing procedure, or provide information necessary for production schedules.

Oh yes, we see in the London Free Press on January 3, 1960, that the hon. Minister announces streamlining by an appointment of a Deputy Minister of marketing and another for production.

We waited so long, that we lost control of the Ontario farm destiny—particularly so, perhaps, when the farmers chose men from farm organizations who are staunch supporters of the very government which seems to be the farmers' enemy.

This government has been warned time and time again. It continues to bury its head in the sand, a position both vulgar and dangerous.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Hear, hear.

Mr. Spence: Due to an insufficient research and marketing programme, agriculture has fallen far behind any other single industry in Canada. Both governments now agree it is a misfit industry, as well as the people in it being misfits.

We hear about the possibility of another hog vote. The last one, due to organization and methods, divided the farmers more than anything I can recall. Farmer was set against farmer, neighbour snarled at neighbour.

Again I do not personally blame the hon. Minister of Agriculture when he was told what to do by the hon. Prime Minister of the province of Ontario. Corporations want farmers out of the business, and the hon. Prime Minister of this province agrees. So that is it, Mr. Speaker, and it will be that way until the hon. leader of the official Opposition in this Legislature takes over in the year 1963.

Some Liberal hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Nixon: Tory times are hard times.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): Very harsh there, John.

Mr. Spence: The men at the agricultural colleges and schools are ready and prepared to carry out a far-reaching plan of research in marketing, packaging and distribution, but instead they are told what to do, they are called misfits, so they throw up their hands in despair. Our products still appear on the shelves with the same lack of lustre and colour.

Well, Mr. Speaker, I asked the hon. Minister the other day, what the department was doing to find a market for the surplus burley tobacco in the province of Ontario. All he said, in answer to me, was that the burley tobacco farmer is finished. I say, Mr. Speaker, if we do not do something for this industry there will be no need to retain this portfolio, because as between him and the federal hon. Minister of Agriculture, the industry will be so crippled that there will be no need for the hon. Minister of Agriculture in the province of Ontario.

This misfit attitude has gone on longer than any of us believe. The ambition of the present hon. Minister of Agriculture is that he will be the last Minister of Agriculture for the province of Ontario. He seemingly hopes to preside over the death of the industry.

I submit, Mr. Speaker, that he shall not preside over the funeral of the farmers of Ontario. Instead, I suggest, the farmers will remember and bring new life into agriculture in Ontario, through the election of a Liberal government, headed by the hon. leader of the Opposition.

If there ever was an alternative, it is here. Unless the farmers of Ontario choose an alternative government, we are finished, we will be taken over by corporated farmers. Right now the plan is in action, in Ottawa and Toronto, to chase the individual farmer out of business, replace him with rivals hired by proponents of vertical integration, so that the death of the individual farmer.

Already this government has moved in to hire the leaders of farm organizations, and fit them into the government thinking, so that they will no longer be able to be a threat against the government. The government hires them, pays them, and tells them what to do. I must admit that the industrial farmer is at fault. The farmer who permits his federation heads to sit on government boards takes away his force of opinion from agriculture as a whole. The head abandons his farm associates for his kind of deficiency payments or a civil service salary.

The farmers of Ontario went along in June of 1959, Mr. Speaker, when they did not elect an additional member to the Opposition. They gave the government a chance to help the farmer. So what has happened? The government takes the attitude that it has 3 more years at least, before calling an election.

They hope by that time the misfits will disappear from farming and whatever farmers are left, will have forgotten the promises of 1959, preceded by the Ottawa promises of 1957.

But I want to assure the hon. leader of the government, Mr. Speaker, when the next election is called, I shall still be a farmer in Ontario, as will all the others they seek to chase out.

Mr. Whicher: And we will be over there and they will be over here.

Mr. Spence: In other words we will stick it out and vote against them.

An hon. member: Does the hon. member want to bet?

Mr. Spence: It is bad enough to be called misfits, but even worse to find the government lined up on the side of the buyer and the corporations.

Mr. Grossman: Pretty harsh, John.

Mr. Spence: I will turn from agriculture to yet another industry, Mr. Speaker, and I refer to the commercial fishing industry. I want to talk about these good people, too, for a little while.

The commercial fishing industry on the Great Lakes is certainly not a new industry, it is one of the oldest occupations. Yet today, the fishermen along Lake Erie tell me they face very difficult times. The trap net fishermen are at their wits' ends.

The commercial fishermen in my area along Lake Erie have two main catches from their trap nets, the smelt and the yellow perch. It is an educated opinion of many fishermen that the smelts are on the increase, and whether or not they are eating up the species of the other commercial fish, it is said that this is the reason why the catch has dwindled down to smelt and yellow perch.

Something has to be done for the people in this industry who do not share in the favours of the north of the province. The lake has to be restocked. Restoration of the species must be followed if this industry is not to perish.

The fishermen are in a two-fold squeeze, Mr. Speaker. First, the species are limited, and then the price of the species which can be harvested is so low that it is ridiculous. I am told reliably that smelts bring as low as two cents a pound, yellow perch bring as low as 6 cents a pound. Neither price will even pay operating costs, let alone provide boats, nets and capital costs.

The sad feature of the fact is that the fishermen's whole life-work investment, like that of the farmer, is tied up to the subject of the whims of the government.

Price stability is necessary. It is my opinion more research is needed into the problem of Lake Erie commercial fishing. A floor price of 5 cents a pound for smelt, 10 cents a pound for yellow perch, is necessary to keep the commercial fishermen in business.

Certainly the spread between the fisherman and the consumer is so wide that somebody in between—and certainly not the commercial fisherman—is cleaning up. If something is not done soon, Mr. Speaker, these good people will be put out of business.

They are people who invested their lifetime in the commercial fishing industry, and they are people, like the farmers, who see their products sold at the consumer level at a greatly increased price. Why, their price is as low as it was 20 years ago. Who is making the money? Certainly not the people who catch the fish.

If it is the intention of the government to chase them out of business, let them be honest and say so. It certainly is the intention of the incoming Liberal government in Ontario, Mr. Speaker, to see to it that all commercial fishermen get a fair price for their catch.

Before certain changes take place, I do seriously appeal to this government to recognize the serious plight of the commercial fisherman and do something for him.

I just wonder where we are heading. The longer I am a member of the House, the more I realize that it is not only farmers to whom this government plays the fiddle. The chief activity seems to be fiddling around with the press.

Announcement after announcement appears in the press. In fact, it is not unusual for this government to take credit for something that will not take place even a hundred years in the future. It seems to me that anticipation replaces action.

This government has become, like a married couple, the man who promised his wife a celebration on their twenty-fifth wedding anniversary. When on the twenty-fifth wedding anniversary the wife reminded her husband of his promise the husband said: "Do I have to put up with this bickering every 25 years?"

Every time we ask for consideration for the Ontario primary producers, they are promised the twenty-fifth anniversary. What a shock this government will get when they are turned out of office.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): How does he account for the fact that his people—

Some Liberal hon. members: Quiet! Order! Order!

Mr. Crossman: There is that Liberal steam-roller.

Mr. Spence: It will be like the crowd who gathered together to hear the salesman's will after his death. His lawyer read, "Being sound in mind I have spent every last cent before I died."

Certainly this government is spending every last cent on everything but the primary producers, with a mouse in the kitchen and the government with no cat.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There are a lot of cats over there.

Mr. Whicher: We are going over there. They are coming over here. The hon. Prime Minister will not be here.

Mr. Spence: I would like to say a word about municipal economy. The hon. member for High Park (Mr. Cowling) has expressed his concern at the lack of interest of the municipal electors at the polls. His concern is shared by many. A municipality is a creature of the province.

The trend in the late years has been more and more direction from Queen's Park, more and more control over spending, until today each municipal council has the discretion of spending less than 15 cents on the dollar.

In short, the elected official is nothing more than a member of a postcard government. He cannot make decisions until the latest regulations arrive from Toronto.

In the midst of this, he is criticized by the local press, the local citizens, for pursuing a policy which has already been given to him in a postcard form. He has become nothing more than a puppet. Is it any wonder that men and women in Ontario, who should be in municipal life, will have nothing to do with it? Good candidates bring out voters.

A sufficient number of the right kind of people will not offer themselves for office because they know that once they are elected their own imagination and leadership will be submerged. They can only move as quickly and as realistically as the clerks of The Department of Municipal Affairs will allow.

Imagination and local self-reliance built strong municipalities in Ontario, but imagination and self-reliance are forbidden now by Queen's Park. Until this attitude changes, until The Municipal Act is rewritten to restore local autonomy, the good candidates will stay away from the nomination meeting, and the municipal electors will stay away from the polls, because what they do, when they vote now, is only to permit someone in their municipality to graciously receive orders from this government. It is indeed a drab situation, Mr. Speaker.

I will talk more about this on the estimates, but now I want to say that this government is surely and progressively destroying local government in Ontario because it will not set councils free.

Mr. Crossman: Not a very good point. Try another.

Mr. Whicher: That is not too bad. That is pretty good. They are all good points. We will enlarge on it on the estimates.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That was pretty dim.

Mr. Whicher: Not half as dim as the hon. Prime Minister is.

Mr. Spence: Mr. Speaker, I want to mention the Ontario retarded children's hospital which is under construction at Cedar Springs near the riding of Kent East. I am pleased to know that the hon. Minister of Health (Mr. Dymond) proposed to open this institution this year. It will fill a deep need in my area, and it will bring great satisfaction to the parents in our part of Ontario to know that the facilities are on their way to help the child, and to relieve the mind of the parent at the same time.

In commending the hon. Minister for locating the hospital at Cedar Springs, I pass on the hopes of all concerned that the hon. Minister will give serious consideration to the transfer of youngsters who are now in Orillia, and other places, to Cedar Springs hospital, where they can be visited by their parents and guardians. Such a move would be a great comfort and consolation to the parents.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We have a great government.

Mr. Reaume: Good for nothing.

Mr. Spence: The move is long overdue, Mr. Speaker, long overdue. Let the hon. Prime Minister not let his hon. Minister of Health down.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We are right on the job.

Mr. Spence: We share with the hon. Minister his concern for overcrowding in this type of hospital in the province of Ontario. We certainly cannot delay any longer in finding remedies for this situation. Anything that this government proposes to do in a positive way to relieve this grave problem, they will find ready support here. Mr. Speaker, we cannot delay any longer.

To the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass) I would like to say that we appreciate the improvements taking place on highway No. 2, from the Kent-Middlesex county line to the village of Thamesville. This is long overdue, Mr. Speaker. There have been a lot of accidents there since we drew the attention of the hon. Minister to the problem.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We are right on the job.

Mr. Whicher: Well, they want to get a new one in 3 years.

Mr. Spence: I did not realize, when I pressed these matters last year, that I would find such ready action from the hon. Minister, and I must say to the hon. Minister of Highways I appreciate the results.

The chamber of commerce, and the councils of our towns and villages, and others have been conscientiously pressing for new industries in Kent East. Our towns and villages are having very little success. This leads me to suggest that if highway No. 401 was completed between the town of Tilbury and Tempo, prospective industries would pay more attention to this area.

This gap is not encouraging, especially since it is some 60 miles long.

The hon. Minister might also give consideration to the closing of some of the concession roads, a matter which the municipal board chose to ignore. I would say this is a matter of importance to us, Mr. Speaker.

This, and the gap between Tilbury and Tempo of highway No. 401, would be the next project for the hon. Minister which would continue to make us happy, and I know he would like to keep us happy, and this is the way to do it.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I have been lined up to speak 3 or 4 times and have been set back as many times, and that has maybe been for the benefit of other hon. members. I do not want to repeat anything that has been said, so I have had to tear up some of the notes and dispense with some of the things I wanted to cover.

First, Mr. Speaker, I would congratulate you on your election to your high office.

The first thing I would like to deal with is, I feel, the most important thing I may say tonight. That is in regards to a situation of 200 people, a couple of hundred miles east of here, up in the townships of Cardiff and Faraday.

Over the weekend the hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) was called and asked to attend a meeting by a group of people and to present to this Legislature a petition on their behalf.

This group of people, I say with all sincerity—and as I mentioned this is important—are fraught with fear, the type of fear that people are affected with when the breadwinner realizes that he may lose his job, his home and any investment he might have gathered in over a period of years.

Now, on this petition there are about 165 names, and with the petition is a list of the monies invested which amounts to something over $600,000.

The hon. member for York South approached Mr. Speaker, I understand, in an attempt to table the petition in the usual manner, and, because of a technicality in presenting petitions, I believe it necessitated two copies which he did not have. I am going to present the petition myself personally to the hon. Prime Minister, on their behalf.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): I already have one.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Not this one.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh yes, I have.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, this petition is not—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I am away ahead of him.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, this petition is not a slick legal document, but it is a document that took some work, crawling over snow banks and over blocked roads over the weekend. The reason that they did not comply with the need for two copies was the imposition of repeating that task.

Now the hon. Prime Minister spoke on this situation in the House the other day. I will just quote a little from page 426 of Hansard of February 16. The hon. Prime Minister said, in reply to a question from the hon. member for York South:

Well, I would say this. I do not think that the contract should be transferred from those areas. I will give a specific case—the contract of the Dyno Mine.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is right.

Mr. Gisborn: I continue:

The Dyno Mine is employing at present some 300 or 400 men, and that mine is in the one part of the little bush township of Cardiff. That mine just services the people who are working as a result of that contract. It has been necessary to erect schools and to build roads and things of that sort.

Now I say, sir—with all the strength that is in me—I say that it is grossly unfair to transfer that contract from that area and leave those people high and dry. And I would say that if the federal government does that, then the federal government ought to pay the bill.

Now, Mr. Speaker, they are very fine words. But it is now 3 weeks since the announcement was made, or since the situation appeared so acute that there seemed to be no escape, yet no one, at least according to my knowledge, is aware that anything has been done since. And certainly it is about time when we can speak and hear of the little risks that the corporations take in this situation, that the people from the grass roots be given some quick consideration.

So, on their behalf, I do honestly take pleasure in presenting this petition to the hon. Prime Minister.

Mr. MacDonald: There are so many up there to come, it will be a while before—

Hon. Mr. Frost: If the hon. member for York South went up there for a weekend and only got one, he did not do too well, if there are so many around.

Mr. Gisborn: Now, Mr. Speaker, I am gratified with the results of the election. Naturally, I am pleased with the confidence shown by the voters of Wentworth East, and particularly in the CCF programme, by returning me to the Legislature with a majority vote. And I would say, as has been said by the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), that I was elected in the 1959 election, and in the 1955 election, on the programme of the CCF and nothing else.

I am certain that the people in that area will wait for it, even if it takes some time. They have seen the benefits of a programme with some intent and purpose, in the past years, and they know that all good things come in due time.

I am gratified also, Mr. Speaker, at the election of my hon. colleague from Hamilton East (Mr. Davison) who has already told this House that he realizes the problems of the people in his riding. He will do his best, I am sure, in representing them well in this House.

I am also pleased, Mr. Speaker, with the support shown to the other CCF candidates in the Hamilton district, the riding of Hamilton-Wentworth and Hamilton Centre. The CCF candidate in Hamilton Centre, the riding of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs (Mr. Warrender) came within 1,300 votes of defeating the hon. Minister, and I would say he must be on his toes and be ready for the next election. In the Hamilton-Wentworth riding the CCF candidates gave Tweedledee and Tweedledum a real strong run.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): 2,300 votes.

Mr. Gisborn: Yes, it was 2,300 for the CCF candidate. He got 7,000—just over 7,000 votes, is that right—and the victor got 9,000 and the defeated Conservative 1,000 less. But we feel that 7,000 people in that area in that condition will smarten up by the time the next election rolls around.

It has been said many times, Mr. Speaker, that politics are unpredictable. We have had periods before of coalition between the Conservatives and the Liberals.

I must say, Mr. Speaker, that never before have I seen a situation quite like that which took place in the Wentworth riding in the last election. There the Tory executive dropped the candidate who had been duly nominated to contest the riding in that election, and publicly supported the Liberal candidate.

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): Mr. Speaker, on a point of order, point of privilege. The hon. member has said that the Conservative executive dropped the candidate. That is a misstatement of fact and I ask it to be stricken from the records.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, it was my impression, and the impression of the press, that the support of the Conservative executive was thrown behind the Liberal candidate.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: That shows how confused they get.

Mr. Gisborn: I must feel, Mr. Speaker, that this quirk of political expediency is sure to be embarrassing to the hon. member in defining his party loyalties and policies. But I do feel, that the hon. member will give representation to all of the people in this province.

As I stated in my first speech in this House it was a thrilling experience, Mr. Speaker, to look at the representation from across this province—the many lawyers, businessmen, trade unionists and the good men of the cloth—and I thought it quite thrilling. But as time goes on, Mr. Speaker, the political side of things becomes apparent.

One situation that I noticed took place immediately following the election, and at that time, the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs just after the election—I believe it was the first day—informed the citizens of Hamilton, by way of the press, that the city of Hamilton would not receive less consideration from the Conservative government because of the ousting of two Conservative MPP's; that he would accept the added burden of looking after the needs of the people.

I query now, as I did at that time, Mr. Speaker, who does the hon. Minister think he is, the government itself? Does the hon. Minister suggest that there is an element of patronage with regard to benefit received by any municipality, rather than consideration of their democratic rights according to the statutes of this province?

An hon. member: That is exactly what he was suggesting.

Mr. Gisborn: Does he not believe in democratic Opposition?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member can interpret this any way he wants to.

Mr. Gisborn: And I would say, Mr. Speaker, some of this attitude I am sorry to say rubbed off on the Conservative candidate in my riding because, as far as I could see at that time, the only point he was trying to get across to the electors was that they must have government representation. So, Mr. Speaker, with this experience certainly comes enlightenment.

Mr. Speaker, I would now like to deal with a little problem I had with the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs. When I look across the House I feel that he sits there with his self-raised mantle of infallibility because he is the first to cry "smear" whenever the hon. member for York South attempts to make a point of principle on the public administration of this province. I would like to give a little demonstration of how the hon. Minister himself can switch facts and, in his own way, cast some aspersions on the character or the conviction of an individual.

Last year in this House I placed the question on the order paper—yes, on the order paper, and I am going to repeat it because it is important. I quote:

Mr. Gisborn, inquiry of the Ministry—and this would, I take it, be The Department of Municipal Affairs,

"1. What was the total cost to the province of Ontario of orders placed with Fairclough Printing Company in Hamilton by the Queen's Printer, Toronto, and by the departments directly, for each of the fiscal years ending March 31, 1956, 1957 and 1958, and also for the first 10 months of the current fiscal period?

"2. What are the amounts for each department making up the said totals?

"3. (a) What were the total charges by Fairclough Printing Company for reprinting The Municipal Act during the current fiscal period?

"(b) How many copies were printed?

"(c) What was the average cost per copy?

"(d) On what date was this order given to the Fairclough Printing Company?

"(e) On what date were the completed copies delivered?

"4. In respect of the last previous printing of The Municipal Act in 1956, what was—

"(a) the name of the firm which did the work;

"(b) the total cost;

"(c) the number of copies printed;

"(d) the average cost per copy;

"(e) the date on which the order was placed;

"(f) the date on which the completed order was delivered?"

"5. Why was the order not given the printers of the 1956 edition?"

That is the question I placed on the order paper, and, Mr. Speaker, I was approached by the press following the placing of that question on the order paper for comment as to what was the reason.

My answer to them was that I would make no comment until I had the answer to the question. I wanted to know—and I placed the question there myself—as a member I had the right to—I wanted this information and I do not think that I had to make any explanation at that time and I did not.

But the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs attended the nominating convention of the Conservatives in the riding of Wentworth East and these were his remarks:

Charges that Reg Gisborn, MLA for Wentworth East, had acted against the best interests of the printing industry in Hamilton were made by the hon. William K. Warrender—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I ask—

Mr. MacDonald: Why is the hon. Prime Minister interrupting? He had better—

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I ask my hon. friend if there was an answer tabled to that question?

Mr. Gisborn: No.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There was an answer tabled, I think.

Mr. MacDonald: Everyone he wanted to answer.

Hon. Mr. Frost: At the conclusion of last session, I remember it very well.

Mr. Gisborn: No, sir, there was no answer.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, sure, the hon. Minister answered that question. I remember that one—

Mr. MacDonald: Everyone he wanted to answer, the hon. Prime Minister means.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Of course it was answered. I am just asking him to find it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Prime Minister did not answer that one. He just said that now.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, sure we answered it.

Mr. Gisborn: I have checked, and I have not found the answer. Now, if the answer is there I will apologize for saying it was not there. But it has no relevance to the point I want to make.

Mr. MacDonald: Listen to the point.

Mr. Gisborn: I continue with the quote of the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs:

He also asserted that the CCF member had made some "surprising claims" on his own behalf to the riding. Speaking at the Wentworth East Progressive-Conservative nomination meeting in Parkdale public school, Mr. Warrender referred to a question Mr. Gisborn had lodged in the Legislature, protesting against a government contract going to the Fairclough Printing Company, Hamilton, for printing the 1958 edition of The Municipal Act.

"The Fairclough Printing Company," said Mr. Warrender, "has been on the list of the Queen's Printer long before Mrs. Ellen Fairclough, Minister of Immigration and Citizenship, had become an MP. Her husband's company had held many such contracts."

Mr. Warrender then produced two signed copies of letters written as a result of Mr. Gisborn's protest. The first was from the secretary of the Allied Printing and Trades Council, Tom C. Whitsed, and the other from Local 129, Hamilton Typographical Union, signed by Allan Hinstead.

Both letters pointed out that the 1956 edition of the Act had been printed by a non-union shop in Toronto.

Again the Allied Printing and Trades Council letter: "The Fairclough company is a union closed shop, and Mr. Gisborn's action in advocating the taking away of trade from the Hamilton firm is not consistent with trade union ideals."

It goes on to make some other remarks.

Mr. Speaker, the point is that the letter that was referred to, from the allied printing pressmen and the typographical union workers, was read in the House by the former member for Wentworth (Mr. Childs) just a few days after the question was on the order paper.

The two gentlemen from whom the letters came, known to myself, were strong supporters of the Conservative party. That was their business and it did not matter.

But it seems very funny that they received this question that made no reference, in the first place whatsoever, to a trade union shop or a non-trade union shop.

One can look the question over till doomsday, there is no mention there of the trade union shop or the non-trade union shop. All I asked was an answer to a question that I had a right to ask for.

Why did the hon. Minister have to do that, and say nothing to me? I feel his procedure was planned that way. I have had apologies since from gentlemen in the trade union movement. Enough for that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member wanted to turn business away from Hamilton.

Mr. Gisborn: Why did he not answer the question instead of imputing motives?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. Minister was just smearing.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with another little matter that is not too pleasant to deal with, and that is the question of patronage in its term. I do not know whether this case of mine applies to that or not, but we have heard in this House of hon. members receiving letters and writing letters concerning applicants for jobs in the civil service.

I want to say this, I received a letter from the hon. Minister of Highways (Mr. Cass), that he signed very personally and I appreciate that. I heard the question raised, "that you didn't answer" as a lack of courtesy. I will tell the hon. members what I felt when I received it. I was insulted.

MR. R. GISBORN, MPP,
26 Martin Road,
Hamilton.

DEAR REG:

Would you please let me know whether you would recommend that Mr. A. E. Heatley, 197 Dunbar Avenue, Hamilton, be appointed as a permanent civil servant on the staff of my department in district 4, Hamilton, as a clerk at an annual salary of $3,000?

Hon. Mr. Frost: What is wrong with that? What is he elected for? Is he not elected to look after his people?

Mr. MacDonald: What is wrong with their civil service commission, their supervising people—

Mr. Gisborn: I got this letter on October 6, 1959, and it is the first such letter I received since being a member. I went to see the man involved. I had only been on the street once before, campaigning. I met his wife, he was not there. I told her what I was there for and she was very pleased.

Hon. Mr. Frost: So the hon. member looked into it.

Mr. Gisborn: She said: "Now my husband will be able to get on the pension roll. He will get on the welfare roll," or whatever it was. I made some inquiries. He happened to have a large mortgage and 3 children, and he was earning, at that time, $47 a week. This letter implies he would get a raise to $57. I did not answer the letter because of that fact.

I hope he got the job, a better job, and I hope he gets a raise, along with the rest of the civil servants in the future. Now, before someone asks me—

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): What did the hon. member go to see him for?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why did he not help him out?

Mr. Gisborn: I had not made up my mind until I found out that he had been working for them for 5 years already, and was still on temporary staff, and he was only getting $47 a week.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why did he not help the fellow out?

Mr. W. E. Johnston (Carleton): Why was he not helped on his merits? Does the hon. member not think he deserved it? Why did he not go through the regular channels?

Mr. Gisborn: Now before someone asks me if I ever wrote any letters to the departments, I can say, yes, I have. I wrote two letters to two departments, both of them under extenuating circumstances.

Mr. Grossman: Does he not think ours are extenuating circumstances?

Mr. Gisborn: I have had many men from my riding come to me, and I have had to tell them that they will have to get jobs through the regular channels. There is nothing wrong with this letter, unless one makes something out of it. I found out who the director of personnel was for The Department of Highways, and I asked him to write the letter and let me know when he had sent it. I sent this following letter.

DEAR MR. POGG:

Mr. John Doe, 64 Durham Road, Stoney Creek, is a constituent of mine who is making an application for a position with the Highways Department. Mr. John Doe worked at the Mercury Mills, Textile Mill, until they closed down, and since he is a man in his forties, has been unable to find employment in private industry in this area. He has a family to support and finds it increasingly difficult to make ends meet.

Mr. Doe will be glad to accept any position which your department may be able to offer, and I would appreciate it if consideration could be given to his application for employment as an opening occurs.

Mr. Grossman: Well, well, well. How different does he think that is from our letters?

Mr. Gisborn: Let me finish.

This same gentleman gave me the addresses of 7 employers he had approached and he could not get a job with them because: (1) he was over age; (2) he had a disfigurement, not a physical disablement, but a disfigurement through something. He was a little twisted on one side, and he had a burn scar on his face which twisted his lip, and he felt that that went against him greatly. That was the reason I sent that letter.

Mr. Grossman: What does the hon. member think we send letters for?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well what is wrong with that? Nobody is kicking about that. Has he got a guilty conscience, or something? What is wrong with it?

Mr. Grossman: I have not recommended a bank president yet.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, I am just getting this question cleared up because somebody might ask: "Do you write any letters?"

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why, of course. Do not be ashamed of it. He does not need to apologize.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): Talk to the hon. member for York South.

Mr. Gisborn: I will talk about it sometime when we get it straight. The second one was on behalf of a gentleman who—

Mr. MacDonald: They get awfully touchy on this issue.

Mr. Gisborn: —had a small business going. He had been doing some sheet metal work for The Department of Public Works. His business went flat enough so that he could not carry on. He was not eligible, because of that reason, for unemployment insurance and immediately was put on the welfare. He had two adopted children, and was facing a foreclosure of his mortgage at that time. In those cases I do not think there is anything wrong with making that kind of approach.

Hon. Mr. Frost: That is for sure.

Mr. Gisborn: But they will never convince me that is the kind of approach that is made in all cases.

Mr. Grossman: That great day for confessions.

Mr. W. E. Johnston: What does the hon. member's sidekick say?

Mr. Grossman: That halo is getting a little loose now.

Mr. Gisborn: We are asked what is wrong with the government saying to the people that they must have letters from their members. This is what is wrong—

An hon. member: We heard all that before.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, all right then.

Now, Mr. Speaker, we have heard quite a lot about the plight of the municipalities from both sides of the House—rather the plight has not been given the consideration from the one side that it has from the other.

I was very pleased to hear the hon. member for York Centre (Mr. Singer) make a plea on behalf of the municipalities, and he quoted for some length on their briefs, pointing out some of the parts the hon. Prime Minister did not bother to point out. I have read the brief—

An hon. member: Did he understand it?

Mr. Gisborn: —and I want to say this about it. Yes, certainly I understand it. Except for a few of the solutions, the CCF would support all of the problems.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Do not ask us to.

Mr. Gisborn: And I would go on to say, if the mayors' and reeves' association are completely sincere in their presentation of their problems, that in the next municipal elections in their areas, the only fair thing they can do is to tell their electorates to vote for the CCF candidate.

Mr. Grossman: Does he want a letter of recommendation from us?

Mr. Gisborn: Let him write one and see if we will accept it.

Mr. Grossman: They are hard up.

Mr. Gisborn: I would say something like this, Mr. Speaker. The makeup of government, federal, provincial and municipal, is like the mother and children of a family. The father handles the purse-strings and gives an allowance to the mother and the children. Of course, it all depends on who wears the pants.

In our case here in Canada the father is the federal Conservative government. In Ontario the municipalities are the children, on fixed limited allowances which do not allow them to carry out their responsibilities in providing the facilities which the taxpayers need and to which they are entitled.

The municipalities, the children, cry to the province—their mother—that they need a more adequate allowance to carry on their functions. The provincial government—the mother, who professes it does not wear the pants in this case—slaps the municipalities' hands and tells them it is up to the father—the federal government—to do something about it. What puzzles me is that this is where it ends.

All of which brings me to another point—why does it end there?

All the mayors and reeves of Ontario are sincere—

Hon. Mr. Frost: The children are getting 46 per cent. of papa's income. How much do they expect to get?

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: I might suggest that this is the reason why it might end there, and I will say this in all deference to present municipal councillors and past municipal councillors. All I can say is what has been said in this House before today, that if the shoe fits, they can wear it.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Never mind buttering them up.

Mr. Gisborn: I can say that I have had some experience in watching municipal elections. I have had some experience in watching, in my own home town, such people as the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs—who was a councillor for some years—who said in his campaign speech: "I have to go to the provincial House to do something for you people," and he has never said a word about their problems since.

Many municipal councillors who, for years, have told their electors they must have more monies from the provincial and federal governments, become elected to the provincial and federal Houses, and make no mention of municipal problems. Is the reason because the party they follow is the government, and they are gagged because of the "give-nothing" policy of that government?

Whether or not it is good to have party politics in municipal government is controversial.

But I say there are party politics in municipal government, and they are unavoidable because of the many-faceted operations of a municipality.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): He is not making the press yet.

Mr. Gisborn: And I have some feeling that it is fair to say that the mayors' and reeves' convention resolutions give a lot of lip service to these problems, and give it only for the benefit of the voters. Invariably, across this province, a large percentage of municipal councillors—including mayors and reeves—are followers of the old-line Conservative and Liberal parties.

Mr. Reaume: What is the matter with that?

Mr. Gisborn: It just matters this much, that one can see the resolutions that come out of that convention, and they really get the people all pepped up. They think they are going to get something now, if this is carried forward.

One never sees a delegation come down here, from one year's end to the other, after that convention is over.

And I would say that the taxpayers in the municipalities have to give some consideration to just where their municipal councillors stand on the political side.

Mr. Reaume: Vote for us then.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Vote Socialist.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, just a word about the trade union movement, the problems of labour in this province.

Mr. Grossman: To the salt mines.

Mr. Gisborn: A select committee of this House was set up in 1957 to study the problems of labour, and came up with a report which was intended, I felt, to be of some direction to this Legislature. They sat from 1957 to 1959 at a cost of something like $80,000 to this province.

We had the hon. Minister of Transport go to a forum in Niagara Falls, one of the members who I felt took a very forceful stand on that committee, signed a large majority of the recommendations and then told the people down there that he has now had a change of heart; he did not think it was time for drastic measures.

Mr. Reaume: That is what the hon. leader of the hon. member did.

Hon. Mr. Frost: How about the hon. member who sits right in front of the hon. member?

Mr. MacDonald: They will find out where I stand. They will find out.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The hon. member for York South changed his mind, too.

Mr. Reaume: He is a scaredy crow. They put the hammer to him. They spanked him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They are going to move him out.

Mr. Gisborn: The hon. Minister said that, and I was there, and I know there were 600 people there who heard the same thing—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, the biggest surprise I ever got was when I heard the same statement from the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley)—and I heard it repeated by the hon. member for Essex North—

Mr. Reaume: What is the matter with that?

Mr. Gisborn: —that, when they drafted this report, they did not anticipate that very much of it would be put into effect.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Is that why the hon. leader of the hon. member signed it?

Mr. Gisborn: Now what kind of goings-on is this? A committee sitting for two years—spending $80,000 and we get that kind of result?

Mr. Reaume: They wanted his expert advice on this.

Mr. Gisborn: So I think, Mr. Speaker, that there was a reason for that statement. I think there must have been a reason.

An hon. member: There is a reason for everything.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, I think the reason here was that they just set the ground work for the kind of attack the trade union movement has been faced with since that report was brought down. Night after night in the newspaper—

Mr. Reaume: Oh, that is just propaganda.

Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of personal privilege and, speaking—

Mr. MacDonald: Speak later.

Mr. Rowntree: —as a member of that select committee, the statements which are now being made by the hon. member for Wentworth East are not true.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, how can he violate the rules of the House?

Mr. Rowntree: The hon. member for Wentworth East was not on the committee.

Mr. Reaume: I want to hear the boy's advice, expert advice.

Mr. Gisborn: We have read in the newspapers, from the speakers of big business, pointing out that the clauses they wanted would have to be put into a Labour Act, so that they could shove labour back and put them in their place, they were too big and powerful.

Mr. Reaume: Oh, listen to this trash.

Mr. Gisborn: I kept the clippings if the hon. members want to hear them, and we will read them.

Mr. Reaume: No common sense to it at all.

Mr. Gisborn: What did the chamber of commerce say? The first thing the chamber of commerce wanted was to increase the unions' civil responsibility. To outlaw strikes in certain circumstances, to restrict picketing, to prohibit union security clauses, to have the government control strike votes, to determine the law for periods during which strike action could be taken, and the hon. members can read these remarks.

Mr. Grossman: Tell your leader, tell your leader.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Reaume: He knows it is all out, too.

Mr. Speaker: I am sure that the members want some measure of dignity in our proceedings. I would ask the members to observe the Speaker.

Mr. Gisborn: Well, all I can say, Mr. Speaker, after hearing the remarks of the hon. Minister of Labour and the hon. member for Essex North—

Mr. Grossman: And York South.

Mr. Gisborn: —who said that they did not anticipate very much of this report going into effect when they presented it—

Hon. Mr. Frost: He should come into the picture. Did he know—

Mr. Grossman: Come on, stop. He should tell us about his hon. leader—

Mr. Rowntree: Maybe they will let some other members of the party—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, they will not let him on—

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, they will not let the hon. member for York South sit on one again.

Mr. Gisborn: —then they aided and abetted this kind of thing.

The hon. member for Essex North has made several quips. You know, he made a quip about the 5-man party with two heads—

Mr. Reaume: That is right, man with two heads.

Mr. Gisborn: —and then another quip about the pork choppers leading all the rank and file down the river. Sometimes he says some good things, but a lot of times he gets his mouth in motion before he gets his brain in gear.

Mr. Reaume: I want to hear the expert now. I do not want to hear all that. I want to hear the expert.

Mr. Gisborn: Seriously, Mr. Speaker, with all these quips and pokes about the pork choppers, I just want to say that these trade unionists are not devils with horns—

Mr. Reaume: Who said they were?

Mr. Gisborn: The hon. member did.

Mr. Reaume: I said no such thing.

Mr. Gisborn: —but rather human beings living and raising families in the normal way of our society, guilty of only trying to raise and maintain a decent standard of living for everyone.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Why does he have to read it?

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): He read all his speech the other night. He had it right on his desk there.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, I did not say at any time that the union members were people with horns. What I said was that I thought that members of the union were very fine people, not with horns. Now I think—

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. Reaume: All right, thank you very much.

Mr. Whicher: He certainly did not get his brain in gear there when his mouth was open.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): You only got to the horns and he batted you down.

Mr. Gisborn: Nowadays, Mr. Speaker, when there are lots of layoffs and no overtime, they call it a recession.

Twenty-five years ago we called it a depression in capital letters, and it meant year after year with no jobs, no cash and no credit. If one had a job it meant a 12-hour day, 7 days a week—if necessary—no time and a half, no statutory holidays and no vacation with pay. It also meant many other things.

It meant putting off marriage until you got a job, suddenly getting a job, getting married and then losing the job. It meant hearing about another job if you could only meet someone's second cousin's neighbour's friend, and jumping a freight because you could not afford to take a bus or a train.

Mr. Grossman: What does he know about that?

Mr. Gisborn: Finding oneself in another town—

Mr. MacDonald: He has been through it.

Mr. Gisborn: Finding oneself in another town where there still was not a job, and, because you were not a native you were not eligible for welfare.

This meant your wife lived with her parents and you lived with your parents until you had a child 6-months-old. Until then you were married in the eyes of the clergy and the licence department, but you were considered single, according to the stand of the welfare department, and therefore unable to get city assistance.

This depression, Mr. Speaker, did 3 things to people. It crushed them and left them in terror of losing any job any time. It made them bitter and determined that if they ever got a break they would get theirs and never mind anyone else.

But sometimes it did not crush them and make them bitter, it just made them mad and made them fight back.

These people who just got mad, who were not crushed and did not get bitter are those who make up some of the trade union leaders today. Not just those who are the paid pork choppers, that do a job just as well as anyone else does, and live the same as anyone else—

Mr. Reaume: Ten thousand and up.

Mr. Gisborn: —but many of the shop stewards in the industry.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, they are pretty cool to his party.

Mr. MacDonald: They are even cooler to yours.

Mr. Gisborn: There are hundreds of those. There are hundreds of shop stewards who do not get paid.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Is it true that the CCF would welcome a depression?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Sure—

Mr. MacDonald: No, it is not. What a ridiculous distortion of what he said.

Mr. Gisborn: To make my point, Mr. Speaker, the trade union movement has been a force in providing the impetus for the great industrial expansion in this province. The trade union movement, in negotiating hospital coverage plans over the years, has set the groundwork for the great province-wide hospital plan that we are enjoying today. The government knows, they looked at those plans when they talked about setting theirs up.

The same thing will happen with our portable pensions. The trade union movement, in negotiating industrial pensions, has set the ground work for the pensions that we are going to eventually get when this government gets off their seat.

Mr. Grossman: Would the hon. member explain what a portable pension is? He has not said a word about the CCF yet.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: He picked up a pamphlet there, then he changed his mind.

Mr. MacDonald: Sit down.

Mr. Gisborn: I mention these things, Mr. Speaker, because I have heard two or three times in the last two or three days the hon. member for York Centre say to the government: "Come up to date, never mind going away back, let us start at 1960 and go ahead."

I say these things because I think we have to remember some of these things, because to forget them is the best way to have them happen again—

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Mr. Gisborn: —and there are a few people who will not forget the sacrifices of the last world war, the one before it, nor the depression.

If we are going to forget these things so easily, I say that we are going to live them again. We have to remember them, and pay some attention to how we got out of them.

Mr. Grossman: Good Conservative legislation.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: How about the pamphlet on your desk?

Mr. Gisborn: We all know fairly well the lamenting done by certain editorials and big business when there is a strike on. They will cry about the lack of production, the financial loss to the employers and to the members of the community.

Mr. Grossman: He is still trying to whip up class warfare.

Mr. Gisborn: I would just like to give a few figures. This is from the economic and research branch of The Department of Labour, in the strikes taken from 1952 to 1957.

The year 1957, which was about average for those years from 1952 to 1957, involved 91,409 workers, man days 1,634,881. That meant 13,079,048 hours. It was .14 per cent. of the working force at that time.

The average for 1959—and these are statistics from the federal government—the average of unemployment was 435,000. This meant 904.8 million man hours, approximately 7 per cent.

Mr. Reaume: Come up to date.

Mr. MacDonald: Face the facts.

Mr. Gisborn: Here is a difference in 13 million man hours because of strikes, and 904 million because of unemployment. When we have this sort of thing, Mr. Speaker—when we have the Ford plant shutting down for 6 days and laying off 1,000 men, when we have the automobile plants shutting down for re-tooling—we have a strike against the Canadian people, not the workers striking against the public. Some of these things should be recognized.

I was very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to hear about the amendment to The Workmen's Compensation Act, which will give the widows of men killed in industry prior to 1953 the same pension they now enjoy.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Good government.

Mr. Gisborn: I feel, Mr. Speaker, there is a job that has to be done in rehabilitation. We can fix up the benefits all we wish in The Workmen's Compensation Act, there is room for improvement. But if we do not do something about rehabilitating those who are injured and maimed, getting them into jobs, it is not going to be too successful.

Mr. MacDonald: Shame.

Mr. Reaume: The man is trying to make a speech. You are interrupting him.

Mr. MacDonald: That is all right.

Mr. Gisborn: We have rehabilitation officers, they do a fine job. We have one of the finest rehabilitation hospitals in North America, but we are not finding jobs for these people, and that is the important part and the end to rehabilitation.

I hope that something will be done in this field, that it will be expanded greatly. I would just like to read a clipping I cut out of yesterday's paper:

BLAMES ONTARIO FOR LAG IN AID TO HANDICAPPED

Dr. Samuel Mursky of Ottawa said the Ontario government is depriving handicapped people of Ontario of substantial financial assistance for their rehabilitation. In his president's report to last night's annual meeting of the rehabilitation institute of Ottawa, he said every province except Ontario had joined in a federal-provincial 50-50 cost-sharing programme to pay salaries of rehabilitated workers. Ontario is depriving the handicapped of aid.

Mr. MacDonald: Bad government.

Mr. Gisborn: I do not know what this is all about.

Mr. Grossman: That is true.

Mr. Gisborn: I know we have the rehabilitation department in Hamilton. Individuals are striving to do a job. They have to get out and try to raise money through public donations, and if this is a programme to set up and pay rehabilitation officers, I wish this government would get in on the scheme and not be dragging their feet in this situation. I would just like—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Shame. Shame. A most unjust accusation.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: We are talking about taking credit today, the Liberal party and the government got into a little argument on who was responsible for the hospital plan—

An hon. member: Neither of them were.

Mr. Gisborn:—remember that this government took credit for building a great skyway bridge last year and I would just like to read a clipping. Hon. members know the Hamilton Spectator. They do a wonderful job of reminding people of what has gone on for years. Every night they have, in the paper, twenty years ago so and so—

Now, this is a clipping from the Spectator files of October 7, 1937—

Mr. Reaume: Bring it up to date.

Mr. Gisborn: Here is the quotation:

Consideration of plans by the provincial government for an elevated through traffic structure along the Burlington beach strip in development of the modern highway now under construction for the heavily travelled Niagara route was revealed today by Highways Minister T. B. McQuesten.

Mr. MacDonald: It took the old party coalition 20 years.

Mr. Gisborn: I continue:

The viaduct project extending over two miles from the opposite approaches would be one of the most advanced highways engineering undertaking in Canada.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They never kept their promises.

Mr. MacDonald: It took this government 15 years—

Mr. Gisborn: Then it goes on to say, just a minute—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Gisborn: The clipping reads further:

In unprecedented fashion Wentworth county rode a victory tide with the Hepburn government in yesterday's provincial election to return a solid Liberal front in its 4-member representation in the Legislature.

And I think, they got some of those seats on that promise of that bridge and we only got it last year.

Mr. Grossman: Red times are hard times. Liberal times are hard times.

Mr. Gisborn: Mr. Speaker, seriously, we have heard something tonight about the problems of the civil servants in this province and what is to be done about it. I wholeheartedly support that. I would just like to quote a little poem that was in their book and I think this is appropriate at this time. Out of the Trillium:

THE GARAGE SONG

*Hush-a-bye baby on the treetop,
When you grow up, you can work in our shop,
When you get married your wife will work too,
So that you may to our province be true.*

*Rock-a-bye baby on the treetop,
When you grow old your wages will stop
Unless you are one of a fortunate few Who've been taken on permanent before past due.*

*Then it's hush-a-bye baby to the graveyard you go
And our grateful government insists that that you know
That you have been unclassified all of your days,
Your sons will be treated the same wonderful ways.*

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: A most unjust accusation.

Mr. MacDonald: Good government.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: How about the new party?

Mr. Gisborn: A problem in my own riding that I would like to have some attention paid to, has been raised this last few years. I raised it to the hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Robarts) and I believe he took it to the hon. Minister of Transport. I refer to the problem of 280 school children living north of the Queen Elizabeth Way between the Stoney Creek circle and the Lincoln county line. They have to cross that double-lane highway, now that speed has increased, and they have to go a complete concession to school over a double railroad crossing, a crossing where there have been terrific accidents.

Now, I had some consideration I felt. The former hon. Minister of Education (Mr. Dunlop) felt that it was a serious problem, and that the only solution was to put a school in that area, because there were over 200 children there. It seemed logical that there was room for the school there, and then they would not have to cross the highway at all. Now, the last word I got was that they have made a complete investigation, they do not feel the school is necessary, that the traffic police are doing a good job and there have been no injuries, nobody hurt and so they do not think they could put the school there.

Mr. MacDonald: They have to wait until a few are killed first.

Mr. Gisborn: Another reason they could not put the school there was that if they put it between the Stoney Creek traffic circle and the Lincoln county line, the distance would be just far enough to be eligible for bus transportation under the Act and, of course, nobody wants to pay for bus transportation.

I do not think that the parents in that section would ever complain, or ask, for school transportation if they could have a school over there, and feel that their children did not have to cross the double-lane Queen Elizabeth Way to go to school.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): Why does not the school board ask them to do that?

Mr. Gisborn: They are going to put in service roads which are going to make it much worse. They tried to tell me it would be better but with service roads down both sides and overhead structures, it is going to confuse the situation.

Mr. Reaume: School boards handle that, did he not know that?

Mr. Gisborn: The school board in the township of Saltfleet cannot afford it. They just have not got the money. This government can give them some assistance. I have made investigations and find this to be the case.

Mr. Rowntree: Tell us about the new party.

Mr. Grossman: We may want to join.

Mr. Gisborn: Highways in my district, too, need some further attention. Highway No. 8 in the township of Saltfleet is completely clogged with debris, when we have the thaws, and the floods run over onto properties. We are just not getting proper attention.

I felt that, in the first year that I was down here, I got good co-operation. I wrote the department and stated my case, and the co-operation was really grand. But it seems to have worn off now and the highways are not being looked after.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I know I sat here myself last night till midnight to listen to the speeches. I have said what I wanted to say, I have enjoyed it and I hope that this is the last for tonight.

Hon. Mr. Yaremko: Tell us about the brown bag. What happened to the new party?

Mr. MacDonald: Let the hon. Minister wait until it hits him.

Mr. F. R. Oliver (Grey South): Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the debate.

Motion agreed to.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): In moving the adjournment of the House, I may say that we adjourn until 2 o'clock on Thursday and the order of business will be the labour legislation.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. Prime Minister advise us when he will conclude the Throne debate?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say that I will arrange a suitable time with the hon. leader of the Opposition on—no, it could not be this week.

Mr. Speaker: Before putting the motion, I beg to inform the House that the meeting of the committee on government commissions scheduled for 1 p.m. tomorrow has been postponed. The usual notice will be given of the new date.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 11.05 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

THURSDAY, MARCH 3, 1960

2 O'CLOCK P.M.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: We are always glad to have visitors to the Legislature, and today we welcome, as guests, students from the following schools: Riverdale collegiate institute, Toronto; Northern secondary school, Toronto; Brian's Drive public school, Don Mills; Runnymede public school, Toronto.

Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): Mr. Speaker, before presenting the sixth report of the standing committee on private bills, may I draw your attention to the fact that the next meeting of that committee is on Monday, and it will be held at 9:15 in the morning, in view of certain important business before it. Mr. Speaker, I would ask that you draw this to the attention of the House.

Clerk of the House: Mr. H. L. Rowntree, from the standing committee on private bills, presents the committee's sixth report and moves its adoption.

Your committee begs to report the following bills without amendment:

An Act respecting the city of Sarnia.

An Act respecting the collegiate institute board of Ottawa.

An Act respecting the Blind River-Elliott Lake high school district board.

Your committee begs to report the following bills with certain amendments:

An Act respecting the board of education for the township of Etobicoke.

An Act respecting the city of Kingston.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: I beg to inform the House that the clerk has received from the commissioners of estate bills, the reports of the following cases:

Bill No. Pr16, An Act respecting the National Sanitarium Association.

THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO

THE HONOURABLE CHIEF JUSTICE PORTER
THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE SCHROEDER

Osgoode Hall, Toronto 1
March 1, 1960.

RODERICK LEWIS, Esq., QC,
CLERK OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Re: Bill No. Pr16, 1960, An Act respecting the National Sanitarium Association

DEAR SIR:

The undersigned, as commissioners of estate bills as provided by The Legislative Assembly Act, RSO 1950, chapter 202, section 57, having had the said bill referred to us as such commissioners, now beg to report thereon.

We have heard representatives of the petitioner. They informed us that they have consulted the public trustee and discussed with him the contents of the bill. They also stated that the public trustee did not consider it necessary to be represented on the hearing before us.

It appears from the petition filed herein, and from the information disclosed on the hearing before us, that certain amendments are advisable to clarify the bill, and to assure that the purpose of the petitioner is carried into effect by the bill.

We therefore propose that section 1 of the bill be amended to read as follows:

1. Notwithstanding any trust or limitation created by any endowment, donation, gift, devise or bequest heretofore made to, or for, or on behalf of, the National Sanitarium Association, or to or for or on behalf of any hospital or clinic or other unit owned or operated by the association, whether heretofore or hereafter received by the association, the association may use at any place such donations, gifts, devises, bequests and the proceeds of any endowments for all or any of the purposes authorized by The Association's Act of incorporation and amendments thereto, including amendments that may hereafter be made, and in accordance with the objects of the association.

We are of the opinion that the provisions of the said bill, as amended, are proper for carrying its purpose into effect, and that it is reasonable that such bill be passed into law.

The bill, duly signed by the commissioners, and the copy of the petition for the same, are accordingly returned herewith.

Yours very truly,

(signed)

DANA PORTER, CJO.
WALTER F. SCHROEDER, J.A.
Commissioners of estate bills.

Bill No. Pr19, An Act respecting the city of Owen Sound.

THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO

THE HONOURABLE CHIEF JUSTICE PORTER
THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE SCHROEDER

Osgoode Hall, Toronto 1
March 2, 1960.

RODERICK LEWIS, ESQ., QC,
CLERK OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Re: Bill Pr19, 1960, An Act respecting the city of Owen Sound

DEAR SIR:

The undersigned, as commissioners of estate bills as provided by The Legislative Assembly Act, RSO 1950, chapter 202, section 57, having had the said bill referred to us as such commissioners, now beg to report thereon.

We have heard counsel for the petitioner, and it would appear that this bill is an estate bill only with respect to section 1, subsections 1 and 2 thereof.

We are of the opinion that the said sections 1 and 2 of the said bill are proper for carrying their purposes into effect, and that it is reasonable that the said sections be passed into law.

Two copies of the bill, signed by the commissioners, and the petition for the same are accordingly returned herewith.

Yours very truly,

(signed)
DANA PORTER, CJO.
WALTER F. SCHROEDER, JA.
Commissioners of estate bills.

Bill Pr25, An Act respecting the city of London.

THE SUPREME COURT OF ONTARIO

THE HONOURABLE CHIEF JUSTICE PORTER
THE HONOURABLE MR. JUSTICE SCHROEDER

Osgoode Hall, Toronto 1
March 3, 1960.

RODERICK LEWIS, ESQ., QC,
CLERK OF THE LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY,
PARLIAMENT BUILDINGS,
TORONTO, ONTARIO.

Re: Bill Pr25, 1960, An Act respecting the city of London

DEAR SIR:

The undersigned, as commissioners of estate bills as provided by The Legislative Assembly Act, RSO 1950, chapter 202, section 57, having had the said bill referred to us as such commissioners, now beg to report thereon.

We have heard counsel for the petitioner, and it would appear that this bill is an estate bill only with respect to section 1 thereof.

We are of the opinion that the said section 1 of the said bill is proper for carrying its purpose into effect, and that it is reasonable that the said section be passed into law.

Two copies of the bill, signed by the commissioners, and the petition for the same are accordingly returned herewith.

Yours very truly,

(signed)
DANA PORTER, CJO.
WALTER F. SCHROEDER, JA.
Commissioners of estate bills.

It was therefore ordered that the bills, together with the reports of the commissioners of estate bills thereon, be referred to the standing committee on private bills.

Clerk of the House: I have also received the report of the Ontario municipal board with respect to Bill No. Pr35, An Act respecting the city of Belleville.

Mr. Speaker: Do the members wish to have the report of the municipal board read by the clerk? It will be referred then to the committee on private bills.

Shall the reports be adopted?

Reports agreed to.

Mr. Speaker: Motions.

Introduction of bills.

THE MENTAL HOSPITALS ACT

Hon. M. B. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to amend The Mental Hospitals Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: Mr. Speaker, I will outline the purpose of these amendments.

First, it will make it possible for us to bring the admission, discharge, and treatment of mental hospital patients more into line with general hospital practice and procedure.

Another amendment will make it possible for the superintendent of the hospital to delegate his authority with regard to the management of the hospital to another staff member as need should arise.

Another section will make it unnecessary for the financial statement to be completed before the patient is admitted.

We are also asking an amendment that will permit the earlier and more ready admission of badly perturbed patients to our mental hospitals. Lastly, we are asking an amendment to make it possible, under certain circumstances, for one member of our staff to sign one of the committal forms as opposed to the two outside doctors now required.

HOSPITALS FOR CHILDREN SUFFERING EMOTIONAL OR PSYCHIATRIC DISORDERS

Hon. Mr. Dymond moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to provide hospitals for the care and treatment of children suffering from emotional or psychiatric disorders."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: The purpose of this bill is to provide for the establishment and the operation of new hospitals, and the operation of existing hospitals, for the care and treatment of children suffering from emotional and psychiatric disorders.

THE GINSENG ACT

Hon. W. A. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to repeal The Ginseng Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: I want to assure the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) that this bill does nothing to interfere with gin. This Act is obsolete and, since there is to be a consolidation of the statutes, it is felt advisable to have it repealed.

THE CLEAN GRAIN ACT

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "An Act to repeal The Clean Grain Act."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: I might say, Mr. Speaker, that this Act was passed in 1935 and is misleading in view of its purposes. It has to do with interprovincial shipment of grains and feeds which are covered under The Canada Feeding Stuff Act and The Canada Feeds Act. I might say the Act has never been used.

THE TELEPHONE ACT, 1960

Hon. Mr. Goodfellow moves first reading of bill intituled, "The Telephone Act, 1960."

Motion agreed to; first reading of the bill.

He said: This, Mr. Speaker, is for the most part a rewrite of The Telephone Act, 1955, and there are very few material changes in it. We are changing the name of the Ontario telephone authority to the Ontario telephone service commission. This bill is really a rewrite for legal purposes.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, it affords me very great pleasure, and I am sure it will give pleasure to the hon. members of the House, that I should have the opportunity of welcoming back to this House, after a long and very serious illness, the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney).

I might say, it is also a pleasure on this occasion, when I am saying a few words of welcome to him on his return to the House, to say that he is supported by his brother, the Rev. Father Henry Maloney of Bancroft, who is also in the House.

Father Maloney, of course, is a spiritual adviser of Jim's—if I can get down to the family names—and I may say this that Father Maloney is one of my many spiritual advisers.

Hon. members opposite understand that, with all the things I am accused of by the Opposition, I have to have a number of spiritual advisers to help me, and I am glad to acknowledge him as one of them.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, that, in welcoming the hon. Minister of Mines, I welcome one for whom, I must admit, I have a great deal of regard and affection. That, no doubt, first of all stems from the fact that these people here acknowledge that I am one of the valley residents, because my riding does extend over into the Ottawa Valley on its northern limits.

I knew the hon. Minister's father, mother and brothers very well. They are great personal friends of mine. In addition to that, I regard the hon. Minister with affection because of his Irish self.

I may say that I have had long association with the Irish. Hon. members can readily understand, with an Irish wife in whom I do not think there is a drop of any blood other than Irish, that over these 30-odd years I have gathered a very great respect and regard for them.

It is a very great pleasure to welcome, if I can leave off all the trappings of office, my friend and the friend of everybody here I think—Jim Maloney. It is a great pleasure to have him here.

In this regard, Mr. Speaker, might I say that I am very hopeful that it will be my pleasure, and the pleasure of all of us, to welcome back into this House the hon. member for Sault Ste. Marie (Mr. Lyons). The hon. member has suffered a long and severe illness. By reason of the ailment from which he suffers, he has had a foot amputated, but he writes me the most optimistic letters.

I am sure that, if we could have Harry back here to deliver one of his great addresses on the issues of the day, it would be very worthwhile. He told me that he will be back about the middle of this month.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, this is one occasion when I can agree wholeheartedly, and actually in much detail, with the hon. Prime Minister. The hon. Minister of Mines has many friends, including myself, on this side of the House—hon. members that he has endeared himself to personally. We may have differences of opinion, politically, but I think that all of us recognize in the hon. Minister of Mines a very warmhearted and human man who has much ability, and who has added much to this House, and who will add much to this House in the future.

Mr. Speaker, it likewise gives me great pleasure to welcome Father Maloney to the House. Father Maloney and I have known one another for a long time, and I join with the hon. Prime Minister in the good wishes that this House expresses to Father Maloney and to his brother, the hon. Minister of Mines.

I said at the outset that I can agree with the hon. Prime Minister in some respects and, Mr. Speaker, I, too, have had the experience of living with an Irish wife, not for quite as long as the hon. Prime Minister has, but I know of some of the great advantages and maybe some of the handicaps of that particular.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I do take this opportunity to extend, on behalf of our side of the House, our welcome to the hon. Minister of Mines. I sincerely hope that his health, and his energy, and his opportunity, to take part in the functions of this House will be given a full opportunity during the balance of this session.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I am awfully sorry. May I say that it is a pleasure also to follow the lead of the hon. Leader of the Opposition who, the other day, welcomed some ladies here who were supporters of his party.

May I say, sir, that it is a very great pleasure today to welcome here no less than 30 ladies from Lindsay and community who have travelled up here, despite storm warnings that have been issued by both the weather people and by the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko), to attend this afternoon session. May I say that these ladies are members of the Grand Old Party. It is very nice, Mr. Speaker, to have them here.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to address a question to the hon. Minister of Public Works (Mr. Connell).

Before that, perhaps I might be permitted to add my words of welcome for the coming to this House of two of the illustrious Maloney brothers. There are so many of them I sometimes wonder if I have got them all tabulated, mentally at least. However, I do add my words of welcome to Rev. Father Maloney for a visit, and to the hon. James for his return.

Knowing the hon. Minister's Irish background and his capacity to display it, I know that the best welcome will be the speed with which he gets into the fight. I do not imagine it will take very long.

Mr. Speaker, my question, a copy of which I have submitted through you to the hon. Minister of Public Works, is this: That again this week I have been approached by a constituent who has been laid off by The Department of Public Works, after employment with them for a number of years.

Mr. Speaker, in view of the provincial government's co-operation with the federal government to absorb winter unemployment through the winter works programme, and to encourage private individuals and employers to plan now for renovation and repair work instead of leaving it until spring and summer, how can the government justify a policy of laying off public works personnel and adding to the peak winter unemployment?

Has the government considered at least the postponement of these layoffs, if they feel they are absolutely necessary, till at least late spring or summer?

Hon. R. Connell (Minister of Public Works): Mr. Speaker, I would like to say, in replying to the hon. member for York South, that the department is definitely concerned, along with the federal government and the municipalities, with relief wherever possible of seasonable unemployment among the building trades.

During the past year, our policy of carrying out major works has undergone revision and, although extensive works are currently being carried out, many of the projects which formerly were constructed by day labour forces, hired by this department, are now being constructed by contractors.

We have made it a point to continue to carry on—or even start—new works in the winter months, and public works construction contracts carry provisions for the continuation of construction, without cessation, during the winter period.

During the transition from day labour to contract, it is only natural that, as works being done by day labour reach a conclusion and new works go to contract, the day labour forces employed by this department have to be laid off.

It must be obvious that the work is still there, the only difference being that the contractors become the employers.

Mr. Speaker, I want to emphasize that the net employment on projects for The Department of Public Works is actually higher now than it was a year ago in the total number of workmen engaged.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I follow up what the hon. Minister has avoided, the second part of my question, which seems to me to be the key one? Why are they being laid off now in the peak winter period when their policy, in conjunction with other governments, is to plead for private individuals to keep them on?

Hon. Mr. Frost: The course of business. How would we conduct business any other way? Employers do not keep people on when the job runs out, do they?

Mr. MacDonald: Well, we will have to debate it later.

Hon. M. Phillips (Provincial Secretary): Mr. Speaker, I beg leave to present to the House the following:

1. The report of the Provincial Secretary of Ontario with respect to the administration of part IX of The Corporations Act, 1953, for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959.

2. The report of the Provincial Secretary of Ontario with respect to the administration of The Corporations Act, 1953, and The Mortmain and Charitable Uses Act for the fiscal year ending March 31, 1959.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Mines would like the opportunity to tell the House how he is feeling.

Hon. J. A. Maloney (Minister of Mines): Mr. Speaker, may I at the outset very humbly express to the hon. Prime Minister, the hon. leader of the Opposition and the hon. member for York South my very deep appreciation of the very kindly references that they have made to me.

I have missed the sittings of this House, but I have kept pretty close touch with it through the press, so when my hon. friend from York South refers to my getting back in the fight, it would appear to be, Mr. Speaker, that there does not seem to be any fight to get into.

The manner in which this House is being led and in which this province is being governed assures me, as I am sure it does all or the great majority of the people of Ontario, that never before has Ontario had the opportunity of saying, as we predicted prior to the last general election—even greater progress lies ahead.

I have missed the hurly-burly of the activities of this House, and have missed the very many pleasant associations that I formed during previous sessions.

I am also very pleased, Mr. Speaker, to welcome to this House many of the new faces that were not here in the last House, and I do hope that our relationship will be as enjoyable, as my relations have been with those who preceded them.

I have not had an opportunity yet, Mr. Speaker, of congratulating you on the very high office to which you have been chosen, but, knowing something of your character and your tenacity of purpose, I do know that the affairs of the House will be administered fairly without fear or favour to any party or any individual.

I am also very thankful to my colleague the hon. Minister of Lands and Forests (Mr. Spooner) for the very capable manner in which he performed the duties of acting Minister of Mines in my absence. Also, I am very grateful to my staff, all of whom make me realize that, possibly, I am an unnecessary appendage to this government, because of the very smooth and efficient way in which the work of the department has been carried on in my absence.

Now, Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I should like to draw the attention of the hon. members to The Department of Mines' annual report of activities, which, with your permission, has been placed on their desks.

"Ontario, an Expanding Mining Empire"—this title, I believe, concisely and accurately sums up the record which the mining industry in this province has established, not only in the last year, but over the past several decades.

It is a remarkable record of growth, and I commend the attention of the hon. members to the graph near the front of the book, depicting the soaring rate of production since the first year of this century. It will be noted that only 13 years ago, that is in 1946, the total annual production of our mines was valued at about $190 million. Last year the total reached an all-time high of more than $960 million.

That is a rate of expansion which, I think, would be hard to match anywhere in the world.

Our mining industry is one of the great bulwarks of our economy and, for that reason if for no other, I suggest that this concise but exhaustive report, of the activities of the individual companies that make up the mining complex, deserves the attention of every hon. member of this House.

Part II of the report deals specifically with the operations of the various offices and branches of The Department of Mines itself. Numerically, this is one of the smaller departments of the government, but the responsibilities of the officials and staff in guiding and administering so important an industry are extremely heavy and onerous.

I want to repeat what I have said before—that, without exception, they carry out these responsibilities in a way that reflects not only credit on themselves, but on the department and on the government. The department enjoys the respect and the co-operation of the mining industry with which it deals, and its offices are always open to management and employees for information or consultation.

Finally, I should like to express my thanks to the hon. Ministers and the officials of other departments whose operations, in some measure, tie in with those of The Department of Mines.

I refer particularly to the section of the report dealing with the operations of the Ontario fuel board, insofar as these operations have to do with the development of natural gas and oil reserves. I refer, also, to another section prepared by officials of The Department of Economics. This latter section deals with Ontario's principal mineral products, placing them in perspective in the light of world-wide supply and demand.

The report, published this early in the new year, gives a complete summary of operations and activities to the end of December 1959. It is our belief that such information, to be useful, must be made available while it is still fresh and newsworthy. It is designed as a reliable work of reference, and I believe sincerely that it will accomplish this purpose.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to address a question to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley).

At the first meeting of the standing committee on labour, the hon. Minister indicated that an opportunity would be given to interested bodies to make representations on the government bill to amend The Labour Relations Act.

In introducing the government bill a week ago, however, the hon. Minister stated, as recorded on page 697 of Hansard, that, if there are any other viewpoints to be expressed, he would be glad to consider them and pass them on, in whole or in part, to the labour committee.

As a result of these apparently contradictory procedures, trade union spokesmen are uncertain as to whether they will be given an opportunity to present their views to the standing committee. Would the hon. Minister clarify the procedure the government intends to follow, so that interested bodies on both union and management side may know exactly what they are?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Mr. Speaker, I would be very pleased to endeavour to answer the hon. member's question. I was just noticing, in this book issued by the hon. Minister of Mines, that page 7 says, the hon. James A. Maloney, QC, the double drum mine hoist. I think that is a pretty good description of him.

Now, in answer to the hon. member's question, sir, I did indicate, at the first meeting of the labour committee, that I did not think it was going to be the intention of the government to absolutely eliminate the possibility of anybody making a representation that was deemed necessary or desirable. However, in my commission in the first reading of this bill I did say this:

The work of the committee and its authority, insofar as this Act is concerned, will relate to the Act which is government policy. The purpose will be to fully explain the same and to obtain the view of the hon. members.

It is not the purpose to have another public hearing such as was held by the labour committee. However, I would be very glad to consider any representations anyone desires to make. I will consider any suggestions at any time.

The government takes the responsibility for this legislation. If there are changes to be made, they will be introduced in the form of such amendments as the government feels it can recommend.

In the meantime, if there are any viewpoints to be expressed, I would be very glad to consider them. They then can be passed on in whole, or in part, to the labour committee.

The foregoing procedure, I think, will provide for an orderly and dispassionate consideration of the problems involved in this legislation.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I ask a supplementary question? Is the hon. Minister, in effect, saying—and let us be very clear on this—that, as far as he is concerned, the committee will not accept representations?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Correct. That is right.

Hon. Mr. Daley: That is right, but they will have every opportunity to make their representation.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I may say that I have received just one letter of representation now.

Those things will be received, and they will be considered with those people, the hon. Minister of Labour and the cabinet council. I think that that is the proper orderly procedure in a manner—

Mr. MacDonald: But, Mr. Speaker, may I be permitted to make this brief comment. This, at least, is not in accordance with the spirit of the decision of the committee, supported by the many government members of the committee, who said that, not only representative bodies but anybody who wanted to come and make representation should be entitled to do so. The hon. Minister said, and I agreed with him, that the representations should be specifically on amendments, and not roam the field, in effect to rehash the public hearing before the select committee.

But I cannot see why the government feels that it must be impelled to stop anybody who wants to come and enlighten the committee, in addition to enlightening the cabinet and council.

Mr. Rowntree: Mr. Speaker, that is not exactly the way the situation developed. At the first meeting of the standing committee on labour, the hon. member for York South himself commented that it was not in the committee's interests to hold a public hearing in the same fashion as the select committee did. And it was in accordance with his views and mine that this present policy has evolved.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I rise on a question of personal privilege. The hon. member is completely misrepresenting my position. There is all the difference in the world between having a completely open public hearing which would, in effect, be a rehash of the whole select committee hearings, and hearing representations on the specific amendments of the specific bill the government has brought in. Surely the hon. member can grasp that difference.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, I must rise on this particular matter and agree with the hon. member for York South.

I was at that particular meeting, and I think the hon. Minister will acknowledge that, at that meeting, he did take the position, as the hon. member for York West has outlined now, that it would be a mistake to rehash, if you will—and I think that very word was used at the committee—the entire labour committee hearings that took place, as the hon. Minister emphasizes, over a long period of time.

But likewise I think that the committee was left with the impression that an opportunity would be permitted for any interested groups to come and concisely speak to any particular amendments that are suggested by way of legislation. Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me that the very purpose of the standing committee is to gain what knowledge and information it can, with respect to the specifics.

I quite agree that there is an area here of abuse where we could roam all over the field, but I do think, with respect to the significant changes that have been suggested by way of amended legislation, that there is a valid case to be made, and strongly pressed, for significant and worthwhile representation at the committee meetings.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I would say to my hon. friend that it is possible that a valid case may be made. But I only point out to my hon. friend that we have to make decisions and choices in the matter of this sort.

Now, as it will appear to the hon. members of this House, this legislation is involved, complicated legislation—the hon. Minister of Labour will concur in that point.

At the meetings of the labour committee for purposes that the committee's wisdom saw fit, members of the labour department were not called before that committee. I recognize that was a decision in which there was a difference in the point of view at the time.

In the consideration of this report, and in the consideration of this bill, those who have considered it, including myself, have the advantage of the detailed viewpoint of Professor Finkelman, the chairman of the board; Mr. Reid, the vice-chairman of the board; as well Mr. Metzler and Mr. Fine, the hon. Minister, the Deputy Minister and others.

I would say this, the first two named are quasi-judicial people. As a matter of fact, I do not feel that they would have any great objection to going into a place where it would be necessary, or being placed in the position where they had to determine whether or not certain representations might be accepted.

After all, I want to submit to the committee the greatest and the fullest of information in connection with this very involved and difficult subject. I am satisfied with this, that the members of the committee will find that the experience and the opinions of Professor Finkelman, and the vice-chairman of the board, will be of the very greatest advantage.

In discussing this with Professor Finkelman, he asked me to make it plain that he was explaining a matter which had become government policy; that he was not putting forth his personal views, and that was expressed by Mr. Reid as well. I think it is only fair that we should regard the matter in that light.

It seemed to me that the best way of making representation would be that if representations were made, they would be made to the hon. Minister of Labour and to the executive council. Now, I have no objection to those representations being made in public, I have no objection to handing them on in detail to the members of the committee.

But after all, in the end, in this involved matter, the decisions have to be decisions for which the government takes responsibility.

I do not want to make any reflection at all on what has taken place in other countries—but all I will say is this, that we have followed very carefully the proceedings in the Congress of the United States in relation to the bill that was recently adopted by Congress.

Our people went down there as study groups, to spend time in analyzing that. They came back here with the report that the consensus of the opinion, of all who took part from all over the United States, was that it was a question of organized confusion.

I do not want to get into that situation, so I would say that I think the situation is one in which we should have this thing considered calmly and deliberately by the committee itself.

I will take the representations that have been made—I only have one at the present time—and make them available to all hon. members of the House—pass them on to the committee itself, if that adds anything.

On the other hand, if such representations are really not for the committee to consider, but questions for the government to consider, then the cabinet can take responsibility in passing them on.

Now, we are dealing with a problem that is admittedly a difficult one, and I am perfectly prepared to look at this as things proceed, and consider the situation as it exists from time to time. When this bill receives its second reading and, by determination of this House, it goes to the committee, then we can see what the subsequent procedures will be.

My judgment is to follow what the hon. Minister of Labour has set out in his remarks here of a week ago yesterday, and in his remarks of today.

Now, if it appears that we can get some further information or light, I am perfectly prepared to consider that at the time. But I must say, Mr. Speaker, that I would be completely opposed to submitting the committee, even within the end of this bill, to a rehearing of matters that we have already gone through, that I am sure stand some 3 feet high.

Now, every phase has been considered, but I think that possibly it could come up before the committee of the House.

However, I would be very glad to discuss the matter with the hon. leader of the Opposition, but only after this procedure has been tried out and we see how it works.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Prime Minister permit a question? In light of what the hon. Prime Minister has just said, Mr. Speaker, in regards to any changes of thinking of groups being the responsibility of the cabinet and the government, and the fact that the amendments already submitted have been the responsibility of the government and cabinet, could he tell me what is going to be the function of the standing committee?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say the function of the standing committee is this—to take these proposed enactments—which are technical, I must admit, and my hon. friend will find them complicated in their effects—and to cheerfully consider them.

In the light of that, and in the light of information that the committee gleaned and has, any committee member can have any number of advisers he wants to have, if there appears that there are other points in relation to these things that need alteration, change or strengthening.

Then they can be considered. That is the light in which we are placing them there.

Mr. MacDonald: Introducing new rules? Why are we introducing new rules?

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is not a new rule.

Mr. MacDonald: Sure it is. Every committee has—

Mr. Davison: Mr. Speaker, on the question that I asked, I just cannot see why this committee is being set up differently from other committees. Now, I spent some time in a committee this morning where we had representations from different cities, we were able to ask them questions and they were explained.

Now, this is very definitely a problem, as far as labour is concerned. We are going to have perhaps 50 or so people on this committee, and I think they should have people there, of whom they can ask questions. So therefore I feel both labour and management, if they feel they have problems, should be there, to have an opportunity to answer any questions that we, as the committee, would want to ask.

Hon. Mr. Frost: The question has already been answered.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to call third readings here, please.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day, I would like to direct this question to the hon. Prime Minister. Now, unfortunately I have not given him any written notice whatsoever. It just came to my attention, and he will be free to refuse it or do as he wishes.

Mr. Speaker, the day before yesterday—late at night—it was told to the House that the committee on commissions would be cancelled.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I would ask the hon. Prime Minister: (1) why that particular committee meeting was cancelled; (2) when that committee will meet again; and (3) is there anything in the postponement which would permit the enactment of the liquor legislation before that particular committee has had an opportunity to study it?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I would say that I am not familiar with the matter at all, except that the clerk has told me now that His Honour Judge Robb had a court appointment which prevented his attendance and therefore the meeting was postponed. In connection with the other matter, it is not the intention to refer the liquor legislation to the committee.

THIRD READINGS

The following bills were given third reading, upon motions:

Bill No. Pr1, An Act respecting the township of Kingston.

Bill No. Pr8, An Act respecting the town of Ingersoll.

Bill No. Pr12, An Act respecting the townships of Raleigh and Harwich.

Bill No. Pr14, An Act respecting the Kitchener-Waterloo general hospital.

Bill No. Pr18, An Act respecting the city of Oshawa.

Bill No. Pr29, An Act respecting the city of Ottawa.

Bill No. Pr34, An Act respecting the town of Oakville and the township of Trafalgar.

CITY OF FORT WILLIAM

Mr. W. G. Noden moves second reading of Bill No. Pr26, "An Act respecting the city of Fort William."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF TORONTO

Mr. A. Grossman moves second reading of Bill No. Pr32, "An Act respecting the city of Toronto."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

HUNTINGTON UNIVERSITY

Mr. R. J. Boyer moves second reading of Bill No. Pr36, "An Act to incorporate Huntington University."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

CITY OF BARRIE

Mr. G. G. Johnston moves second reading of Bill No. Pr38, "An Act respecting the city of Barrie."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

TOWNSHIP OF TORONTO

Mr. D. H. Morrow moves second reading of Bill No. Pr40, "An Act respecting the township of Toronto."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

UNIVERSITY OF SUDBURY

Mr. R. Belisle moves second reading of Bill No. Pr44, "An Act respecting the University of Sudbury."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

UNIVERSITY OF LALEMANT COLLEGE

Mr. Belisle moves second reading of Bill No. Pr45, "An Act to incorporate the University of Lalemant College."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

LAURENTIEN UNIVERSITY OF SUDBURY

Mr. Belisle moves second reading of bill No. Pr46, "An Act to incorporate Laurentien University of Sudbury."

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, before we leave private bills, may I ask what has happened to Bill No. Pr11?

Hon. Mr. Frost: It is still on the order paper

Mr. Bryden: Why?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Why not? Does the hon. member want me to take it off?

THE POWER COMMISSION ACT

Hon. R. Macaulay moves second reading of Bill No. 71, "An Act to amend The Power Commission Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, on first reading of this bill I indicated to the House that it was really a bill of a housekeeping nature and pointed out that, perhaps with one or two minor exceptions, the major one was the creation of a committee, or an arbitration board, to determine compensation.

I have asked the hon. leader of the House to permit me to introduce this in second reading today so that, when next week—on Wednesday, I believe, Hydro comes before the committee on energy—any of the members of the committee will be in a position to ask the representatives of Hydro some of the details dealing with this bill, if it is thought desirable.

I do not think that there is anything particularly contentious or involved about it.

Motion agreed to; second reading of the bill.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, in calling the next two orders, No. 17 and No. 18—that is The Labour Relations Act and The Judicature Act—those bills will both go to the labour committee. I call order No. 17.

THE LABOUR RELATIONS ACT

Hon. C. Daley moves second reading of Bill No. 74, "An Act to amend The Labour Relations Act."

He said: Mr. Speaker, in calling for second reading of Bill No. 74, I would just like to make a few comments in connection with this bill.

This is an Act to amend The Labour Relations Act, and there is not much that I wish to add to the general statement at this time which I made on first reading.

That statement reviewed the development of this bill and the changes in the legislation which have been included in this, following an exhaustive study of the report of the select committee on labour relations.

Comment on this bill in the newspapers, both newswise and editorialwise, has been generally favourable. There has been some criticism, but generally the bill has been favourably received.

There are two things that I think should be made clear about this bill.

First it represents the policy of the government on amendments to the legislation at this juncture. It may be that there is a "t" to be crossed or an "i" to be dotted here and there, but I am of the opinion that it is as far as we should go in making changes at this time.

The second thing that I should like to mention is that the final word is never said on labour relations or labour legislation. It is a living and growing field of legislation, and it takes time and experience to work out the practical and reasonable solution to the problems which will arise. If any of the legislative proposals contained in this bill do not work out as we have hoped and planned, then I feel sure that it will be the purpose of the government to re-examine the situation in the light of experience.

Each hon. member of the House has before him the basic documents from which to work in studying the bill. Our purpose in putting these into the hands of all the hon. members is to promote a careful study of its provisions, particularly at the committee stages.

As was said on first reading, it was the intention of the government to refer this bill to the standing committee on labour, so that its provisions may be carefully considered. This bill is couched in language which is highly technical. It is difficult to interpret and I think it is fair to say that it takes considerable familiarity in working with such legislation to gain a good understanding of it.

For that reason I propose to have people from the Ontario labour relations board and The Department of Labour attend with me, before the standing committee, for the assistance of the members of the committee. I should like to say a few words on some of the matters contained in the bill.

A new feature is a provision for holding pre-hearing votes. In a sense, the applicant union makes a double-barrelled application. It applies for certification, but with a vote before the hearing by the Ontario labour relations board is held to decide finally on the union's request for certification. The onus is still on the union to establish to the satisfaction of the board that it represents a majority of the employees in the bargaining unit and is entitled to certification.

It is our feeling that this type of procedure will do two things, namely to speed up the disposal of many applications for certification, and I believe it will reduce the number of petitions to get certification. The reason that I make this last statement is because of the fact that, in many quarters, we hear it said: "What we should like to see is a vote of our employees."

Well, this provides for votes from the outset, where the union makes this type of application. It will be interesting to see how the procedure turns out in practice.

I think that the members of the select committee will bear me out when I say that one of the most contentious matters raised to them was the question of delay in conciliation proceedings. It was stressed on all sides, and in particular by the trade unions. Suggested remedies ran all the way from those of the abolitionists to those of the revisionists.

I am sure that, by the time the members of the committee have gone through the mass of material that was presented to them, it must have been obvious that, if delay were the only complaint, the process itself was sound. As far as conciliation is concerned—and it is one of the keystones of The Labour Relations Act—we must accept the fact that there must be some method of getting an employer and trade union together to settle their differences and have them sign a collective agreement.

In Ontario, our conciliation procedure consists of two stages. The first is where an officer is appointed to call a meeting of the parties in an attempt to settle a dispute. The second is where the conciliation board is appointed to hold formal hearings in a further attempt to settle if the officer has failed.

I should like to say that, over the years, there have been delays in conciliation in many cases. However, it is only fair to state that the delay should not be ascribed completely to The Department of Labour. It is an open secret that either labour or management will stall if it suits their purpose. Our trouble is not at the officer stage, but rather at the board stage. The officer gets a meeting going with the parties usually as quickly as they are available.

In the bill before the House, we have undertaken to require a conciliation board to report within 30 days of its first hearing. The chairman can apply to the Minister for one extension of 30 days. The parties themselves may extend the time for reporting for a period not exceeding 90 days. After that, they must have the Minister's consent.

If the time limit expires and no extension has been granted, the proceedings are automatically terminated. The parties are left to their own devices and this may include strike or lockout.

We are also giving the Minister power to replace a member of the board of conciliation if he cannot enter on his duties within a reasonable period of time. It is hoped, by strict enforcement of these provisions, and by the co-operation of the parties, delays will be controlled.

An interesting experiment is undertaken in this bill. Provision is made for the appointment by the Minister of a mediator at the joint request of the parties. Such a mediator takes the place of the entire conciliation process, both officer and board. If he succeeds, an agreement follows. If he fails, his report is the same as the report of a board of conciliation, and a right to strike or lockout will arise. The fees and expenses of the mediator are to be shared equally by the parties.

Frankly, this is a wait-and-see proposition. We are breaking new ground and it will be interesting to see how it works.

We are also extending the powers of the Ontario labour relations board to deal with cases of discrimination, and I shall mention two areas.

First, in cases of discrimination relating to employment where there is no bargaining agent representing employees or which have been raised following certification of a collective agreement, the complaint of firing or discrimination will be made to the Ontario labour relations board and, after an investigation, will be dealt with by that board.

This is a transfer of jurisdictions from the Minister and was recommended by the select committee.

The second area gives the board power to deal with cases where a man has been dropped from membership in a trade union and the employer is required to dismiss him because the collective agreement has a closed shop or union shop division. If this situation comes within the new provisions of the Legislature, namely, the charge against him is due to unionism or activities against the incumbent union, he can apply to the Ontario labour relations board to be restored to his employment. This, too, is new, and we must await experience under this provision before passing judgment on it.

In the field of jurisdictional disputes, I may say that two things have been done. I have met with the construction industry and will meet again with the representatives of the industry, both labour and management, on March 11.

This was a recommendation of the select committee. Out of these meetings, which I plan to continue, it is my hope that there will be created a spirit and purpose of co-operation that will benefit both the employees and employers in this industry.

We are hoping to see them accept fully their responsibilities for the peace and well-being of the industry. At one time or another, we have seen this industry beset by difficulties in negotiating agreements, harassed by succeeding strikes and often halted by jurisdictional disputes—that is, disputes over work assignment. If we can develop through these meetings an approach jointly accepted by labour and management, that is certainly all to the good.

We have left the provisions of the bill on jurisdictional disputes commissions sufficiently elastic to do two important things.

First, we have recognized that, where agreement has been made between employers and trade unions, to resolve differences arising from the assignment of work, the commission may postpone disposition of a complaint until the parties have dealt with the matter under their arrangements for settlement.

Second, the provision for an appointment of a jurisdictional inquiry commission is wide enough that, if the employers and union in an industry were to agree on the personnel or a board of their own on work assignment, such board could be given the powers of commission under this Act.

A number of other changes have been made in legislation.

If hon. members will refer to section 4 of the bill, they will note that the Ontario labour relations board has been given a broader discretion in dealing with applications for certification by craft unions on a craft basis.

Under the present position, the board is required to accept craft unions as appropriate for collective bargaining, where the employees exercise technical skills, or are members of a craft by reason of which they are distinguishable from the other employees, and commonly bargain separately and apart from other employees who are trade unionists.

That, according to established trade union practice, pertains to such skills or crafts.

Under the proposed amendment, the board is given discretion not to accept the craft position, where a group of employees are already included in a bargaining union, represented by another bargaining agent, at the time the application for certification is made by the craft union.

An effort has been made to speed up the rendering of decisions by arbitrators, and provisions for the enforcement of awards of arbitrators has been included in this bill. The Minister is empowered to issue whatever order he deems necessary where an award is unduly delayed. The problem of the enforcement of the awards of arbitrators has been touchy at times. My information is that awards are sometimes ignored. In order to overcome this situation, we have provided for the filing of a copy of the decision in the offices of the registrar of the supreme court, and thereupon the decision is enforceable as a judgment or order of that court.

We have also dealt with the question of union security on a first agreement under section 16 of the bill, and have provided that, where a trade union has not been certified, or has not been a party to a collective agreement for at least one year, an employer shall not include provision requiring, as a condition of employment, membership in the trade union unless, at the time of the making of the agreement, not less than 55 per cent. of the employees in the bargaining unit are members in good standing of the union.

There are few exceptions to this general principle. The first is where an employer joins an employers' organization and adheres to an existing collective agreement which provides for union membership as a condition of employment.

The second is in the construction industry, where it is an accepted fact that the union contract from the outset will contain such provisions.

We have also extended the provisions of section 34 of the existing Act dealing with discrimination under the existing legislation, agreement which discriminates against any person because of race or creed is not deemed to be a collective agreement. This provision is extended to cover discrimination because of race, creed, colour, nationality, ancestry, or place of origin. This brings The Labour Relations Act in line with The Fair Employment Practices Act, 1951.

Under section 25 of the bill, we have provided that an employer may express his views to his employees so long as he does not use coercion, intimidation, or threats. There are other provisions dealing with undue influence. This in part fills recommendation No. 30 of the select committee.

We have also provided that strike votes must be taken by secret ballot. This fulfills in part recommendation No. 44 of the select committee.

Provision is made in the bill for supervision over the trusteeship of a local union. A duty is cast on the parent union to advise the Ontario labour relations board of the details, verified by affidavit. The trusteeship is to last for a period of 12 months, and may be extended for a further period of 12 months with the consent of the board.

We have also required that unions furnish members with an audited annual financial statement on request, the term "audited" does not necessarily imply that the statement must be audited by a chartered accountant.

Power is given to the Lieutenant-Governor-in-council to make regulations requiring, among other things, the filing with The Department of Insurance of audited financial statements of pension or welfare funds operated for the benefit of employees. It is expected by this means to establish a measure of control and supervision over such plans, insofar as they are established for the benefit of employees in Ontario.

There are other provisions in the bill which are quite technical in character, and I propose to leave them for discussion at committee stages as the members may deem necessary.

Now, I should like to say a few words in recapitulation.

All told, the select committee made 51 recommendations. Of that number, 7 required no legislative action, and some 23 have been implemented in whole or part or, in some cases, alternative proposals have been developed. The remainder are not reflected in this bill.

Legislation in the field of labour relations is designed to promote industrial peace and harmony, and disputes are settled around the bargaining table. It cannot be said, however, that this type of legislation should become a means whereby either labour or industry may have an undue advantage over the other, but shall encourage realistic and proper bargaining. Let us not forget that the old days and the old methods of doing business are gone forever.

The field of labour relations has become so complex and its ramifications so wide, that it must be under constant review. In some way this has become a field for experts. Mark you, I do not object to the experts, but I think that we must infuse into the picture a little bit of realism, a little dose of common sense.

We must remember that this is an ever-changing field, and we must accept the fact that, at times, parts of the legislation must be on a trial-and-error basis. At times theories look attractive but, in the light of practical experience, often they do not work out.

It would be idle to deny that in this picture there are two opposed groups, labour and industry. The fact that they are opposed does not mean that they must be continually warring factions. To my way of thinking, just the opposite is very often the case. Each year, hundreds of agreements are arrived at without the intervention of a third party. Labour and management must share with each other the responsibility for providing the opportunity for peace and harmony in which industry shall prosper, and that prosperity should be shared with its workers.

In the past 25 years in Canada we have gone through, to all intents and purposes, an industrial revolution. We have watched industries grow to the point where we must agree that some of them are giants today. We have also witnessed the ever-changing tempo of union organization.

In 1943-1944 it became necessary for the government to legislate on industrial relations to provide reasonable and fair rules of the road for collective bargaining. These have had to be amended from time to time.

The effect of any major dispute bears on the people at large and, of course, represents a situation which also concerns the government, because it will ultimately affect government policy.

The policy of the present government is to provide the atmosphere for orderly and peaceful negotiations. Our aim is to keep the peace, to promote the happiness and prosperity of the people of this province, to see to it that people may do what they are entitled to do under the law, to join their trade unions, and to take part in their lawful activity for the betterment of all.

At the outset, I mentioned that this bill is couched in language which is highly technical. It is extremely difficult for a layman to interpret. This I can assure hon. members is because of necessity. Labour laws and jurisprudence are, of necessity, of a highly technical nature.

To make the matter more understandable, on first reading of the bill, I tabled certain information and gave it to every hon. member of the House. Included is a detailed explanation of each section.

I can understand that, even with the explanations to which I have referred, there are points which require clarification. For that reason, the bill is being referred to the labour committee where there will be made available to the committee members the expert opinion and the far-reaching experience of such as Mr. Metzler, Professor Finkelman, Mr. Reid, Mr. Fine and others. There, every detailed explanation can be given.

I again emphasize, as I did on first reading, that this bill does not necessarily represent the personal opinions of these gentlemen. It represents government policy and, in the light of that, they will give to the members of the committee the reasons upon which this legislation is based.

Second reading, of course, deals with the principle of the bill. There is one principle to this bill and that is providing ways and means by which labour and industry can collectively bargain together. Actually, many sections involve different ways and means of putting that into effect and, in my judgment, these various sections can be better discussed in committee than on second reading.

I can assure the hon. members of the House that I shall go to infinite care to give the committee the background of the reasons for the sections which are advanced in this bill.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, if I might speak on this particular bill, I would like the opportunity to make a few comments, and then to read some observations that I have prepared.

Mr. Speaker, at the outset I would say that, in conjunction with this problem of management and labour, I think we are facing the most serious challenge that has come before this Legislature, or any other Legislature, in many a year.

On the determination of what we will do to effect good relations between management and labour will depend, Mr. Speaker, in large measure, the success of our economic development in this province and in the Dominion for a long while to come. It may be that there are those who think that, when I speak in that vein, I am speaking theoretically or philosophically.

Mr. Speaker, I think it is important, and I think it is imperative, that we develop our philosophical concepts of this problem in detail, and accurately, before we examine the particular legislation that is before us.

Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that the first and paramount question that we should ask ourselves in this philosophical concept, if you will, is this simple question: What is an industrial organization? What is its purpose? Is it, as the classic economist would have us believe, to make money? Is that its sole and only purpose, or does it have other purposes? Does it have the purpose of doing something for the common good, for the community at large, to pay taxes, to employ people?

Mr. Speaker, in order to set my position as clearly as possible, I would say to hon. members that I reject the classical opinion. I do not think that an industrial enterprise has, as its primary and only purpose, the making of money.

True, that is an important function. But primarily and basically, Mr. Speaker, the purpose of an industrial enterprise is to serve the common good, to serve the community as such, and, in conjunction with that service, to provide employment, to provide the buying power, and to provide the means in the employee group to fulfil their social obligations to the state, to their family, and to themselves.

Mr. Speaker, in this respect I know I am talking theoretically, but I think, as I have said once or twice before, it is absolutely important that we think this way and that we begin to realize that the question of the solution of management and labour problems is not entirely in the realm of legislation, but it is in the realm of our concepts and our attitude and our philosophy of the relationship between the two.

The second proposition that I would submit for your consideration, Mr. Speaker, is the fact that I differ with those who feel, and I would hope that it is an ever-diminishing group, that management and labour are two irreconcilable groups—enemies, if you will—neither of which can give in to the other, and who must fight the other at every opportunity.

Mr. Speaker, that particular concept must be eradicated from our thinking. Instead, we must do everything within our power to promote the co-ordination and the co-operation of these two groups.

As I said in my Throne speech, it does seem to me that, thus far in this House and in this government, the opportunity has been lost to bring together management and labour at opportune times.

I said in my Throne speech, Mr. Speaker, that I have much encouragement now in Prince Philip's opportunity to provide that very chance, that very opportunity to management and labour in Canada, and to Mr. Joduin's suggestion that management and labour councils bear and do have much merit.

I think this government has been hesitant too long, and has failed to take the opportunity that presents itself, even now, to do something to co-operatively bring these two groups together, to talk out their problems.

Success will not be immediate. There will be all sorts of differences of opinion. But at least we will begin to provide the opportunity of consultation and co-operation, without which, Mr. Speaker, our legislation is worth very little.

Now, talking to the legislation as such, I would say that herein we must define purpose by all means. The preamble of the bill, in my opinion, does not do the job that should be done.

I am of the opinion that the application of the philosophy which I have tried to espouse in an informal way, does demonstrate this simple proposition:

That this particular labour relations bill should have, as its purpose, of course, the harmonious relationship between management and labour.

But primarily, Mr. Speaker, I suggest that it should have as its primary purpose the acknowledgment of the simple fact that employees, and labour as such, have an inherent right to freely organize and to perform that organization without the interference of any third party whatsoever.

Mr. Speaker, it does seem to me this should be the very essence of the Act. In this respect I suggest to hon. members that we are never going to get anywhere if we do not acknowledge that simple fundamental proposition. If we give lip service only to the suggestion that labour has a right to freely organize, but permit management intervention in that organization, we are not being true to our espoused principle, and necessarily we are going to run into difficulties. And I would say herein lies the first weakness of the legislation, as such.

The second purpose of the legislation obviously must, and should, be the promotion of effective collective bargaining. In this area government should have nothing to say whatsoever.

We have labour, organized labour, and trade unionism, representing collectively, a group of employees on one side and management on the other side, negotiating freely and independently of any sources whatsoever, using the opportunity to bring about a solution to their respective problems. That is the essence of collective bargaining, and that particular premise, and that particular principle, I think we are all agreed on. I do not think there is any difference of agreement in that respect.

Now, the problem of government comes in at the next stage. Suppose that management and labour cannot agree. Suppose that their negotiations break down, what must government do?

Well, government in Ontario has provided the conciliation service and I think, frankly, that the government has made an effort, over the period of years, to use this particular facility as effectively as possible. It has many weaknesses and I think we all, on all sides of the House, recognize them: the delay that has incurred at times, the unnecessary delay, the fact that we require 3 members of the board.

I commend the government for taking one step forward, for providing an alternative to conciliation, that is, as I understand it, the appointment, in simple language, of a one-man conciliation board upon the agreement of both management and labour. I think the government is to be commended for that.

I would hope that in the future, if this particular alternative proves successful, maybe we can substantially streamline the whole conciliation process. And I interpret this particular move on the part of government to be an alternative, as I have said, to be an experiment. I would hope that it will work very effectively, because I think it has within itself substantial merit.

One observation I would make, however, Mr. Speaker, and that is this: That it is my understanding that the cost of this particular alternative process is to be borne by the parties. I think, instead, that it might be worth consideration to suggest that the costs should be borne by the government and, Mr. Speaker, I suggest for your consideration this possibility that we build up, outside of The Department of Labour—outside of the civil service force, if one will—a consultant group of conciliation officers, trained expert men, who would be available for this very service. I think in this respect we would take a substantial step forward.

Now, Mr. Speaker, the concluding informal remark that I want to make is that we must recognize the fourth factor, and that is the responsibility of government, as such to the common good and to the people, as such.

The government has a responsibility, when all else fails, to intervene. It must exercise that responsibility prudently, discreetly, and with substantial wisdom. I do not agree that government should wait before intervention until the parties unanimously agree that government should intervene. This particular responsibility must then be exercised, as I said, with great prudence and with wisdom.

Now, Mr. Speaker, with those informal remarks I would take the opportunity to read some more specific remarks directed specifically to this particular Bill No. 74.

I would suggest that the purpose and the first prerequisite is to establish that which we seek to do. Industrial activity in Ontario has reached a plateau where we can no longer deal in platitudes. Rather, we must set out firmly what our purpose is to be.

It is a recognized fact in government life that the institution of trade unionism is here to stay. It is recognized that the industrial government around the collective bargaining table has reached a mature level of approach to the problems of labour-management relations in most areas of industrial activity.

There are, of course, special problems related to specialized industrial circumstances, for example in the building industry, and in other industries where seasonal aspects of activity present special problems. These fields require special consideration which I shall outline later.

But at this stage in my remarks, it is necessary that we spell out, I repeat, that we spell out that which we seek to do. It is in the preamble of this bill that we might do just that.

I propose at the appropriate time, Mr. Speaker, to move to amend section 1 of the bill which would have the effect, in principle, of changing that section to read like this:

The intent and purpose of this Act is to develop harmonious relations between management and employees through the free expression and determination of employees to organize the trade union of their own choice.

2. Free collective bargaining between the employer and freely chosen representatives of the employees.

In the area of interpretation, the principle of a bill of this kind requires the definition of employee to include, among other things, all people in the employ of management, including professional and non-professional people whose occupations are not managerial in nature, and who freely express their desire to be included for function as an organization under The Labour Relations Act.

In professional areas, that, of course, is the decision of those in a profession as to whether or not they desire recognition and certification for purposes of collective bargaining under the Act—just as it must be the free choice of non-professional people to make their own free decision.

Thus I submit here that we must be clear in our purpose if the principle of The Labour Relations Act and any of its amendments from time to time is to be followed in the interpretation and administration of the Act by the department, its boards, and where necessary, by the court.

It is the firm resolve of the Liberal party in Ontario that the purpose of the Act, and any of its amendments, should be to set up the principle that employed people below managerial level shall have the free choice of representation under the Act, and that that point should be made crystal clear. If there be any reservations from this point of view, then the Act is barren of principle.

The general principles set out in Bill No. 74, in explanatory notes, leave more to be desired than any new principle that could be readily accepted. What is left out violates the preamble as it is written in the first draft of the bill—for the preamble, as it now reads, purports to include all employers and employees, yet actually discrimination is implied by the very many who are so specifically excluded by the present Act in absence of proposed amendments.

For example, there is no amendment that would include the civil service, which is certainly entitled to collective bargaining rights. There is no principle evolved that large professional groups who, in particular occupations, desire certification of their organizational area of interest, shall have the right to so proceed.

There is no intent to remove the unsound principle contrary to the proposed preamble enshrined in section 78 of the present Act. These municipal unions can be removed from the Act at the whim of their particular municipal council or recognized board thereof, whether within or without an agreement.

This government has evaded the principle that collective agreements once entered into must be honoured. Their breach of principle here is that I cannot find any indication that the contracting out of work performed by employees, under a collective agreement, is to be spelled out as a strict violation of the principle of a collective bargaining agreement. If people agree that a certain act should be performed within the lifetime of an agreement, then that agreement must be honoured in its fullest sense.

As we are at the present time discussing principle only, we shall be prepared to introduce amendments at the appropriate time and place.

I find in Bill No. 74 some sections which appear, on the surface at least, to be new principles. If, however, I understand these which appear to be new principles correctly, then again the government is moving to disprove any intent in principle of their proposed preamble.

For example, section 16 of the bill, as it is now written, can be the introduction of a right-to-work law in Ontario deeper in its intent than anything yet undertaken in any of the American states where such laws have been passed. Its resemblance to anything contained in recommendation No. 47 of the select committee is purely coincidental.

Actually, this is a straight new departure in principle by the government. If it were adopted, it could destroy completely a host of collective agreements which contain, among other things, union shops with compulsory checkoff, agreement with the Rand formula, and so on.

If it is the intent of the government to move into a right-to-work area, it should say so in clear terms. But the wide implication of section 16, as it is written, is loaded with dynamite against the unions—yes, against the very institution of trade unionism. We cannot quarrel with the principle that a person, who loses or who is denied gainful employment because of loss of or denial of a union card, should have the right of appeal to some tribunal where his appeal could be dispassionately and expeditiously heard and resolved. As a matter of fact, the united auto workers have themselves provided a tribunal for these cases which, I am told, is a satisfactory method.

Perhaps principle can be established that the labour relations board should hear and resolve issues of this kind where no such tribunal is available. This is a principle which can be worked out. But to blandly establish the principle that no person can be disciplined—regardless of how flagrant or injurious his union, or non-union, activity or even anti-union activity might be—is simply stating, in the clearest way, that this government now gives way to the proposition that unions must live with a cancer. It is simply a violation of common sense to even propose a principle of this sort.

We object to the principle espoused here and will strongly oppose it in committee.

Now, with respect to mediation and conciliation. The principle here that conciliation boards be bypassed to a mediator where the parties agree, Mr. Speaker, is, I believe, a good principle with one exception. I do not agree that the cost should be shared by the parties concerned. Industrial government, good industrial government, is in the community interest, and if those interests will be best served by a mediator, then the community—that is the Crown—should pay the cost within reasonable limits.

Certainly fees of a few hundred dollars cannot be balanced unobjectively against the consequences of economic action to the community. If a strike or lockout should occur after mediation, then our people in government will have quick and ready access to the reasons and decisions leading up to economic action.

Actually it is our feeling that the parties will get down to realistic bargaining when they agree on a mediator and then know that the very next step is either agreement or economic action. Let us quit quibbling about pennies and get on with this principle.

While we are on this principle of mediation, we should broaden it to the conciliation officer level. It has always surprised me that conciliation officers in government service have done so very well with so little. But how much more could have been done if their status had been less than that of a poorly paid servant, and more than that of an equal in prestige.

This leads me to the bold suggestion—with all due respect to conciliation officers in government service—that we remove conciliation officer activity from the civil service and leave it to a field of labour consulting service where, by mutual agreement or otherwise, the parties to agreement or disagreement can sit down with people with comparable prestige.

I suggest here that the department function at this stage would be none other than expediting matters and insisting on the time limits set out in the Act.

The question arises, where would we get the personnel? I suggest to you, Mr. Speaker, that there are many people in Ontario, in and out of The Department of Labour, who could be assembled for this particular service. Indeed, I have no doubt that several now in the service would enter the consulting field if there was recognition of their ability by proper fee remuneration, and certainly, in the whole field of conciliation officer and board, capable men would make themselves available.

Those suspected of being pro-labour, or pro-management, as the case may be, would soon develop a sound outlook as many judges do on the bench when they know that all parties are looking to them for wisdom and judgment of the evidence and issues.

We would develop, too, an objective outlook in reports to the Minister and to the department. Hon. members will agree that we cannot look for better things when we will not acknowledge ability with better pay.

Yet, under the present scheme of things, it would be unlikely that an employee—or several of them—would receive more than the Minister or his civil service or the Deputy Minister. This is a type of service just as valuable to labour relations, on a professional level, as the work of other professional people is to other departments of government.

It is a field which should be made available and attractive to interested people. It is not suggested here that any who desire the present facilities should be denied them. But it is suggested that they should be available to those in management and labour who can recognize and desire to use avenues of this kind.

And now, Mr. Speaker, may I say a few things with respect to section 27 of the bill?

Section 27 of the bill opens up a potential field day for lawyers. Can one imagine the interpretation and misinterpretation of the phrase "if he knows or ought to know"? The labour relations board will be further hamstrung by hundreds of actions on this point and, once in the court, on terminology of this kind there would be no end to frustration and delay.

I can interpret the principle behind this section as nothing more than that of crippling trade union activities, which is again opposed to the principle of the government's own proposed preamble. Situations which would arise from implementation of this section would be too weird to contemplate.

Actually, too much legal atmosphere is evident already in board hearings, much of it unnecessary when we have men learned in the law at the head of the board.

The whole basis of labour relations just has to be one of common sense between the parties involved, certainly advised by lawyers where necessary, but not approaching the solemnity of a supreme court. A man whose inclinations on the board are such might be better advised to secure an appointment to a supreme court.

As I stated in the outset, construction and seasonal industries pose their peculiar problems. The first, and perhaps the most important factor, is the fact that here we do not, generally deal with long-term agreements with, possibly, renewal clauses. Here, it is commonly a job proposition—one of a few weeks, or few months.

It necessarily follows then, unless and until we have area-wide agreements between management councils and labour councils—and perhaps even then to cover all circumstances—we need a decidedly shorter method of procedure in certification and conciliation. In certification, a job could be completed before the present involved procedures before the labour relations board are completed. In case of a dispute, the whole process of conciliation, as it now applies to industry, can seriously cripple an employer, a union and a whole community.

In principle, this bill makes some sensible approach to this problem. But instead of starting at the beginning, the government has leaped right into settlement of disputes. They have been only shadow boxing with the fundamentals here and have run away from the initial responsibility to set up a workable area of agreement.

There is precedent in area-wide agreements in large Hydro construction, where a multiplicity of anticipated differences were worked out in advance. That same principle can be projected into communities, areas, zones or regions.

Instead the government has avoided getting people together to work out a common area of understanding, first, as to how a multiplicity of employers will work out problems with a multiplicity of trades and then, when disputes arise, how and where they shall be settled.

We suspect with Ottawa's cutback in new works and with tight money, and an allied throttling of new work in Ontario, that we might temporarily escape large publicity making disputes. But we entirely neglect a host of small builders and contractors and the union people who work for them, who are still without new principles upon which to project their work.

The government fails to recognize that the builder faces many hazards when tendering on a job, including weather, materials, soils, and so forth. But he is indeed perplexed when he is without a clear understanding of what he might expect in labour relations once his tender is accepted.

On the other hand, the union people, especially the skilled trades, have many demands for their services in a short building or operating season, and they, too, would like to know, come spring or come fall—in some other seasonal projects—that they can tell their membership where work is available, and the wages and working conditions they might expect.

If a hassle starts about certifications before the board, the trouble begins, and tempers get so frayed that a spirit of vengeance could understandably develop on either or both sides, and spill out into jurisdictional matters, and a host of other problems.

With the exception of the principle of compulsory arbitration, the government has developed a somewhat reasonable approach to settling disputes about jurisdiction. But the fundamental problem of early labour-management councils, and speedy certification processes for job contracts, is to all intents and purposes ignored.

I submit that we cannot have effective settlement of jurisdictional disputes, in whatever form is evolved, if we first do not set up some sensible approach to certification in construction and seasonal occupations.

The first approach is, of course, management-labour councils to resolve processes. But we cannot continue to ignore the need of speedy certification processes. The government approaches the principle of disclosure in this bill by requiring unions to report to their membership and, on request, to report to the board. These principles may have some merit if there is a co-ordinating principle that the general financial posture of the employer is made known. The public is not happy with situations where community dislocation takes place from economic action following a plea by the employer that he cannot meet union demands, only to be followed, after settlement, by a company statement of their best year in history.

As a matter of trust, there is validity to a requirement that pension and welfare funds of workers be reported to the participants. To require knowledge of how much is in a strike fund of a union, for example, while not requiring the employer to disclose his reserve position, is most unfair and unrealistic.

So many particulars affect so many other details, that we must be careful that we are not pointing the gun in discriminatory fashion in these matters. Again, in committee, we will pursue the subject.

I cannot find any clear statement of principle with respect to the transfer of an agreement, that a collective agreement follow a change in ownership. This is a place where the unions have valid arguments that, within the lifetime of an agreement, the agreement should be binding on the successors of the employer.

The government has stated, on other occasions, that this should be so, and I am surprised that this elementary proposition of fair play should have been ignored in this legislation. Actually, I think this is what has happened all through. The government has been forced, by pressure of opinion from both sides, to alter their thinking so many times that they have still to come out with any real policy at all.

Therefore, until they can come up with valid principles it would be better to leave some of these things alone and, opposed as we are to some of the expressions of principle in this bill, we cannot support it as written. After amendment, that position could change.

We will have to wait and see what amendments they will accept with the majority in this House. We are quite capable of presenting a realistic bill for the consideration of the House, but the government has the duty and the responsibility for policy of its departments. We cannot swallow all their changes or departures from principle of collective bargaining, and know full well that they would talk out, or vote out, any legislation which we introduced in the form of a new bill.

Meanwhile, we object to the basic principle of this bill for the following reasons:

1. It does not recognize the principle that employers and employees can best resolve their own problems through free collective bargaining.

2. There is no principle established that the government encourage areas of resolution in labour-management matters through the medium of Crown-sponsored labour-management councils.

3. The bill does not contain a preamble which clearly establishes that employees have the right to certification of freely chosen representative unions.

4. The bill does not spell out that non-management professional people should have the right of free determination of collective bargainings, through free processes of selection.

5. The bill does not allow that the civil service should have the right to choose to bargain collectively.

6. The bill does not provide for the repeal of section 78 to allow free and unimpaired certification and bargaining for municipal employees.

7. The bill creates a dangerous principle of interference with trade union discipline when it takes away the right to subject its members to an appeal from loss of employment through loss of union membership.

8. The bill does not provide that, where mediators are used, the Crown shall pay the cost.

9. The bill does not provide that, at the request of interested parties, the conciliation officer stage of negotiation should be removed.

10. The bill denies protection to unions freedom of action in economic areas through possible interpretation of section 27.

11. The bill does not provide for speedy certification and conciliation processes necessary to the building trades and seasonal occupations.

12. The bill does not provide that employers should provide financial information similar to that required in the bill for unions.

13. The bill does not provide for transfer of collective bargaining agreements to successor companies.

14. The bill provides for unnecessary interference by employers in representation about union organization.

I conclude the statements of these representations by stating that it is not the function of government to take one side or the other. It is, however, the function of government to provide access to free collective bargaining under The Labour Relations Act. Let us proceed with that principle here, and allow other determinations to be subject, if necessary, to other legislation. The principles at issue here are those I have discussed. Let us proceed in that fashion, or else say that we do not believe in the institution of free trade unionism in Ontario.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Is he going to effect—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Only he would—

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): What do you expect?

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in discussing the principle underlying a bill which reflects government policy, with regard to its attitude towards labour-management problems—towards trade unions—I would like to begin by making a comment which the rules did not permit earlier on the government's whole approach to considering this bill itself. This is in regard to what the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) has said is going to be done at the standing committee level. I suggest that in itself is a very good indication of this government's attitude on basic principles towards labour matters.

The hon. Prime Minister made a long and involved statement—the point and purpose of which, quite frankly, escapes me—as to why it would not be appropriate to have further representations by interested bodies before the standing committee. Despite this long and involved argument, he is departing from the established procedure in committees of this Legislature.

As was pointed out by the hon. member for Hamilton East (Mr. Davison), in every committee when we have a bill coming up, there is an opportunity for people to make representations in connection with that bill.

Therefore, Mr. Speaker, I do not know why the government is reverting once again to its "hugger-mugger" approach of dealing, in a strange way, with something that should be dealt with above board.

The comment of the hon. Minister and the comment of the hon. Prime Minister is that this whole issue has been threshed through at great length in the committee.

I just remind the House that there are a number of proposals that have emerged in the amendments that the government has put before this Legislature which were never considered by the select committee. They were never made in any representation to the select committee, either by management or by unions.

I am referring, for example, to the proposition for the use of a mediator as an alternative to the conciliation process. I am referring to the pre-hearing. I am referring to this very unpredictable—unpredictable in its consequences—clause with regard to barring of discharge of a man no matter what he does within the union, so that if the union take disciplinary action on what might be highly justifiable grounds, that still means—even though it violates a contractual agreement between union and management—that management cannot legally fire that person.

The hon. Minister, for example, made a comment that a little bit of realism and a little bit of common sense should be introduced in labour relations; that theories look attractive, but in practice sometimes they do not work out.

I would suggest to the hon. Minister that he has come up with two or three theories here that may or may not look attractive, in accordance with one's particular view. But the best way to find out, as quickly as possible, whether or not these are going to work out in practice, is to bring in the people who have to live with them day in and day out once this goes on to the statute book.

Why are we going to change the whole procedure at this stage? In other words, Mr. Speaker, I am querying the government on this point: Why is the government appearing now to be moving back to its whole attitude towards labour relations which characterized the years from about 1950 to 1957, when—in contrast to every other phase of business that came before this House—there was a legislative committee where people could come and present their views? Yet during those 7 years or more, the government refused to permit the standing committee to meet, so that either labour or management or anybody else could come and make their representations to that committee with regard to the Act.

Here once again, the government is taking this exceptional approach as far as labour relations are concerned.

I find this all rather interesting, Mr. Speaker, because I recall, when the hon. Minister of Transport (Mr. Yaremko) was speaking at an educational conference on a panel, in which he and the hon. leader of the Opposition and myself took some part, his whole excuse for not dealing at great length with the details of labour-management relations—but, instead, going into a great and eulogistic account of the record of this government over the full range of things—was that the government treats labour matters and trade unionists as they treat everybody else. "It is one policy for everybody," he said.

But now we find that it does not have one policy for everybody. In fact, the government has a different policy for labour. When labour relations come before this House, on the plea that we want a dispassionate consideration of them, they exclude all those who are going to be involved and have to live with the Act. They refuse to permit this bill to go to the standing committee and have representations made.

I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that this is a highly significant move. It is a reversion to character of this government in its whole approach to labour.

Mr. Speaker, I want to comment on one or two of the observations of the hon. leader of the Opposition when he spelled out the philosophic approach to considering labour relations. I heard that portion of his speech during that panel in Niagara Falls.

All I would say to him now, and to this House—as I said down there—is that if the hon. leader of the Opposition thinks that corporations in our modern economy are going to depart from profits as being the primary objective in the pursuit of business, then he is pursuing a will o' the wisp. There may be one out of a hundred who is going to be altruistic enough to pursue his humanitarian views as the main objective of business.

So this is a wonderful sermon which he has given us, but nothing more. If he has taken this as his text, he can go out and crusade for a long, long time, but there is no evidence that the business world is going to respond to this very humanitarian approach which he has spelled out.

As a matter of fact, when he got into the details of what he was presenting in that prepared statement, I was a little curious as to who was the architect of it. I am convinced of this at least, it could not be Norman Matthews, because Norman Matthews must have been laughing with a laugh that would echo throughout the whole of the city of Toronto as he listened to that statement, in view of what he has been saying about labour relations as one of the outstanding Liberals of this province for many, many years.

Mr. Reaume: Who is worrying about him? We are just worrying about the hon. member for York South.

Mr. MacDonald: He is. Yes, and after the echoes of Norman Matthew's laughter have died down, I invite hon. members to take a look at this bill and compare it with Joey Smallwood's legislation in Newfoundland and then they can start laughing all over again.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on a point of personal privilege, he is referring to Joey Smallwood. Now, just a minute, he was here a year ago and my point of personal privilege is simply this, that I got up and disassociated myself, at the first opportunity I had, from hon. Mr. Smallwood's position in that respect.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): The hon. member does not want to be associated with his own party.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, just take it easy. Even before the hon. member made any reference last year—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, I will tell you, Mr. Speaker, after he has finished objecting to Joey Smallwood, just let him go out and take a look at the labour policy of one Ross Thatcher in Saskatchewan, and he will start disassociating himself from the Liberal party all over again.

Mr. Reaume: That is good. Get good and mad.

Hon. J. A. Maloney (Minister of Mines): That was a very dishonourable marriage.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, now that silence has settled upon the scene once again, perhaps I can proceed with my comments.

In discussing, Mr. Speaker, the principle of Bill No. 74, I think it should be acknowledged, at the outset, that this Act represents in one sense a remarkable achievement. To an almost uncanny degree, this Act reflects completely the basic philosophy and approach of the hon. Minister of Labour to labour relations.

Its outward appearance is one of kindness and good intent, but when we look beneath that outward appearance, we discover a confusion of purpose, and contradictions, almost from the first clause of the Act when they are compared.

Indeed, even worse than that, Mr. Speaker, throughout the Act, there is a perpetuation of old clauses, and the introduction of new clauses, which will delay and hinder the establishment of free collective bargaining, despite that objective being laid down in the preamble of this Act.

We find out, for example, that the undemocratic voting requirements for certification are retained. We find out that the grossly unfair round-robin intervention petition is retained—the favourite weapon of management action—in fact, what Norman Matthews makes about 50 per cent. of his living out of.

There is a denial, Mr. Speaker, of even the most elementary statutory assurance of union security.

Last, but not least, there is the question of why the government, at this stage for example, does not do something about the whole question of successor rights. When we discussed in the select committee, the whole question of successor rights, Mr. Speaker, and the injustice it created for trade unions, we did not even envisage some of the other injustices that this government now apparently is going to permit to continue in this province.

We have had the hon. member for St. George (Mr. Lawrence) refer to the problem of workers in his area, who are thrown out in the street with their pensions becoming valueless because of an American corporation that comes in and takes over, and does not assume the liabilities or the assets—whatever we want to term it—of this company, namely, its union contract.

But, Mr. Speaker, I draw to the attention of this government another example of the consequences of denying successor rights. This is an area that normally this government is very preoccupied with—that is a case in Guelph where an American company came in and took over a Canadian corporation which had a union contract, including pension rights. Because it was a new company and the Act did not protect the workers with successor rights, this company raided the pension fund and has started to use it for capital purposes. In other words, it violated a trust.

Now, here is a good old Tory government sitting across there, a government that normally is so sensitive to the protection of trust and funds that have been built up on a pension basis for old age, and yet it does nothing to deal with successor rights. Consequently, American corporations can come in and raid the pension funds that have been built up through the years. This is neglect, Mr. Speaker, of a serious nature.

Mr. Reaume: That is what we said.

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Yes, Mr. Speaker, I invite hon. members—when they have a little time off to take a look at this presentation, this emanation from the ivory tower that we received from the Liberals—to compare it with The Labour Relations Act of any Liberal government in this country. The only one that it would closely approach is The Saskatchewan Labour Relations Act and that is why, when the next election comes, the people will keep the CCF government in and vote the Liberals down, because they know the Liberals do not mean it.

Mr. Speaker, I want to deal with only two phases of the underlying principles of this bill, then I want to leave the remainder of them to be considered by other members of the CCF group in this House. And I do so for a very particular reason, and that is that 3 of our group in this House represent the only 3 working trade unionists in this Legislature. They, therefore, will be able to speak with that intimate experience of the problems that create the realism that the hon. Minister was speaking about a few moments ago.

Mr. A. Crossman (St. Andrew): Is the hon. member a trade unionist? Has he ever held a card?

Mr. MacDonald: No.

Mr. Crossman: I have held a card.

Mr. MacDonald: What is the significance of ever having held a card?

Mr. Crossman: There are lots of them on this side.

Mr. MacDonald: That would be the greatest contradiction—it would be like Humphrey Mitchell who for years was walking around with that tattered card he had. The significant thing was that he had left the union years ago and had forgotten what it stood for.

Mr. Crossman: The hon. member was never in one.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, there are two things that I want to discuss. The first one is with regard to the preamble to the Act.

Now I want to suggest, Mr. Speaker, that consideration of this preamble is of more than just general significance, I think it is of all-prevailing significance for the Act as a whole. And I want to refer back for a moment to some of the things that happened in the select committee, and I am very glad that my good Irish hon. friend across the way (Mr. Maloney) is here to correct me if I misrepresent anything that happened in the select committee sessions.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Oh, the hon. Minister will do that without half trying.

Mr. MacDonald: During our discussions of the various proposals for amending the Act, the question of the purpose of The Labour Relations Act, for very obvious reasons, kept emerging time and time again. And this basic conflict in philosophy, that we have today, emerged time and again between those who feel that unions are a good thing, and therefore that we should encourage their expansion and their development and their strengthening, and—on the other hand—those who feel that trade unions are, in effect, a nuisance, that we should try to do away with them, and not bring them into a plant because they are just going to make your life tougher. This conflicting philosophy, as I say, emerged time and time again during the course of our discussions.

There were many representations made to the select committee, particularly by union spokesmen, suggesting that there should be a preamble put in the Act which would spell out, in positive terms, what this Act was seeking to do. Their plea, of course, was that it should be spelling out the encouragement of the extension of trade unions in the province of Ontario.

However, we could reach no agreement. With such serious conflict in the committee—and I have forgotten exactly who was on which side of the vote, but at least the majority were opposed to spelling out any positive intent—the best we could come up with was in recommendation No. 40, the preamble to the Act:

Whereas, it is in the public interest that industrial peace be achieved and maintained in the province of Ontario.

Hon. Mr. Maloney: How did the hon. member vote?

Mr. MacDonald: Now, I went along with that because there was no other alternative.

Hon. Mr. Maloney: He certainly did.

Mr. MacDonald: I fought in the committee and I fought with the hon. Minister of Mines, contending that we should spell out the specific, positive purpose of any Labour Relations Act.

Hon. Mr. Maloney: That was when he—

Mr. MacDonald: But no, Mr. Speaker, it was felt we should not put this in because we should not appear to have an Act that would definitely encourage trade unions.

Hon. Mr. Maloney: He is raving as usual.

Mr. MacDonald: So we came up with this recommendation which I suggest is the height of innocuity—I think that is a good word—at least, it is highly innocuous. We could not spell out a positive objective other than industrial peace which evaded the whole point of whether or not we wanted to encourage collective bargaining.

Mr. Speaker, I think you will understand my amazement, in light of our discussion and arguments in the committee, to discover—when this bill came down—that, for some reason or other, in the department, or in the government or somewhere, there emerged the idea that they should have a positive preamble. So, instead of that innocuous recommendation No. 40, we have a preamble, that the intent and purpose of this Act is:

to promote harmonious relations between employers and employees through collective bargaining by their freely chosen representatives.

Mr. Speaker, I am not particularly wedded to this wording. Actually I do not think it is an exceptionally good wording for a positive preamble, but I am relatively happy with it when I recall what happened in the select committee. At least it sets forth the principle. But what intrigues me, Mr. Speaker—and here is the contradiction, which is so characteristic of the hon. Minister of Labour in his approach—is that he spells out that the objective should be collective bargaining, and then he moves in the very next section of the Act to exclude the right of collective bargaining from a range of people.

Mr. Reaume: He stole our speech.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, the Liberals stole it from us because we have been talking about it for years.

For example, Mr. Speaker—

Hon. Mr. Maloney: Let there be honour among thieves.

Mr. Grossman: Same writers, that is all.

Mr. Speaker: Order.

Mr. MacDonald: Thank you, Mr. Speaker. Thank you very much. I appreciate your co-operation.

Mr. R. Whicher (Bruce): Mr. Fisher will not like this.

Mr. MacDonald: We have a situation in this province which is not going to be corrected by this bill, in which, for years, watchmen and guards have been denied the right to collective bargaining, on the plea that they are security people, or for a variety of other reasons. We have, as has already been indicated many times in this House, a government that insists on keeping our civil servants in second-class citizen status, by denying to them the right of collective bargaining, either under The Labour Relations Act or even outside The Labour Relations Act.

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): Is the hon. member making a speech on labour?

Mr. MacDonald: What do you suppose the hon. Minister of Labour was doing when he rose and delivered that eulogistic piece towards the end about striving for peace between the two sides? This was his form of political speech, and its usual innocuous form, too. So just let me proceed to give my political speech, if he wants to interpret it as such.

Mr. Reaume: It is not even a speech.

Mr. MacDonald: We have, for example, Mr. Speaker, the whole problem that was raised in the select committee with regard to an increasingly important group of people in our society who are seeking collective bargaining rights, and they continue to be denied—namely, the professions.

I know that we had before the select committee two groups—perhaps they were best illustrated in the Hydro engineers and the association of professional engineers of Ontario. The association of professional engineers of Ontario came and, speaking from the height of its professional snobbery, said that it did not want any member of the association of professional engineers of Ontario to be contaminated by becoming involved in collective bargaining procedures.

But interestingly enough we had the Hydro engineers come before the committee saying they were entitled to the collective bargaining rights because—let us face it, Mr. Speaker, collective bargaining rights are only the rights of free association in the economic field which were originally laid down in basic principle in the year 1215 in the Magna Carta.

And here in the year 1960 we have this government—good old Tory government—not yet being willing to concede to these people the right of association—notwithstanding the fact, Mr. Speaker, that the right of association for collective bargaining purposes has been granted throughout the American jurisdiction.

Over there, those who happen to control the professional organizations are not being permitted to impose their snobbish approach on this whole issue. American engineers are able to bargain collectively.

Here in Ontario, Hydro engineers are a good example of a group of professionals who are in an identical relationship to their employer, identical as are the rubber worker or the textile worker or the steel worker. They are working for a wage and the professional status does not enter the picture at all.

There are other cases, Mr. Speaker, such as, for example, nurses.

We discovered last year, from the latest Dominion bureau of statistics figures, that nurses receive an annual wage of approximately $2,100 in this Dominion of Canada. That is a scandalous proposition, and yet they have a professional association which is neither interested in, nor capable of, collective bargaining on behalf of nurses. Why should nurses not have the right under this Act?

Well, what happened, of course—

An hon. member: They do not want it.

Mr. MacDonald: —is that a growing number of them are wanting to be, and we will find that out in the future. Their voice is not being heard because those who happen to be in the leadership of the professional nurses' organizations are the only ones heard. But we will discover, in the future, that more of these people are interested.

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): Mr. Speaker, will the hon. member permit me to make a suggestion? Over the past several days I have been flooded with requests from nurses, the rank and file of the profession, that we do all possible to have them excluded—at their own request—from the terms of this Act.

Mr. D. H. Morrow (Ottawa West): Mr. Speaker, if I may interrupt—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister may be interested in a story—a true story. The leadership of the nurses' association came and presented their brief to the select committee a couple of years ago. Listening in at the hearings that day happened to be a nurse who worked in one of the hospitals in the metropolitan area of Toronto. I do not know that she had clearly made up her mind as to whether she wanted to have collective bargaining rights under the Act or not—

Mr. C. E. Janes (Lambton East): Who said that is true?

Mr. MacDonald: —but when she came out of the committee room, she happened to meet one of the leading trade union officials in the province of Ontario. When she found out who he was, with a glint of anticipation in her eye she asked if they could come up and help the nurses in this hospital. He looked at her and said: "Come up and help you? Why, your leaders have just presented a brief this morning arguing that you should not come under the Act. When are you going to swallow your pride and begin to eat?"

Maybe after a time the nurses who are not enjoying collective bargaining, like the Hydro engineers, will discover that they want it under The Labour Relations Act.

Mr. Grossman: Here is a petition from over 100 nurses—

Mr. Morrow: Here is a petition, Mr. Speaker, from 250 from district No. 8 in Ottawa, all with their own signatures.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Here are 300 from Windsor—

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I go on to another group. This one is even more mystifying. I can see that the educational process will have to go for a little longer in the professional groups before we can break through, and the rank and file will be able to recognize their own interests and be able to get them fulfilled.

But with a regard to civic employees, I cannot understand, because this was discussed and there was unanimity in the select committee on this issue, that section 78 should be dropped from the Act so that nobody would be in the position to deprive civic workers of the rights that the Act granted to them.

I was interested in looking back, Mr. Speaker, in Hansard, to discover what the hon. Minister said when he stated that he brought civic employees under the Act. I believe it was back in 1950. This is what he is quoted as saying in the Legislature at that time:

I could not see any difference between a man working for the city and doing a paving job and a man who worked for a contractor doing the same paving job. I never thought that was right, because they worked for a municipal government they should not have the same representation as men who worked for a private employer. If these workmen are doing exactly the same as other workmen, I cannot justify leaving these people out from under the protection of the Act.

So the hon. Minister, at least with momentary consistency, brought civic employees under the Act back in 1950.

But then he bowed to the pressure—where it came from, I do not know, but I suspect it was from old party spokesmen in municipal government, the Liberals and the Conservatives—

Some hon. Liberal members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacDonald: —who at that stage did not want collective bargaining. So they put in section 78. The effect of it is this, that with one hand they give this growing body of civic employees rights under The Labour Relations Act, and, with the other hand, they give the employer the right to take these rights away.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): That was all said an hour ago, what else is new?

Mr. MacDonald: After this has gone on for some years, the hon. Minister, Mr. Speaker, rises in the House and he confesses that he is losing confidence in the wisdom of excluding any employees by invoking section 78, and he tells the House that he has suggested to municipalities—he has even urged them—that they should not evoke section 78.

Hon. Mr. Daley: We have had very good success, too.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister believes that these people should be under the Act, if he has been pleading for years that municipalities should not use section 78, by what logic, or consistency, or any other mental process, does the hon. Minister come into this House and not remove section 78 from this Act? I mean, there is just no logic to it at all.

Well, we shall see what we can do with section 78 when we get a little further on in the discussions in this House.

However, Mr. Speaker, I think it is useful for us to consider this, too, with regard to the pressures that are still exerted on the hon. Minister to leave section 78 in the Act. The hon. Minister shakes his head. Well, if there is no pressure on him, why, in heaven's name, does he not take it out? Does he accept complete responsibility for retaining it?

However, Mr. Speaker, in one of the presentations that was made to the select committee by one of the unions that organizes workers in the civic field, they quoted from a standard work that was published back in 1954, a work by S. J. Frankel and R. C. Pratt, entitled Municipal Relations in Canada.

It was published jointly by the Canadian federation of mayors and municipalities and the industrial relations centre of McGill University. This is what they have to say. I wonder, in the light of this, why the hon. Minister is so hesitant to remove this further exclusion from the Act. I quote:

Canadian opinion has grown to recognize that trade unions play a positive and valuable role in democratic society. A collective agreement on wages, hours of labour, and conditions of work is now generally preferred to decisions by unilateral fiat of the employer.

Collective bargaining has come to be regarded as a socially preferable way to handle employer-employee relations.

If this is a true statement of thoughtful opinion, and indeed a popular opinion generally, then it would become increasingly anomalous if municipalities themselves were not also to conduct their labour relations in this way.

Here is a study prepared by the largest municipal body in this nation. That quotation is on page 8. They go on, Mr. Speaker, on page 9:

It is increasingly recognized that unions can make a positive contribution to the plant, service or office which they have organized. Canadian municipalities have not been slow to recognize this.

In their replies to a recent survey of labour relations in Canadian municipalities, many cities and towns commented that the central handling of grievances through a union was often a distinct advantage to the city administrator. It served to weed out biased and indefensible grievances, and it made sure that the serious grievance came to the attention of the senior administrator.

Satisfactory employer and union relations may thus mean a more contented and hence a more efficient working force.

Now, why, Mr. Speaker, in face of observations like that, does the hon. Minister continue to exclude this growing body of people? It just plays into the hands of some administrators who, on some occasions, exercised it as a whim.

I speak knowledgeably, because in York township one of the things that we have prided ourselves on is that most of the municipal workers are organized. But there is one group that is not, namely, the janitors in the schools, and for a reason that mystified me a year or so ago when this group, as the last group in the township, sought certification, the school board availed themselves of section 78 and denied them the right of collective bargaining. They only did it because section 78 was in the Act.

If what they say on Labour Day about their cordial relations with labour in York township is true, I do not see why they would want to deny it to this last unorganized group.

In fact, the hon. Minister himself, Mr. Speaker, in introducing this bill last week, made this statement:

The Labour Relations Act is built around the principle of collective bargaining and our purpose has been to provide the rules, and the ways and the means, by which solutions can be found without resort, wherever possible, to destructive strikes and lock-outs.

Mr. Speaker, if the hon. Minister believes that, why does he leave section 78 in, which excludes civic workers—who have to strike for the oldest reason in the world to strike, namely, the right to organize. I am not certain that reason is going to persuade the hon. Minister of this, because he has had reason and argument poured at him down the years, yet he comes in with no change in the Act.

It is a violation of the basic principles which he himself enunciates in the preamble to the Act.

Hon. Mr. Daley: In the hon. member's opinion.

Mr. MacDonald: In my opinion? Yes. Well, if anybody has a capacity for logical thought—

Hon. Mr. Daley: Maybe the hon. member is the only one who has it.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, the hon. Minister should not emphasize the limitations on his side of the House.

Secondly, Mr. Speaker, I wanted to touch on this question of freedom of speech. Once again I do it because this was an issue which occupied a great deal of time and discussion before the select committee.

There came before the select committee spokesmen for management, not only the organizations representing management but individual corporations like International Nickel and the Steel Company, who pleaded —and one could see the tears running down their cheeks as they made this plea—that they were denied one of the basic rights of a free society, namely, their freedom of speech, during the certification campaign.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to suggest—and I think the House must think this through carefully—that this is a highly specious kind of argument. In spite of it being highly specious, 10 members of the committee, including the two Liberals on the select committee, supported it, and now the government has introduced it in part in the bill.

I was interested, down at the Ontario federation of labour convention, to discover that the hon. leader of the Liberal party does not support the idea that management should be given freedom of speech—

Some Liberal hon. members: Oh, oh.

Mr. MacDonald: So there is a split in the Liberal party on this issue.

An hon. member: He is reaching, he is reaching.

Mr. MacDonald: I am not reaching, I have got my finger right on the sore spot. In fact, somebody got up at the Ontario federation of labour and said to the hon. leader of the Opposition: "Well, if you believe that the management should not be given freedom of speech in a certification campaign, what about those two members of your party who voted to give them that freedom?" Do hon. members know what the answer of the hon. leader of the Opposition was? It was this: "This is my personal view. I am not expressing a party view."

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): I have expressed the party view today.

Some Liberal hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, how a man, who is the leader of a political party, can go around on an issue like this and say, "I am expressing my personal views and not party views," I do not know. But if he is expressing party views, then the two Liberal members have changed their minds.

Mr. Whicher: The hon. member for York South changed his mind. He changed his mind over this.

Mr. MacDonald: They have been scoffing at me for changing my mind, now let them scoff at themselves for a moment.

Mr. Whicher: Let him scoff at himself, everybody else is.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Tit for tat.

Mr. Whicher: At least the hon. leader of our party knows the name—

Mr. Singer: Jealously will get the hon. member for York South nowhere.

Mr. MacDonald: Now, Mr. Speaker, let us just take a look at this specious argument which the government has now accepted. Will the Liberal hon. members be with me? I am going to attack the government.

Mr. Whicher: Yes, yes.

Mr. MacDonald: That is good. I am speaking of the specious argument which the government has accepted with regard to freedom of speech. Mr. Speaker, freedom of speech is not an unqualified freedom. One has no right to freedom of speech in a place where one has no right to be in the first place. I cited an example on which I was rather certain I would get complete support in the House last year when I was discussing it. I said this: "I have no right to freedom of speech in the Tory caucus. Despite the fact that what happens in the Tory caucus may affect me on some occasions, I have no right to freedom of speech in the Tory caucus."

Mr. Grossman: That is for sure.

Mr. MacDonald: All right. Let us get down to the basic point. When a group of workers, Mr. Speaker, are deciding the issue of whether or not they want to join the union, and which union, it is literally no business at all of management what union they join.

Mr. Reaume: That is what we said.

Mr. MacDonald: No business at all. It is no more their business than it is my business in the Tory caucus. And therefore, for them to advance the specious plea that they are being denied freedom of speech, is the kind of thing that only the twisted logic of the hon. Minister of Labour and his government could accept and put in an Act. Yet that is exactly what they have now done.

Hon. Mr. Daley: What is he thinking, that the management would go to the union hall, or what? They should have no freedom of speech in the union hall—is that what he is talking about?

Mr. MacDonald: I am not.

Hon. Mr. Daley: Then what is he talking about? They would not even go there.

Mr. MacDonald: There is a decision, I do not happen to have immediate reference to it, an American decision, with regard to labour relations, about having a captive audience, and how this is not a valid expression of freedom of action.

Furthermore, Mr. Speaker, if a group of workers—and this is the essential point, so do not let it stray far—if a group of workers want to decide what union they wish to join, management has no right to be around at all. If management, with their weapon of threat to fire a man, does participate, the likelihood is that they are going to end up with a union, not of the workers' choice but of the management's choice. How about Joe Smallwood? That is the way he forms unions. He sends in a government agent, working with the employer, to form a union that, in effect, is going to be a company union of the government.

Mr. Reaume: Who is worrying about him?

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member should—

Mr. Reaume: How about Ontario? Where is the hon. member for York South at? Over on the island? Come over here for a while—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, the government has now accepted the specious case for freedom of speech. The significant point which I think this Legislature should bear in mind is that, in accepting it, they have violated what was a basic principle of the Act up until now. I say this because the Act, up until now, has been predicated on the assumption—even though it was brought in, in 1944, by a Tory government—that the workers and the workers alone had the right to choose, and the management should not be in the picture. And now, 16 years later, Tories have backslid to the point where they are introducing this right for the management to get into the picture.

So, Mr. Speaker, as a result of the government's violation of basic principles by not giving collective bargaining rights to a great range of people who are entitled to them; as a result of this legalizing of management intervention in the choice of a union on this freedom of speech; as a result of a lot of other issues which other hon. members of my group are going to discuss, I do not think it is desirable that this bill be passed for second reading. Under the rules of the Legislature, as laid down in May, on the second reading of an Act, it is possible to strike out after all the words after "that" and propose an alternative. And that is what I am going to do at the present time, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker, I move, seconded by Mr. N. Davison, that the motion be amended by striking out all the words after the word "that" and substituting the following:

In the opinion of this House, Bill No. 74, An Act to amend The Labour Relations Act, fails to carry out the purposes set forth in the proposed preamble to The Labour Relations Act, in that

(a) it fails to remedy the undemocratic and time-consuming certification procedures of the Act;

(b) it fails to alter significantly the inflexible and time-consuming conciliation procedures of the Act;

(c) it fails to provide for the voluntary revocable checkoff of union dues;

(d) it fails to remove the discriminatory exclusions at present provided in the Act, thereby denying the benefits of democratic collective bargaining to large numbers of employees in the province; and

(e) any improvements envisaged in the Act are offset by additional unreasonable restrictions on, and interference in, the legitimate activities of democratic trade unions.

Some CCF hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): Mr. Speaker, in rising to attempt to contribute something—oh, I am sorry.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, in considering this amendment, may I draw your attention to page 530, in May, in which it says this, under the heading, "Reasoned Amendment":

It is also competent for a member who desires to place on record any special reason for not agreeing to the second reading of the bill, to move what is known as the reasoned amendment.

This amendment is to leave out all words in the main question after the word "that", and to add other words, and the question proposed on the amendment, is that the word "proposed" be left out and part of the questions.

And then May goes on to suggest a number of items that could be considered under this.

The first one of these which I submit applies in this instance, is that the amendment, may be declaratory of some principle adverse to, or differing from, the principles, or policy or provisions of the bill.

Mr. Speaker: I would point out to the member at this point, we will allow the debate to continue and I will take a look at the amendment.

Mr. Sopha: Mr. Speaker, forgive me for intervening before you had come to your considered decision on that document that has been handed you.

In rising to speak in this debate and, in attempting to contribute something toward the general principles of this bill, I do so with considerable misgivings, because I am aware of the statement of policy, forthright in its nature, that was delivered this afternoon by the hon. leader of our party (Mr. Wintermeyer).

Some Liberal hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sopha: One heard something from the hon. member for York South that was in the substance of an echo.

Some Liberal hon. members: Hear, hear.

Mr. Sopha: I noted the look on his face, and on the face of the hon. member for Woodbine (Mr. Bryden), as they listened to the hon. leader of our party delivering his speech this afternoon, and realized that the rug had been pulled from under them. May I just add that if the hon. Attorney-General (Mr. Roberts) were not such a kindly person, he might consider—after the hon. member for York South delivered his remarks—charging him with theft.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member has been stealing for years.

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): Are you going to vote for our hon. member?

Mr. Sopha: Now, as I have said, our hon. leader has delineated our position. I would ask permission to expand a little bit on two or three of his points. In any event, he showed where we stand with respect to the trade union movement in this province, and anything that I say will only be by way of elucidation, or explanation, of that position which he took for us this afternoon.

I did not intend to start with the subject of mediation, Mr. Speaker, but it is as good a place to start as any. I have always been struck by the fact that, if one litigant is suing another over a damaged fender, and supposing there is $1,200 or $1,400 at stake in the litigation, then the whole majesty of the law goes into operation.

The judge will arrive in one of the county towns or district towns, as the case may be, wearing a gown with a red sash on it. The sheriff will come in to open court carrying a sword. The jury will be summoned to attend there and decide the very important issue of who should pay for the damaged fender.

The government, as is its responsibility, will provide the funds for all this background and environment in order to come to a sound and just decision between the two parties.

But, Mr. Speaker, if there is a danger of 16,000 or 18,000 people being out of work, then the person they send is an underpaid civil servant, who is perhaps paid $4,000 or $5,000 a year, who is untrained, who has taken on that job perhaps because he has an interest in it, and he will come up and will try to get between the parties and try to effect some resolution of the grave issues that separate the trade union and management. I speak from experience, because that is precisely what happened in the Sudbury strike of 1958.

The government sent up their mediation officers, tried to get the parties together, later on they established a conciliation board and eventually the union saw the need to go on strike. As a result, it threw that community, during the dying months of 1958, into a severe state of economic dislocation.

Now, as our hon. leader has said, this afternoon, the time has come for this government to recognize that its position in assisting unions and management to come to agreement demands that a creative staff of trained people, people with resolution and intelligence and ability, come into these disputes to try to effect some common meeting ground between the parties.

That is the role of government. And that is the role of government, I assert, that has never been recognized by the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) since he has been in that position for a decade and a half.

They might consider the abolition of the conciliation board stage entirely, because in my opinion—I say this as my opinion entirely—that at the conciliation board stage, the issues are too far removed from the actual background of the dispute between the two parties, and in the conciliation stage they introduce a third group who perhaps do not understand what the fight is about between the two contestants.

Now with respect, may I turn to the preamble of the bill? I do not entirely agree with everything the hon. member for York South said, but in principle, what he did say in his expansion upon it, I feel, has some sense to it, and I go only that far.

I will read from the preamble which the hon. Minister of Labour and his draftsmen have set up:

The intent and purpose of this Act is to promote harmonious relations between employers and employees through collective bargaining by their freely chosen representatives.

I would say, and I have considered these words very carefully, that that preamble that he sets out is so much eye-wash. If the Act has not been constructed to do that, since it was first passed in 1947 or 1948, then it has failed in its purpose. One would hope that the Act always had the intent that is set out in that preamble.

But we in this group say that the preamble must go further. It must set out—if they are going to have a preamble—that the intent and purpose of this Act is to encourage the certification of unions, to encourage the recognition of associations that have been freely chosen by the workers themselves.

And, lacking such a preamble, I think I may say, without offending the historical accuracy of my proposition, that the labour relations board has not always been the quickest vehicle to recognize that principle. It has not always certified unions quickly, even when the workers themselves have demonstrated that they wish to be represented by a specific association.

I am thinking of one specific case, and that was a case at Guelph where the workers indicated to the board—I think something in the neighbourhood of 70 per cent. of them—in 1957 that they wished to be represented by a certain union.

It went before the board, and the board in its wisdom saw the necessity of requiring a vote, and when they had that vote there were not as many of them in this instance that voted for the union but still a majority voted for it.

The board got the result of that vote, studied it—they studied it for 3 years—and it was not until the end of January, 1960, 3 years after the application for certification had been made, that the board in its wisdom decided to hand down a decision, which decision denied those workers, in the result, the right to be recognized by that union.

I merely point that out, and I do not do so with any spirit of criticism of the board at all. But I merely say, in reference to this preamble, that this Legislature should set out in clear and precise terms—it should articulate for the board—that the principle of this Act is to speed the certification of unions, so that they, when freely chosen and without duress and coercion, will be able to speak on behalf of the people that they represent.

Now, regarding the United States, it is interesting to note what The Wagner Act said in 1935. You will recall, Mr. Speaker, that progress in the realm of labour-management relations in the context of that year, 1935, was not exactly a popular thing. It took someone with the forthrightness of Franklin Roosevelt to take hold of the situation and to attempt to guide the country toward a recognition that labour had the right to be represented by associations freely chosen by the workers.

And yet in the year 1935, with much more courage than the hon. Minister of Labour demonstrates, The Wagner Act had this to say by way of preamble:

It is hereby declared to be the policy of the United States to encourage the practice and procedure of collective bargaining, and to protect the exercise of workers of full freedom of association, self-organization and designation of representatives of their own choosing for the purpose of negotiating the terms and conditions of their employment or other mutual aid or protection.

Mr. Speaker, who can stand up and say that that is not a courageous way to set out what the purpose of a Labour Relations Act should be? I would recommend to the hon. Minister of Labour that he withdraw this preamble and put something in the nature of the declaration of The Wagner Act in its place instead.

For, Mr. Speaker, it was also said—and I note in my notes here—in The Clayton Act of 1914, that the labour of the human being is not a commodity or article of commerce, and if we strive to do anything, Mr. Speaker—if the hon. Minister of Labour, who has struggled hard to create an atmosphere and climate of industrial peace in this province, if he, as I am sure he does, joins with us in seeking to do anything—it is to create a climate in Ontario of good relations between labour and management.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, out of conviction, that the only way that we can do that is to recognize that the workers, the labouring people of this province, desire to be represented by trade unions to effect through their voice, their common interests and purposes and their desires in respect of their working conditions.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I wish to turn for a moment—and I am only going to deal with two or three subjects, and I am going to do so briefly—I wish to turn to this section 16. As the hon. leader of our party has said this afternoon, there is little doubt in my mind, sir, that that is the thin edge of the wedge of the right-to-work principle.

Now, I was rather surprised, Mr. Speaker, and I say that to the hon. Minister of Labour—and I see he looks at me now—and I wish to say by way of background, I wish to set out for him the reason that I presume to get up and speak in respect of this bill.

I come from a community where there are perhaps 16,000 or 18,000, perhaps approaching 20,000 union members. The hon. member for Nickel Belt (Mr. Belisle) well knows this, and he will corroborate what I say in that regard.

In Sudbury almost every worker in that community is a member of the trade union, he is protected by a collective bargaining agreement. Now for myself, against that background, I will say I have had the honour to represent several trade unions in the negotiations. In fact, I can say—and I do say—that I have never approached the bargaining table on behalf of management. But perhaps that is an accident of circumstance, and in putting out my shingle as I do outside the building in which I have my office, if management had ever asked me to represent them I suppose I would—if I had the assurance that they were able to pay the very moderate fee that I would have charged.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member charges as much as David Lewis.

Mr. Sopha: No, I do not charge as much as David Lewis. And I would not charge as much as Norman Matthews, whoever he is.

I have no doubt, as I said by way of opening this part of the subject with which I wish to deal, that section 16 is—for the first time, I think, in the history of this country so far as I know—the introduction of a right-to-work principle. Now, I do not know where the demand for that came from.

We watched—most Canadians who are interested in labour affairs—watched with interest the development of the campaigns in the United States when they tried, in various states, to introduce a right-to-work law, but I think we watched it merely as observers. I never met a person who thought that there would be a move in Ontario—or, in fact, in Canada—to introduce what I conceive to be repressive legislation like this.

Yet surprisingly enough, notwithstanding that the select committee as far as I know never dealt with that subject, when the hon. Minister of Labour introduces his bill he has this section 16. And what does it say? Only subsection 2 is relevant:

No employer shall discharge an employee (a) who has been expelled or suspended from membership in the trade union mentioned in clause a. of subsection 1.

Now we have to go to clause a. of subsection 1 of section 33 of the bill, and that says:

Notwithstanding anything in this Act, the parties to a collective agreement may include in its provision (a) for the requiring of a condition of employment membership in the trade union that is party to, or is bound by, the agreement or granting a preference of employment to members of such trade union, or requiring the payment of dues or contribution to such trade union.

Now, Mr. Speaker, in the history of labour relations in this province it has certainly been a frequent and common thing for unions to negotiate such agreements where they provide, as in the case of the closed shops, that everybody that works in the industry must be a member of the union, or on the other hand the open shop, or they might have the involuntary irrevocable checkoff, which is the situation with respect to the agreement between the international mine, mill and smelter workers and the International Nickel Company of Canada Limited. I believe this is exceedingly frequent in this province, it might be the voluntary revocable checkoff.

Now, it is in respect of the latter, Mr. Speaker, that I wish to direct a few remarks.

As I conceived this section 16, undoubtedly it gives a privilege to the worker to not only cease his membership in the trade union, but also to continue his employment and instruct his employer not to deduct his union dues. And as such, Mr. Speaker, undoubtedly this is meant as a blow at the health and future of trade unions.

Now, as has been said on a great many occasions, whoever it was that thought up the phrase "right-to-work laws" certainly was guilty of perpetrating on the community a gross inaccuracy, because if a law such as this is anything it cannot be considered in the nature of right-to-work.

Does this law give an unemployed man the right to demand a job? It does not. Does it place any sort of penalty upon an employer who refuses to hire a worker who is over 40 years of age? Does it set up any guarantee which prohibits an employer from separating a man from his job for anything other than just cause?

If it does not give a worker any of these rights, just what right does it give him?

It gives him the right to enjoy the fruits of collective bargaining, without carrying any share of the burden whatsoever. It gives the right to the worker to undermine all union effort to improve wages and working conditions through self-denial and sacrifice, and still enjoy the benefits which that self-denial and sacrifice have achieved. It gives him the right to undercut, disrupt and destroy with impunity, regardless of how drastically his actions may jeopardize the common welfare of his fellow worker.

I say to you, Mr. Speaker, and I say it to the hon. Minister of Labour in all sincerity, where unions have no maintenance of membership security they must constantly fight for their existence. They are forced to devote time in their internal organization, time that they might well spend constructively in improving relations between the union and management.

Now, the danger of the legislation, of course, is to be found in the fact that it is not in the plural, and it might, in the way it is phrased, be a snare to the unwary. It says no employer shall discharge an employee.

It might just as well say, and the effect of it will be, that, where several employees decide not to remain members of the union, that it opens the door to decertification of that union unquestionably. Not only does it do that but it invites—and I see the hon. Minister of Labour shaking his head and he might consider this—it invites another union to come in and start to war with the union that is already certified, and those people that would seek to disrupt the union that is already certified can continue in their employment because the hon. Minister of Labour has decided to give statutory authority to their continued employment and compel employers to keep them on in their job in order that they might pursue in such an instance their disruptive activities.

Now, Mr. Speaker, why should the hon. Minister of Labour—I ask rhetorically—put into a statute a legal right such as this?

I have said on the one hand that there has been no clear demand for it in this province, and I assert that with assurance: I have not heard that, in this province, there has been any demand for legislation of this type.

On the other hand, if a worker, as I say, has a moral right or a moral duty to support the trade union which bargains on his behalf, then—out of that moral duty—how can the hon. Minister of Labour seek to find a legal right to allow that worker to continue in his employment and compel the employer to keep him on?

Hon. C. Daley (Minister of Labour): May I say a word? I do not want to interfere. It has been my policy not to interfere with the speakers and I have no intention at this time of debating this thing.

But there have been cases of dismissal where it appeared on the surface, without being able to go carefully into the matter, that these dismissals were unjust, and in my opinion all this simply does is give that man a place where he can be heard.

Mr. Sopha: With all respect to the hon. Minister of Labour, as I have been saying, and I think a fair reading—and one does not have to be a lawyer to understand its implication—a fair reading of it means that a worker, who no longer sees eye to eye with the trade union of which he was a member, may cease his membership, may stop his membership in the trade union and may also go to the employer—and here is the very vice of this action—he may then go to the employer and say: “Regarding these dues that I was formerly contributing to the trade union, you will stop checking them off my pay.”

As a result, the trade union is no longer supported by that person or any of his fellows of like mind. But the hon. Minister of Labour in his legislation tells the employer that he must continue him on in his employment.

Mr. Speaker, I wanted to say something about the jurisdictional disputes that are dealt with in the Act, but I am not going to take the time of the House this afternoon. I may say that the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren) and the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume) will follow me in expanding upon the principles delineated by the hon. leader of our party today.

I want to set out in unequivocal terms that I have the greatest sympathy for the trade union movement. I cannot, and I do not think there are many other people that can explain the technological genius of production that this continent, the United States and ourselves have demonstrated, and especially during the last war, unless one explains it through the background of the trade union movement.

We were able to produce during the war—with the assistance of trade unions and the organization of workers, and creating the ideal or near-ideal conditions under which they worked—we were able to produce not only enough arms for ourselves, but we were able to arm the armies of many other nations, including those of the Soviet Union.

We must not forget that, Mr. Speaker. We must not forget that and we should strive to foster the development of trade unions in this country and in this province specifically.

As a lawyer, I am a member of a trade union myself, and that membership in the trade union of lawyers, as is the case with doctors, and I see the hon. Minister of Municipal Affairs smile, he knows what I am talking about.

Hon. W. K. Warrender (Minister of Municipal Affairs): We have not said it yet.

Mr. Sopha: We do not have to worry about a right-to-work law, because we have to be members of the union which we are in, and the same is the case with the other profession of doctors. There is no choice about it.

We cannot go to the law society, or a doctor cannot go to the medical association, and say, “I no longer wish to be a member of this free and voluntary association,” because the moment you stop being a member of it—

Hon. M. B. Dymond (Minister of Health): On a point of order, Mr. Speaker, the hon. member is not well informed. A doctor does not have to be a member of the medical association to practice medicine in Ontario.

Mr. Sopha: Well, Mr. Speaker, I will look forward to an expansion on those remarks by the hon. Minister of Health. I do not pretend to know everything that obtains with respect to doctors. I know a little bit about what obtains with respect to lawyers.

But I say this that, in both associations, in both of the professions, the members have to be accredited by the association, and, without running the risk of offending the hon. Minister of Health, I will refer only to lawyers, if he will permit me to talk about lawyers.

I say that if a lawyer stops being a member of that association, then his right to practice his profession also stops. And if that be the case in those professions, then why should it not be so throughout the trade union movement generally? What is the need of this section 16, that would permit, as they said it would permit, a disruption of the activities of trade unions?

Mr. Speaker, I have looked forward to a discussion in the committee on all of the provisions of this bill. In our opinion—and we wish to make it emphatically clear so that no person will go away from the House this afternoon under any misapprehension—that we think this legislation is repressive in its intent, that it will not foster the healthy development of trade unions, that it will not create the climate in this province for industrial harmony.

Mr. N. Davison (Hamilton East): I would like to speak on only one phase of Bill No. 74 this afternoon, and that is union security. In the present Act, the trade union movement has very little union security, and this Bill No. 74 will take some of the little bit that they have away from them. I think we should take a long look at some of the jobs that the union people have to do. One of their main jobs is to organize the workers and try to get them better working conditions.

However, they have a much wider responsibility. When they get collective bargaining in a plant, and there is a unit set up that they must bargain for, they are held responsible for the people in that bargaining unit although all those people may not be union members.

While they are held responsible for those people I feel that they should have some security, and also a learned judge in this country felt the same thing. That was why Mr. Justice Rand decided on the Rand formula in Windsor. It gives the unions a little bit of security to carry on the job of negotiating and doing a job that has to be done among the workers.

Also, we can take a look at 6 of the provinces in Canada today, and we will discover some type of the checkoff in those provinces. We have British Columbia, Alberta, Saskatchewan, Nova Scotia, Prince Edward Island, yes, and even Newfoundland. Five of these provinces have a revocable checkoff system. In Saskatchewan they have something even better; they have a modified union shop.

The very least protection that Ontario should provide for the workers is the voluntary revocable checkoff, and therefore I urge the hon. members of this House to support this amendment. It does not seem reasonable to me that this House should legislate to reduce the various forms of union security which the unions may have got through negotiating with their management.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Mr. Speaker, before you close the House, I would like to say a few words on this issue, as I had the privilege of being a member of the committee.

I might say that I learned a lot that I did not know before, and I do not know very much about it now, and am certainly not an expert on labour-management relations, which puts me on common ground with the many other speakers I have heard in this House this afternoon.

I would just like to say, Mr. Speaker, that I was very, very privileged to spend hours and days and weeks with men who have had tremendous experience in labour relations in this province. I might extend my congratulations and thanks to not only the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley), but to Professor Finkelman, Mr. Reid, Mr. Fine, Mr. Metzler—men who have had years of experience in labour relations, and men whose opinions are accepted by both management and labour in this province.

Mr. Speaker, it seems that this Act has been favourably received by both management and labour. I have had many letters—I have just had one in opposition and that was by the communist party—accepting generally the principles of this Act. It is not, we know, a cure-all for all troubles of management and labour, and there is no Act that can be brought out that will be.

But I think it is one that has no quarrel with labour's wish to receive a fair share of the industrial dollar, nor to quarrel with management for wanting their fair share, and on behalf of both labour and management to see that we are not priced out of the markets of the world.

How necessary it is for any government not to legislate, or not to force either side into agreement, but to assist and help in seeing that labour disputes do not reach a stalemate. A stalemate results only in strikes and loss and tragedies, not only to the workers, not only to the men in management, but also the wives and families of these men in industry. The tragedy indeed hits the home when these things occur during a stalemate when nobody seems to reach an agreement.

It is up to the government to assist and to help prevent these things from occurring, as they fortunately have done so often in the past.

I also believe that, unless management and labour are willing to negotiate, there is no way in which this Legislature, or any other, can force them to do so, and God forbid that we ever reach that point where we do try to in any punitive way.

I was very interested in an article, I would like to read, Mr. Speaker. It is not very long, but it is entitled "The Land that Found a Cure for Strikes," and this information to me was very amazing. In 1958, labour strikes emptied Canadian pay envelopes and crippled industry during 2.7 million man days. In the same year, and most other years, highly industrialized Sweden, with half Canada's working force, lost only 4,500 man days—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): A good socialist government.

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: I will come to that. They do not agree with going to the government with anything, perhaps because it is socialist, that would throw the monkey-wrench into things. About equal to a year's employment for 15 men is all the time that was lost. On a basis of an equal number of workers, Canada lost almost 1,200 times more work than Sweden. Now, why the difference?

It is easy to say, and quite true, that the 1.8 million members of Sweden's labour movement regard strikes as an archaic and extravagant method of negotiating two different opinions. But in justice to Canada, a few other background facts must be entered.

Sweden is populated by Swedes only, and perhaps 200,000 foreign additions through postwar emigrations. A deeply rooted national pride, nourished by 1,000 years of racial history has given the Swedish people a solidarity not yet characteristic of the widely scattered family of Canadians.

We have a great group here of different nationalities, and so on, who do not always see eye to eye with each other. To this we must add that the Swedes have become the most completely unionized of all peoples, with 97 per cent. of all those gainfully employed holding union cards as compared with 33 per cent. for Canada. Neither the labour unions nor their industrial paymasters have asked for, or would tolerate, government interference in their mutual relationships. In fact, most groups have signed a binding agreement that, under no circumstance will the national Parliament come between the worker and the boss in time of conflict.

When wage increases and shortening of hours are up for decision, no Canadian union can outdo a Swedish union in combative toughness. Many a time the Swedish delegates of management and labour have argued through the night, and fought into the next day, intent upon reaching almost any compromise that leaves the strike weapon and the lock-out untouched.

For example, International Nickel that my hon. friend (Mr. Sopha) spoke about, in 1958, at their strike in Sudbury and Port Colborne, cost one million man days of idleness, with its attendant loss of mill production. Some 500,000 man days was the price paid for the steel workers' strike in Hamilton, which generated from an impasse between a single company and a single section of the workers.

In contrast, one of the largest Swedish corporations, Sunvich steel works faced its last labour trouble 27 years ago, and it lasted only 13 days. The Volvo motor corporation, employing directly and indirectly 80,000 people, has not known a strike since 1932.

All such Swedish companies have passed between the millstones of labour negotiation year after year, and have increased wage levels, reduced working hours, and contributed to fringe benefits which now form a wage supplement of 18 per cent. Incidentally, Sweden's wage level is by far the highest of all European countries.

Now, there are many other strikes in Canada I could mention. The Arvida strike, hon. members will remember, was a bad one here.

As between the mutual organizations of Canadian labour and centralized Swedish confederation of union, there exists significant differences of viewpoint and strategy, when strike action appears imminent. The Stockholm institution, under no circumstances will give a forthright endorsement of strike action at a request of a member union. Such endorsement, in fact, is rarely asked for, since it must be preceded by a hurried examination of the cause at issue.

When a union of textile or metal workers, for example, submits a brief to confederation headquarters, as it is obliged to do, the confederation staff of industrial relations, experts and economists scrutinizes the proposal in its relation to the financial position of the industry affected and the possible repercussion on the national economy. A very wise thing, I think, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): What is he reading from?

Hon. Mr. Wardrobe: A cautious appraisal of these factors frequently induces the labour council at the national office to advise a postponement of the unions' claims until the overall situation brightens. Even when the situation does brighten, nobody stops working nor do the wheels of industry cease revolving.

In the seclusion of a board room, a dozen or so delegates of labour and management proceed to whittle down apparently irreconcilable stands to the dimension of a tolerable compromise. I think that is what we are all trying for, Mr. Speaker, a tolerable compromise in these things.

In the light of North American experience, it may sound paradoxical to say that when labour and management, acting as a national board of reference, possessing an equal status in wealth and fire power and the confidence and respect of membership, the temptation to slug it out at the community's expense finds no place on the agenda.

Whether or not this is a paradox, the Swedes could not care less. They find it useful to insure full employment 300 days a year, to maintain industry at a high pitch of production, to raise the workers' standard of living.

Since this system of co-ordinated improvement has worked to the general satisfaction year after year, the Swedes gladly vacate the field of industrial civil war to those who favour unconditional surrender.

Now, Mr. Speaker, that to me is what I believe this Act is trying to work towards. It is not punitive, it does not give everything, either to union or management.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): He has a lot to learn.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: Well, I would just like to say to the hon. gentleman over there, that I would hate to live in a country where they formed the government of either the CCF or especially the Labour-Progressive party.

Mr. Bryden: Sweden has that kind of government.

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: The CCF philosophy has been a failure in every part of the country where it has been tried, and the people in this country are too wise to ever fall for that balderdash that would bring this country down to the place of slavery.

Mr. L. Troy (Nipissing): Mr. Speaker, would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I just want to close by saying, we believe we have brought in an Act that is worthwhile and one which will assist both labour and management to reach industrial peace and harmony.

Some Liberal hon. members: Question, question.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

Mr. Troy: Would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: I note my time is up, Mr. Speaker. I think that you had best give me more time if I am to answer questions.

Mr. Troy: Would the hon. Minister permit a question?

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: No, I cannot do it.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): Mr. Speaker, I have long been proud of the party of which I am a part.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Fifteen years.

Mr. Reaume: I have long been proud, too, of the man who is at the head of our party. I want to say that I have never been so proud as I was when the hon. leader of our party (Mr. Wintermeyer) today, in this House, rose in a very forthright way, with a very clear voice and with his feet planted firmly upon the floor and his eyes peering brightly into the future, pronounced and enunciated in perfect English how our party stands with respect to trade unions in this province.

And as he spoke the most amusing thing that happened in the House at that time, I peered over here to the left and I viewed the positions of the "Big 5," and they squirmed in their seats and they scratched at their seats as though somebody had sprinkled itching powder in their pants.

Well, it was not Matthews who wrote this speech—

Mr. MacDonald: He is right, it—

Mr. Reaume: —it was not Smallwood who wrote that speech, but it must be perfectly evident to them, above all people in the world, that the Liberal party of this province—

Mr. MacDonald: —is slowly being defeated.

Mr. Reaume: —has now gotten back on to the road of reform that was built for us by our fathers and our grandfathers many years ago.

Mr. MacDonald: Oh, where has it been?

Mr. Reaume: And it will take more than the hon. member for York South, and that crippled band that he has, to try to push us off that road, make no mistake about that.

Mr. MacDonald: The hon. member will be in the new party.

Mr. Reaume: What new party? They have not got any more party than an elephant has hair.

Mr. Speaker, let me say this: I quite frankly admit, and I make no bones about it, nor am I making any excuse, that as I sat as one of the group of people under the head of a man, the hon. Minister of Mines (Mr. Maloney) now—and I said this in his absence—I thought all along and still think he did a very wonderful job. I do not think that he, or anybody in this House felt, at least I did not feel, that when I affixed my signature to this report that that was my last will and testament, that this would be the final prayer book, if you will, upon which labour and employers must abide. I did not think that every recommendation in the report was going to be made effective in the statutes of the province.

I thought rather that what we did was this; that, after some 18 months of hard work, we put down on paper, as best we could, a documentary report for the purpose of getting it out to the people, bringing it here to the House, arguing about it and, after that, coming up with some kind of amendments that might bring the old Act up to some decent form.

Now, we all have a right—I do not have to abide by any clause in this—I do not have to abide by any part of it, you know, all men who served on that with me, all of them know, we differed and we argued almost on every point. These meetings went on for some 18 months. Now, we finally had to get that job done. We just could not go on staying here in Toronto all of the time, and so that was the outcome of it all.

Mr. Speaker, one of the things that has been always near to my heart, as you know I was mayor of one of the finest cities I think in Canada, for maybe as long as anybody ever was mayor. I am not going to disclose my age, because I really do not feel that bad. But in that city, because of freight rates and because of other things—and some people said it was even because of me—that plant closed up there and moved away. And when they closed up and moved away, the existing agreements, that affected hundreds of men in those plants, became at that point null and void, although they were going to some other part of the province.

I have always felt, and I still feel, that, where there is an existing agreement in good status, that where an employer or a company wants to pack up and to move to some other part of the province, that that agreement should follow him.

There was a very striking example, in one instance, of where an industry in Windsor for one reason or the other, decided to pack up and go out of town. They left some 450 people, who had worked in that plant for years, sitting upon the curbs.

That agreement, at that time, was one that had been in existence between the automobile workers and the company, and apparently was one in good standing, everything was fine. So when this so-called automobile accessory plant moved to another town in the province, another union stepped in ahead of them and organized that plant. They organized it at a lower rate of wage than those people were getting in the city in which they were.

Now, I do not think that the hon. Minister—for whom I have a very high regard—I do not think he wants to take a step backwards. I do not think that, really deep down in his heart, he wants to do anything that is harmful to the trade union movement of the province. But I think that some advice that he has obtained along the road has been very, very bad.

I do not think it at all right that he should allow to be written into the statute books of this province as a right for a man who has joined a union and got higher wages and got free benefits because his fellow man has fought for them, to allow that man to say: "Well now, I feel that the union has done everything for me that they can do, so go fly a kite. The amount of money that I used to put in there for union dues, I will now take home with me and buy beer or some other thing, whatever it happens to be."

Well now, I agree with the hon. member who has just spoken, that this is merely the thin edge of the wedge. I think that what we are doing in Bill No. 74, is that we are allowing a back-door movement that will eventually have carried far enough to break up many bona fide unions in the province. I do not really think we want to do that.

I said a week ago in the House, I had no idea of what kind of law they were going to bring down. I did not know anything about the Act, as I said I had no way of finding out.

But I do want to say this: Other than in the building trades, and the troubles and the disputes that they are having in those trades, I do not really think that the province is on fire at all.

I would much rather that, instead of hurrying this bill through, we march slowly along this road, because, indeed, there are many obstacles upon it. I am frightened lest we stumble our toes, that we might hurt many, many thousands of people with the passing of this Act. Knowing and feeling that the province is not on fire, I can see no reason why we should hustle that bill through, even if we had to hold it up for a year.

I am convinced that if the hon. Minister's department will allocate enough funds—and I want to say again that I think it is indeed one of the most important departments that functions here, if any of them function at all—I think that what he should do is make a demand upon the Treasury benches for more available funds in order that he could go out and employ more men like Mr. Fine and other people that he has employed in there, too, who are good.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): How about the hon. Minister?

Mr. Reaume: I said he is not a bad fellow. He is not a bad fellow, but I just want to say this, if the hon. Prime Minister does not hold him back in the passage of this Bill No. 74, I am afraid he might throw a monkey-wrench into the whole thing and get it all balled up. So I would just say that if the hon. Prime Minister has any influence with him—

Hon. Mr. Frost: He would not want to get us into any trouble, would he?

Mr. Reaume: —and I am sure that behind that iron curtain in there that he has some—but my advice to him would be to say to him, “Now look here, Todd old boy, I think you are making a bum step, and I think you should put your foot on the brakes on that Oldsmobile you have—that power-brake effort—to slow this bill down.”

Now, I just want to add to that that I think that if they will give us plenty of chance after this bill goes into committee, I would like to see, speaking about the amendment of the hon. member, if I may just take a peek at it, I am not too happy to handle things once he has had them in his hands—

Mr. MacDonald: That is where he stole his speech.

Mr. Reaume: —but I just want to say that I really do not think it is an amendment, I really do not think it amounts to anything anyway, because there are a thousand and one things that he skips in here that is included in our document. We have made it broad, it covers as the hon. Prime Minister many times has said, we have taken in the whole 4 corners.

Hon. Mr. Frost: We have everything there as far as I can see.

Mr. Reaume: There is no doubt about it. But the hon. Prime Minister was out when I made this statement.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I was here.

Mr. Reaume: Oh. But I was just referring to the hon. member for York South over here. I was watching him while the head of our party was making this historic wonderful speech he has made, and our hon. friend from York South was squirming around in his seat as though somebody has sprinkled itching powder in his pants.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, might I just say a few words in relation to this bill.

Now, I would say this—and I do not use this example in any derogatory sense at all—if anything was required to show that this bill should go to the committee where there it can be explained in detail, I think that nothing more is needed than the debate this afternoon.

Mr. Speaker, I say that with all respect, for this reason, that although I have had a great deal to do with labour legislation over a period of 15 or more years, I must say that I do not profess, I could not profess, to be even approaching the status of an expert in this matter. This is an involved, difficult law. In fact, I would say that it requires the consideration that can be given only in a very calm impartial way. I just want to refer to one section.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): No calmer way than in the Legislature.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right. Well, I just want to explain one section of this bill, and I think hon. members will find that my explanation perhaps deals with the fundamental facts. I am going to give the hon. members a complete explanation of this problem.

I have been very much interested in what has been said in relation to section 16 of this Act. The hon. member for York South (Mr. MacDonald) had a great deal to say about section 16. He condemned section 16 and so, I think, did the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer), as a possible negation and violation of the rights of unions, and the rights of persons to organize, and interfering—to use the expressions that were used here today—with the democratic rights of workers.

I think that is a pretty ample restatement of the objections which were made in greater detail to that section.

Now, let me give hon. members the origin of that section, because in my own way I, perhaps, had a good deal to do with it.

A couple of years ago, as a matter of fact before the labour committee met at all, or before it was formed at all, I had a visit from a former CCF member of this House, one who is very well known to the hon. members' opposite. A very fine gentleman. He complained to me about this. He was representing a union in the Windsor area that desired to become the collective bargaining agent, to become certified in one of the industries down there, a brewery industry.

Now, as a result—at that time another union was the certified union, and it was, as I understand it, a union shop. In any event, what happened was this:

One member of the union, which was the bargaining agent, objected and felt that it was proper that there should be another bargaining agent. Mr. Speaker, it seems to me that that is a fair reasonable thing for any worker to do. I think he should be free to say who should be the bargaining agent, and if he is dissatisfied with the bargaining agent that is operating, surely he should not be penalized for that.

Now, what happened was this: He supported the certification of the union which was represented, as I say by a prominent former CCF member of this House. Now, I notice my hon. friend from Oshawa looks at me with interest. He might be right, you understand me. Now, he might be right. A great member of this House.

Mr. Thomas: Why does the hon. Prime Minister not say who he was?

Hon. Mr. Frost: I said he was a great fellow.

Here is what happened: This man, a decent fellow, a member of a union, in a union shop, supported another union for certification at the time when it became possible to make a reapplication for certification, with the result that he was discharged from the union. It was a union shop and therefore he lost his job.

Now, I would ask the hon. member for Oshawa if he knows of any more undemocratic procedure than that. There is none.

I notice the hon. member for Woodbine over there smiles.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): I was just interested because the hon. Prime Minister is taking him as the authority.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, all right, he is a pretty good fellow, I say that.

Mr. Thomas: We have not heard who he is. We would like to know.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Do not be so hugger-mugger about it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Ask your hon. friends who sit beside you.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): We are not speaking with those fellows.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Here was the result of that: The committee on labour heard this, and made recommendation No. 47. Now, it was dissented from by the hon. member for York South, it was also dissented from by the hon. member for Essex North. Perhaps I had better read the whole thing. It said this:

47. It is the recommendation of the committee that where union membership is terminated by reason of refusal to pay dues, and a person loses employment as a consequence, that person shall have the right to appeal to the labour relations board, which board shall make such order as it deems fit. At the hearing of said appeal the person involved and the trade union concerned shall be heard.

This, however, would not apply in cases where a trade union has established an impartial tribunal outside of the union membership to expeditiously deal with such matters.

That was dissented from, it was agreed to by all the other members of the committee, but dissented from by the hon. member for York South because he believes we should not short-circuit by legislation the established appeal procedure set up by the union constitution. The hon. member for Essex North dissents because he believes that, in order to encourage union responsibilities, these matters could very well be left in the hands of the union involved.

Mr. Reaume: Well, I still think that is right.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker—

Mr. Reaume: Do not ask me to spank him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Just a moment. Here is the situation. This section merely says this, that if a person is deprived of his union membership, he shall not be deprived of his employment, provided this: that the labour relations board passes on that and finds that it is bona fide.

Mr. MacDonald: That is not what is in the Act.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is the effect.

Mr. MacDonald: No, it is not.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, it is.

Mr. MacDonald: It is not. The labour relations board is not in the picture at all.

Hon. Mr. Frost: May I say this, Mr. Speaker, that if it is found that there has been, on the part of the employer, for instance, an unfair intervention in the affairs of the union, that re-employment can be refused.

Furthermore, if it appears that the employer has unfairly intervened, then he can become liable for the penalties under the Act. That is, I think, founded in good sense, founded in democracy, founded in fairness, and founded in such a way as to give the employee security without any discrimination, without anything that would prevent him from exercising his rights as a free man.

It is 3 minutes after 6 o'clock—

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): There are not any—

Hon. Mr. Frost: At this time I am going to adjourn the debate on this bill and I would say, sir, that it would be my proposal to continue with this matter tomorrow morning at 10 o'clock, or shortly thereafter.

I merely express this hope, that it will be possible to refer this bill, with all of its intricacies, as quickly as possible to the committee where these things can be studied, and where hon. members will have the advantage of people who can make explanations that are far more cogent, and perhaps far more relevant and far more able, than anything that I may be able to give them.

I believe that is the sensible proposal, and with that I would move the adjournment of the debate on this bill, and I would hope to recall this bill to debate tomorrow morning.

Mr. Bryden: May I ask the hon. Prime Minister a question, Mr. Speaker?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No. I will answer that tomorrow.

Mr. Bryden: Would he please read that section—

Hon. Mr. Frost: I move that the debate on this bill be adjourned.

Motion agreed to.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, Mr. Speaker, assuming we finish this bill, what else has the hon. Prime Minister in mind for the rest of the morning?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, I would say that if we complete this bill, as I hope we might, then we could go ahead with the supplementary estimates tomorrow and anything that is on the order paper. No, I am sorry. On the completion of this bill we will go ahead with the bill in relation to The Judicature Act, and also refer it to the committee. Following that, if there is any time, then the supplementary estimates.

I move the adjournment of the House.

Motion agreed to.

The House adjourned at 6.15 of the clock, p.m.

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY OF ONTARIO

FRIDAY, MARCH 4, 1960

10 O'CLOCK A.M.

in this expression of sympathy to hon. Mr. Daley and his immediate family.

And the House having met.

Prayers.

Mr. Speaker: Presenting petitions.

Reading and receiving petitions.

Presenting reports by committees.

Motions.

Introduction of bills.

Orders of the day.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I know that you, and the hon. members of the House, would want me to express to the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) our deepest sympathy in the loss of his mother, an old lady of 94 years of age who died late yesterday in St. Catharines.

It is a very remarkable thing that one such as the hon. Minister of Labour, one who has had such long service in public life, both municipal and provincial, having served as Minister of Labour for a period now of nearly 17 years, should have had all of that period of time the great asset of having his mother alive.

Now, Mr. Speaker, she has passed on at the great age of 94. The funeral will be on Monday, and I am sure that all of us here express to hon. Mr. Daley and to the members of his family, to the two daughters, Mrs. Burley of Niagara Falls and Mrs. Brown of Newmarket, our very deepest sympathies.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Mr. Speaker, I can do no more than to join with the hon. Prime Minister in this expression of sympathy to the hon. Minister of Labour. I think what the hon. Prime Minister has said represents essentially the thoughts and expressions of all of us. It is a real blessing to have a parent live to the age that Mrs. Daley lived, and to assist, and I am sure enjoy, the life of her son.

Mr. Speaker, we on this side of the House certainly join with the hon. Prime Minister

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Mr. Speaker, without repeating what either the hon. Prime Minister or the hon. leader of the Opposition have said, I would certainly like to associate myself with the expressions of sympathy to the hon. Minister of Labour and the members of the family on the occasion of their bereavement.

Mr. R. Gisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, before the orders of the day I would like to refer to a statement attributed to myself in the Toronto Daily Star of Wednesday, March 2, as follows:

The Premier makes some pretty good quips and pokes at Mr. Gisborn, but sometimes he puts his mouth in motion before his brain begins to move.

Mr. Speaker, the statement was not directed to the hon. Prime Minister, but to the hon. member for Essex North (Mr. Reaume). He was here, there was—

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, the hon. member for Essex North will now—

Interjection by hon. Mr. Frost.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Well, he is not here now.

Hon. F. M. Cass (Minister of Highways): I would like to call to the attention of the hon. members the 1960 Ontario Department of Highways road map, of which hon. members were all furnished a copy yesterday. We in the department believe this is one of the greatest assets to the travelling public, both to our own people in Ontario and to the people who visit us in large numbers from south of the border and other parts of Canada. We think that it is not only useful, but it is very readable.

I would say, Mr. Speaker, through you to the hon. members here, that if any of them desire copies in any reasonable quantity for their own use or for that of their constituents, if they would let me know we would be only too pleased to supply the copies desired.

Mr. Speaker: The meeting of the private bills committee on Monday next will be at 9.15, as announced by Mr. Rowntree yesterday. As the clerk of the committee was not notified the notices on the desk erroneously read 10.30, but the meeting will be at 9.15.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, I beg to table answers to questions 1, 6, 10, 16, 17, 18, 19, 23, 34, 36, 40 and 42. Pretty good day's work, I would say.

Mr. MacDonald: What about all the others?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is a lot of work. I had to write all those out last night.

Mr. Speaker: Orders of the day.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, when the House adjourned last night, I was speaking on this bill. I would like to make further reference to section 16 which is the only part of this bill to which I want to refer.

The purpose of section 16 has been completely misunderstood by the Opposition hon. members. In saying that, I do not say that in any derogatory way at all. This is, as I have said before, difficult legislation, and it is believable that there could be misunderstanding. I can quite understand how, in this Act, there are many points which require the comments of the expert men we have working on the subject.

But I point out this, that section 16 has to be read in conjunction with, I believe, sections 57 and 58 of the Act. They are the enforcing sections.

Now, I am talking about the Act as it stands at the present time, unamended. Section 16 has to be read in conjunction with that. The explanation that I gave yesterday was quite correct. I checked it up with the law officers, and I found that my interpretation was quite correct, but they had suggested that I should point out to the hon. members of the House the enforcing sections.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Does that include section 61 of the bill?

Hon. Mr. Frost: Yes, sections 57 and 61 of the Act, as it stands at the present time.

Now, the point is this; that this is designed for the protection of the worker. Now, if a worker is aggrieved, that worker has the right of appeal. Remember that the principle is this: he is deprived of his union membership and therefore is deprived of his job under certain conditions. This gives him a right of appeal. But the onus is on that employee to show that he is aggrieved.

I would say that the onus contained in this section, or these enforcing sections, is such that it completely negates the possibilities which were raised here yesterday by the Opposition hon. members.

Now, I will not go into the details of that other than to say this, that the principle of this section is simply as I have stated it, to protect a worker from very grave injustices that can come about without remedy. Now, in the case that came up to me—and as I say it was advanced to me by a very well-known former member of this House—the point was this, it was found impossible to remedy the situation in the legislation as it was.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): Who is the man?

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, I would not want to do that.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, I rise on the question of privilege.

Hon. Mr. Frost: There is no privilege at all. I am the only privileged one.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, on the question of privilege. If the hon. Prime Minister is going to quote this gentleman he should name him because I suspect the hon. Prime Minister is misrepresenting what the gentleman said.

Mr. H. L. Rowntree (York West): Withdraw that statement.

Mr. MacDonald: Then let him have a chance to reply.

Hon. Mr. Frost: I have no intention of naming the gentleman at all. My hon. friend has often availed himself of that. I would say that it may be possible that the gentleman himself will consult with the hon. leader of the CCF party at a later time. He is ill at the moment, and therefore I could not get in touch with him.

I will not mention his name, except to say this, that I am stating the facts of this case, I think with positive accuracy.

I would say this, that the purpose is to protect an individual, a worker, against what can be other and grave injustices to him.

I have discussed this matter with the law officers and with the officials of The Department of Labour, who will be explaining this Act to the hon. members of the House. If, on examination, it is found that this section does not do what I say it will do, then we are perfectly prepared to revise the section.

As a matter of fact, this section is not aimed in any sense at weakening the position of the union. It is only aimed wholly and solely at preventing an injustice which may arise in connection with the employment of an individual, and the exercise by him of a reasonable and fair discretion on his part to support the application of a bargaining unit which he favours.

Now, that is his democratic right, and it should not be interfered with.

On the other hand, I would assure the hon. members of the House that if there is not ample protection in this section against its misuse or abuse, then we are perfectly prepared to reconsider the wording of the section.

I may say that I discussed the matter last night with Professor Finkelman and others. They advised me that what I had said in relation to this section yesterday was correct, but that the matter could be very thoroughly canvassed in committee, and that we would look at it with an open mind to remove from the section any possible abuse. I think that is a fair statement to make.

Might I say this, Mr. Speaker, to the hon. members of this House? The principle of this bill is simply to improve the ways and means by which labour and industry can collectively bargain together. As the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) said the other day, it is to improve the rules of the road as it were, because one cannot operate without rules. We are prepared in committee to very carefully canvass this bill and the effects of the various sections.

It would be idle for me here to attempt to cover this bill in all of its meanings and effects. The various sections themselves, in most cases, pretty well stand by themselves and have to be considered separately.

I would say that if the House, in its wisdom, gives this bill second reading, I will consult with the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer) as to the sitting of the committee, so that the members will be given the fullest of opportunity to consider this matter.

I must say to hon. members that personally, with the hon. Minister of Labour and others, I spent I do not know how many days or how many hours in relation to this matter.

I think that the consideration of the bill, in the committee ought to be unhurried and therefore, the sooner it gets there, I think the sooner it will get down to the real problems and the real considerations which this bill involves.

Now again, Mr. Speaker, I would repeat that the purpose of the bill is one with which none of us can disagree—to improve the rules of the road, if I can abbreviate it that way. On the other hand, with the rules themselves as contained in this bill, I know they are going to require specific consideration, and on those, on the sections themselves, I would say that we are open to anything to strengthen the Act, to improve it, to improve these sections to achieve as I say the principle of this bill.

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): Would the hon. Prime Minister permit one question, Mr. Speaker? He made reference to section 16. Is it fair to ask him whether, as a result of his consultation last night, he finds merit in the objection that we made to section 16 yesterday?

Hon. Mr. Frost: My hon. friend, actually no. Regarding this section, I think there were two or three different alternatives that we considered at the time. Now I am not so sure that, perhaps in working the thing out, one or other of the alternatives might not be a better course to follow. But again let me say that what was involved was this.

Now, there are cases of raising this from time to time. A situation arises where there is the possibility of certifying another bargaining agent. Now, the certain worker himself favours another bargaining agent with the result that he is accused of non-union activities, and he is relieved of his membership, and therefore relieved of his job, under the agreement with the employer.

The point is this. It seems that that is a very harsh result—I think my hon. friend will agree with that. Now, the purpose of this section is not to deprive him of his job if his only sin is that he wants to exercise his democratic rights and have somebody else represent him. There are lots of cases perhaps where one union will have perhaps a totally different viewpoint than some other union which the men might feel they want as their bargaining agent. Now, it is pretty tough to deprive a man of his job for that reason. The purpose of section 16 is to safeguard this, and I would say this to my hon. friend, that if that is not the effect of section 16, then we are perfectly prepared to reconsider that.

Mr. Wintermeyer: I think section 16 goes farther than that.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, well we are perfectly prepared to consider that. I would say there are different wordings of that in our judgment, and we felt that in the wording this was the most favourable. But we will not be dogmatic about it.

I am just giving this note that section 16 of the bill adds to the grounds on which an employer may not discharge an employee notwithstanding the provisions of the collective agreement. Does the hon. leader of the Opposition see the point?

Under the provisions of the new section 77, added to section 31 of the bill, it is provided that, where there has been a complaint, that a person has been discharged contrary to this Act, the board may authorize a field officer to inquire into such a complaint, and the field officer is to endeavour to effect a settlement of the matter.

If he is unable to do so, the Ontario labour relations board may inquire into the complaint and, if it is satisfied that the person has been discharged contrary to the Act, it shall determine the action to be taken by the employer and the trade union, or either of them, with respect to the employment of such person which, in its discretion may, notwithstanding the provisions of the collective agreement, include reinstatement in an employment with or without compensation by the employer or the union involved.

In other words, the addition of section 33 of the Act by section 16 of the bill must be read along with section 57 of the Act as added by section 31 of the bill.

What is intended is that, if a person feels that he has been discharged improperly, he may complain to the board and an investigation and/or inquiry will subsequently take place. The board is given wide discretion in determining what should be done under the circumstances. I think my hon. friends will find, when they look at it, that abuses of this section are really impossible.

I noticed in an editorial in the Toronto Daily Star that reference was made to this section.

Now, as a matter of fact, when we get into the operation of it, it would be extremely difficult, if not impossible, for an employer to avail himself of this for purposes of undermining the union. Let us discuss this, and if it is disclosed that such is the case, I am satisfied that that situation can be remedied. I point out that, if an employer takes part in things which are contrary to the Act, then he is subject to penalties. When we add all of those things together, the fears expressed in the Star's editorial—the fears expressed by Opposition hon. members—will evaporate.

I am not being dogmatic on the point; I repeat that, if it is found that such is not the case, then we will amend and change the section to bring it around to the point of view of protecting the area that we want to protect, which is capable of very grave injustices and, as a matter of fact, has worked very grave injustices on very many good workers in this province. Now, that is the situation.

Now, again I say this. It is very difficult to discuss this item here, it is an involved point, involving several different sections including the powers of the board. There is only one method by which it could be determined actually to the satisfaction of any of the hon. members here.

From my own experience, I have found that the only way to do it is to sit down with those who are administering this Act, and have administered it, I think, in a very satisfactory way over the last 16 or 17 years, and get their viewpoint. When we get their viewpoint there are going to be very many alterations in the points of view of hon. members. That, Mr. Speaker is, I think, all I could say about this matter.

Again I do not profess to be an authority on this Act, I think that must be obvious to those who hear me. I am a layman. I do not profess to know the intricacies of this matter. But I may say that personally I have been guided to a very great extent by the experience of Professor Finkelman and others. Professor Finkelman has known this Act, and what has been done, over a period of 18 years.

I say to my hon. friend from Brant (Mr. Nixon) that it is 18 years ago, at this time, that we were discussing the first labour relations bill which was introduced then by the hon. Mr. Conant. At that time, Professor Finkelman very wisely withdrew from the faculty of the University of Toronto, and since that time has advised all the succeeding governments in relation to labour relations matters. I quite frankly say that Professor Finkelman is one of the outstanding authorities in America on the subject.

I think, in discussing these things with him, that he can give hon. members background that it would be quite impossible for me, or for any other hon. member of this House to give them. I think he will help to clear up many of the points that no doubt trouble the hon. members opposite, and perhaps some other hon. members in this House. Now that, Mr. Speaker, is all I have to say.

Mr. A. Wren (Kenora): Mr. Speaker, I am very interested, in listening to the remarks of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) about Bill No. 74, particularly when he is talking of changing the rules of the road. I am interested because there are certain pertinent sections of this legislation which are certainly going to change the rules of the road. We are going to be driving on the left-hand side overnight, after driving on the right, if we are not careful.

I am disturbed about the principles involved, and some of the principles not involved, in this bill. To quote the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley), it is a bill that is difficult for the layman to understand. I suggest, Mr. Speaker, that any legislation which is difficult for a layman to understand, at least in its broad general principles, is not good law.

Certainly we need people in the legal profession and in our courts at times, to interpret intricate sections, and resolve interpretations of certain definitions in the law. But I say to hon. members quite seriously that any law, or any amendment to any law, which is beyond the capabilities of an average layman to understand in broad principle is, I repeat, bad law—

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): There are a lot of bad laws around then.

Mr. Wren:—and it seems to me a departure from good policy to rely entirely on the civil service for the production and development of legislation in this House.

Yesterday the hon. Minister of Labour stated quite clearly that it was a duty and the responsibility of the administration to introduce, and be able to support and take responsibility for, legislation which is brought before the House.

Now, after listening to the hon. Prime Minister's interpretation of section 16, I can quite well appreciate that that might be his interpretation, and someone else might interpret it differently. But the only way we can look at section 16 is as it is written, and that was the fundamental approach of the hon. leader of the Opposition (Mr. Wintermeyer); when yesterday, he said in his criticism of this bill in principle that as section 16 was written it was a fundamental departure into the field of right-to-work legislation. Now, when it is suggested that section 16 follows the select committee's recommendation No. 47, the relationship between section 16 of this Act and recommendation No. 47 of the select committee is purely coincidental. I say this because, in recommendation No. 47, the select committee did not, in any way, shape or form, recommend what is written in section 16 of this bill.

What recommendation No. 47 of the select committee set out to do was to recommend to this House that, where a man had lost employment as a result of loss of his union card, he should have recourse to some form of appeal, to a tribunal which may be external or internal, as the case may be.

But the man should have the right to have his case dispassionately heard and adjudicated. And that could be very simply stated without going in the back door and out the front door, as section 16 purports to do.

I have had section 16 looked at by some very competent legal people, and they tell me that it would be almost impossible in the interpretation of that section to spell out the intentions of recommendation No. 47 of the select committee.

Regarding the case the hon. Prime Minister refers to, where this person in the Sarnia area was aggrieved: I wish he would carry that story to its ultimate conclusion, and tell the House some day what happened to the man who had been aggrieved and why he was.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, he lost his job.

Mr. Wren: I know he lost his job, and the select committee went into several of these cases and the histories behind them. In this particular instance, the man certainly did have some reason to complain about the treatment meted out to him.

But when the matter was brought to its ultimate conclusion, during some discussion in the select committee, and after the select committee ended its hearing, it was found that, to condone what the man had done—actually when all the facts were in and all the facts were known—would be simply nothing else than if the Crown were to condone treason.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Well, that is all right.

Mr. Wren: The man was very wrong. The man was running around with 3 or 4 union charters in his back pocket, and the people the hon. Prime Minister speaks about, were not aware, when they were representing him, that he was doing that sort of thing.

Hon. Mr. Frost: All right, then he is out, that is all.

Mr. Wren: Now, the way to get around the principle, if the hon. Prime Minister's interpretation is correct and, if we are going to follow his interpretation, is through a much simpler way than as section 16 is presently written. But I would suggest, Mr. Speaker, that section 16 is written the way it is written for perhaps another reason.

Hon. Mr. Frost: What other reason?

Mr. Wren: Because one of the unanimous recommendations of the select committee on labour relations was then the introduction into legislation of the voluntary revocable checkoff and, after many weeks of discussing that very subject, there was little opposition to it in the voluntary revocable sense—

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): It was not unanimous—5 Tories.

Mr. Wren: But—just let me talk.

Mr. MacDonald: Well, just look at the report. The hon. member is misrepresenting the facts. It was not unanimous.

Mr. Wren: No, it was not unanimous.

Mr. MacDonald: So, all right, make up your mind.

Mr. Wren: The matter went before the government as a recommendation of the committee, that voluntary revocable check-off be included.

I think, Mr. Speaker, that the government, even this government, can see the justification for the introduction of that kind of legislation. But as the Northern Miner points out in one of their recent articles of about two weeks ago, they along with others, went in to see the hon. Prime Minister, and told him that if there was any suggestion of voluntary revocable checkoff in this legislation, to take it out, and, in addition to that, to do anything else he could to undermine union security in the province.

Now, the mining industry is well known for its bitter opposition towards trade unionism. It is not just the voluntary revocable checkoff they are worried about, they do not want trade unionism. I think this had a great deal to do with the failure of the government to recognize the rights of unions to that kind of security.

Another area where this bill fails very completely, I suggest, and fails employer as well as employee, is in the building industry. Where are we going to be after this presupposed improvement in our labour legislation and in our labour machinery?

We are going into another building season, and another 3 or 4 years yet of the same thing, without proper and speedy methods of certification and without the kind of conciliation procedure which is necessary to the building construction and seasonal occupational trades.

There have been a great many representations made to the committee, the select committee, and the government, by employers in the construction trade, asking for some determination to be made in these matters. I know that the building trade unions are equally concerned that some fair method of resolving differences of opinion in this area should be resolved.

One of the principal causes of disturbance in this field is the difficulties in the area of certification. Many times, as the hon. leader of the Opposition pointed out yesterday, before anything can be done to resolve an issue, the job is completed. Now these festering sores have to be cleaned out.

We cannot say that this is any improvement in the rules of the road, by any stretch of the imagination, until we take cognizance of the problems in one of the most vital bargaining areas in the province of Ontario. I say this because it not only affects, in this instance, the building trade, it affects a great many industries in the north, and I have no doubt in southern Ontario, where the nature of the work is seasonal in its nature and duration.

I would say one of the reasons we are not prepared to support second reading of this bill is that this bill is nothing more and nothing less than a tolerable compromise to an unknown quantity.

I was rather disturbed yesterday when the hon. Minister from Port Arthur (Mr. Wardrope) suggested that what people have to do in this province, in matters of labour relations, is to be prepared to accept unconditional surrender. I do not think that either side in labour relations in Ontario should be requested or required, to accept any principle of unconditional surrender when they have legitimate principles to advance.

In conclusion, I want to say one other thing, Mr. Speaker. In the principle of handling this legislation, I cannot understand the government's attitude in refusing to allow witnesses—competent witnesses that is—to come before the standing committee on labour, other than those in the civil service. Certainly, when a doctor prescribes a cure for his patient, the patient should have the right to consult another doctor if he desires to confirm or deny the information given to him. So I cannot for the life of me see any reason why people on either side, on the side of management or on the side of labour, should not have the right to be called before the committee to express their views on how many of these pertinent sections will apply.

It is all right for a civil servant who wrote the Act to say how an Act should be interpreted. But how the law itself will be interpreted, when it becomes a matter of dispute, is then necessarily out of his hands. For that reason, among others, we are not prepared to support this bill on second reading.

And yesterday, I would like to mention, someone talked about the Smallwood legislation in another part of Canada. We are not part nor party, nor have we ever been part nor party, to legislation of that kind. I might also point out, Mr. Speaker, that in another area than labour in this House, we had Smallwood legislation introduced into Ontario for the first time when the hon. Minister of Agriculture (Mr. Goodfellow) brought down his bill to require certain conformation in farm marketing. The principle there is the same principle as applied in Smallwood's legislation in Newfoundland: "If you do not agree with me we will put you out of business!"

Now, the Liberal party in Ontario never has, and never shall, entertain legislation with a principle of that kind at stake.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, far be it from me to prolong this debate on Bill No. 74. Some of the things that I would say would be merely repetitious of the things already said.

But as a trade unionist in one of the largest trade unions in Canada, I feel compelled at this time to register my objection to one portion of the bill in particular.

When we speak about trade unions, Mr. Speaker, I feel that we are speaking about organizations that have done more to improve the standard of living of working people in this country than any association of government that I know of.

Not only have they improved the standard of living of the membership of the particular union, but they have been responsible in improving the standard of living for professional classes—lawyers, doctors and everyone I can think of because, had it not been for the concessions that they have obtained from the companies—from the manufacturer by allowing greater amounts of money to be put into circulation—then I am afraid that a good many of the professional classes of this country would have suffered as well.

Mr. Speaker, it is very difficult for me to understand the attitude of the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost). I feel that he is being very inconsistent. When he was queried on whether organizations that were interested in this legislation would be allowed to appear before the committee, he very emphatically said no. He would prefer to see them privately.

Now, I agree with him on one point, that not one hon. member of the Legislature desires that the meeting of the committee on labour should develop into a Donnybrook. If we have a chairman of that committee like the hon. member for York West (Mr. Rowntree), who is chairman of the private bills committee, who can keep control of it, I see no reason why it should.

If we invite these people, who are vitally interested in this legislation, to appear before the committee, and if they object to certain sections of this bill and are compelled to confine their remarks strictly to the section that they are objecting to, I see no earthly reason why we should not allow them to appear.

What is the object of a committee of this Legislature? Every committee that I have been on when bills have been considered, always invite anyone who is objecting to the bill to give his point of view.

Why the departure from that procedure? If the hon. Prime Minister insists that these persons who are objecting will not be allowed, then why send it to the labour committee, why not leave it right in this Legislature? It is a waste of time to send it to the labour committee if no one is allowed to object.

Now, one of the sections I object to, Mr. Speaker, is the section on conciliation.

Over the years there has been great objection to the delay in conciliation procedure. We have been bothered greatly with it in the auto workers union, particularly in the city of Oshawa, when conciliation has been a long drawn-out affair when sometimes the company would refuse to bargain. There is little change in this section.

The only great change that I can find is that it puts more power in the hands of the Minister. I wonder whether or not that is a good thing. I think that the hon. Minister is trying to do a very good job, and I have always found him very friendly and very co-operative.

But, I remember, in 1949, there was a strike in the city of Oshawa. After the strike had been in progress for two weeks, the members of the executive of the union asked me if I would approach the hon. Minister of Labour (Mr. Daley) and ask him to invite the members of the executive of the union and the executives of General Motors to sit down around the table and discuss their problem. The union had approached General Motors and General Motors would not entertain the suggestion that they go into a session with them. So the union asked me if I would contact the hon. Minister and see if he could arrange a meeting between the two parties.

Well, I was a member of the union and, in fact, walking the picket line at that time. But I phoned the hon. Minister of Labour and told him that I would like an appointment with him. He very readily agreed, he always does, and I came to Toronto the following afternoon and I put the proposition before him.

I said this: "I know that you cannot settle this strike, that is beyond your power. But I do think that you have the power and the authority to get General Motors and the union members of the union executive—take them by the scruff of the neck if you will—and put them in the room and say: 'Now you can sit down there and talk it over.'"

The hon. Minister of Labour said to me: "I think your proposition is a very reasonable one. I will see what I can do." I went away greatly encouraged with that statement of the hon. Minister.

But about 3 or 4 days after, the hon. Minister had a meeting with the executive of General Motors, and that afternoon, or evening, there was an announcement in the paper that the meeting had adjourned with no comments. So the following day I came to Toronto to see the hon. Minister again and I referred to the rather discouraging information in the paper.

He said, "Yes, I'm afraid General Motors said no, that they will not meet with the men."

I said, "Well, why?"

"Well," he said, "they think the time is not opportune."

Well, Mr. Speaker, because General Motors thought the time was not opportune, they thought perhaps the workers in this particular industry should be out in the picket lines until they became a little hungry.

I maintain, Mr. Speaker, the hon. Minister of Labour has the great power and the authority to compel these two parties to get together, and therefore my objection to this amendment, in respect to the conciliation services, is that it puts too much power in the hands of the Minister, power that if he would use, would be all right. But he is always subject to pressure behind the scenes and, therefore, Mr. Speaker, in making this contribution in this debate, I want to say that I am very definitely opposed to the second reading of this bill.

Mr. R. Cisborn (Wentworth East): Mr. Speaker, I would like to take the opportunity for a few minutes to express my opposition to the principle of Bill No. 74. I feel that this is one of the most important items that this House will likely deal with this session, and I feel that it needs the greatest expression of progressive thinking that can be mustered.

Now, we have all heard, Mr. Speaker, of the great need for increased immigration to this country. We need more people to consume the goods we produce in our great industrial expansion. If we are going to have all of the people come here that we need, they are going to have to share in some immediate wealth of the country so that they can contribute to the expanding economy.

Now there are two approaches, that I think we have to look at.

One is that management is in business mainly to make as much profit as it can out of producing goods. On the other hand, I might say, honestly, that the workers organize themselves into unions to get the greatest share of that production they can under certain terms laid down by an Act of a province or a country.

So our job is to make the opportunities for groups of people to become organized into a union of their own choice in the easiest possible manner, entirely without interference. This has been pointed out earlier by previous speakers.

The contest does not begin until the workers have been certified under the conditions of the Act, so that when they decide that they want to form an organization of their own, and decide they want to go into a particular union, that should be entirely their business without any interference whatever.

The contest begins after they have been certified. The contest is only when they sit down and try to get some share of the wealth of that industry in negotiations.

The Act at present allows some interference by management. But I find in the amendment that there is an extension of interference in the application for certification. There is a section which allows management to do something else, and certainly this section allows industry, with its industrial relations men, its public relations officers, and its money, to pay for advertisements, thereby interfering with certification.

Now the preamble to the Act, Mr. Speaker, states this:

The intent and purpose of this Act is to promote harmonious relations between employers and employees through collective bargaining by their freely chosen representatives.

Now it has been pointed out, there has been some improvement in the preamble, and that this improvement should provide for collective bargaining.

Well, the point I want to make in the principle is this; they have to be certified first, before they can do any collective bargaining. Why this is so important is because the wage-earners are the only people that have to ask someone else for an increase in wages. These are the people who work for somebody else. They have no other method of getting a wage increase.

Other self-employed groups, and those that are not affected by this sort of thing, can raise their wages. Those who are in the selling market can set their prices to the point which the market will bear, to keep their standards up.

The reason there is a real need for the very easiest and simplest of certification procedures is this. In my lifetime, I have worked in almost every industry in Hamilton, and there are quite a number there. I cannot remember once in that period receiving a voluntary wage increase. Since the unions really took hold in Canada, particularly in Ontario and the industrial unions in the late 1930's, I do not remember ever seeing an advertisement or noted a statement where some industry had voluntarily given a wage increase to its employees. So that points out the necessity for collective bargaining.

As has been pointed out, this sort of progress had a lot to do with the increase in our economy.

I would say very briefly, Mr. Speaker, that if certification is going to really mean what it should mean, there should be absolutely no interference. We should have a preamble, to that specific clause, that will give encouragement to the unorganized workers to join unions of their choice.

The attitude that this Legislature has given is that it is not really for trade unionism. There is only a small group here that would stand up at any time and say that we really believe people should be organized into unions to bargain for a fair share of the productive wealth.

One does not hear it from the government which should be telling the people this, so we have to make the certification procedure just about as simple as possible.

The other point I wish to make concerns the democratic method of deciding an issue or making a decision. It should be the simple majority of those people voting which determines the outcome, not all those people eligible to vote.

It seems to me that, in all other procedures apart from certification, it is done in that manner, then why do we have this deterrent, this obstacle? So the principle of this section of the bill should give encouragement to the unorganized to join organizations of their choice in order that they can share in the productive wealth of their industry.

Mr. K. Bryden (Woodbine): Mr. Speaker, the hon. Prime Minister (Mr. Frost) apparently is anxious to have this bill hurried along into the committee. His submission, as I understand it, is that, after all, these are rather complicated clauses and they can be polished up in committee when the members of the committee can consult with the experts.

Now, normally, I would not say that the hon. Prime Minister is slow-witted at all, but in this particular submission of his it seems to indicate to me that he has missed the entire point of this debate.

Our objection is not mainly, although it may be to some degree, to any inadequacy in the drafting of this, that, or the other clause. Our objection is to the entire principle of this bill that is before the House.

At any rate, I will speak for our own CCF group. We object to this bill in principle, and we have indicated our objection in the only way that is possible, by moving an amendment on second reading.

I get the impression that the Liberals, too, object to it in principle, although they did not move an amendment.

The debate at this stage is a debate on the principle of the bill, and all the polishing up in the world of the sections in the bill will not remove our objections to the principle.

I believe, Mr. Speaker, that it is desirable, on an important matter of this kind, that we should spend a great deal of time on questions of principle. The detailed questions of drafting are certainly important, but the principles are far more important.

Therefore, I will make no apologies if I spend some time in this House discussing some fundamental principles of labour relations.

Before I do that, however, I would like to state that I was very interested in the address made on this bill by the hon. Liberal leader (Mr. Wintermeyer) in the early part of this debate. I was most interested in what he had to say, and I must say that, for my own part—and I believe I can speak for the CCF generally—we welcome his conversion and the conversion of his group to more enlightened and progressive attitudes on matter of labour relations.

Mr. A. J. Reaume (Essex North): We were there ahead of him.

Mr. Bryden: It is true that the conversion is not complete. There are some matters relating to labour relations, and what I would regard as an enlightened attitude, on which they are still somewhat confused. But I believe that, if they continue to read the CCF programme and listen to what we have to say, they will gradually get straightened out on these matters.

Mr. V. M. Singer (York Centre): What programme?

Mr. Bryden: As a matter of fact, I have been very interested in the progress of the Liberal group. If they keep showing the same aptitude to learn as they have to date, I think in time we will be able to pass some of them in the elementary course on socialism and bring them into the new party.

Mr. A. Grossman (St. Andrew): First true thing he said.

Mr. Bryden: However, as an example of the rather unfortunate confusion that still exists in their ranks, which I think can be cleared up in time, I would like to refer to the references my own leader (Mr. MacDonald) made yesterday to the question of including nurses, as well as other professional groups, within the ambit of The Labour Relations Act.

Now, the minute he mentioned that we heard—I am not quite sure who the hon. members were—but we heard great excitement from the back row along here, as one or more hon. members along there joined in the chorus from the Tory ranks on the other side that he had a petition from so many nurses saying that they did not want to be included in the Act, and somebody else had a petition from so many others.

Mr. B. Newman (Windsor-Walkerville): Here they are, does he want to see them?

Mr. Bryden: Oh, I quite believe that he has them.

I want to make it clear to the hon. members that I do not question their word at all. I do not think I have ever questioned the word of an hon. member of this House. I quite believe they have petitions.

The significance they attach to them reveals their lack of comprehension of what is involved in The Labour Relations Act, because there is nothing in this Act that says that any group, to whom it applies, must avail itself of the Act. That is a voluntary matter on their part.

Some persons do not wish to take advantage of The Labour Relations Act. That is no reason why the entire group of nurses in the province should be excluded from it. If they do not wish to be covered, they do not have to avail themselves of the Act.

But the principle that I think is wrong is that, because some people in any group do not wish to avail themselves of what I believe could be benefits of labour relations legislation, therefore all people in that group should be deprived of availing themselves even if they want to.

Mr. Grossman: How are they deprived?

Mr. Bryden: They are deprived because they are excluded from the coverage of the Act. I was suggesting to the hon. gentleman on the other side of the House—and I suppose it is difficult to get anything across to him—I am suggesting that, just because some people in a group, even a majority, do not wish to avail themselves of the provisions of the Act, that is no reason why other people in the group should be deprived of that. But—

Mr. Grossman: They are not deprived.

Mr. D. C. MacDonald (York South): They are deprived.

Mr. Bryden: You exclude them. Certainly they are deprived. Well, it would be hopeless to undertake to educate the hon. member for St. Andrew.

Some groups are excluded from the Act. There are several professional groups excluded by the Act from the coverage of the Act—

Mr. Grossman: Read it.

Mr. Bryden:—and that is one of the undesirable features of this Act that is not corrected by the bill.

We can take a group of people that are excluded from the Act at the present time, the professional engineers. There are substantial numbers of engineers who want to be covered. There are undoubtedly some engineers that do not wish to avail themselves of any of the provisions of the Act, and that is their business. Nobody said they must. But they have imposed their will, with the help, I regret to say, of the Legislature, on the entire profession.

Mr. Reaume: We covered that.

Mr. Bryden: Oh well, is that not wonderful? To think that they thought of something once; it is a most remarkable thing.

Mr. Singer: Will the hon. member permit a question? Will the hon. member advise me what section of the Act excludes nurses?

Mr. Bryden: I did not say that the Act excluded nurses. I made reference to the fact that various hon. members of your group, as well as on the other side of the House, made a great noise about the fact that certain nurses had indicated they wanted to be excluded, and they attached great significance to that. When my hon. leader made some suggestions that we should not consider that sort of thing, he was considered to be away out of line because some hon. members had some petitions.

Mr. Reaume: That is not anything strange.

Mr. Grossman: Oh, how he is getting—

Mr. Bryden: My submission is that, though the petitions may be interesting and important, they are of no significance for any consideration of the bill. The fact that some people in a group do not wish to avail themselves of the legislation should not affect others in the group. I would like to go on now to another area where people are specifically excluded.

Hon. L. M. Frost (Prime Minister): Mr. Speaker, I would like to speak to a point of order, and point out to the hon. member that I think he should confine his remarks to the ambit of this bill, the principles involved in this bill.

Now, if my hon. friend is not satisfied, and he wants to introduce other principles, then let him introduce a bill of his own. He is perfectly entitled to do that. He can introduce a bill if he wants to.

I think that it would be well, instead of going all over the 100-acre field in this matter, and getting into all sorts of things that are not in this bill, to confine his remarks to this bill. I would say that, if he is dissatisfied with this bill, then let him introduce a bill of his own, which we will be very interested in seeing.

Mr. MacDonald: He will see it.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now, I think, sir, that, as a matter of point of order, there should be some limitations on the debate. I think that actually it would be well, at this stage, to contain it to the bill itself and let us determine that, and let us get onto the consideration of this bill. Then, if my hon. friend wants to raise other principles, he should take the course that I have suggested.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, I would point out to the hon. Prime Minister that he was not here when I commenced, and I was indicating that, although I realize he would like to have this dealt with just on the basis of the wording of the certain specific items, a bill of 23 pages in length purporting to amend another bill opens up the whole question of labour relations and the principles of labour relations.

This bill specifically does that because it inserts by section 1, a preamble setting forth the intent and purpose of the Act, not only of this bill, but of the Act that is being amended.

I wish to address myself—and will, if these hon. gentlemen to my right can contain themselves long enough to give me a chance to speak—I wish to address myself to some of the principles involved in the intent and purpose of the Act, and of this bill, and of the inadequacies of this bill which purports to be a major overhaul but in my opinion falls very short of what it should be achieving.

With regard to the introduction of a bill of my own, the hon. Prime Minister will be happy to know that, though I will not be introducing it myself, our group will be bringing in a bill respecting labour relations which will set forth ideas that we think are valuable.

But, I still believe it is quite in order to discuss basic principles relating to this bill at this stage, and it seems to me to be the time that they can be discussed.

Now then, if I can return to this question of the engineers who at the present time are excluded from the ambit of the Act, there is nothing in this bill to bring them back in, notwithstanding the fine purposes stated in the proposed new preamble.

This is one of the major objections that we, in our amendment on second reading, have made to this bill, because some engineers do not wish to be excluded.

The will of some engineers is imposed on all other engineers, and there are engineers' groups that have complained most bitterly. The leading organization has been the Hydro's engineers group, but all hon. members, I believe, have got a document dated February 17 which indicates that many other men in the profession are in support of the position that the Hydro engineers are taking. It seems to me that the government should remove from the Act subsection 3 which excludes substantial groups of people.

I would like to refer, in regard to this document of February 17, to a letter reproduced there which Mr. Donald Ross, commissioner of works for the city of Kingston, sent to Mr. D. M. S. Simmons, president of the association of professional engineers. Mr. Ross indicates quite clearly that he supports the position of the Hydro engineers that engineers should not be excluded from our labour relations legislation. I would read only two or three sentences in one of the paragraphs which say:

In all honesty, we should admit that many groups, including engineers, have taken a free ride on the shoulders of labour unions. Whether we like it or not, organized labour is in the driver's seat of the national economy. It might be a safer ride if a few engineers were up front instead of in the caboose.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Oh, no.

Mr. MacDonald: Hear, hear.

Mr. Bryden: That is one point relating to this bill. I have other more general matters to deal with.

First of all, however, I would like to refer back to the compliments I was extending a little earlier to the hon. leader of the Opposition and his supporters in the House, and how we welcomed their conversion to a more enlightened attitude on the principles of labour relations. I—

Mr. Reaume: We do not know.

Mr. Bryden: I have indicated that the conversion was somewhat incomplete and they still are a little confused on some points, but I think—

Mr. J. J. Wintermeyer (Leader of the Opposition): The hon. member had better go back to the party of his father.

Mr. Bryden: —but I think, Mr. Speaker, we can regard that as only natural, because, when one realizes how recent this conversion has been, one realizes that naturally it is probably not entirely complete. I would like to read a short article that—

Mr. R. C. Edwards (Wentworth): What party is that?

Mr. Bryden: —that appeared in the Toronto Globe and Mail for Tuesday, January 26, 1960—about 5 or 6 weeks ago. It is dated Kitchener, January 25, and it reads as follows. I am quoting:

Charles Anderson, business manager of the Kitchener-Waterloo building and construction trades council, today described as futile efforts to enlist the support of Ontario Liberal Leader Wintermeyer against charges in The Ontario Labour Relations Act. He said his discussions with Mr. Wintermeyer had been a waste of time. Mr. Anderson said: "Mr. Wintermeyer—

Mr. Reaume: A CCF'er.

Mr. Bryden: I do not know the man at all, but—

Mr. Reaume: Oh, I know that he knows—

Mr. Bryden: —he is the business manager of the Kitchener-Waterloo building trades council.

Mr. MacDonald: Why does the hon. member not hear the quotation?

Mr. Wintermeyer: I have read it many times.

Mr. Bryden: Well, let me finish reading it:

Mr. Anderson said: "Mr. Wintermeyer feels labour has too much power and thinks there should be legislation to whittle it down. If Wintermeyer is ever elected Premier, labour will take a real shellacking."

Mr. Singer: Do not speak for Wintermeyer. He speaks for himself.

Mr. Wintermeyer: May I speak to the type of personal innuendo that the hon. member for Woodbine, whom I had high respect for, is inclined to and enjoyed indulging in? That particular item was in the paper about 4 or 5 weeks ago. He has had that in his possession ever since. He had the opportunity to bring it up in this House. He had the opportunity to speak to me about it privately.

Now, the simple fact, Mr. Speaker, is that the newspaper in Kitchener is in complete agreement that the story is a complete fabrication, and the expression of the mind of one man has not been proper. It does not represent my opinion. The representation that is in the paper is not that of any newspaper reporter or of the paper proper, but of one individual whose name, I think, is Anderson.

Mr. Speaker, this is known. Had the hon. member taken the time or effort to make this inquiry, he would not be put in the position now that he would take advantage of this sort of suggestive innuendo—

Mr. Crossman: He knows. He knows.

Mr. Wintermeyer: —to permit this inquiry—

Mr. Bryden: Well, that expression “suggestive innuendo” is a very good one.

Mr. Reaume: Retract.

Mr. Bryden: They have had their say, now let me have my say.

Mr. Wintermeyer: He goes down in my estimation.

Mr. Bryden: Well, that is a great pity.

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

I am quite sure it is apparent to the members that this is such a wide subject that, unless members confine themselves to the principles of the bill, we can wander quite far afield and touch areas perhaps which are not necessary to touch at this time. We all realize, too, that—

Mr. Wintermeyer: What was he doing out in the—

Mr. Speaker: Order, order.

There will be further opportunity to discuss this bill in full when we are dealing with it section by section. It is quite apparent to me that many of the things this morning could have been dealt with better in committee.

Therefore, I would ask the members to confine their remarks strictly and directly to the principles of the bill.

Mr. Reaume: Well, that is the point, he will not do that.

Mr. T. D. Thomas (Oshawa): Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I may say that, prior to the introduction of this bill, we in our group had discussed the principle of it, and we knew that we had to go into this very warily because we would be called out of order. I think that every hon. member, up to now in this debate, has transgressed that ruling, so why make an exception of the hon. member for Woodbine? Everyone who has participated in this debate has strayed far afield—

An hon. member: Including the hon. Prime Minister.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Mr. Speaker, may I say this, perhaps I can pour oil on the troubled waters. I point out to the hon. member for Woodbine that his reference to the hon. leader of the Opposition had no possible reference to this bill, and should not have been made at all. There is lots of time to take after the hon. leader of the Opposition, but I do not think that this is one of them.

Mr. MacDonald: Good Liberal-Tory coalition.

Hon. Mr. Frost: Now look, I would say this, sir, that we would make greater progress if the Opposition stopped quarrelling among themselves.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, on a matter of personal privilege. It is not a matter of being sensitive, but I am going to appeal to you on a matter of personal privilege. I do not like the fact that the hon. member raised this point, very frankly, and I will acknowledge that, and I do not want to use unnecessarily the time of the House.

But, Mr. Speaker, I tell you that the story has no foundation in fact—

Mr. MacDonald: Well, why did he not tell us 5 weeks ago?

Mr. Wintermeyer: Now, I have said that locally.

Mr. MacDonald: He did not say it here.

Mr. Wintermeyer: Mr. Speaker, all I can say in this connection is simply this, and then I am going to demand that the statement be withdrawn.

If I were to try to read, or much less answer, all the attacks made upon me, this shop might as well be closed for other business. I do the very best I know how, the very best I can, and I mean to keep doing so until the end. If the end brings me out all right, what is said against me will not amount to anything. If the end brings me out wrong, then angels swearing I was right will make no difference.

Now, I acknowledge that that is not my own phraseology but I adopt it as mine today and, Mr. Speaker, in view of what I have said, I demand that the hon. member for Woodbine withdraw his statement.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, this is really reaching the last degree of the ridiculous. I read an extract from a newspaper which—

Mr. Reaume: Sit down or fall down.

Mr. Bryden: If I am not allowed to say anything—

Mr. Speaker: Since the hon. leader of the Opposition now states that the statement has no foundation in fact, then I think it has to be dealt with on that basis. He has made the statement that the excerpt has no foundation in fact, and I think all members wish that right of being able to state matters which have no foundation in fact—

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, if anybody had given me the opportunity to get up, I would have said I am quite prepared to accept the statement of the hon. leader of the Opposition, his claim that this report has no foundation in fact. He has no business to start an attack on me because I read an extract from a newspaper—

Mr. H. C. Nixon (Brant): He certainly has.

Mr. Bryden: He certainly has not. If he wants to get up—

An hon. member: He is making a statement and somebody—

Mr. Bryden: I gave my source. It was fully before the House. Are the hon. gentlemen here trying to submit that it is out of order and improper to read items from newspapers and other sources?

All the hon. leader of the Opposition had to do was get up and make a simple statement denying that this represents his views. He did not have to engage in an attack on me.

Mr. Singer: The hon. member heard his views yesterday and he knows—

Mr. Bryden: I heard his views and I congratulated him on his conversion, and the Liberal party to their conversion, to a more progressive point and more enlightened point of view.

Mr. Nixon: When the hon. member makes a statement in the House it is a different matter from Anderson making a statement in Kitchener.

Mr. Bryden: I gave the source of it.

As I say, the hon. leader of the Opposition says that does not represent his views; I accept his statement. There was never any question that I would not accept it, except he would not give me a chance to say so. I would say that, however. To get back to the point I was making—

Mr. Nixon: Which point was that?

Mr. MacDonald: Listen and you will find out.

Mr. Bryden: I am happy to learn of the conversion of the Liberal party to a more progressive point of view on matters of this kind.

Mr. Speaker: I would ask the member now to confine himself to the principles of the bill.

Mr. Bryden: Well, Mr. Speaker, I do not know how we can discuss principles of The Labour Relations Act and deal only with sections. I submit that a great deal of this debate dealt with individual sections that can be dealt with in committee.

It is not my intention to deal to any degree at all with individual sections of this bill, because I think there are much greater issues involved than any specific sections of the bill.

Whatever point of view I may have on it, if it is going to be suggested to me by the hon. Prime Minister that I am out of order because I am not dealing with individual sections, then it is going to be very difficult to debate the principles of this bill.

However, I would like to proceed, Mr. Speaker, to state that, in my opinion, we have to consider labour relations legislation, and this is a major measure in the field, in the context of the situation currently existing in North America today. That situation is one of vicious, unprincipled attack on the trade union movement as such. We have even heard some overtones of it in this Legislature. For example, some time ago we heard one of the hon. members refer contemptuously to pork choppers in the labour movement—

Mr. Reaume: Well, is that not true?

Mr. Bryden: No, it is not true. As a matter of fact—

Mr. Reaume: Well, I will explain it for him. I will explain it for him.

Mr. Bryden: This is the essence of the attack on the labour movement—

Mr. Reaume: It certainly is true. He knows it is true.

Mr. Bryden: Is the hon. member for Essex North speaking or am I?

This is the essence of the attack which is taking place on the labour movement today, namely, the suggestion that there is something disreputable or dishonourable about being elected to an office in a trade union, to a position of leadership within the trade union.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, on a point of privilege, I just want to say that, when I was speaking about the so-called pork choppers—and my hon. friend knows who I am speaking about—they are the people who go along within the framework of a union, stirring up trouble, people who draw upwards from $10,000 a year.

Now, I did not say that all of them are people who stir up trouble. But there are people like him, who forever, for the wrong purposes, are trying to gain a cushion seat behind a big desk.

Now, I just want to point out one thing, sir, that he mentioned the fact that I referred to pork choppers, there are pork choppers in the trade union movement—

Interjection by an hon. member.

Mr. Reaume: —like there are in every other movement, and he is one of them.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, Mr. Speaker, I was very interested in the new speech by the hon. member for Essex North.

An hon. member: A better one, too.

Mr. Bryden: I was very interested in it, because when I mentioned his reference to pork choppers, I did not believe that he himself was engaged in this sort of an attack on the labour movement but—

Mr. Reaume: I was the only one in the House who mentioned that term.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, yes. I quite agree that it was he I was referring to, but I did not believe that he would carry on this sort of attack, that he just carried on, under the guise of a statement of principle, on perfectly honourable people.

But my point, Mr. Speaker, and I think this is important as a background to my discussion of the principles of this bill, my point is that we have now in this country a vicious attack on the labour movement, and one of the major forms it is taking is to attack the people who have been elected to positions of leadership within the labour movement, or have been employed by the labour movement to assist them in their efforts.

Mr. Reaume: Mr. Speaker, once again if I may, on a point of order, ask what part of his business—

Mr. Bryden: What possible purpose—

Mr. Reaume: I would like to straighten him out. I have never once said anything against the rank and file of the union.

Mr. Bryden: I was not saying anything about what the hon. member said at this point. I am talking about this generally.

Some hon. members: Oh no, oh no.

Mr. Bryden: If he wants to be part of it, that is his business.

Mr. Reaume: I am not part of it—

Mr. Bryden: But this business of attacking the leadership, the people who have been elected to leadership, the people who have been employed to assist, is a fundamental attack on the trade union movement.

Mr. Reaume: Nobody made an attack.

Mr. Bryden: The hon. member did.

Mr. Reaume: I did not.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, let the hon. member just forget his own personal little differences.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: A statement has been made here—

Mr. MacDonald: This is no point of order, Mr. Speaker.

Mr. Speaker: Point of order, go ahead.

Mr. R. C. Edwards: A statement has been made here attributing to one of the hon. members having made a statement attacking the leadership of certain union. That is not so, sir, there was no attack made on these elected representatives, he is entirely wrong.

Mr. Speaker: I think it is quite apparent. I believe that if the member confined his remarks to the principle of the bill, as I mentioned before—it is a very wide field—I am sure we could have reached the conclusion much more quickly.

Mr. Nixon: Cut out the smears for a while.

Mr. Bryden: What is he talking about?

Mr. Reaume: Smears: What is this word pork chopper but a smear. If that is not a smear, I have never heard one.

Mr. Bryden: Mr. Speaker, I submit to you once again that it is perfectly in order to discuss a major piece of labour relations legislation in relation to the situation existing in the industrial relations field in this country today, and it seems to me that it is far more to the point on second reading than the discussion of individual sections.

Mr. Reaume: He smears everybody whom he can.

Mr. Bryden: I am not smearing anybody. I am talking about an attack that everybody surely knows about, that is continuously going on in this country, directed against the trade union movement, and the form the attack takes is to attack the people who are in positions of leadership in the movement.

Mr. Speaker: I would like to make it clear that I am personally not a member of a trade union and I am not employed by a trade union. I am, I suppose, part of that middle group—

Mr. Reaume: They do not want him, that is why.

Mr. Bryden: That may be, but I am part of that middle group that is neither of management nor of trade unions. I would like to say that I object most strenuously to this sort of attack that is going on in this country at the present time.

Certainly, in a movement as diversified as the trade union movement of Canada and of North America, it would be a remarkable thing if there were no people within it whose conduct did not measure up to full standards. But as far as the overwhelming majority of elected officers, employees and officers at the subordinate level of the trade union movement are concerned, they are fine, dedicated men and women who are doing the best they can to carry out the job they are supposed to do. Any contemptuous reference—

Mr. Reaume: What about this bill?

Mr. E. Sopha (Sudbury): The hon. Prime Minister says they are splendid people.

Mr. Bryden: Yes, except that we consistently get this attack upon them, and I regret that, and object to it most vigorously.

Now, the other form of attack that is made on the trade union movement is that this—

Mr. Speaker: I would ask what has the attack on the labour movement in general, to do with the principles of the bill.

Mr. MacDonald: Mr. Speaker, may I put a question to you? Yesterday the hon. leader of the Opposition started out by giving us an exposition of his philosophy with regard to corporations in the modern age. What was the relevance of that to the principle of the bill? And is it any more relevant than the question of the attack on the trade union movement, and how this bill in its restrictions—

Mr. Speaker: Brief references can be made, I am sure, on any bill, but not continuously.

Mr. Bryden: I would point out, Mr. Speaker, that I have not been making continuous references. I have had a very difficult job getting one sentence completed with some of these hon. gentlemen over here, and it was a perfectly valid, legitimate sentence. I would say on the point that you mentioned to me, Mr. Speaker, that it is going to be my submission, if I may say so, that this amending bill is in a minor way part of this attack on the trade union movement.

Now, I submit that I cannot—you may or may not agree with my point—but I submit that I have a right to put my own arguments forward and that I cannot make my argument if I am not allowed to put it into the context of the situation that now exists.

So I would like to go on to indicate that the other form, the even more damaging form, of the attack on the trade union movement that is taking place today, is the claim that it is too powerful.

Mr. Newman: Get on with the bill.

Mr. Bryden: This is made consistently in this country today, that its wings have to be clipped—

Mr. Reaume: Who said that?

A CCF hon. member: Never mind who said that.

Mr. Reaume: Well, you are all dreaming up stuff.

Mr. Nixon: Building up a strawman and tearing him apart.

Mr. Bryden: Now, my submission, Mr. Speaker, is that the situation is exactly the other way around. It is that, if we are looking for undesirable concentrations of power in the community today, we should be looking in the direction of the mammoth corporation, which has absolutely uncontrolled power with management groups accountable to nobody. We should not be attacking a movement which is fundamentally democratic in its structure, namely the trade union movement with control from the bottom from the rank and file membership through their membership meetings, conventions and so on.

That is the submission that I would like to make. If we are concerned, as I think we should be, about curbing abuse of power, we should be directing our attention to the corporations of this country and not to the trade unions.

Hon. G. C. Wardrope (Minister of Reform Institutions): Talking about abuse, how about the hon. member?

Mr. Bryden: I would like to submit and I repeat again, I am not a member of a trade union nor an employee of a trade union nor do I owe anything to the trade union movement—

Interjections by hon. members.

Mr. Bryden: Well, I will say this, that many trade union members have supported me for election. I appreciate this support. But I have no financial interest, or anything like that in anything that may happen to any trade union.

It is my opinion and I would like to assert it, and I believe it is necessary for me to assert this to substantiate points I will make later, that the free trade union movement is one of the great bulwarks of democracy in the world today. I am talking about the trade union movement from the International Confederation of Free Trade Unions down through the Canadian Labour Congress in our country and its various affiliated national and international unions down to the local union.

This is a great bulwark of democracy, and it is one of the few curbs on the abuse of power by irresponsible corporations that have great concentrations of wealth and power and are not accountable to anybody.

The trade union movement is one of the forces, and perhaps at the present time the most important force, to curb their power.

So what do we do in a situation like this? We have in this province legislation already which chops away at trade union rights and privileges. Under the guise of being fair, it puts a little roadblock here and another roadblock there. And now we have before us a bill to amend that Act which adds to the obstacles and chips away at trade union rights and privileges.

Mr. Sopha: That is what we said yesterday.

Mr. Bryden: Oh, is that not wonderful? I congratulated them on their conversion. The thing I regret is that never has it been possible to persuade the Liberal party of this philosophy when they have been in office. Never has it been possible to do that when they have been in office.

As a matter of fact, if they would just take the trouble to learn about the history of The Labour Relations Act that is now in force in this province, with all its undesirable features—and I believe if I understood them aright they consider the Act as it now stands to be quite undesirable—this Act was taken over in all its essential outlines, not in exact duplicate, but in all its essential principles, from a Liberal Act of the federal government passed in 1946. So this very undesirable Act was essentially the product of a Liberal government, and that in turn was based on a wartime order-in-council PC1003.

As a matter of fact, whenever we have the Liberal party in office, they do not apparently subscribe to these fine views. The only Liberal government that is in office in the country today, as we know, subscribes to exactly opposite principles.

Now, getting back to my point that this bill is a further chipping away, undermining of the legitimate activity of democratic trade unions, I would like to give hon. members a few examples of what I have in mind.

I will take first a provision of this bill which appears, on the face of it, to be quite innocuous. It provides in effect that trade unions must submit financial statements to their memberships at regular intervals—audited statements, not formally audited but audited by somebody within the organization.

I suppose we can always say, well why not, why should they not submit audited financial statements? I quite agree they should.

But my point, Mr. Speaker, is that trade unions already do that. There is no point to this provision. Trade unions regularly submit financial statements to their membership.

The effect of a clause of this kind, however, is to create the impression that they do not and that it is necessary to intervene, through statute, to compel them to do so. The effect of that sort of thing is to contribute to the anti-labour campaign that is going on, creating the impression that trade unionists are irresponsible people who do not submit their financial statements in a democratic way.

I have no idea what the purpose of the section is. But I submit that is the effect of it—to contribute to the large scale anti-union campaign that is going on in this country today.

Hon. J. Yaremko (Minister of Transport): He should speak to his hon. leader who subscribed to that at one—

Mr. MacDonald: There was a lot of mish-mash in that one, too.

Hon. Mr. Frost: They pretty near fired him over that one.

Mr. Bryden: Another example is this matter that the hon. Prime Minister dealt with at great length—now do not get alarmed, I am not going to deal with it at great length—the provision, the new section that is to be inserted by section 16 of the bill.

The hon. leader of the Opposition, in his apparent efforts to curry favour with the labour movement, really went overboard in talking about this one, and suggested that this was, in effect, the beginning of a right-to-work clause.

Now, Mr. Speaker, I have never taken the position that one strengthens a case by exaggerating it. It is a gross exaggeration to say that this is a right-to-work clause, but it is still a very serious intervention in the legitimate activity of trade unions. The hon. Prime Minister's explanation this morning was all very fine, except that it is not borne out by what is in the bill.

I will take only one aspect of it.

Incidentally, a clause of this kind was already in the old Act. This broadens that clause very greatly, and it says, in effect, that the union shop provision will not be effective if a man is expelled from the union because he was, or is, a member of another trade union, or has engaged in activity against the trade union.

What if a man, against the decision of the majority of his union, foments a wildcat strike among some of the members, to the detriment of the union and of the majority of the members? Under this clause, the union would not be able to take disciplinary action against him.

Hon. Mr. Frost: No, the hon. member is wrong in that, he is completely wrong.

Mr. Bryden: It says: "engaged in activity against the trade union." That is activity against the trade union. The trade union has decided that it will not strike and the member foments a wildcat strike against their decision; he is engaged in activity against them.

There are other phases of this that can be dealt with elsewhere. The hon. Prime Minister's explanation is far from satisfactory.

This broadening of this particular provision that he has been talking about, and it has been broadened out very greatly, is another intervention, another attempt to harry the trade union movement and make it more difficult for it to carry on its legitimate operation.

Another outstanding example is this question of freedom of speech. Now, it is very interesting—

Hon. Mr. Wardrope: He has certainly got it, he cannot complain.

Mr. Bryden: It is very interesting how, whenever employers want to attack the trade union movement, they always drum up some very nice fine-sounding phrase such as "right to work" or "freedom of speech." But I do not think that in this House we should be misled by an improper use of the words.

What is proposed in this bill has nothing whatsoever to do with freedom of speech, nothing whatsoever. The principle of freedom of speech is not involved at all.

To illustrate what I mean, I would like to give an example, Mr. Speaker. I hope the hon. Prime Minister will not jump up and say I cannot give examples without departing from the bill.

To illustrate what I mean, I would like to suggest to hon. members that, if I were negotiating with another man for the purchase of a house, and I decided that I wanted a lawyer to look after my interests in that matter, I would not be in any way suggesting an abrogation of the other man's freedom of speech if I said to him that he had no business in trying to tell me who my lawyer should be.

If he came to me and said, "You should get so-and-so for your lawyer," and I said to him, "That is none of your business, you should stay out of it," that is not a limitation on his freedom of speech because he has no business to be telling me such things.

Now, a trade union is an association of working people formed for the purpose of representing them in negotiations with their employer on matters of material concern to them. I submit that it is none of the employer's business, no business of his whatsoever, whom they should choose, if they choose anyone, to represent them for that purpose.

Yet, under the guise of freedom of speech, it is specifically provided in this bill that the employer, when employees are deciding among themselves whether or not they will have a union to represent them and if so what union, can walk right in there and have his say along with all the others, in a field which clearly is none of his business.

The effect, Mr. Speaker, is simply this.

The employer has the power to hire and fire. Everybody in the plant knows that, so does he have to be so stupid as to go to them and say: "I will fire you if you join that union?" Certainly not. He just relies on this so-called freedom of speech clause and says to the boys: "Well now, I really do not think that I would be most displeased if you decided to have this union, I would consider it a vote of no confidence in me, and I would just not like to see you do that."

It would be a pretty dull employee who, faced with that sort of a statement, could not put two and two together.

Let us remember that, at this stage, the employees have no union protection, they are just in the process of forming a union. So the employer, exercising his alleged freedom of speech, conveys to them very clearly that he does not want them to join the union, and although it would be totally impossible to lay any charge of intimidation against him, the intimidation is there as clear as day.

If this bill goes through in its present form, it will become a vehicle to legalize intimidation or interference by employers in the free choice by employees of a trade union to represent them in bargaining with their employer, a matter in which the employer surely has no concern at all.

Another phase of this bill was dealt with very briefly by the hon. member for Kenora (Mr. Wren). I thought perhaps he would save me the trouble of dealing with this particular point, but he only went into it briefly, and I would like to elaborate on it. That is the whole question of the building trades under the Act.

I think we all agree, I think the hon. Minister himself stated, and other hon. members stated, that this type of legislation, as it stands, is most unsuitable for the building trade. A good deal of this 23-page amending bill contains clauses which are—though they do not necessarily state it—as far as I can see, directed against the building trades.

I use the word "directed" advisedly. I think that we should again bear in mind how the Act that is now in effect affects the building trade. It is almost impossible for them to operate under it.

To get certified, as the hon. member for Kenora points out, and perhaps the hon. Minister did, too, to get certified under the procedure in this Act, would mean in the case of the building trade that they would have the certificate after it was of no use to them.

When one carries the matter still further to the long, involved conciliation ritual contained in The Labour Relations Act, if the building trades went through all that as well, they certainly would have no hope that there would be any employees left to benefit from any agreement that might be negotiated.

So this Act is totally inappropriate, and there is nothing in the bill to make it appropriate, for the building trades.

As a result of the fact that the Act is quite inappropriate for the building trade, the building trades quite naturally, in their own interests, have had to develop their own procedures for getting collective agreements with employers, and some of the ad hoc procedures they have developed have caused a certain amount of difficulty. Nobody would deny that they have caused difficulties.

The select committee on labour relations pointed out some of these difficulties, and among other things, it recommended that the hon. Minister should call a conference of employers and unions in the building trades for the purpose of discussing these difficulties and seeing if they could not get them straightened out.

For a period of a year, or a year and a half or more, the hon. Minister called no such conference. He did not bring the parties together. I believe he was quoted in the press as saying that the time was not opportune, and he could be right, I do not know. But for a very long period, there was no conference.

Then quite recently, he called a conference and it held one meeting. After the meeting was over, the hon. Minister announced that it had been a good, exploratory meeting. They had got a good start, and he was very hopeful that they would be able to solve by free discussion some of the difficulties that have arisen with regard to the building trades.

So everything looks fine, we were started on a conference where it looks like some of these matters will get straightened out. But what happens? We have one meeting of this conference, and then the hon. Minister pulls the rug from under them on very important matters in this bill that is now before this House.

Instead of discussing and negotiating with them on some of the difficult matters, he determined them in this bill. He just stepped in on the question of jurisdictional disputes. Also on the question of organizational picketing, though that word is not used, he stepped in and determined the matter, right in the middle of a conference, without giving the conference any opportunity to solve it at all.

I may say that clause on organizational picketing does not specifically refer to organizational picketing, and I think that a lot of people should be a little concerned. Although I believe—I must admit I have to make an assumption on this, but I believe—that it is directed against organizational picketing, it certainly could have ramifications far beyond that particular problem.

If the clause is designed to deal with that, it should state what it is dealing with much more clearly than it does now.

However, I submit that it was quite inappropriate for the hon. Minister, right in the middle of discussing this with the parties concerned, to determine the results of their discussion on two very material matters.

One last point I would like to mention, Mr. Speaker—and I am trying to avoid dealing with points other hon. members have already dealt with—is a serious omission in the bill that is before us. It relates to the whole question of the position of a trade union in the event that an enterprise with which it has a collective agreement changes ownership.

There have even been cases where technical changes in ownership have been deliberately created so that an employer could get out from under his obligations under The Labour Relations Act—out from under a certification or an existing agreement.

Even in cases which are less flagrant than that, where there is a legitimate change in ownership, surely a trade union that has a certificate, or has an agreement under the previous ownership, should continue to enjoy the same rights when the ownership is changed.

Surely it should not have to go back to the labour relations board all over again, through all the long involved procedure of getting certified, just because a change in ownership has taken place.

I am not a lawyer but I believe that, if one person buys out the business of another, he takes over all the debts of that person, he is liable for any debts he may have in any direction. Why should it not be also provided that he is covered by any obligations relating to labour relations, that a collective agreement in force will still apply?

Yet this very modest request of the trade union movement, for a change in the legislation that would benefit them, has been denied.

In substance, Mr. Speaker, I would return to what I said at the beginning, that The Labour Relations Act is fundamentally inadequate as an expression of the type of philosophy that we should have on labour relations in this country today.

If we accept, as I do, the proposition that the trade union movement is a bulwark of democracy, that it is an important check on abuse of power in the only area of our community where there is serious danger of abuse of power, then it seems to me that we, in our enactments, should not be setting minor stumbling blocks in the way of the organization of trade unions and the negotiation of agreements. We should instead be doing everything possible to facilitate the formation of trade unions.

I am not saying that we should try to organize trade unions. A trade union has to be organized by the working people themselves, otherwise it means nothing. But the law, in my opinion, should do everything possible to facilitate their efforts.

I claim, and I have always claimed, that The Labour Relations Act in Ontario does not do that sort of thing at all. It presents all sorts of interference with the legitimate activities of unions.

The hon. Minister, when we discussed the checkoff, was terribly concerned that he did not want to interfere in the bargaining process by statute. He does not mind interfering in the matter of imposing arbitration clauses in collective agreements. He does not mind interfering in all sorts of different directions in the internal affairs of trade union. That is the sort of approach that I submit is inadequate and wrong in this day and age.

The Labour Relations Act, as it stands, is inadequate. It does not approach the problem in the correct manner, and this amending bill does nothing to solve that basic problem.

As I stated earlier in my address here, we are planning at the first opportunity to bring in a bill setting forth our views of what should be in a labour relations Act. I think it is fair enough for anybody to ask us, if we object to this bill, to state our views, and we will bring such a bill in.

I may say that it is quite a herculean job getting it drafted, but we have it pretty well worked out, and I would like to read the preamble from the bill that we hope to bring in, which sets forth our philosophy with regard to labour relations legislation.

Mr. Speaker: Is it a long preamble?

Mr. Bryden: No, it is just a sentence, sir. It is just to illustrate the point I am trying to make, Mr. Speaker. The preamble we have is:

Whereas it is desirable and in the public interest to encourage the formation and growth of democratic trade unions—not to tolerate but to encourage,

—to protect and extend the right of employees to form, join and participate in the lawful activities of such trade unions, and to engage in collective bargaining with their employers, and to facilitate the peaceful settlement of labour disputes;

Now, therefore—

I quoted that, Mr. Speaker, because I think it sets forth quite succinctly our ideas of what should be in a labour relations Act, of what its approach should be. As I said, the present Labour Relations Act does not have that approach, and the amending bill does not remedy the defect in any way whatsoever.

That is why we of the CCF are opposed to the principle of the amending bill, that is why we have attacked it on second reading by moving an amendment.

The purpose of our amendment, as the purpose of all amendments on second reading should be, is to defeat the bill if possible. That is our objective because we fundamentally disagree with the principles of this bill.

Mr. Speaker: In dealing with the amendment proposed yesterday by the member for York South I find that a reasoned amendment, as referred to by him, must offer some alternative to the main motion. It is obvious therefore, I think, that the amendment proposed yesterday by Mr. MacDonald cannot be put from the chair, as it simply sets out reasons for opposing the motion for the second reading of the bill, and is therefore merely an expanded negation of the motion for second reading.

I refer you to May's Parliamentary Practice, 16th edition, page 531, where it says:

An amendment which amounts to nothing more than a direct negation of the principle of a bill is open to objection.

Other references to this principle are to be found on pages 422 and 554. The proper way for negation to be expressed is to vote against the main motion.

Mr. MacDonald: Is that your ruling, Mr. Speaker? I shall have to challenge that ruling.

Mr. Speaker: The Speaker's ruling has been challenged.

Will all the members who are in favour say "aye."

As many as are opposed say "nay."

On appeal, Mr. Speaker's motion was sustained on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion for the amendment lost.

Hon. Mr. Daley moves second reading of Bill No. 74, "An Act to amend The Labour Relations Act."

Mr. Speaker: The motion will be in the same division as the last one, in reverse.

Will all those in favour say "aye."

As many as are opposed say "nay."

The motion for second reading of the bill having then been put was carried on the following division:

Mr. Speaker: I declare the motion carried.

THE JUDICATURE ACT

Hon. A. K. Roberts moves second reading of Bill No. 75, "An Act to amend The Judicature Act."

He said: In doing this I would like to say, Mr. Speaker, this bill meets, within certain general bounds, the recommendation of the select committee in this connection, and I would like to say a few words about the import of it and what it really proposes to do.

Now, in order to make this simple and yet at the same time, concise, I would first point out to you, Mr. Speaker, that in the criminal code is section 366, and I would like to have certain parts of that placed on the record:

Section 366 (1) Every person who wrongfully and without lawful authority for the purpose of compelling another person to abstain from doing anything that he has the lawful right to do, or to do anything he has a lawful right to abstain from doing (a) uses violence or threats of violence to that person or to his wife or children or injures his property, (b) intimidates or attempts to intimidate that person or a relative of that person by threats, that in Canada or elsewhere, violence or other injury will be done to or punishment inflicted upon him or a relative of his or that the property of any of them will be damaged.

And then in (f) Besets or watches the dwelling house or place where that person resides, works, carries out his business or happens to be—or, now if the hon. members do not like—I just read section (f) which is the picketing section and which is the subsection which does most really, in relation to the problem, to cause the controversy that has arisen in the past.

And then I would like to mention subsection (g) of 366: blocks or obstructs the highway is guilty of an offence punishable on summary conviction, and subsection 2 is the exception—a person who attends at or near or approaches the dwelling house or place for the purpose only of obtaining or communicating information does not watch or beset within the meaning of this section.

Now, the penalty under the summary convictions section is a fine of up to $500 or imprisonment up to 6 months or both.

To deal with matters arising in the field of what might be termed labour disputes, we have in The Judicature Act, section 17, the injunction section.

Mr. Speaker, I could talk at some length at what the jurisprudence has laid down as constituting offences that come within this section within the field of labour disputes. I have had, over the few years that I have occupied this office, a good deal of study made on this question, and I have a lot of statements of the law, and the procedures and the practices available. But I am going to say something now that is going to come as a very considerable surprise to my hon. friends.

I found that although I have lots of information, and although the wording is very well put, that I have found nowhere any better explanation of it than in the report on injunctions by the Toronto and district labour council given to its members a short time ago, and on page 2 of this pamphlet which I have in my hand, which one of their members was good enough to make available to me, I would like to read the foreword.

In view of the increased use of injunctions by employers and so that the affiliated unions and their members may have some knowledge of what an injunction means, and what affect it has on a union or person when granted, the Toronto and district labour council has authorized the printing of this book.

This booklet has been printed for the sole purpose of helping labour. It was not prepared haphazardly, but it is the result of many hours of study and work by Mr. John H. Osler, QC, a well-known lawyer of Toronto, and I might say, Mr. Speaker, that Mr. Osler was my opponent on two occasions, the first two elections that I had when I was successful in coming into this Legislature. And I have a good deal of respect for his study and ability in this field of labour relations.

This booklet sets forth the essential facts which labour must know about the law and practice of injunctions in Ontario.

And now I give hon. members the last paragraph which I think shows very good responsibility on the part of the Toronto and district labour council:

The Toronto and district labour council is pleased to make this information available to local unions and trusts it will be of assistance to officers and others in the discharge of their duties.

Now then, Mr. Speaker, at page 11 of the pamphlet, under the heading, "What will be prohibited":

The conduct that will be prohibited by an injunction varies in detail from case to case. However, generally speaking, injunctions in the last two or three years have prohibited:

1. The intimidation of, molestation of or interference with other employees seeking entrance to or exit from the struck plant.

2. Interference with customers or other persons on lawful business seeking to enter or to leave the plant.

3. Attempts to induce other people, for example, customers, suppliers, et cetera, to break contracts they may have with the employer.

4. Physical obstruction or other interference with trucks and truckers seeking to remove material from a struck plant or to take such material into such a plant.

5. Attempts to commit any of the above acts or induce other people to commit them.

Occasionally an injunction will also prohibit picketing with more than a set number of people at each entrance and, in the case of unlawful strikes, an injunction may prohibit all picketing, as for example in the Oakville Wood Specialities case.

It can be said—

and I am quoting from this pamphlet—

—with some degree of certainty that most judges today will prohibit all picketing if the strike is unlawful under The Labour Relations Act. If it is not an unlawful strike, they will probably only prohibit activities which are technically unlawful in any case, as for example intimidation and obstruction, but if there is evidence that picketing has been carried on in an intimidatory fashion, some of them will prohibit picketing by more than a certain number of employees.

That perhaps should lead to a consideration of what is lawful picketing. That is a large and difficult subject—says the pamphlet.

The phrase to picket is not a legal term in the sense that it has been defined in any case or statute. The phrase probably means the same thing as the phrase found in the criminal code—which I read a moment ago—

—to watch and beset, and the only thing that can be safely said is that if the picketing is carried on merely for the purpose of obtaining or communicating information, it is not unlawful unless the unlawfulness of the strike itself makes all picketing unlawful.
